settlement at Dudley, he came to read Ames's fresh suit against Ceremonies, and other that side, he repented his rashness in Subscribing so hastily, and grew dissatisfy'd as to of Conformity. He continu'd there Preaching to a Numerous Auditory with good for about Three Quarters of a Year, and then remov'd to Bridgnorth in Shropshire, where he became Assistant to Mr. William Madstard. This removal was the more agreeable to him, because the Place being priviledg'd from all Episcopal Jurisdiction, except the Triennial Visitation of the Arch-Bishop, he was the less in danger of being put upon any Part of Conformity that he then scrupled. He neither Baptiz'd with the Sign of the Cross, nor wore the Surplice, (being not satisfy'd as to either) and yet came into no trouble. At his first coming hither he was an Instrument of the Conversion of several to God and an Holy Life; but was not afterwards so successful here as in other places.

Soon after his Settlement here, the Et cætera Oath put him upon a more close inspection into the English frame of Church Government, which he thought he had need to be well satisfy'd in, before he swore he would never consent to an Alteration. He read Bucer de Gubernatione Ecclesiæ; Didoclavii Altare Damascenum, Parker de Politeiâ Ecclesiasticâ, & Baynes's Diocesan's Tryal: and tho' upon the whole he saw no reason to believe all kind of Episcopacy unlawful, he yet was far from so approving the English Episcopacy, as to think it Lawful to Swear he would never Consent to have it alter'd. And he observ'd upon this Occasion, that that Oath which was design'd unalterably to subject the Nation to Diocesans, did but set many the more against them: and that instead of ruining the Nonconformists which was intended, it prov'd a great Advantage to them, and inclin'd many to fall in with them.

The Broils in Scotland quickly follow'd, that were occasion'd by the imposing the Common-Prayer-Book, and English Ceremonies. There were great Tumults there, and the design was to subdue that Nation by Force; and at the same time there were great dissatisfactions in England upon the Account of Ship Money, and other Impositions that were reckon'd illegal. The Scots entring into England there was a Form of Prayer to be us'd against them in all Churches, Printed by the Bishops, tho' there was no Command of the King for it. Mr. Baxter would not use it, at which some were disturb'd.

The Long Parliament upon its being open'd, fell directly upon a Reformation of Church and State. Among other things that were determin'd, a Committee was soon appointed to hear Petitions and Complaints against such as were scandalous among the Clergy. Amongst other Complainers the Town of Kederminster in Worcestershire had drawn up a Petition against their Vicar and his two Curates as insufficient. The Vicar was rather for compounding the Business, than suffering the Petition to be presented. The living was worth near 200 l. per Ann. out of which he offer'd to allow 60 l. per Ann. to a sufficient Preacher, to be chosen by 14 Trustees. They hereupon unexpectedly invited Mr. Baxter to give them a Sermon; and upon hearing him, unanimously chose him to be their Minister: He accepted their invitation, and settled among them, making this Observation, that among all his Changes he never went to any Place he had before desir'd, design'd, or thought of: but only to those places he never thought of till the sudden invitation did surprize him.

He spent two Years at Kederminster before the Civil War broke out, and above 14 Years after, and yet never touch'd the Vicaridge House, tho' authoriz'd by an Order of Parliament: But the Old Vicar liv'd there without molestation. He found the Place like a piece of dry and barren Earth; Ignorance and Profaneness as Natives of the Soil were rife among them: But by the Blessing of Heaven upon his Labour and Cultivating, the Face of Paradise appear'd there in all the fruits of Righteousness. At first Rage and Malice created him much Opposition: but it was soon over, and a special Divine Blessing gave his unwearied Pains among that People an unexpected Success.

On a Day when they had in that Town a Yearly shew, in which they walk'd about the Streets with the Painted forms of Gyants, he was one Part of the Game of the Rabble. Having Preach'd the Doctrine of Original Sin, many rail'd at him, and represented him, as saying that God hated and loath'd Infants. Thereupon he next Lords Day return'd to the same Doctrine again; and told them that if their Children had no Original Sin, they had no need of Christ, or of Baptism, or of renewing by the Holy Ghost. And after that, they were asham'd and silent. Another time one of the Drunken Beggars of the Town reported, that Mr. Baxter was under a Tree with a Woman of ill fame. He got some that spread this Report, bound to their good Behaviour, and then he that rais'd it confess'd in Court, that he saw Mr. Baxter in a Rainy Day stand on Horseback under an Oak in a thick Hedge, and the Woman mention'd standing for shelter on the other side the Hedge, under the same Tree, tho' he believ'd they saw not one another. They all ask'd Mr. Baxter forgiveness; and were releas'd. At another time when the Parliament's Order came down for demolishing all Images of the Persons of the Trinity, the Virgin Mary, &c. in Churches, or Crosses in Church-Yards, the Church-warden of the Town being about to take down a Crucifix upon the Cross in the Church-Yard, the Drunken Crew took the Alarum, and ran with Weapons to defend the Crucifix. It being reported Mr. Baxter was the Actor, they sought for him, and might probably enough have murder'd him, had he come in their way. But as Providence ordered it he had taken a walk out of Town, and in his Return when the Hurly-burly was over, he was ſurpriz'd to hear ſome of th... at their Doors; and quickly underſtood how fairly he had eſcap'd, the next Lords ... them publickly, that ſeeing they ſo requited him, as to ſeek his Blood, he was willing ... them, and ſave them from that Guilt. Whereupon they appear'd amaz'd and aſham'd, and to... on terribly, and after all were loth to part with him.

But notwithſtanding ſuch Oppoſition, his unwearied Labours in this Town had amazing ſucceſs. He preach'd twice every Lords Day before the Civil War; afterwards once; and once every Thurſday, beſides Occaſional Sermons in the Lectures, at Worceſter, Shrewsbury, Dudley, Sheffnal, &c. On the Thurſday Evenings ſuch as were ſo diſpos'd met at his Houſe, one of them repeated the Sermon, and afterwards they propounded to Mr. Baxter any doubts they had about it, or any other Caſe of Conſcience, which he reſolv'd. On Mondays and Tueſdays in the Afternoon, in every Week, he and his Aſſiſtant took 14 Families between them for private Catechizing and Conference, ſpending about an Hour with a Family. Every firſt Wedneſday in the Month he had a Meeting for Pariſh Diſcipline. Every firſt Thurſday in the Month there was a Meeting of the Neighbouring Miniſters for Diſcipline, and Amicable Diſputation about matters Theological: and every Thurſday in the Month beſides, he had ſeveral Miniſters at his Houſe, after the Lecture was over, with whom the Afternoon was ſpent in profitable Converſation, till the Neighbours came in to Repetition and Conference.

He had an Attentive Diligent Auditory, that was very numerous. On the Lords Days there was no diſorder to be ſeen in the Town, but you might hear a Hundred Families ſinging Pſalms, and repeating Sermons as you paſſed along the Streets. When he firſt came, there might be a Family in a Street that worſhip'd God, and call'd on his Name: and when he came away there was not above a Family on the ſide of a Street that did not do it. Nay in the moſt unlikely Families, even Inns and Alehouſes, uſually ſome in each Houſe ſeem'd to be Religious. He had 600 Communicants; and there were not above 12 of them, of whoſe ſincerity in Religion he had not hopes. There were few Families in the whole Town that refus'd to ſubmit to his private Catechizing, and Perſonal Conference; and few went away, without ſome Tears, or ſeemingly ſerious Promiſes of a Godly Life.

The greateſt Enemies of ſerious Religion in that Town were carry'd off by the War. When that was over, he had the favour of the Government there. He had a great Intereſt in the Affections of the Inhabitants, for which his practiſing Phyſick among them gratis, gave him a great Advantange: And he had much aſſiſtance in his Work, from the Zeal and Diligence of thoſe among them that were Pious. Many were won upon by their Exemplary Converſation. Their Unity and Concord was remarkable. All were of one Mind, and Mouth and Way. The private Meetings that were kept up amongſt them (which were under his Overſight and Guidance) were alſo very helpful to promote ſerious Religion. His ſtated income was not above 90 l. per Ann. beſides which he ſome Years had 60 or 80 l. a Year of the Bookſellers for his Books, which being given away amongſt the People, (except ſo much as was neceſſary for his comfortable ſubſiſtence) made them the readier to liſten to him. He took ſeveral of their Children that had Capacities from School, and ſent them to the Univerſity, where he maintain'd them by his own and others Contributions, ſome of which afterwards proved uſeful Miniſters.

One of his main Difficulties when he fix'd in this Town, was how to ſet up any thing of a true Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, without being ſatisfy'd with the Shadow inſtead of the Reality of it on one hand, or Unchurching the Pariſh Church on the other. Upon mature Conſideration, he determin'd to take the Pariſh for the Church, if they were willing to own their Church Memberſhip, and acknowledge him for their Paſtour. He deſir'd all that were willing, to give in their Names, or ſome other way to ſignifie their Conſent; and the reſt he deſir'd to be ſilent. This kept many Quiet that were not Church-Members, becauſe they knew they might come in if they would. He Baptiz'd all their Children, (if deſir'd) upon their giving an Account of their Faith. If the Father were a ſcandalous Sinner, he made him openly confeſs his Sin with ſeeming Penitence, before he would Baptize his Child: If he refuſed it, he forbore till the Mother came to preſent it: Rarely if ever finding both Father and Mother ſo deſtitute of Knowledge and Faith, as in a Church Senſe to be utterly incapable. Sir Ralph Clare, a Noted Cavaleer diſcover'd the greateſt Diſſatisfaction of any in the Pariſh, with his Method of Proceeding. He would not Communicate unleſs he would Adminiſter the Sacrament to him Kneeling, and upon a diſtinct Day, and not with thoſe that receiv'd it Sitting. Mr. Baxter having openly told the Pariſhioners that if they ſcrupled ſitting at the Lord's Table, they ſhould have the Liberty of their own Geſture, ſent word to Sir Ralph, that if he could not upon Reaſoning be otherwiſe ſatisfy'd, he would give it him Kneeling; but that as for doing it at a diſtinct ſtated time from the reſt, it would make ſuch a Breach or Schiſm as he could have no hand in. However the generality Acquieſc'd; and Church Diſcipline was kept up, tho' not without ſome difficulty. A Young Fellow given to exceſſive Drinking, offering himſelf to Communion, was told that he could not be admitted, without an humble Penitent Confeſſion, and Promiſe of Amendment. He thereupon Confeſs'd his Sin, and promis'd to amend, but ſoon relaps'd. He was oft Admoniſh'd, and as oft renew'd the profeſſion of his Concern, and Promiſes of Amendment. But ſtill perſiſting, Mr. Baxter warn'd him publickly,

...neſtly for him ſeveral Days ſucceſſively in the Church, but he was not reclaim'd. ...clar'd him utterly unfit for Church Communion, and requir'd all to avoid un... Converſation with him. Afterwards he grew extravagantly Mad, would freely Curſe ...xter to his Face, and once as he was going into the Church laid violent Hands on him, ...a Deſign to have Murder'd him. He continu'd raging about a Year, and then dy'd of a ...eaver, in great horror of Conſcience. Three or four more alſo were caſt out: One for Slandering, and the reſt for Drunkenneſs: And they were enrag'd and much the worſe after it, and ſo were loud Warnings to others. In ſhort, ſo much of the Preſence of God did Mr. Baxter find accompanying him in his Work, and ſo Affectionate was his regard to the Loving People of that Place, that he would not willingly have chang'd his Relation to them for any Preferment in the Kingdom, nor could he without force have been ſeparated from them.

When the Civil War broke out, he was Dubious how to Steer. He took the Proteſtation which the Parliament requir'd, to Defend the King's Perſon, Honour and Authority, the Power and Priviledges of Parliaments, the Liberties of the Subject, and the Proteſtant Religion, againſt the Common Enemy: And he join'd with the Magiſtrates of Kederminſter, in offering the ſame Proteſtation to the People. A little after, the King's Declarations were read there in the Market-Place, and the Commiſſion of Array was ſet on foot: Upon which the Rabble grew ſo Riotous and Furious, that he was adviſ'd to withdraw a while from home. He retir'd to Worceſter, and ſo to Gloceſter, where he firſt met with the Anabaptiſts; and after a Month's abſence he return'd home, leaſt his abſence ſhould be interpreted either as the effect of Fear on the account of ſome Guilt, or as ſignifying his being againſt the King. At his return he found the drunken Rabble very boiſterous: And their Common Cry was this; we ſhall take an Order with the Puritans e'er long. He did not think himſelf in ſafety if he ſtay'd at home, and ſo he withdrew again. He preach'd at Alceſter, on that Lords Day that was the Day of Edge-Hill Fight; and was inform'd while he was Preaching by the Noiſe of the Cannon that the Armies were ingag'd. And the next Day he went into the Field of Battle.

The Soldiers on one ſide or the other ſtill paſſing to and fro, and being ready to make a Prey of whatſoever came before them, he determin'd to go to Coventry, and ſtay there till one ſide or other had got the Victory, and the War was ended, which it was then thought would be in a very little time. The Committee and Governour of that City deſir'd him to ſtay with them, and lodge in the Governours Houſe, and Preach to the Soldiers; which offer he readily accepted. He continu'd there a Year, Preaching once a Week to the Soldiers, and once on the Lords Day to the People, having nothing but his Diet for his Pains. Here he had the Society of about 30 worthy Miniſters, who fled to the ſame Place for ſafety, and among the reſt of Mr. Vines and Mr. Anthony Burgeſs. When his Year expir'd, he found the War ſo far from being ended, that it had diſpers'd it ſelf into almoſt all the Land. He determin'd therefore to continue there another Year: And in that time preach'd over all the Controverſies againſt the Anabaptiſts, and againſt the Separatiſts, and ſo kept the Garriſon ſound. After the Fight at Naſeby, (not far from Coventry,) he went into the Army to viſit ſome of his Old intimate Friends. He ſtay'd there a Night, and got ſuch intelligence as to their ſtate, as amaz'd him. He found plotting Heads were deſigning to ſubvert both Church and State. The Sectaries were like to carry all before them, and were reſolv'd take down not only Biſhops, Liturgies, and Ceremonies, but all that did withſtand them. This made him Lament that the Miniſters had left the Army, as they generally did after Edge-Hill Fight. It made him alſo repent his refuſing of Cromwel's invitation to be the Paſtor of his Troop, when he firſt rais'd it; by which means he would have had an Opportunity of dealing freely with thoſe that afterwards headed much of the Army, and were the forwardeſt in all the Publick Changes. But he was told that it was not even yet too late to do Service, if he would come into the Army; and was invited by Colonel Whalley to be Chaplain to his Regiment. He return'd to Coventry, and conſulted the Miniſters that were there, and with their Advice, (in order to do what in him lay to prevent the miſchief that was threaten'd by the prevaling temper of the Army) he accepted the Invitation.

When he came thither, Cromwel welcom'd him but Coldly. He ſet himſelf from Day to Day to Diſcourſe the Officers and Soldiers out of their Miſtakes both Religious and Political. He found a few fiery ſelf-conceited Men among them made all the Noiſe and Buſtle, and carried about the reſt as they pleas'd. Some of theſe became the Laughing-ſtock of the Soldiers before he left them. He march'd with the Army Weſtward, and was at the taking of Bridgwater, and the Siege of Briſtol, and Sherborn-Caſtle, and Exceter. He was alſo with Colonel Whalley before Banbury-Caſtle, and at the Siege of Worceſter. He had full employment in oppoſing the Sectaries in all Places: and particularly he had at one place a Diſpute with them of a whole Days continuance. And by what ſucceſs he met with, he found reaſon to apprehend, that if there had but been a competent number of Miniſters, each doing their part, the whole Plot of the furious Party might have been broken, and King, Parliament, and Religion preſerv'd. But he was ſeparated from the Army by great Weakneſs, occaſion'd by the loſs of a Gallon of Blood at the Noſe: Upon which retiring to Sir Thomas Rouſes, he was taken up with daily Medicines to prevent a Dropſie, and was in continual expectation of Death.

He

He did what he could to keep his People at Kederminſter free from a Conce[illegible] lick Changes. He kept them from taking the Covenant, as fearing it might be a S[illegible] Conſciences. Nay he prevented its being much taken in all that County. When the[illegible] ment came out, he ſpake and preach'd againſt it, and diſſwaded Men from taking it. He[illegible] whole Day's Diſputation with Mr. Tombs, in his Church at Bewdley, upon Infant Baptiſm; [illegible] thereby kept his People free from the ſpreading Notions of thoſe times. When the Army was going againſt K. Charles II. and the Scots, he wrote Letters to ſeveral of the Soldiers to tell them of their Sin, and deſir'd them at laſt to begin to know themſelves. And inſtead of Praying for their ſucceſs in publick, he freely inveigh'd againſt the forcing Men to run to God upon ſuch Errands of Blood and Ruine; eſpecially where Brethren were concern'd. He often and various ways declar'd againſt Cromwel's Uſurpation, when he had got the Aſcendant. He preach'd once before him after he was Protector, by means of the Lord Broghill, and the Earl of Warwick: His Text was 1 Cor. 1. 10. The deſign of his Sermon was to ſhew how miſchievous it was for Politicians to maintain Diviſions in the Church for their own Ends. A little while after the Protector ſent for him, and made a Speech to him of an Hours length, about the Providence of God in Changing the Government, and favouring that Change, by ſuch great things done at home and abroad. Mr. Baxter freely told him, that the Honeſt People of the Land took their Ancient Monarchy to be a Bleſſing: and deſir'd to know how they had forfeited that Bleſſing, and to whom the forfeiture was made. He with ſome Paſſion reply'd that there was no forfeiture, but God had Chang'd it as it pleaſed Him.

In the Controverſie about Church Government, which was then ſo hotly Agitated, Mr. Baxter was all along againſt Extreams. He neither fell in with the Eraſtian, nor Epiſcopal, nor Preſbyterian, nor Independent Party intirely; but thought that all of them had ſo much truth in common among them, as would have made theſe Kingdoms happy, had it been unanimouſly and ſoberly reduc'd to Practice, by Prudent and Charitable Men. At the Deſire of the Neighbouring Miniſters he drew up an Agreement for Church Order and Concord, containing only ſo much Church Order and Diſcipline, as he apprehended the Epiſcopal, Presbyterian and Independant were agreed in, as belonging to the Paſtors of each particular Church; which he afterwards publiſh'd in a Book call'd Chriſtian Concord: And the Miniſters of thoſe Parts Aſſociated upon that Bottom: not Diſputing with each other in order to an Agreement in their Opinions, but agreeing in the Practice of what was own'd by all.

Upon Oliver's becoming Protector, the extent of the Toleration was the ſubject of many Debates. The Committee of Parliament propos'd that it ſhould be extended to all that held the Fundamentals of Religion. Hereupon it was Query'd which were the Fundamentals of Religion? and it was agreed that the Members of the Committee, who were 14 in number, ſhould each of them nominate a Divine, and that they meeting together, ſhould draw up a Liſt of the Fundamentals, to be as a Teſt to the Toleration. Mr. Baxter was upon this occaſion nominated for one, (in the room of Archbiſhop Uſher who refus'd,) by the Lord Broghil, and took a Journey accordingly to London. There he met Mr. Marſhal, Mr. Reyner, Dr. Cheynel, Dr. Goodwin, Dr. Owen, Mr Nye, Mr. Sydr. Sympſon, Mr. Vines, Mr. Manton, and Mr. Jacomb, who were alſo Nominated. Mr. Baxter was for offering to the Parliament the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and Ten Commandments, as the Fundamentals of Chriſtianity: But the reſt were not for ſo large a bottom, but were for having a greater number of Fundamentals. If he did no other ſervice among them, he at leaſt prevented the running many things ſo high as might otherwiſe have been expected.

Truth and Peace were the things he earneſtly purſu'd all his Days. He by writing treated with Dr. Brownrigg Biſhop of Exceter, about Concord with the Dioceſan Party in this Nation: And made alſo ſome Propoſals to Dr. Hammond to this Purpoſe, a little before the Reſtauration of King Charles. By means of Mr. Lamb and Mr. Allen, two Anabaptiſt Miniſters, whom he prevail'd with to quit the way of Separation, he dealt with the reſt of the Anabaptiſts, about Communion with other Churches. He treated with Mr. Nye about an Agreement with the Independents, in a Moderate Scheme. And he was often ingag'd in Diſputes with the Papiſts alſo. And indeed it is amazing how one of ſo much weakneſs, who was conſtantly follow'd with divers bodily Infirmities ſhould be capable of ſo much Service.

He came to London juſt before the Depoſition of Richard Cromwel. He Preach'd before the Parliament, the Day before they Voted for King Charles's Return. He Preach'd alſo before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City at St. Paul's, on the Day of Thankſgiving for Monk's Succeſs. And when the King was actually Reſtor'd, He became one of his Chaplain's in Ordinary, in Conjunction with ſome others of his Brethren of the ſame Sentiments with him. He preach'd once before him in that Capacity: And often waited on him with the reſt of the Miniſters, in order to obtain by his means, ſome Terms of Peace and Union with the Biſhops and their Adherents, who were many of them inclin'd to run things to Extremity. He aſſiſted at the Savoy Conference, as one of the Commiſſioners, and then Drew up a Reform'd Liturgy; which ſome Perſons not very likely to be prejudic'd in his favour, have thought to be the beſt of the Kind they ever ſaw. He has under this Head fallen under the Cenſure of our Late Engliſh Hiſtorian, who Vol. 3. pag. 235, makes this Reflection. He drew up an Abſolute Form of his own, and stil'd it the Reform'd Liturgy: As if he had the Modesty to think that the Old Liturgy Compil'd by a number of very Learned Confessors and Martyrs, must now give place to a new Form compos'd by a single Man, and he by Education much inferiour to many of his Brethren. But had this Gentleman been so just as to have read the Reasons which Mr. Baxter gave, * for his doing that which he represents as so assuming, he'd have seen little Occasion for his Reflection. For the Design of this Liturgy was not to justle out the Old one, where Persons were satisfy'd with it, but to relieve those that durst not use the Old one as it was, by helping them to Forms taken out of the Word of God. Or suppose we, that the Old Liturgy had in the Esteem of many fallen short of this New one; others are at a loss to discover why this should appear so preposterous, unless it be unaccountable for Persons to prefer a Liturgy intirely Scriptural, to one that is made up of humane Phrases, and some of them justly enough exceptionable. It must be own'd that the Old Liturgy was fram'd by sundry Confessors and Martyrs, and upon that Account it deserves respect; and it was a great step in their Day, for them to cast so many Corruptions out of the Publick Service as they did, at that time, when this Liturgy was drawn out of the several Forms that were in Use in this Kingdom before. But it was but a pursuit of their Design, to Render the Publick Service yet more Scriptural: And had they risen from the Dead, there's good reason to believe they would generally have approv'd of it; and been so far from looking upon it as detracting from them, that they would have applauded it as a Good Superstructure upon their Foundations. Suppose then he that drew up this Reform'd Liturgy, was by Education much inferiour to many of his Brethren; it neither follows from thence that he must really be so much inferiour to them in useful Knowledge and valuable Abilities, as this Author would seem to intimate; nor can it justly be thence argu'd that his Performance was contemptible; nor that there was any want of Modesty neither, when his Brethren put him upon the Undertaking. And besides, They approving it when they perus'd it, and joining in the Presenting it, made it their own; as sufficiently appears from the Preface prefix'd; and some of them had Academical Education, and great Applause in the World too, and yet thought not Mr. Baxter at all their inferiour.

* See his Large Life. Part. I. Pag. 306.

He was also One of the Three that manag'd the Dispute at the End of the Conference at the Savoy, and freely charg'd some things in the Liturgy as sinful, and contrary to the Word of God. As, that Ministers are oblig'd in Baptism to use the Transient Image of the Cross; that none be admitted to Communion in the Lord's Supper that dare not receive it Kneeling, &c. The foremention'd Author speaking of this in his History, says that that it seems very strange that he and his Brethren should undertake to mention Eight unlawful things in the Liturgy, when they could not affirm any one of those things to be in it self unlawful; but argu'd altogether upon the unlawful imposition of them, which they might as well have done by the same Argument in Eight hundred of other indifferent and most innocent matters. But if this Gentleman had consider'd, that the unwarrantableness of keeping up such impositions in the Church was the thing which Mr. Baxter and his Brethren undertook to prove, in opposition to those who were zealous for retaining them, and how little in that Case depends upon the simple unlawfulness of the things impos'd (abstracting from all Circumstances in a Metaphysical Sense,) the strangness of their Proceeding would have disappear'd. For tho' the same Argument would have done in Eight hundred indifferent things, (had there been so many so impos'd) yet it does not follow but that it would be good and valid in those Eight things mention'd, in which they thought they should be bound up by the Ecclesiastical Constitution, (if they really must have been so confin'd) while they could not discover their compliance to be Lawful.

The same Author also falls in with Bishop Morley, in representing Mr. Baxter as very perverse and disingenuous, by persisting in his Denial of a Certain Proposition, after it had been turn'd and alter'd several ways: But had he thought fit to have consider'd what is suggested upon that Head in the Abridgment of his Life, which he had so often consulted, and quoted upon other Occasions, he'd have seen the Aspersion wip'd off, which he so freely repeats: And whether in so doing he has meeted with the measure he would have us'd towards himself, upon Occasion, is left to his second Thoughts.

When the King's Declaration came out, Mr. Baxter was offer'd the Bishoprick of Hereford, and some of his Brethren some other Preferments in the Church: But he refus'd Acceptance, because of the uncertainty of the continuance of the Terms of that Declaration, and so did several others: And Mr. Calamy and he, were by a Majority of three Voices chosen by the City Clergy, to be their Clerks in the Convocation: But were by the Bishop of London excus'd from sitting there. A continuance at Kederminster was what he most desir'd of any thing; and he did all that he was able in Order to it: But Providence forc'd him another way.

While he was away from the Town of Kederminster, in great weakness, more likely to die than Live, after his great loss of Blood the People renew'd their Articles against Mr. Danse the Old Vicar and his Curate; and the Committee sequestred the Place, and left the Profits in the Hands of divers Inhabitants to Pay a Preacher till it was dispos'd off. Mr. Baxter tho' press'd, would not Accept the Vicaridge, but continu'd to Officiate among them as their Minister. He would have taken no more out of the Profits of the Living than the 60 l. per Ann. which the Vicar had before bound himself to pay him, but they made it 90. At length the People fearing ſome one ſhould get a Grant of the Sequeſtration from the Committee, went privately and got an Order to ſettle Mr. Baxter in it; but never ſhew'd it him, till King Charles came out of Scotland towards Worceſter, when they deſir'd him to take and keep it, and ſave them harmleſs by it, if they were call'd to repay what they had receiv'd and disburs'd. After this, the Tithes were gather'd in his Name by ſome of his Neighbours: But he gave them Orders, that if any refus'd to pay that were Poor, it ſhould be forgiven them: But if they were able, what was due ſhould be ſought for with the help of the Magiſtrates with Damage: And that both his Part and his Damages ſhould be given to the Poor. When this was known, none that were able would do the Poor ſo great a Kindneſs as to refuſe Payment.

Upon King Charles's Reſtauration the Old Vicar was reſtor'd. He had before liv'd unmoleſted in the Vicaridge-Houſe, and had 40 l. per Ann. duly paid him. Mr. Baxter would now very willingly have been his Curate. Being often with my Lord Chancellour, he begg'd his favour about a Settlement there, which he ſignify'd to him he preferr'd to a Biſhoprick. Sir Ralph Clare was the great Obſtacle. He once told Mr. Baxter, in Biſhop Morley's Chamber, that of 1800 Communicants in the Town, he had not above 600 for him. To clear which he ſent to Kederminſter, and in a Days time his Friends there got the Hands of 1600 of thoſe 1800 for him; which Subſcription being ſhewn, made both the Biſhop and Sir Ralph the more againſt his Return thither. My Lord Chancellour wrote to Sir Ralph, but without effect. Mr. Baxter going down thither to make Terms with the Vicar, he would not ſuffer him to Preach above twice or thrice. He could not be accepted, tho' he would have preach'd for nothing. It would not be allow'd him ſo much as to Adminiſter the Sacrament to the People, and Preach a Farewel Sermon to them. Biſhop Morley deny'd him the Liberty of Preaching in his Dioceſs. He told him that he would take Care the People ſhould be no Looſers. And for a while he ſent the moſt Acceptable Preachers among them; and once took the Pains to Preach to them himſelf, but it was in a way of Invective againſt Mr. Baxter and the Presbyterians. Dr. Warmeſtry did the ſame once and again, but with little ſucceſs. When Biſhop Morley forbad him Preaching in his Dioceſs, hs ask'd him leave but to Preach in ſome ſmall Village among the Ignorant, where there was no Maintenance for a Miniſter: And he told him, that they were better to have none than him. Mr. Baldwin the Miniſter was preſent.

There being no farther Capacity of Service in thoſe Parts, Mr. Baxter for ſome time preach'd up and down occaſionally in the City, and at length was fix'd a Lecturer with Dr. Bates at St. Dunſtans in Fleet ſtreet; and obtain'd Biſhop Sheldon's Licenſe, upon his Subſcribing a Promiſe, not to Preach againſt the Doctrine of the Church, or the Ceremonies, in his Dioceſs, as long as he us'd his Licenſe. Here he had a crouded Auditory; and the Croud unhappily drove him from his place of Preaching. One Day in the midſt of Sermon a little Lime Duſt fell down in the Belfry, which made People think the Steeple and Church were falling. All were preſently in a Confuſed haſt to get away, and the Noiſe of the Feet in the Galleries, ſounded like the fall of the Stones. Some caſt themſelves from the Galleries, becauſe they could not get down Stairs; and the terrour was Univerſal: All made ſuch haſt to get out that they hindred one another. Mr. Baxter when the hurry was a little over, with great Preſence of Mind reaſſum'd his Diſcourſe, with this remarkable Paſſage, to compoſe the Spirits of the People. We are (ſaid he) in the ſervice of God, to prepare our ſelves, that we may be fearleſs at the Great noiſe of the Diſſolving World, when the Heavens ſhall paſs away, and the Elements melt in fervent heat; the Earth alſo and the Works therein ſhall be burnt up, &c. And when he had gone on a little while, a Bench near the Communion-Table breaking under the weight of thoſe that ſtood upon it, renew'd the Fear and Hurry, and made it rather worſe than before. He was forc'd to Preach the reſt of his Quarter at St. Brides-Church, while St. Dunſtan's was Repairing. He preach'd alſo once every Lords Day at Black-Friars, Gratis; and a Week-day Lecture in Milk-ſtreet.

During this ſhort Interval of Publick Liberty, Thoſe Miniſters that were not for Epiſcopacy, Liturgy and Ceremonies, were repreſented as Seditious, and loaded with Calumnies and Reproaches. Many of them were impriſon'd, together with ſome ſober Gentlemen, in ſeveral Counties, under Pretence of their Plotting againſt the Government. Particularly a Plot was hatch'd in Worceſterſhire. A Packet was pretended to be found under a Hedge, left there by a Scotch Pedlar. In it there were Letters from ſeveral Miniſters: And among the reſt, one from Mr. Baxter; intimating, that he had provided a conſiderable Body of Men well Arm'd, which ſhould be ready againſt the time appointed. And indeed where Men were taken up and impriſon'd in diſtant Counties, it was ſaid to be for Baxter's Plot. The Noiſe of theſe Plots in ſo many Counties, pav'd the Way for the Act of Uniformity, which gave all the Miniſters who could not Conform no longer time than till Bartholomew-Day, 1662. when they were all caſt out. Mr. Baxter preach'd his laſt Sermon in Publick on the 25th of May before, at Black-Friars. The Reaſon of his forbearing Preaching ſo ſoon, was partly becauſe the Lawyers did interpret a doubtful Clauſe in the Act of Uniformity, as putting an End to the Liberty of Lecturers at that time; and partly becauſe he would let all the Miniſters in the Nation underſtand in time what his intentions were, leaſt any might be influenc'd to a Compliance, upon a ſuppoſition that he intended to Conform.

After this if the Ejected Miniſters did but meet to Pray together it was a Seditious Conventicle. Dr. Bates and Mr. Baxter were deſir'd to Pray at a Friend's Houſe, for his Wife that was ſick of a Feaver, and had they been there they had been Apprehended by a Warrant from two Juſtices. Finding therefore his Publick Service at an End, he retir'd to Acton in Middleſex; where he went every Lords Day to the Publick Church, and ſpent the reſt of the Day with his Family, and a few poor Neighbours that came in to him. In the time of the Plague, in 1665, he went to Mr. Hampdens in Buckinghamſhire; and return'd back again to Acton when it was over. He ſtaid there as long as the Act againſt Conventicles was in force, and when it was expir'd, he had ſo many came to hear him, that he wanted room. Hereupon he by a Warrant of two Juſtices, was committed to New-Priſon Goal for ſix Months. But he got an Habeas Corpus, and was releas'd; and remov'd to Totteridge, near Barnet. While he was there Duke Lauderdale going into Scotland, ſignify'd to him a Purpoſe there was of taking off the Oath of Canonical Obedience, and all Impoſitions of Conformity, ſave only that it ſhould be neceſſary to ſit in Presbyteries and Synods with the Biſhops and Moderators; and that he had the Kings Conſent to offer him what Place in Scotland he would chooſe, either a Church, or a College, or a Biſhoprick. But he excus'd himſelf from his Weakneſs and Indiſpoſition, and the Circumſtances of his Family.

After the Indulgence in 1672, He return'd to his Preaching in the City. He was one of the Tueſday Lecturers at Pinners-Hall; and had a Friday Lecture at Fetter-Lane, but on Lords Days he only preach'd Occaſionally. He afterwards preach'd in St. James's Market-Houſe, where on July 5. 1674. they had a marvelous Deliverance. For a Main-Beam, that had before been conſiderably weaken'd by the weight of the People, gave ſuch Cracks, that three ſeveral times they ran out of the Room, concluding it was falling. The next Day taking up the Boards they found that two Rends in the Beam were ſo great, that it was a wonder of Providence that the Floor had not fallen, and the Roof with it, to the Deſtruction of Multitudes. He was afterwards apprehended as he was Preaching his Thurſday Lecture at Mr. Turners; but ſoon releas'd; becauſe the Warrant was not ſign'd by a City Juſtice, as it ſhould have been when he was apprehended for Preaching in the City. In 1676. By the Aſſiſtance of his Friends he built a New Meeting Houſe in Oxenden-ſtreet, and when he had Preach'd there but once, a Reſolution was taken to ſurprize him the next time, and to ſend him for ſix Months to Goal upon the Oxford Act. But he being out of Town, Mr. Seddon a Darbyſhire Miniſter Preaching for him, was ſent to the Gate-Houſe in his room, tho' the Warrant did not ſuit him: and he was forc'd to continue there three Months, till he had a Habeas Corpus. He afterwards built another Meeting-Houſe in St. Martin's Pariſh, but was forcibly kept out of it, by Conſtables and Officers: And thereupon Mr. Wadſworth in Southwark dying, he upon the Invitation of his People preach'd to them many Months in Peace. And when Dr. Lloyd ſucceeded Dr. Lamplugh, in St. Martins Pariſh, he offer'd him his Chapel in Oxenden-ſtreet, for Publick Worſhip, and he accepted it. *

* The Gentleman that compil'd the Third Volume of the Compleat Hiſtory of England, Quoting that Part of the Abridgment of Mr. Baxter's Life, where this is mention'd, declares P. 312, that that part of the Relation as to the Offer of a Chapel, is known to be falſe. This appearing a direct Contradiction to Mr. Baxter's Relation of a matter of Fact, in which himſelf was immediately concern'd, troubl'd many: The rather becauſe it ſeem'd to ſtrike at the Credit of his whole Hiſtory. Mr. Baxter had not only aſſerted in the Hiſtory of his Life, P. 179. that he was encourag'd by Dr. Tillotſon to make the Offer of the Chappel, and that it was accepted to his great ſatisfaction; but he had mention'd it in ſeveral of his Works that were publiſh'd in his Life time; and particularly in his Breviate of the Life of his Wife, he P. 57. ſays, that Dr. Lloyd and the Pariſhoners accepted of it for their publick Worſhip, and that he and his Wife ask'd them no more Rent, than they were to pay for the Ground; and the Room over for a Veſtry, at 5 l. asking no advantage for all the Money laid out on the building. Which was never known to be Contradicted, till this Hiſtory was publiſh'd. Application therefore was made to the Compiler of that Third Volume, in a reſpectful way, and he was requeſted to ſignify upon what grounds this was charg'd as a Falſity. Hereupon he like a Gentleman, a Chriſtian, and a Divine, frankly offer'd to conſult my Lord Biſhop of Worceſter upon the matter, who was the Perſon immediately concern'd with Mr. Baxter; and his Lordſhip when Conſulted was pleas'd to Declare, that Mr. Baxter, being diſturb'd in his Meeting-Houſe, in Oxenden-ſtreet, by the Kings Drums, which Mr. Secretary Coventry caus'd to be beat under the Windows, made an Offer of letting it to the Pariſh of St. Martins for a Tabernacle, at the Rent of 40 Pounds a Tear; and that his Lordſhip hearing it, ſaid he lik'd it well; and that thereupon Mr. Baxter came to him himſelf, and upon his propoſing the ſame thing to him, he Acquainted the Veſtry, and they took it upon thoſe Terms. This Account is here publiſh'd for the clearing of that Matter, with due Thanks to his Lordſhip for his Frankneſs, and to the Gentleman that conſulted him, for his moſt obliging readineſs to do Juſtice to Truth.

An. 1682. He was ſuddenly ſurpriz'd in his Houſe, by an Informer with Conſtables and Officers, who ſerv'd upon him a Warrant, to ſeize on his Perſon for coming within Five Miles of a Corporation; and Five more Warrants in Diſtrain for 195 l. for Five Sermons. He was going with them to a Juſtice, tho' extremely bad as to his Health, till meeting Dr. Cox, he forc'd him back to his Bed, and went and took his Oath before Five Juſtices that he could not go to Priſon without Danger of Death. The King being conſulted, conſented that his impriſonment ſhould for that time be forborn. But they Executed the Warrants on the Books and Goods in the Houſe, tho' he made it appear they were none of his; and they Sold the Bed he lay upon. Some Friends paid down the Money they were apprais'd at, and he repay'd them. Being afterwards in danger of new Seizures, he was forc'd to retire to private Lodgings.

An. 1684. He was again ſeiz'd upon and carry'd to the Seſſions, when he was ſcarce able to ſtand, and Bound in a Bond of 400 l. to his Good Behaviour: And was told that this Proceeding was only to ſecure the Government againſt ſuſpected Perſons. He was ſome time after carry'd again to the Seſſions-Houſe in great Pain, and forc'd to continue bound. He refus'd to ſtand bound, not knowing what they might interpret a Breach of the Peace: But his ſome one ſhould get a Grant of the Sequeſtration from the Committee, went privately and got an Order to ſettle Mr. Baxter in it; but never ſhew'd it him, till King Charles came out of Scotland towards Worceſter, when they deſir'd him to take and keep it, and ſave them harmleſs by it, if they were call'd to repay what they had receiv'd and disburs'd. After this, the Tithes were gather'd in his Name by ſome of his Neighbours: But he gave them Orders, that if any refus'd to pay that were Poor, it ſhould be forgiven them: But if they were able, what was due ſhould be ſought for with the help of the Magiſtrates with Damage: And that both his Part and his Damages ſhould be given to the Poor. ſureties would be bound, leaſt he ſhould die in a Goal. He was carry'd thither a third time, and ſtill bound; tho' for the moſt part he kept his bed.

Tho' he was thus treated all King Charles's Reign, he yet pray'd as heartily for him as any man; And he was often Conſulted about Terms and Meaſures for an Union, between the Conformiſts and the Nonconformiſts as to which he was ever free to give his Sentiments. He was not for Comprehenſion without Indulgence; Nor for a bare Indulgence without the inlargement of the Act of Uniformity to a greater Comprehenſion; but for the Conjunction of both. He declared this when he was conſulted by a Perſon of Honour, An. 1663. In the Year 1668. Dr. Bates and he waited on the Lord Keeper Bridgman by deſire, in order to a Treaty about a Comprehenſion and Toleration, and were afterwards met by Dr. Wilkins and Mr. Burton with whom they conferr'd. The thing they moſt differ'd about, was Reordination. At length by Conference with Sir Mat. Hale, that point was thus adjuſted, that there ſhould be an Admiſſion into the Miniſtry of the Church of England, of ſuch as had been before Ordain'd, According to this Form of Words: Take thou Legal Authority to Preach the Word of God, and Adminiſter the Holy Sacraments in any Congregation of England, where thou ſhalt be lawfully appointed thereunto. It was Agreed the Ceremonies ſhould be left Indifferent, and the Liturgy alter'd: and that there ſhould be an Indulgence of ſuch as could not be comprehended. And a Bill was drawn up by Judge Hale to be preſented to the Parliament; but the High Church Party made ſuch an Intereſt, that it was carry'd by a Vote that no man ſhould bring in a Bill of this Nature. He afterwards in the Year 1673. upon the deſire of the Earl of Orrery drew up Terms of Union between the Conformiſts and the Nonconformiſts, in order to their joint Vigorous oppoſing Popery. And the Next Year there was alſo an Agreement upon like Terms, between Dr. Stillingfleet, and Dr. Tillotſon, and Dr. Manton, Dr. Bates, Mr. Pool, and Mr. Baxter, and an Act was propos'd to be brought in the next Seſſion of Parliament, in Purſuance of the Treaty: But Dr. Tillotſon wrote word to Mr. Baxter, That as Circumſtances ſtood, ſuch an Act could not paſs in either Houſe, without the Concurrence of a Conſiderable Part of the Biſhops, and his Majeſty's Countenance, which at that time he ſaw little Reaſon to Expect.

In the Reign of King James the 2d, Mr. Baxter was committed to the Kings Bench Priſon by Warrant from the Lord Chief Juſtice Jefferies, for his Paraphraſe on the New Teſtament, which was call'd a Scandalous and Seditious Book againſt the Government. On May the 30th, 1685. he was brought to his Tryal. The Paſſages mention'd in the Information, were his Paraphraſe on Mat. 5. 19. Mark 9. 39. Mark 11. 31. Mark 12. 38, 39, 40. Luke 10. 2. Joh. 11. 57. and Acts 15. 2. And a Certain Noted Clergyman put into the Hands of his Enemies ſome Accuſations out of his Paraphraſe on Rom. 13. &c. as againſt the King, to touch his Life: but no Uſe was made of them. Jefferies interrupted his Council in pleading for him, and treated Mr. Baxter moſt ſcornfully and rudely. He had given Judgment againſt him June 29. when he was fin'd 500 Marks; and to lie in Priſon till he paid it; and bound to his Good Behaviour for ſeven Years. But the next Year King James altering his meaſures, many of the Diſſenters that were impriſon'd were releas'd; and their Fines were remitted. And among the reſt, Mr. Baxter obtain'd his Pardon by the Mediation of the Lord Powis. His Fine was remitted: and November 24. Sir Samuel Aſtrey ſent his Warrant to the Keeper of the Kings Bench to diſcharge him. But he gave ſureties for his Good Behaviour: His Majeſty declaring for his Satisfaction, that it ſhould not in him be interpreted a Breach of the Good Behaviour, for him to reſide in London, which was not allowable by the Oxford Act; and this was enter'd upon his Bail Piece. He continu'd ſome time in the Rules. And in February following remov'd to a Houſe in Charter-Houſe-Yard.

After his Settlement there, he gave Mr. Sylveſter (whom he peculiarly valu'd, and had a ſpecial Intimacy with) and his Flock, his Pains, Gratis, every Lords Day in the Morning; and every other Thurſday Morning at a Weekly Lecture. And thus he continu'd for about 4 Years and a Half; rejoicing as much as any man at the Happy Revolution under the Conduct of King William, tho' he appear'd not much in Publick. And when he was quite diſabled from Publick ſervice by his Growing weakneſs, he ſtill continued to do good in his own hired Houſe, where he open'd his Doors Morning and Evening every day, to all that would come to join with him in Family Worſhip; Reading and Expounding the Scriptures with great ſeriouſneſs and freedom. At length his Diſtempers took him off from this alſo, and confin'd him firſt to his Chamber, and then to his Bed. Under ſharp Pains, he was very ſubmiſſive to the Will of God. And when he was enclin'd to pray moſt earneſtly for a Releaſe, he would check himſelf and ſay, It is not fit for me to preſcribe: Lord, when thou wilt; what thou wilt; how thou wilt. As his End drew near, being often ask'd by his Friends, how it was with his inward Man, he Reply'd, I bleſs God I have a well Grounded Aſſurance of my Eternal Happineſs, and great Peace and Comfort within. He gave Excellent Counſel to Young Miniſters that viſited him, earneſtly pray'd God to bleſs their Labours, and expreſſed Great Hopes that God would do a great deal of good by them, and great Joy that they were of Moderate and Peaceable Spirits. Being at laſt ask'd how he did, his Anſwer was almoſt well. And at length he expir'd, Dec. 8th, 1691. and was a few Days after inter'd in Chriſt Church, in London, whither his Corps was Attended by a Numerous Company of Perſons of Different Ranks, and eſpecially of Miniſters; ſome of them Conformiſts; who paid him the laſt Office of Reſpect. There were two Diſcourſes made upon Occaſion of his Funeral, one by Dr. Bates, and the other by Mr. Sylvester, which are both in Print: The former may be met with in the Doctors Works; and the latter at the end of Mr. Baxter's Life in Folio.

His Last Will and Testament bore Date July the 7th, 1689. The Preamble was something Peculiar, and ran thus. 'I Richard Baxter, of London, Clerk, an Unworthy Servant of Jesus 'Christ, drawing to the End of this Transitory Life, having thro' Gods great Mercy the free 'Use of my Understanding, do make this my Last Will and Testament, revoking all other 'Wills formerly made by me. My Spirit I commit with Trust and Hope of the Heavenly Felicity, into the hands of Jesus my Glorify'd Redeemer and Intercessor; and by his Mediation into the Hands of God my Reconciled Father, the Infinite Eternal Spirit, Light, Life, and Love, 'most Great and Wise and Good, the God of Nature, Grace and Glory; of whom and thro 'whom, and to whom are all things; my absolute Owner, Ruler, and Benefactor whose I am, 'and whom I (tho' imperfectly) serve, seek and trust; to whom be Glory for ever, Amen. To 'him I render most humble thanks, that he hath fill'd up my Life with abundant mercy, and 'Pardon'd my Sin by the merits of Christ, and vouchsaf'd by his Spirit to renew me, and 'seal me as his own; and to moderate and bless to me my long sufferings in the flesh, and at last 'to sweeten them by his own Interest, and comforting Approbation, who taketh the Cause of 'Love, and Concord as his own, &c. He ordered his Books to be distributed by Mr. Matthew Sylvester, and Mr. Roger Morrice, among poor Scholars, which was done accordingly. All that remain'd of his Temporal Estate, after a few Legacies to his Kindred, he dispos'd of for the Benefit of the Souls and Bodies of the Poor: And he left Sir Henry Ashhurst, Baronet, Rowland Hunt, of Boraton, Esq; Mr. Thomas Hunt, Merchant, Edward Harley, Esq; Mr. Thomas Cooke, Merchant, Mr. Thomas Trench, Merchant, and Mr. Robert Bird, Gentleman, his Executors.

Few ever had more weakness to imbitter their Lives than he: and yet this Heighten'd and Cherisht the peculiar Seriousness of his Spirit. Few ever were more strongly Tempted to Infidelity: and yet as Providence over-rul'd it, that contributed in the Issue to his Greater Establishment. He was Tempted sorely to Question the truth of the Scriptures, the Immortality of the Soul, and the Life to come. This sort of Temptations did not Assault him in that way that is usual with Melancholy Persons, but with a shew of sober Reason. Hereupon he was forc'd to dig to the very foundations of Religion, and seriously to examine the Reasons of Christianity, and to give a Hearing to all that could be said against it; and His Preaching and Writings were upon this Account the more Useful. And he at last found that nothing is so firmly believ'd, as that which hath been some time doubted of.

He was a great Observer of Providence, and in the Course of his Life met with many surprizing Deliverances. When he was 17 Years of Age, riding on an unruly Horse, who would often get the Bit in his teeth, and run away with his Rider, he was run away with in a very dangerous place. He was in a Field of High Ground, where there was a Quick-sett Hedge on the side of him, that was the only Fence; on the other side of which was a deep narrow Lane, about a Stories height below him. When the Horse was running away with him, he turn'd aside on a suddain, and Leapt over the Hedge into the Lane. He came to the Ground before the Horse, and yet receiv'd no Hurt, tho' it seem'd marvellous how his feet could fall besides him. At another time being about the same Age, and at Ludlow Castle, in Company of several Idle Gentlemen, he was Learning to play at Tables of the best Gamester in the House. When his Opposite had once so much the better, that it was a hundred to one, besides the difference of their Skill, he still held on, tho' both he and the Standers by laugh'd at him for not giving up, and told him the Game was lost; he was so confident of it, as to offer an hundred to one; and actually did lay down 10 shillings to 6 pence. When the Wager was laid, he told him there was no possibility of the Game, but by one Cast often: and it so fell out, that he had that same Cast for several times successively, so that by that time a man could go 4 or 5 times about the room, his Game was gone, which caus'd great Admiration. He took the Hint, fear'd that the Devil had the Ruling of the Dice, and did it to entice him to be a Gamester, and so gave him his 10 shillings again, and resolv'd never more to play at Tables whilst he liv'd. At another time, travelling from London into the Countrey, about Christmas, in a very deep Snow, he met on the road a loaded Waggon, where he could not pass by, but on the side of a Bank: Passing over which, all his Horses feet slipp'd from under him, and all the Girts broke, so that he was cast just before the Waggon wheel, which had gon over him, but that it pleas'd God the Horses suddenly stopp'd, without any discernable cause, till he got out of the way. Often was he brought very low while he was at Kederminster, so as to receive the sentence of Death in himself, when his Poor honest Praying Neighbours there met together, and upon their Fasting and earnest Prayers, he hath been recover'd. Once when he had been very low for 3 Weeks together, and was unable to go abroad, on the very day that they pray'd for him, which was on the Friday he recover'd, so as to be able to preach to them, and administer the Sacrament on the Lords Day following. Another time he had a Tumour rose on one of the Tonsils of his Throat, white and hard like a Bone; above the hardness of any Schyrrous Tumour. He fear'd a Cancer, and apply'd such Remedies by the advice of the Physician as were thought fittest, but without Alteration; for it remain'd hard as at first. At the end of a Quarter of a year, he was under some concern, that he had never prais'd God particularly for any of the Deliverances he had formerly afforded him. And thereupon being ſpeaking of God's Confirming our Belief of his word, by his fulfilling his Promiſes, and hearing Prayers, (as it is publiſhed in the 2d Part of his Saints Reſt) he annex'd ſome Thankful Hints as to his own Experiences; and ſuddenly the Tumour vaniſh'd, leaving no Sign where it had been remaining. Tho' he neither ſwallow'd it down, nor voided it by ſtool, nor could ever tell what became of it. Another time having read in Dr. Gerhard the admirable Effects of the ſwallowing a Gold Bullet upon his own Father, in a caſe much like his, he got a Gold Bullet, between 20 and 30 ſhillings weight; and having taken it, he knew not how to be again deliver'd of it. He took Clyſters and Purges for about 3 Weeks, but nothing ſtirr'd it: And a Gentleman having done the like, the Bullet never came from him till he dy'd, and it was cut out. But at laſt his Neighbours ſet apart a day, to Faſt and Pray for him, and he was free from his Danger in the beginning of that day. And at another time, being in danger of an Ægilopſe, he had alſo ſudden relief by their Prayers. At another time riding upon a Great hot mettled Horſe, as he ſtood upon a ſloping Pavement in Worceſter, the Horſe rear'd up, and both his hinder feet ſlipt from under him; ſo that the full weight of the Body of the Horſe fell upon his Legg, which yet was only bruis'd, and not broken: when conſidering the place, the Stones, and the manner of the Fall, it was a wonder his Legg was not broken in ſhivers. Another time as he ſate in his Study, the weight of his greateſt Folio Books brake down 3 or 4 of the higheſt ſhelves, when he ſate cloſe under them; and they fell down on every ſide of him, and not one of them hit him, except one upon the Arm. Whereas the Place, the Weight, and Greatneſs of the Books was ſuch, and his Head juſt under them, that it was a wonder they had not beaten out his Brains, or done him an unſpeakable miſchief. One of the ſhelves juſt over his head having Dr. Walton's Polyglot Bible; all Auſtin's Works; the Bibliotheca Patrum, Marlorate, &c. At another time, viz. March 26. 1665, as he was preaching in a Private houſe, a Bullet came in at the Window, and paſt by him, but did no hurt. Such things as theſe, he carefully took notice of, and recorded. And indeed his being carry'd thro' ſo much Service and Suffering too, under ſo much weakneſs, was a Conſtant wonder to himſelf, and all that knew him; and what he us'd himſelf often to take notice of, with Expreſſions of great Thankfulneſs.

There was a ſcarce man in England ſo conſulted about Caſes of Conſcience as he was. He was apply'd to in matters of more than common Concern and Difficulty, by Perſons of all Ranks and Qualities. His Directory may give the World ſatisfaction how fit he was for that Province: and had he kept an Exact Account of the Various Caſes that had been propos'd to him, with his Solutions, we ſhould have had yet fuller Evidence.

He lov'd a retir'd Life but could not ſo conceal himſelf, as not to be obſerv'd and much reſpected. My Lord Broghill who was afterwards Earl of Orery and Lord Preſident of Munſter, gave him many marks of his Reſpect. Arch-Biſhop Uſher us'd great freedom with him, and urg'd him to ſome of his Writings. In the worſt of times he had ſome even in King Charles his Court that were very reſpectful to him. Duke Lunderdale was one of theſe: and let him be ever ſo ill a man himſelf, this muſt be ſaid, that Mr. Baxter had ſometimes an Intereſt in him for the procuring good, and the avoiding miſchief. While he liv'd at Acton he had free Converſation with his Neighbour Sir Matthew Hale. And he manifeſted his Reſpect to Mr. Baxter, by giving an high Encomium of him both for Piety and Learning, before all the Judges at the Table at Serjeants Inn, at the time when he was in Priſon upon the Oxford Act. My Lord Balcarres and his Lady had alſo a very great Value for him. He had many Letters full of Reſpects from Eminent Divines in Forreign Parts. But there was no Friend in the whole Courſe of his Life whom he more valu'd and reſpected, and by whom he was more belov'd, than that noted Citizen Henry Aſhhurſt, Eſq; commonly call'd Alderman Aſhhurſt, who was the moſt Exemplary Perſon for Sobriety, Self-Denial, Piety and Humility that London could glory of. In ſhort; Living and Dying, he was as much reſpected by ſome, and as much ſlighted by others as any man of the Age.

Hardly any man was ever more Calumniated and Reproach'd than he. Dr. Boreman of Trinity Colledge, charg'd him in Print with killing a man with his own hand in Cold Blood. Some years after, the ſame Charge was brought againſt him in a Coffee Houſe; but he that brought it being afterwards convinc'd, profeſs'd his Sorrow and ask'd his Pardon. But Sir Roger L'Eſtrange publiſhed a Story a little like it in his Obſervator, and it was alſo inſerted in the Preface to the Life of Dr. Heylin, and was lately inſerted in a Book Intituled, Ordination by meer Presbyters prov'd Void and Null, in a Conference between Philalethes and Pſeudocheus. The Story was this, that Mr. Baxter finding one Major Jennings in the War time, among the Bodies of the Dead and Wounded, look'd on while Lieutenant Hurdman that was with him, ran him thro' the Body in cold Blood. And that Mr. Baxter took off with his own hand, the Kings Picture from about his neck, telling him as he was ſwimming in his Goar, that he was a Popiſh Rogue, and that was his Crucifix: Which Picture was kept by Mr. Baxter till it was got from him, but not without much difficulty, by one Mr. Somerfield who liv'd with Sir Thomas Rouſe, who reſtor'd it to the true owner who was ſuppoſed to be dead of his Wounds: And this Narrative was ſubſcrib'd by Jennings himſelf, that it might paſs for the more Authentick.---Mr. Baxter on the contrary ſolemnly Proteſted in Print * upon Occaſion of the Publication, that he knew not that he ever ſaw Major Jennings; that he never ſaw him or any other man wounded; that he never took took ſuch a Picture from him, or ſaw who did it; nor was in the Field when it was done; much leſs ſpoke any thing like the words reported: But that being at Longford Houſe, while it was a Garriſon for the Parliament, a Souldier ſhew'd a ſmall Medal of Guilt Silver, bigger than a ſhilling; and ſaid that he wounded Jennings, took his Coat from his Back, and the Medal from his neck, which Mr. Baxter bought for 18 pence, no one offering more: And that hearing afterwards he was living, he freeely deſired this Somerfield to give it him, ſuppoſing it was a mark of honour which might be uſeful to him. And this Story was all the Thanks that ever he had.

When he preach'd before King Charles, his Majeſty ſent the Lord Chamberlain to him to require him to Print his Sermon; and he accordingly Printed it, and Added in the Title Page, by his Majeſty's Special Command. Dr. Pierce afterward aſſerted to ſeveral, that he was none of the Kings Chaplain, and that he had no Order from him for the Printing of his Sermon. And he could ſcarce preach a Sermon, but he was repreſented as having ſome ſeditious Deſign, cover'd over with innocent Words.

He was vehemently aſpers'd by thoſe that were fond of Extremes on all Hands. When the Lecture was ſet up at Pinners Hall, if he did but Preach for Unity and againſt Diviſion, or unneceſſary withdrawing from each other, or againſt unwarrantable narrowing the Church of Chriſt. It was preſently ſaid he Preach'd againſt ſuch and ſuch Perſons. If he did but ſay that the Will of Man had a natural Liberty, tho' a Moral Thraldom to Vice, and that men might have Chriſt and Life if they were but truly willing, tho' Grace muſt make them willing; and that men have power to do better than they do, he was ſaid to preach up Arminianiſm and free Will. And on the other hand when he in Publick told the People, that they muſt not make the world believe that they were under greater ſufferings than they really were, nor be unthankful for their Peace; and that they ought when any hurt them, to love and forgive them, and ſee that they fail'd not of their Duty to them; but ſhould not forſake the owning and juſt defending by Scripture Evidence, the Truth Oppos'd; ſome of the high Church Party, in a Printed Account told the World, that he bid the People reſiſt, and not ſtand ſtill, and die like Dogs: for the falſity of which he was forc'd to appeal to the many Hundreds that heard him.

Nay, he was aſpers'd even after his Death. For it was Reported that in the latter Part of his Life, even till he dy'd, he was in great doubt and trouble about a future State. That he inclin'd to think there was no Future State at all, and ended his Days under ſuch a Perſwaſion, to his no ſmall trouble; he having written ſo many things to perſwade Perſons to believe there was. Which was abundantly Anſwer'd by Mr. Sylveſter, in his Preface prefixt to the Hiſtory of his Life and times.

His Love to the Honeſt People of Kederminſter, who had the Prime of his Strength, and the flower of his Labours was very remarkable. He told them in the Preface to the Saints Reſt, that the Offers of Greater Worldly Accommodations, with five times the means that he receiv'd with them, was no Temptation to him once to queſtion whether he ſhould leave them. But he was afterwards forc'd to leave them, by Biſhop Morley and Mr. Dance the Old Vicar. He did not part with them without mutual Grief and Tears. And when he went from them, he left Mr. Baldwin to live privately among them, and overſee them in his ſtead: and he adviſ'd them to frequent the Publick Church Aſſemblies, in Conjunction with their Private Helps, unleſs the Publick Miniſter was utterly inſufficient, or preach'd Hereſy, or in his Application ſet himſelf againſt the ends of his Office, by endeavouring to make a Holy Life ſeem odious. After parting from them, he wrote a Letter to them but once a Year, leſt it ſhould be the Occaſion of their Suffering; and for fear leaſt if they did any thing that was diſpleaſing, it ſhould be repreſented as the Effect of his Suggeſtions. But in proceſs of time even this Honeſt and quiet People were exaſperated. They were alienated from the Prelates and their Adherents, for running down Mr. Baxter and thoſe of his mind, as Deceivers. Repeating Sermons in their Houſes they were laid in Jails with common Malefactors, their Goods were ſeiz'd, and they were fin'd and puniſh'd again and again. At length they were hardly more Angry with the Biſhops, than they were with Mr. Baxter himſelf, whom they cenſur'd upon his publiſhing the Book call'd The Cure of Church Diviſions, as ſtrengthning the hands of Perſecutors by perſwading them of the Lawfulneſs of Communicating in their Pariſh Church, with a Conformable Miniſter in the Liturgy. But he ſtill continu'd his Care of them, and concern for them. And at length he became capable of helping them to a valuable uſeful man, that would make it his buſineſs to promote ſerious Religion among them. For Col. John Bridges had ſold the Patronage of the Living to Mr. Thomas Foley, upon Condition that he ſhould preſent Mr. Baxter next if he were capable of it; and if not, that he ſhould preſent one with his conſent. When the Old Vicar dy'd, many thought that Mr. Baxter himſelf would have Conform'd. Arch-Biſhop Stern of York, particularly bid a Miniſter take it on his word that he Conform'd, and was gone to his Beloved Kederminſter. But Mr. Baxter had no ſuch thoughts, tho' he would gladly have aſſiſted them in getting a ſuitable Perſon. But the People there refus'd to have any hand in bringing in another Miniſter into the Church, leaſt they ſhould ſeem to conſent to his Conformity, or be oblig'd to own him in his Office. They were not to be prevail'd with to concur: and for that reaſon Mr. Baxter refus'd to meddle in the choice. When Mr. Foley had put in a valuable man to be their Miniſter, Mr. Baxter wrote to them to join with him in Prayers and Sacrament, at that time when they had no Opportunity for ſeparate Meetings: But their ſufferings had ſo far alienated them from the Church Party, that they would not yield that his Letter ſhould be ſo much as read among them. However, Mr. Baxter kept up a peculiar reſpect to them, and concern for them, as long as he liv'd.

His Works were Various. Dr. Bates in his Funeral Sermon, ſays that his Books for the Number and Variety of matter in them make a Library. They Contain a Treaſure of Controverſial, Caſuiſtitical, Poſitive and Practical Divinity; And the Excellent Biſhop Wilkins did not ſtick to ſay that he had Cultivated every Subject he Handled. I'le touch only upon thoſe of his Works that are here Collected together in four Volumes.

The firſt Volume contains His Chriſtian Directory. The firſt Part of it which he calls Chriſtian Ethicks, is perhaps the beſt Body of Practical Divinity; that is extant in our own or any other Tongue. And tho' in the Eccleſiaſtical Caſes there are ſome things that are not to every man's Guſt (and no other could well be expected where there is ſo vaſt a Variety) yet he that will have the Patience to read thro', will find his Pains rewarded by Ample Inſtruction.

The ſecond Volume contains, I. The Reaſons of the Chriſtian Religion; which Book hath reliev'd many when under Temptations to Infidelity. II. The Unreaſonableneſs of Infidelity: where a clear Account is given of the Nature of the Witneſs of the Spirit to the truth of Chriſtianity; and of the Unpardonable Sin committed in Oppoſition to it: And a Diſcourſe is added about the Arrogancy of Reaſon in Oppoſition to Divine Revelation, that is very proper for thoſe who being for a freedom of thought would know how to keep it within due bounds, ſo as to prevent extravagance. III. More Reaſons for the Chriſtian Religion: which contains a Vindication of the Holy Scriptures from the Charge of Contradictions; and ſome Animadverſions on my Lord Herbert De Veritate. IV. His Treatiſe of Converſion; a ſet of Plain Sermons Preach'd at Kederminſter, explaining the Nature and the Neceſſity; the Benefits and Hindrances of a thorough Change of Heart and Life. V. A Call to the Unconverted; which has been bleſs'd by God with marvellous Succeſs in reclaiming Perſons from their impiety. Six Brothers were once Converted by reading it. Twenty thouſand of them were Printed and Diſpers'd in little more than a Years time. It was tranſlated into French and Dutch, and other European Languages: And Mr. Elliot tranſlated it into the Indian Language; and Mr. Cotton Mather gives an account of a Certain Indian Prince, who was ſo affected with this Book, that he ſate Reading it with Tears in his Eyes till he dy'd, not Suffering it to be taken from him. VI. Now or Never: in which all are ſeriouſly urg'd to improve the Preſent time, in order to an Hearty return to God thro' Jeſus Chriſt. VII. Directions and Perſwaſions to a ſound Converſion. A Book that has been uſeful to many Souls, by preventing thoſe Miſtakes in Practical Religion, which are often fatal. VIII. A Saint or a Brute. Being ſome plain Sermons preach'd to his People at Kederminſter, concerning the Neceſſity and Excellency of Holineſs. IX. The Miſchiefs of Self Ignorance; And Benefits of Self Acquaintance: Being ſome plain Sermons preach'd at St. Dunſtan's in Fleet-Street, to prevent Perſons from devouring others, while they did not know themſelves. X. A right Method for ſettled Peace of Conſcience: Written for the benefit of a Melancholy Lady; a Book by which many dejected Chriſtians have been reviv'd. XI. God's Goodneſs Vindicated. An Eſſay to Clear up that Darling Attribute of the Deity about which Melancholy Perſons often run into ſuch unhappy Miſtakes. XII. Directions to a weak Chriſtian how to grow in Grace; with Characters of a ſound Chriſtian. Well worth the Peruſal of ſuch as deſire to have right and clear Notions of Chriſtianity.

The third Volume Contains; I. The Saints Everlaſting Reſt; A Book written in a very Languiſhing Condition, when in the Suſpenſe of Life and Death: and yet it has the Signatures of an Holy and Vigorous mind. Multitudes will have Cauſe to bleſs God for ever for this Book. Among others, Holy Mr. John Janeway was thereby Converted. * II. A Treatiſe of Self-Denial, in which the Nature and Grounds of that Capital Part of our Holy Religion are open'd and clear'd. III. Of Crucifying the World by the Croſs of Chriſt. An Affecting Caveat againſt Worldlineſs. IV. The Life of Faith. Which was an Enlargement of the Sermon Preach'd before King Charles the 2d, ſoon after his Reſtauration. Tho' there are many things to be met with here, that Occur in his other Writings, (a thing not to be avoided in one that Wrote ſo much) yet has the Method in which they are here put together, been Advantageous to many. V. The Divine Life; in which there are three Treatiſes; viz. Of the Knowledge of God, of walking with God, and of Converſing with God in Solitude: in which there is more Solid and Uſeful Divinity, than in ſome bulky Volumes. VI. The Divine Appointment of the Lords Day, Written for the Satisfaction of ſome that were inclin'd to the Seventh Day Sabbath. VII. Obedient Patience. VIII. His Dying Thoughts: In which tho' there are ſome peculiarities, and an Account of ſome Temptations, that it is amazing that ſuch a Man as Mr. Baxter ſhould be at all troubled with; there yet are ſome as Noble thoughts as to the Happineſs of the Saints Departed, and as to our Bleſſed Saviour's Tranſiguration, and the improveableneſs of it, as can eaſily be met with.

* See Mr. Janeway's Life, p. 6.

The

The Fourth and Laſt Volume, Contains I. Compaſſionate Counſel to Young men. Which many have had Cauſe to Bleſs God for. II. The Mother's Catechiſm: deſign'd for the Inſtruction of Children, and for the Aſſiſtance of Mothers in Diſcharging their Duty in that Reſpect. III. Catechizing of Families, a Plain Manual; familiarly opening the great Eſſentials of Religion in a Catechetical way. IV. The Poor man's Family Book; A Book that hath been given away by many Landlords to their Tenants, with good Succeſs. V. Confirmation and Reſtauration, &c. being an Eſſay to revive the true Primitive Diſcipline, by bringing the Baptiz'd publickly to own their ſtanding to the Baptiſmal Vow when they come to Age; and propoſing that ſuch as fall into Scandalous Sins ſhould be reſtored by a Publick Profeſſion of Repentance. VI. Gildas Salvianus, or the Reformed Paſtor. Which perhaps contains the beſt Model of a Goſpel Miniſter that ever was publiſht. We may indeed there meet with a free Confeſſion of Miniſterial faults; which Confeſſion ſome endeavour'd to turn to his reproach: But ihe Confeſſing and amending real faults, is a much more likely way to ſecure the Honour of the Sacred Miniſtry, than either a denying them, or a ſeeking to cloak, extenuate or cover them. VII. The Vain Religion of the Formal Hypocrite; where Hypocriſie is freely Detected and unmask'd. VIII. Cain and Abel; in which the Malignity of the Enmity between the Seed of the Woman and the Seed of the Serpent, is prov'd to have diſcover'd it ſelf from the firſt. IX. Knowledge and Love. Wherein conceited Knowledge is expos'd, and the Excellency of Divine Love Diſplay'd. X. Catholick Unity; A Sermon Preach'd in St. Martin's Church, in which it is ſhewn how greatly Ungodlineſs tendeth to Diviſions, and Godlineſs, to the trueſt Unity and Peace. XI. The true and only way of Concord. XII. Sermons Preach'd upon ſundry Particular Occaſions; with a few Directions to Juſtices of Peace, &c.

I ſhall only add, that if the Recommendations of others would have any influence upon the Readers, or their Characters of the Author encreaſe their Eſteem, few Writers would have more Advantage than Mr. Baxter. For beſides that there are none of our Practical Divines whoſe works have been tranſlated into more Foreign Languages, nor are read with more Admiration abroad than his; there is no one who by the fitteſt Judges has been more Applauded.

Mr. Pitcaren in his Harmony of the Evangeliſts, p. 269. profeſſes a great eſteem for his Learning, Acuteneſs and Piety.

Mr. Wood Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of St. Andrews, in his Anſwer to Mr. Lockier, repreſents Mr. Baxter, as a moſt Judicious, Acute and Godly man.

The Honourable Robert Boyle, Eſq; declar'd Mr. Baxter to be the fitteſt man of the Age for a Caſuiſt, becauſe he feared no Man's Diſpleaſure, nor hop'd for any Man's Preferment.

He was often quoted by ſome of the moſt Celebrated Divines of the Church with eſpect as by Biſhop Patrick, Biſhop Stillingfleet, Biſhop Burnet, and Dr. Sherlock; as alſo by Mr. Hotchkis and Mr. Wade and others.

Sir William Morrice in his Book of the Lords Supper, p. 32. ſpeaks of Mr. Baxter, as one in the Duſt of whoſe Feet (according to the Hebrew Proverb) he ſhould gladly roll himſelf; and notwithſtanding ſome little difference in Opinion, yet he could never have a quarrel with him. And he declares that he could only ſay as Phavorinus did of Adrian, it is not for me to contend with him who commands Legions of Notions and Arguments. For me (ſays he) to throw a dart at him from Bellona's Temple, (which was the Denunciation of War) were to ſhew my ſelf like one of the Prieſts of that Goddeſs, which were all Phanatick, and us'd to tear their own Fleſh. I ſhould be loth to transform the moſt favourable Patron I have found, into the moſt formidable enemy I can meet with. And as he that thought it enough to Eternize his Memory, to inſcribe upon his Monument, his Friendſhip he had with Sir Philip Sidney ſo (ſays he) my Tombſtone could not have been ambitious of a more honourable Epitaph, than Mr. Baxter's approbation.

Mr. Glanvil in his Philoſophia pia, p. 110. thus expreſſes himſelf concerning Mr. Baxter, —that worthy man I think is to be honoured much for his Stout, Rational and Succeſsful Oppoſition of the Miſchievous Antinomian Follies, when the Current Syſtematick Divinity then call'd Orthodox, was very overgrown with them; and for his frequent aſſerting the Reaſonableneſs of Religion, againſt the madneſs of ſpreading Enthuſiaſm; for his Earneſt Endeavours for the promotion of Peace and Univerſal Charity, when 'twas held a great Crime not to be fierce in the way of a Sect: That he was a Perſon worthy of great Reſpect; and that he (viz. Mr. Glanvil) could ſcarce forbear affirming concerning him, as a Learned Doctor of the Church of England) did; viz. that he was the only Man that ſpake Senſe in an Age of Nonſenſe.

Mr. Woodbridge, in his Treatiſe of Juſtification, ſays, that Mr. Baxter was a man made on purpoſe to encounter with Oppoſition for the ſake of Truth.

And Dr. Manton upon Occaſion declar'd in the Hearing of ſeveral, that he thought Mr. Baxter came nearer the Apoſtolical Inſpired Writers, than any Man in the Age.

It having been propos'd to Reprint the Practical Works of the Excellent Mr. Baxter, in Four Volumes in Folio; a Deſign fitted to promote and propagate Serious Religion, not only in the preſent Age, but to Poſterity: We whoſe Names are ſubſcribed, do moſt heartily recommend it to all Miniſters, Gentlemen, and others (to whom the Intereſt of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is dear) that they would to their utmoſt encourage ſo good a Work.

AMONG all the great and uſeful Projects of this kind that have been ſet on Foot this Age, perhaps there have been none ſo likely to reach all the deſirable Purpoſes this may be ſerviceable for. Here you have not only a few particular Heads of Chriſtian Faith and Practice, but Chriſtianity it ſelf, in its full Extent and Compaſs, moſt accurately handled, and at the ſame time with greateſt Plainneſs ſuted to the meaneſt Capacities, and preſs'd home upon the Conſciences of Readers with inimitable Life and Fervor And how great an advantage muſt it be to have ſuch an Help at hand in Families, to which you may have recourſe upon all Occaſions, to clear your Judgments in the great Articles of Religion, to eaſe your Minds in the moſt perplexing Caſes of Conſcience, to engage and direct you in the ſeveral moſt important Exerciſes of Godlineſs! You need not fear any danger from hence of being influenc'd for or againſt any Party of Chriſtians as ſuch: For in all his Writings you will find the Evidences of a large and truly Chriſtian Spirit, too great to be confin'd to the narrow Limits of one or other Party; and that noble Catholick Temper is what he every where labours to infuſe into his Readers: A Temper not only moſt pleaſant to the Perſons themſelves in whom it has place, but which at laſt muſt heal all the unhappy Differences in the Chriſtian World, if ever God have ſo much Mercy for us.

A

Christian Directory:

Or, A Summ of

PRACTICAL THEOLOGY,

AND

CASES of CONSCIENCE.

Directing Christians, how to USE their Knowledge and Faith; How to improve all Helps and Means, and to Perform all Duties; How to Overcome Temptations, and to escape or mortifie every Sin.

In Four PARTS.

I. CHRISTIAN ETHICKS (or private Duties.)
II. CHRISTIAN OECONOMICKS (or Family Duties.)
III. CHRISTIAN ECCLESIASTICKS (or Church Duties.)
IV. CHRISTIAN POLITICKS (or Duties to our Rulers and Neighbours.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

READERS,

THE Book is so big, that I must make no longer Preface, than to give you this necessary short account; 1. Of the Quality; 2. And the Reasons of this Work.

I. The Matter you will see in the Contents: As Amesius his Cases of Conscience are to his Medulla, the Second and Practical Part of Theology, so is this to a Methodus Theologiæ which I have not yet Published. And, 1. As to the Method of this, it is partly Natural, but Principally Moral; that is, partly suitable to the real order of the Matter, but chiefly of usefulness, secundum ordinem Intentionis, where our Reasons of each Location are fetcht from the End. Therefore unless I might be tedious in opening my Reasons à fine, for the order of every Particular, I know not how to give you full Satisfaction. But in this Practical Part I am the less Sollicitous about the Accurateness of Method, because it more belongeth to the former Part (the Theory) where I do it as well as I am able.

2. This Book was written in 1664. and 1665. (except the Ecclesiastick Cases of Conscience, and a few sheets since added:) And since the Writing of it, some Invitations drew me to Publish, my Reasons of the Christian Religion, my Life of Faith, and Directions for weak Christians: by which the work of the two first Chapters here is fullier done: And therefore I was inclined here to leave them out. But for the use of such Families as may have this without the other, I forbore to dismember it.

3. But there is a great disproportion between the several Parts of the Book. 1. The first Part is largest, because I thought that the Heart must be kept with greatest diligence, and that if the Tree be good, the Fruit will be good; and I remember Paul's Counsel, 1 Tim. 4. 16. Take heed to thy self and unto thy Doctrine: Continue in them: For in doing this thou shalt both save thy self and them that hear thee. Nothing is well done by him that beginneth not at home: As the man is, so is his strength, and work. 2. The two first Chapters are too course and tedious for those of the higher form (who may pass them over.) But the rest must be spoken to; To whom that is unprofitable which is most suitable and pleasant to more exercised and Accurate Wits. The Grand Directions are but the explication of the essentials of Christianity, or of the Baptismal Covenant, even of our Relation duties to God the Father, Son (in several parts of his Relation) and of the Holy Ghost. The Doctrine of Temptations is handled with brevity, because they are so Numerous; lest a due Amplification should have swelled the Book too much; (when a small part of their Number maketh up so much of Mr. John Downame's great and excellent Treatise, call'd, The Christian Welfare.) The great Radical Sins are handled more largely than seemeth proportionable to the rest, because all Dye when they are dead. And I am large about Redeeming Time, because therein the Sum of a Holy Obedient Life is included.

4. If any say, Why call you that a Summ of Practical Theology, which is but the Directing part, and leaveth out the Explication, Reasons, various Uses, Marks, Motives, &c. I answer, 1. Had I intended Sermon wise, to say all that might well be said on each Subject, it would have made many Volumes as big as this. 2. Where I thought them needful, the Explication of each Duty and Sin is added, with Marks, Contraries, Counterfeits, Motives, &c. And Uses are easily added by an ordinary Reader, without my naming them.

5. I do especially desire you to observe, that the resolving of practical Cases of Conscience, and the reducing of Theoretical Knowledge into serious Christian Practice, and promoting a skilful facility in the faithful exercise of Universal Obedience, and Holiness of Heart and Life, is the great work of this Treatise. And that where I thought it needful the Cases are reduced to expres Questions and Answers;

But had I done so by all, many such Volumes would have been too little: And therefore I thought the Directing Way most brief and fit for Christian Practice: For if you mark them, you will find few Directions in the Book, which may not pass for the Answer of an (implyed) Question or Case of Conscience; And when I have given you the Answer in a Direction, an ingenious Reader can tell what Question it is that is answered; And so, many hundred Cases are here resolved, especially in the two first Parts, which are not interrogatively named.

6. And I must do my self the right as to notifie the Reader, That this Treatise was written when I was (for not subscribing, Declaring, &c.) forbidden by the Law to Preach, and when I had been long separated far from my Library and from all Books, saving an inconsiderable parcel which wandred with me where I went. By which means this Book hath two defects. 1. It hath no Cases of Conscience but what my bare Memory brought to hand; And Cases are so innumerable, that it is far harder, methinks, to remember them, than to answer them; whereby it come to pass that some of the Ecclesiastical Cases, are put out of their proper place, because I could not seasonably remember them. For I had no one Casuist but Amesius with me. But (after about twelve years separation) having received my Library, I find that the very sight of Sayrus, Fragoso, Roderiquez, Tolet, &c. might have helpt my memory to a greater number: But perhaps these will be enough for those that I intend them for. 2. And by the same cause the Margin is unfurnished of such Citations as are accounted an Ornament, and in some cases are very useful. The scraps inserted out of my few trivial Books at hand being so mean, as that I am well content (except about Monarchy Part 4.) that the Reader pass them by as not worthy of his notice.

And it's like that the absence of Books, will appear to the Readers loss in the Materials of the Treatise: But I shall have this advantage by it that he will not accuse me as a plagiary; And it may be some little advantage to him, that he hath no Transcript of any mans Books, which he had before, but the product of some experience, with a naked unbyassed perception of the Matter or Things themselves.

7. Note also that the third and fourth Parts are very much Defective of what they should contain, about the Power and Government of Gods Officers in Church and State; of which no Readers will expect a Reason but Strangers, whose expectations I may not Satisfie. But as I must profess that I hope nothing here hath proceeded from Disloyalty, or Disrespect to Authority, Government, Unity, Concord, Peace or Order, or from any Opposition to Faith, Piety, Love or Justice; so if unknown to me, there be any thing found here, that is contrary or injurious to any one of these, I do hereby renounce it, and desire it may be taken as non scriptum.

II. The Ends and Uses for which I wrote this Book are these: 1. That when I could not Preach the Gospel as I would, I might do it as I could. 2. That three Sorts might have the benefit as followeth.

I. That the Younger and more unfurnished and unexperienced sort of Ministers might have a promptuary at hand, for Practical Resolutions and Directions on the Subjects that they have need to deal in. And tho' Sayrus and Fragoso have done well, I would not have us under a Necessity, of going to the Romanists for our ordinary Supplies: Long have our Divines been wishing for some fuller Casuistical Tractate: Perkins began well. Bishop Sanderson hath done excellently de Juramento. Amesius hath exceeded all, though briefly. Mr. David Dickson hath put more of our English Cases about the state of Sanctification, into Latin, than ever was done before him. Bishop Jer. Taylor hath in two Folio's but begun the copious performance of the work. And still men are calling for more, which I have attempted: Hoping that others will come after and do better than we all.

If any call it my Pride to think that any Ministers or Students are so raw as to need any thing that I can add to them, let him but Pardon me for saying that such demure pleadings for a feigned Humility, shall not draw me to a confederacy with Blindness, Hypocrisie and Sloth, and I will pardon him for his charge of Pride.

It is long ago since many Forreign Divines subscribed a request, that the English would give them in Latine a sum of our Practical Theology; which Mr. Dury sent over, and twelve great Divines of ours wrote to Bishop Usher (as Dr. Bernard tells you in his Life) to draw them up a form or Method: But it was never done among them all; And it's said that Bishop Downame at last undertaking it died in the attempt. Had this been done, it's like my labour might have been spared. But being undone, I have thus made this Essay. But I have been necessitated to leave out much (about Conversion, Mortification, Self-denyal, Self-acquaintance, Faith, Justification, Judgment, Glory, &c.) because I had written of them all before.

II. And I thought it not unuseful to the more Judicious Masters of Families; who may choose and read such parcels to their Families, as at any time the case requireth. And indeed I began it rudely, with an Intention of that Plainness and Brevity which Families require: But finding that it swelled to a bigger bulk than I intended, I was fain to write my Life of Faith, as a Breviate and Substitute, for the Families and Persons that cannot have and use so large a Volume: (presupposing my Directions for sound Conversion, for weak Christians, and for peace of Conscience, printed long ago.)

III. And to private Christians I thought it not in vain, to have at hand so Universal a Directory and Resolution of Doubts; not expecting that they remember all, but may on every occasion turn to such particulars as they most need.

But I must expect to be assaulted with these Objections. (And it is not only Prophane Deriders and Malignant Enemies, that are used by Satan to vilifie and oppose our Service of God.)

Object. I. You have written too many Books already: Who do you think hath so little to do as to read them all? Is it not Pride and Self-conceitedness to think that your Scriblings are worthy to be read? and that the World hath need of so much of your instructions? as if there were no Wise Men but you? You have given Offence already by your Writings: you should write less and Preach more.

Answ. 1. I have seldom, if ever, in all my Ministry, omitted one Sermon for all my Writings: I was not able to live in London nor ride abroad; But thro' Gods mercy I seldom omitted any opportunities at home.

2. And if I Preach the same Doctrine that I write, why should not Men be as angry with me for preaching it, as for writing it? But if it be good and true, why is it not as good Preach by the Press to many thousands, and for many years after I am dead, as to Preach to a Parlour full for a few hours? Or why is not both as good as one.

3. I will not take the Reverend Objector to be ignorant that Writing and Publishing the Word of God by it, is Preaching it, and the most Publick Preaching: And hath the Example of the Apostles and Evangelists as well as speaking: And one is no more appropriate to them than the other: though the Extraordinaries of both be proper to them. And do you not perceive what Self-condemning contradiction it is, at the same time to cry out against those that dissuade you from Preaching, or hinder you, and tell you it is needless, and you are Proud to think that the World needeth your Preaching, and yet you your selves to ſay the very ſame againſt your brethrens preaching by the Preſs. I know an ignorant illiterate Sectary might ſay, Writing is no preaching, and you are called to Preach and not to Write; But I muſt reverence you more than to ſuppoſe you ſo abſurd. Other Men forbid you but leſs publick preaching, and you reproach me for more publick Preaching: that's the difference. How hard is it to know what Spirit we are of? Did you think that you had been Patrons of Idleneſs, and Silencers of Miniſters, while you declaim ſo much againſt it? Your pretence that you would have me preach more is feigned. Are you ſure that you preach ofter than I do? When I perſwaded Miniſters heretofore to Catechize and inſtruct all their Pariſhes perſonally, Family by Family, you ſaid it was more toil than was our duty: and now you are againſt much Writing too; and yet would be thought laborious Miniſters.

And as to the number and length of my Writings, it is my own labour that maketh them ſo, and my own great trouble, that the World cannot be ſufficiently inſtructed and edified in fewer Words. But 1. Would not all your Sermons ſet together be as long? And why is not much and long preaching blameable, if long Writings be? 2. Are not the Works of Auguſtine and Chryſoſtome, much longer? Who yet hath reproached Aquinas or Suarez, Calvin or Zanchy, &c. for the number and greatneſs of the Volumes they have written? Why do you contradict your ſelves by affecting great Libraries? 3. When did I ever perſwade any one of you, to buy or read any Book of mine? What harm will they do thoſe that let them alone? Or what harm can it do you for other Men to read them? Let them be to you as if they had never been written, and it will be nothing to you how many they are. And if all others take not you for their Tutors to chooſe for them the Books that they muſt read, that is not my doing, but their own. If they err in taking themſelves to be fitter Judges than you, what tendeth moſt to their own Edification, why do you not teach them better? 4. Either it is Gods Truth, or Error which I write. If Error, Why doth no one of you ſhew ſo much Charity, as by Word or Writing to inſtruct me better, nor evince it to my face, but do all to others by backbiting? If Truth, What harm will it do? If Men had not leiſure to read our Writings, the Bookſellers would ſilence us, and ſave you the labour: For none would Print them. 5. But who can pleaſe all Men? Whileſt a few of you cry out of too much, what if twenty or an hundred for one be yet for more? How ſhall I know whether you or they be the wiſer and the better Men?

Readers, you ſee on what terms we muſt do the work of God? Our ſlothful fleſh is backward, and weary of ſo much labour: Malignant Enemies of Piety are againſt it all. Some ſlothful Brethren think it neceſſary to cloak their fleſhly eaſe, by vilifying the diligence of others. Many Sects whom we oppoſe, think it the intereſt of their cauſe (which they call Gods cauſe) to make all that's ſaid againſt them ſeem vain, contemptible and odious; which becauſe they cannot do by Confutation, they'll do by backbiting and confident chat. And one or two Reverend Brethren, have, by the wiſdom deſcribed exactly, James 3. 15. 16. arrived at the liberty of backbiting and Magiſterial ſentencing the works of others, (which they confeſs they never read,) that their Reputation of being moſt Learned, Orthodox, Worthy Divines, may keep the Chair at eaſier rates, than the waſting of their fleſh in unwearied labours to know the truth, and communicate it to the World. And ſome are angry, who are forward to write, that the Bookſellers and Readers ſilence not others as well as them.

Object. II. Your Writings differing from the common judgment have already cauſed offence to the godly.

Anſw. 1. To the Godly that were of a contrary opinion only; Sores that will not be healed, uſe to be exaſperated by the Medicine. 2. It was none but healing Pacificatory Writings, that have cauſed that offence. 3. Have not thoſe Diſſenters Writings more offended the Godly that were againſt them? They have but one trick, to honour their denial, which more diſhonoureth it, even by unſanctifying thoſe that are not of their Minds. 4. If God bleſs me with opportunity and help, I will offend ſuch Men much more, by endeavouring further than ever I have done, the quenching of that fire which they are ſtill blowing up, and detecting the folly and miſchief of thoſe Logomachies by which they militate againſt Love and Concord, and enflame and tear the Church of God. And let them know that I am about it. But ſome Paſtors as well as People, have the weakneſs to think that all our Preachings and Writings muſt be brought under their Dominion, and to their bar, by the bare ſaying that [We offend the Godly] that is, thoſe of their Opinion, which they falſly call by the name of Scandal. 5. But I think they will find little Controverſie to offend them in this Book.

Object. III. You ſhall take more leiſure, and take other mens judgment of your Writings before you thruſt them out ſo haſtily.

Anſw. 1. I have but a little while to live, and therefore muſt work while it is day. Time will not ſtay. 2. I do ſhew them to thoſe that I take to be moſt judicious, and never refuſed any Man's cenſure; but it is not many that have leiſure to do me ſo great a kindneſs. But that I commit them not to the peruſal of every Objector, is a fault uncurable, by one that never had an Amanuenſis, and hath but one Copy uſually. 3. And if I could do it, how ſhould I be ſure that they would not differ as much among themſelves, as they do from me? And my Writings would be like the Picture which the great Painter expoſed to the cenſure of every paſſenger, and made it ridiculous to all, when he altered all that every one adviſed him to alter. And, to tell you the truth, I was never yet blamed by one ſide as not ſufficiently pleaſing them, but I was blamed alſo by the contrary ſide, for coming ſo near them: And I had not wit enough to know which party of the accuſers was the wiſer? And therefore am reſolved to ſtudy to pleaſe God and Conſcience, and to take Man-pleaſing when inconſiſtent, for an impoſſible and unprofitable work, and to ceaſe from Man whoſe breath is in his Noſtrils, whoſe thoughts all periſh as he paſſeth off the Judicature of his Stage, to the Judicature of God.

Object. IV. Your Eccleſiaſtical Caſes are dangerouſly reconciling, tending to abate Mens zeal againſt Error.

Anſw. The World hath long enough eſcaped the danger of Peace and Reconciliation: It had been well if they had as long eſcaped the danger of your Conceited Orthodox ſtrife, which hath brought in confuſion and all evil works: I take it to be a Zeal effectively againſt Love, and againſt Unity, and againſt Chriſt, which with the Preachers of extreams, goeth under the name of a Zeal againſt Error, and for Truth.

Object. V. Are all theſe Numerous Directions to be found in Scripture? Shew us them in Scripture, or you trouble the Church with your own inventions.

Anſw. 1. Are all your Sermons, in the Scripture? And all the good Books of your Library in the Scripture? 2. Will you have none but Readers in the Church, and put down Preachers? Sure it is the Reader that delivereth all and only the Scripture. 3. Are we not Men before we are Chriſtians? And is not the Light and Law of Nature, Divine? And was the Scripture written to be inſtead of Reaſon, or of a Logick, or other ſubſervient Sciences? Or muſt they not all be ſanctified and uſed for Divinity? 4. But I think that as all good Commentaries and Sermons, and Syſtems of Theology are in Scripture, ſo is the Directory here given, and is proved by the evidence of the very thing diſcours'd of, or by the plaineſt Texts.

Object.

Object. VI. You confound your Reader by Curioſity of diſtinctions.

Anſw. 1. If they are vain or falſe, ſhame them by detecting it, or you ſhame your ſelves by blaming them, when you cannot ſhew the error: Expoſe not your ſelves to laughter by avoiding juſt diſtinction to eſcape confuſion; that is, avoiding knowledge to eſcape Ignorance, or Light to eſcape darkneſs. 2. It is ambiguity and confuſion that breedeth and feedeth almoſt all our pernicious Controverſies: And even thoſe that bring in error by vain diſtinction, muſt be confuted by better diſtinguiſhers, and not by ignorant Confounders. I will believe the Holy Ghoſt, 2 Tim. 2. 14, 15, 16. that Logomachie is the plague by which the hearers are ſubverted, and ungodlineſs increaſed; and that Orthotomie or right dividing the Word of Truth is the Cure. And Heb. 5. 15. Diſcerning both good and evil, is the work of long and well exerciſed Senſes.

Object. VII. Is this your reducing our faith to the primitive ſimplicity, and to the Creed? What a toilſome task do you make Religion by overdoing? Is any Man able to remember all theſe numberleſs Directions.

Anſw. 1. I pray miſtake not all theſe for Articles of Faith. I am more zealous than ever I was for the reduction of the Chriſtian Faith to the primitive ſimplicity; and more confident that the Church will never have Peace and Concord, till it be ſo done, as to the reſt of Mens Faith and Communion. But he that will have no Books but his Creed and Bible, may follow that Sectary, who when he had burnt all his other Books as humane inventions, at laſt burnt the Bible, when he grew Learned enough to underſtand, that the tranſlation of that was Humane too.

2. If Men think not all the Tools in their Shops, and all the Furniture of their Houſes, or the number of their Sheep, or Cattle, or Lands, nor the number of Truths received by a Learning intellect, &c. to be a trouble and toil, why ſhould they think ſo of the number of Helps to facilitate the practice of their duty? If all the Books in your Libraries make your Studies or Religion toilſome, why do you keep them? and do not come to the vulgar Religion, that would hear no more but [Think well, ſpeak well, and do well,] or [Love God and your neighbour, and do as you would be done by.] He that doth this truly, ſhall be ſaved: But there goeth more to the building of a Houſe, than to ſay, Lay the foundation, and raiſe the ſuperſtructure: Univerſals exiſt not but in individuals; and the whole conſiſteth of all the Parts.

3. It is not expected that any Man remember all theſe Directions. Therefore I wrote them, becauſe Men cannot remember them, that they may upon every neceſſary occaſion, go to that which they have preſent uſe for, and cannot otherwiſe remember.

In ſumm, to my quarrelſome Brethren I have two requeſts, 1. That inſtead of their unconſcionable, and yet unreformed cuſtom of backbiting, they would tell me to my face of my offences by convincing evidence, and not tempt the hearers to think them envious: And 2. That what I do amiſs, they would do better: and not be ſuch as will neither laboriouſly ſerve the Church themſelves, nor ſuffer others: and that they will not be guilty of Idleneſs themſelves, nor tempt me to be a ſloathful ſervant, who have ſo little time to ſpend: For I dare not ſtand before God under that guilt: And that they will not join with the Enemies and Reſiſters of the publication of the Word of God.

And to the Readers my requeſt is, 1. That whatever for Quantity or Quality in this Book is an impediment to their regular univerſal obedience, and to a truly Holy Life, they would neglect and caſt away: 2. But that which is truly Inſtructing and Helpful, they would diligently Digeſt and Practice; And I encourage them by my teſtimony, that by long experience I am aſſured, that this PRACTICAL RELIGION will afford both to Church, State and Conſcience, more certain and more ſolid Peace, than contending Diſputers, with all their pretences of Orthodoxneſs and Zeal againſt Errors for the Truth, will ever bring, or did ever attain to.

I crave your pardon for this long Apology: It is an Age where the Objections are not feigned, and where our greateſt and moſt coſtly ſervices of God, are charged on us as our greateſt Sins; and where at once I am accuſed of Conſcience for doing no more, and of Men for doing ſo much: Being really

A moſt unworthy Servant of ſo good a Maſter.

VOL. I.

The INTRODUCTION.

§. 1. THE Eternal God having made Man an Intellectual and Free Agent, able to understand and chuse the Good and refuse the Evil, to know, and love, and serve his Maker, and by adhering to him in this Life of Trial, to attain to the blessed Sight and Enjoyment of his Glory in the Life to come, hath not been wanting to furnish him with such Necessaries, without which these Ends could not succesfully be sought. When we had lost our moral Capacity of pleasing him, that we might enjoy him, he restoreth us to it by the wonderful Work of our Redemption: In Christ he hath reconciled the World unto himself, and hath given them a general Act of Oblivion, contained in the Covenant of Grace, which nothing but mens obstinate and final Unwillingness can deprive them of. To procure their Consent to this gracious Covenant, he hath committed to his Ministers the Word of Reconciliation, commanding us to beseech Men, as in the stead of Christ, and as tho' God himself did beseech them by us, to be reconciled unto God, 2 Cor. 5. 18, 19, 20. and to shew them first their Sin and Misery, and proclaim and offer the true Remedy; and to let them know, that all things are now ready, and by pleading their Duty, their Necessity, and their Commodity, to compel them to come in, Mat. 22. 4. Luke 11. 17, 23.

Noverint universi quod præsens opusculum non aggredior, ut fidelium auribus prophanas aliquas vocum ingeram novitates, sed ut innocenter & sobrie de altissimo, &c. Ockam de Sacram. Alt. prolog. In zelo domus domini, nunc persolvo debitum, vile quidem, sed fidele ut puto, & animum quibusque egregiis, Christi tyronibus: grave vero & importabile apostatis insipientibus: quorum priores ni fallor, cum lachrymis forte quæ ex Dei charitate profluunt, alii cum tristitia, sed quæ ex indignatione & pusillanimitate deprehensæ conscientiæ extorquetur, illud excipiunt. Gildas Prolog. Excid.

But so great is the Blindness and Obstinacy of Men, that the greatest part refuse Consent, being deceived by the Pleasures, and Profits, and Honors of this present World; and make their pretended Necessities or Business the matter of their Excuses, and the unreasonable Reasons of their Refusal, Negligence, and Delays; till Death surprize them, and the Door is shut; and they knock and cry for Mercy and Admittance, when it is too late, Mat. 25. 10, 11, 12.

§. 2. Against this wilful Negligence and Presumption, which is the principal Cause of the Damnation of the ungodly World, I have written many Books already: But because there are many that profess themselves unfeignedly willing not only to be saved, but also to be Christ's Disciples, to learn of him, to imitate him, and be conformed to him, and to do the Will of God, if they could but know it; I have determined, by God's Assistance, to write this Book for the use of such, and to give them from God's Word those plain Directions, which are suited to the several Duties of their Lives, and may guide them safely in their Walk with God to Life eternal. Expect not here copious and earnest Exhortations; for that Work I have done already, and have now to do with such, as say they are made willing, and desire help against their Ignorance, that Skill and Will may concur to their Salvation. I shall labour to speak as plainly as I can, because I specially intend it for the Ignorant, and yet to be competently exact in the Directions, lest such Readers lose the Benefit by mistakes. And I must speak to many Cases, because I speak to Families where all are not in the same condition, and the same Persons are not still the same: And therefore if I should not be brief in the Particulars, I should be too long in the Whole, and Tediousness might deprive some Readers of the Benefit.

Habet, inquies, Britannia Rectores, habet Speculatores: Quid tu negando mutiri disponis? Habet, inquam habet, si non ultra, non citra numerum: sed quia inclinati tanto pondere sunt pressi, ideireo spatium respirandi non habent. Præoccupabant igitur se mutuo talibus objectionibus, &c. Gildas ib.

In Families some are (too ordinarily) ungodly, in a carnal unrenewed state; and some are Godly, in a state of Grace. These are considerable as Christians simply, with respect to God, or in their Relations to others: These Relations are either Ecclesiastical, Civil, or Domestical, (Family Relations.)

Duæ sunt viæ, duplicesque cursus animorum e corpore exeuntium. Nam qui se vitiis humanis contaminarunt & libidinibus se tradiderunt, iis devium quoddam iter est, seclusum à Concilio Deorum.

Accordingly my intended Method is, 1. To direct ungodly carnal Minds how to attain to a state of Grace. 2. To direct those that have saving Grace how to use it, both in the contemplative and active parts of their Lives; in their Duties of Religion, both private and publick; in their Duties to Men, both in their Ecclesiastical, Civil, and Family Relations. And by the way to direct those that have Grace how to discern it, and take the Comfort of it;

it; and to direct them how to grow in Grace, and perſevere unto the End.

Qui autem ſe integros caſtoſque ſervarunt, quibuſque fuit minima cum corporibus contagio, ſuntque in corporibus humanis vitam imitati Deorum, in ad illos à quibus ſunt profecti, facilè patet reditus. Soc. in Cic. 1. Tuſc. Qui rectè & honeſtè curriculum vivendi à natura datum confecerit, ad aſtra facilè revertetur: Non qui aut immoderatè, aut intemperanter vixerit. Cicero de Univerſ. Improbo bene eſſe non poteſt. Id Par. Quod ſi ineſt in hominum genere, mens, fides, virtus, concordia, unde hæc in terras niſi à ſuperis diffluere potuerunt? Cumque ſit in nobis conſilium, ratio, prudentia, neceſſe eſt Deos hæc ipſa habere majora: Nec habere ſolum, ſed etiam his uti in optimis & maximis rebus. Cicero de Nat. Deor. l. 2. p. 76. Quod ſi pœna, ſi metus ſupplicii, non ipſa turpitudo, deterret ab injuriosa facinoroſaque vita, nemo eſt injuſtus: At incauti potius habendi ſunt improbi. Callidi, non boni ſunt, qui utilitate tantum, non ipſo honeſto, ut boni viri ſint, moventur. Cicero de Leg. l. 1. p. 289. Ut nihil intereſt, utrum nemo valeat, an nemo poſſit valere; ſic non intelligo quid interſit, utrum nemo ſit ſapiens, an nemo eſſe poſſit. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3. p. 138. Cicero was afraid to ſpeak what he knew of the Unity of the Eternal God, the Maker of all: Illum quaſi Parentem hujus Univerſitatis invenire difficile; & cum inveneris, indicare in vulgus nefas. Lib. de Univerſ. p. 2. And the ſame he ſaith, Lib. 2. de Nat. Deor.

§. 3. And if any Reader ſhould be diſcouraged at the Number of Duties and Directions ſet before him, I intreat him to conſider, 1. That it is God and not I that impoſeth all theſe Duties on you; and who will queſtion his Wiſdom, Goodneſs or Power to make Laws for us and all the World? 2. That every Duty and Direction is a Mercy to you; and therefore ſhould not be matter of Grief to you, but of Thanks: They are but like the Commands of Parents to their Children, when they bid them [eat their Meat, and wear their Clothes, and go to Bed, and eat not Poiſon, and tumble not in the Dirt, and cut not your Fingers, and take heed of Fire and Water, &c.] To leave out any ſuch Law or Duty, were but to deprive you of an excellent Mercy: You will not cut off or caſt away any Member of your Body, any Vein, or Sinew or Artery, upon pretence that the number maketh them troubleſome, when the diminiſhing of that number would kill or maim you. A Student is not offended that he hath many Books in his Library, nor a Tradeſman that he hath Store of Tools, nor the Rich at the number of his Farms or Flocks. Believe it, Reader, if thou bring not a malignant quarrelſome Mind, thou wilt find that God hath not burdened, but bleſſed thee with his Holy Precepts, and that he hath not appointed thee one unneceſſary or unprofitable Duty; but only ſuch as tend to thy Content, and Joy, and Happineſs.

Vult Deus quodammodo pati vim; & hoc ſummæ eſt beneficentiæ, ut ad benefaciendum ſe pulſari ſolicitariq; velit. Joſ. Acoſta l. 4. c. 12. p. 396.

O let it be the daily earneſt Prayer of me and thee, that our Hearts prove not falſe and unwilling to follow the Directions which are given us, leſt we condemn our ſelves in the things which we allow. Your Practice now will ſhew, whether it be thro' want of Will or Skill, if henceforth you unfaithfully neglect your Duty. If you are willing, obey now what is plainly taught you, and ſhew by your Diligence that you are willing.

CHAP. I.

Directions to Unconverted Graceleſs Sinners, for the attaining of true Saving Grace.

Leg. Danielis Epiſcop. Epiſt. ad Bonif. Mogunt. inter Epiſt. Bonif. 67. de methodo convertendi Paganos.

§. 1. IF ungodly miſerable Sinners were as few as the Devil and their Self-love would make themſelves believe, I might forbear this part of my work as needleſs. For the Whole need not the Phyſician, but the Sick. If you go into twenty Families, and ask them all, Whether any of them are in an Unſanctified State, unrenewed and unpardoned, and under the Wrath and Curſe of God? you will meet with few that will not tell you, they hope it is better with them than ſo, and tho' they are Sinners as all are, yet that they are repenting pardoned Sinners. Nay, there is ſcarce one of many of the moſt wicked and notoriouſly ungodly, but hope they are in a penitent pardoned State. Even the Haters of God will ſay they love him, and the Scorners at Godlineſs will ſay, that they are not ungodly, and that it is but Hypocriſy and Singularity that they deride; and it were well for them, if ſaying ſo would go for proof, and he that will be their Judge would take their words. But God will not be deceived, tho' fooliſh Men are wiſe enough to deceive themſelves. Wickedneſs will be Wickedneſs when it hath clothed it ſelf with the faireſt Names: God will condemn it when he hath found out the moſt plauſible Pretences and Excuſes. Tho' the Ungodly think to bear it out in Pride and Scorn, and think to be ſaved by their hypocritical lip-ſervice as ſoon as the moſt holy Worſhippers of the Lord; yet ſhall they be like Chaff, which the Wind driveth away; they ſhall not be able to ſtand in Judgment, nor Sinners in the Congregation of the Righteous, Pſal. 1. 4, 5, 6. And if God know better than fooliſh Men, then certainly the Flock is little to whom the Father will give the Kingdom, Luke 12. 32. And wide is the Gate, and broad is the Way that leadeth to Deſtruction, and many there be that go in thereat; becauſe ſtrait is the Gate, and narrow is the Way which leadeth unto Life, and few there be that find it, Mat. 7. 13. When Chriſt was asked, Lord are there few that be ſaved? he anſwered, Strive to enter in at the ſtrait Gate; for many, I ſay unto you, will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able, Luke 13. 23, 24. But alas we need no other Information than common Experience, to tell us whether the greateſt part of Men be holy, and heavenly, and ſelf-denying; that ſeek firſt the Kingdom of God and his Righteouſneſs, and love God above all, and will forſake all they have for the ſake of Chriſt: and undoubtedly none but ſuch are ſaved, as you may ſee Heb. 21. 14. Mat. 6. 20, 21, 33. Luke 14. 33.

§. 2. Seeing then the Godly are ſo few, and the Ungodly ſo many, and that God will take nothing for Holineſs that is not ſuch indeed; and ſeeing it is ſo terrible a thing to any Man that hath his Wits about him, to live one Day in an unconverted State, becauſe he that dieth ſo, is loſt for ever: methinks it ſhould be our wiſdom to be ſuſpicious of our ſelves, and careful leaſt we be deceived in ſo great a buſineſs, and diligent in ſearching and examining our Hearts, whether they are truly ſanctified or not; becauſe it can be no harm to make ſure work for our Salvation: Whereas Preſumption, Careleſneſs and Negligence may betray us to remedileſs Miſery and Deſpair.

§. 3. I do not here ſuppoſe the Reader to have any ſuch Acquaintance with his Heart, or Care of his Salvation, or obedient Willingneſs to be taught and Ruled by Jeſus Chriſt, as is proper to thoſe that are truly ſanctified: For it is ungodly Perſons that now I am ſpeaking to. And yet if I ſhould not ſuppoſe them to have ſome Capacity and Diſpoſition to make uſe of the Directions which I give them, I might as well paſs them by, and ſpare my Labour. I tell thee therefore, Reader, what it is that I preſuppoſe in thee, and expect from thee (and I think thou wilt not judge me unreaſonable in my Suppoſitions and Expectations.)

Heſit tam deſperati inſulæ excidii, inſperatique mentio auxilii, memoriæ eorum qui utriuſque miraculi teſtes extitere: Et ob hoc Reges, publici, privati, Sacerdotes, Eccleſiaſtici, ſuum quique ordinem ſervarunt. At illis decedentibus, cum ſucceſſiſſet ætas tempeſtatis illius neſcia, & præſentis tantum Serenitatis expers, ita cuncta veritatis ac juſtitiæ moderaminâ concuſſa ac ſubverſa ſunt, ut earum non dicam veſtigium, ſed ne monumentum quidem in ſupra dictis propemodum ordinibus appareat; exceptis paucis, & valde paucis, qui ob amiſſionem tantæ multitudinis, quæ quotidie prona ruit ad tartara, tam brevis numeri habentur, ut eos quodammodo venerabilis mater Eccleſia in ſinu ſuo recumbentes non videat, quos ſolos veros filios habeat. Quorum nequis me egregiam vitam omnibus admirabilem, Deoque amabilem carpere putet; ſi qua liberius de his, immo lugubrius, cumulo malorum compulſus, qui ſervunt non ſolum ventri, ſed & diabolo potius quam Chriſto. Gildas p. (mihi) 514. It was Pythagoras's Saying, (which Ambroſe ſaith he had from the Jews) Communem atque uſitatam populo viam, non eſſe terendam.

§. 4. 1. I ſuppoſe thee to be a Man, and therefore that thou haſt Reaſon and natural Free-will (that is, the natural Faculty of chuſing and refuſing) which which should keep thy Sensitive Appetite in Obedience; and that thou art capable of Loving and Serving thy Creatour, and Enjoying him in Everlasting Life.

2. That thou knowest this: and what a Man is.

§. 5 2. I suppose that thou knowest thy self to be a Man; and therefore that thy Sensitive Part (or flesh) should no more rule thee, or be ungoverned by thee, than the Horse should rule the Rider, or be unruled by him: And that thou understandest that thou art made on purpose to Love and Serve thy Maker, and to be happy in his Love and Glory for ever. If thou know not this much, thou knowest not that thou art a Man, or else knowest not what a Man is.

3 That thou hast self-love and a desire to be happy.

§. 6. 3. I suppose thee to have a Natural Self-love, and a Desire of thy own Preservation and Happiness; and that thou hast no Desire to be Miserable, or to be hated of God, or to be cast out of his Favour and Presence into Hell, and there to be tormented with Devils everlastingly: Yea, I will suppose that thou art not indifferent whether thou dwell in Heaven or Hell, in Joy or Torment: but would fain be saved and be happy: Whether thou be Godly or Ungodly, Wise or Foolish, I will be bold to take all this for granted: And I hope in all this I do not wrong thee.

4. That thou madest not thy self: and that the first cause of all the Being, Power, Wisdom and Goodness of all the Creatures, hath (formally or eminently) more than all they. And therefore that there is a God. Cum despicere cœpimus & sentire, quid simus, & quid ab animantibus cæteris differamus, tum ea insequi incipiemus ad quæ nati sumus. Cicero 5. de finib.

§. 7. 4. I suppose thee to be one that knowest that thou didst not make thy self; nor give thy self that Power or Wisdom which thou hast; and that he that made thee and all the World, must needs be before all the World, and that he is Eternal, having no Beginning: (for if ever there had been a time when there was nothing, there never would have been any thing; because Nothing can make Nothing:) And I suppose thou dost confess that all the Power, and Wisdom, and Goodness of the whole Creation set together, is less than the Power, and Wisdom, and Goodness of the Creator: Because nothing can give more than it hath to give. I suppose therefore that thou dost confess that there is a God: For to be [The Eternal Infinite Being, and the most Powerful, Wise and Good, and the first Cause of all Created Being, and Power, and Wisdom, and Goodness] this (with the subsequent Relations to the Creature) is to be GOD. If thou wilt deny that there is a God, thou must deny that thou art a Man, and that there is any Man, or any Being.

See the Proof of the God-head, and that God is the Governour of the world, and that there is another Life for Man; in the beginning of my Holy Common-wealth, Chap. 1, 2, 3. Commoda quibus utimur, lucem qua fruimur, spiritum quem ducimus, à Deo nobis dari & impartiri videmus. Cicero pro Ros. Quis est tam vecors, qui cum suspexerit in cœlum, deos esse non sentiat? & ea quæ tanta mente fiunt, ut vix quisquam arte ulla ordinem rerum atque vicissitudinem persequi possit, casu fieri putet? Cicero de Resp. Aruſp. Read Galen's Hymns to the Creatour, Li. de usu partium, præcipuè, l. 3. cap. 10. Nulla gens est tam immansueta, neque tam ferrea quæ non etiamsi ignoret qualem Deum habere deceat, tamen habendum sciat. Cicero 1. de Leg. Omnibus innatum, & quasi insculptum est, esse Deos. Id de Nat. Deor. Agnoscimus Deum ex operibus ejus. Cic. 1. Tusc. Nullum est animal præter hominem quod habet ullam notitiam Dei. Cicero 1. de Legib. Nulla gens tam fera cujus mentem non imbuerit deorum opinio. Cicero 1. Tusc. [I had rather believe all the Legends. Talmud, Alcoran, than that this universal Frame is without a Mind.] Lord Bacon Essay 16. [A little Philosophy inclineth Mans Mind to Atheism; but Depth in Philosophy bringeth Mens Mind about to Religion.] Lord Bacon Essay 16. Stoici dicunt unum Deum esse, ipsumque & mentem & fatum & Jovem dicunt: Principio illum cum esset apud se, substantiam omnem per aerem in aquam convertisse——Quod autem faciat, Verbum Deum esse quod in ipsa sit. Hunc enim quippe sempiternum per ipsam (materiam) omnem singula creare. Mundum quoque regi & administrari secundum mentem & providentiam mente per omnes illius partes pertingente—Laert. in Zenone.

5. That the Creator of all is the Lord or Owner of all: the Ruler of the Rational Creature: and the Benefactor and End of all.

§. 8. 5. I suppose thou knowest that GOD who gave a Being unto all things, is by this title of Creation, the Absolute Owner, or Lord of All: And that he that made the Reasonable Creatures, with Natures to be Governed in order to a fuurther End, is by that Title, their Supream Governour, and therefore hath his Laws commanding Duty, and Promising Reward, and threatning Punishment; and therefore will Judge Men according to these Laws, and will be Just in Judgment, and in his Rewards and Punishments. And that he that freely gave the Creature its Being, and all the Good it hath, and must give it all that ever it shall have, is the Father or most Bountiful Benefactor to his Creatures. Surely I screw thee not too high in supposing thee to know all this: For all this is no more than that there is a God. For he is not God, if he be not the Creatour, and therefore our Owner, our Ruler, and Benefactor, our Absolute Lord, our most Righteous Governour, and our most Loving Father or Benefactor.

6. That this God must be obeyed and loved.

§. 9. 6 I suppose therefore that thou art convinced, that GOD must be absolutely submitted to, and obeyed before all others in the World, and loved above all Friends, or Pleasures, or Creatures whatsoever. For to say, He is my Owner, is to say, I must yield my self to him as his Own: To say, I take him for my Supream Governour, is to say, that I will absolutely be ruled by him; and to say, I take him as my dearest Father or chief Benefactor, is to say, that I am obliged to give him my dearest Love, and highest thanks: Otherwise you do but jest, or say you know not what, or contradict your selves, while you say, He is your God.

7. That nothing is to be preferred before him.

§. 10. 7. I suppose thou art easily convinced, that in all the World there is no Creature that can shew so full a Title to thee as God; or that hath so great Authority to Govern thee, or that can be so Good to thee, or do so much for thee, as God can do, or hath done, and will do, if thou do thy part: And therefore that there is nothing to be preferred before him, or compared with him in our Obedience or Love: Nor is there any that can save us from his Justice, if we stand out against him.

8. That he governeth the world by Hopes and Fears of another life, doth not rule them by deceit and lies, and that he hath Rewards and Punishments hereafter. Mundus parendo regitur, estque quasi communis urbs & civitas hominum. Cicero 2. de finib.

§. 11. 8. I suppose that as thou knowest God is just, in his Laws and Judgments, so that he is faithful that he will not, and is All-sufficient that he need not deceive Mankind, and Governeth them by meer deceit: This better becomes the Devil than God: And therefore that as he governeth Men on Earth by the Hopes and Fears of another Life, he doth not delude them into such Hopes or Fears: and as he doth not procure Obedience by any Rewards or Punishments in this life, as the principal means (the wicked prospering, and the best being persecuted and afflicted here) therefore his Rewards or Punishments, must needs be principally hereafter in the Life to come: For if he have no Rewards or Punishments, he hath no Judgment: and if he have no Judgment, he hath no Laws (or else no Justice:) and if he have no Laws, (or no Justice,) he is no Governour of Man, (or not a righteous Governour:) and if he be not our Governour (and just) he is not our God: and if he were not our God, we had never been his Creatures, nor had a Being, or been Men.

Impiis apud inferos sunt pœnæ præparatæ. Cicero 1 de Invent. Impii apud inferos pœnas luunt. Idem Phil. & 1. de Legib. Jovem dominatorem rerum, & omnia nutu regentem, & præsentem & prapotentem, qui dubitat, haud sanè intelligo, cur non idem, sol sit, an nullius sit dubitari possit. Cicer. de Nat. Deor. 2. p. 48.

9. That Man being bound to love and obey God above all, is bound to do nothing in vain and that we cannot be Losers by his Service.

§. 12. 9. I suppose thou knowest that if God had not discovered what he would do with us, in the life to come, yet man is highliest bound to Obey and Love his Maker; because he is Our Absolute Lord, Our highest Ruler, and our chief Benefactor, and all that we are to have is from him. And that if Man be bound to spend his life in the Service of his God, it is certain that he shall be no Loser by him, no not by the costliest Obedience that we can perform; For God cannot appoint us any thing that is Vain: nor can he be worſe to us than an honeſt man, that will ſee that we loſe not by his ſervice: Therefore that God for whom we muſt ſpend and forſake this life, and all thoſe Pleaſures which Senſualiſts enjoy, hath certainly ſome greater thing to give us, in another life.

10. That no Infidel can ſay, He is ſure there is no life to come.

§. 13. 10. I may take it for granted at the worſt, that neither thy ſelf, nor any Infidel in the World, can ſay that you are ſure that there is not another life for man, in which his preſent Obedience ſhall be rewarded, and Diſobedience puniſhed. The worſt that ever Infidel could ſay was, that He thinketh there is no other Life: None of you dare deny the Poſſibility of it, nor can with any Reaſon deny the Probability: Well then: Let this be remembred while we proceed a little further with you.

11. That you are ſure of the brevity and vanity of this life: And that the probability or poſſibility of an endleſs Joy or miſery ſhould command all the care and diligence of a Rational Creature, againſt all that can be ſet againſt it.

§. 14. 11. I ſuppoſe or expect that you have ſo much Uſe of Senſe and Reaſon, as to know the Brevity and Vanity of all the Glory and Pleaſures of the Fleſh; and that they are all ſo quickly gone, that were they greater than they are, they can be of no conſiderable value: Alas, what is Time! How quickly gone, and then it's nothing! and all things then are nothing which are paſſed with it! So that the Joys or Sorrows of ſo ſhort a life, are no great matter of Gain or Loſs.

I may therefore ſuppoſe that thou canſt eaſily conclude, that the bare probability or poſſibily of an Endleſs Happineſs, ſhould be infinitely preferred before ſuch tranſitory Vanity, even the greateſt matters that can be expected here: And that the probability or poſſibility of endleſs miſery in Hell, ſhould engage us with far greater Care and Diligence to avoid it, than is due for the avoiding any thing that you can think to ſcape by ſinning; or any of the Sufferings of this momentary Life. If you ſee not this, you have loſt your Reaſon; that the meer probability or poſſibility of a Heaven and Hell, ſhould much more command our Care and Diligence, than the fading Vanities of this dreaming tranſitory Life.

12. Therefore that a holy life is every mans duty, were it but on the account of ſuch a poſſibility or probability: And therefore that really there is ſuch a Joy and miſery hereafter; becauſe God doth not make our Faculties in vain, nor make us to follow deceits and lies.

§. 15. 12. Well then; We have got thus far in the cleareſt light; you ſee that a Religious holy life is every man's duty, not only as they owe it to God as their Creator, their Owner, Governour, and Benefactor; but alſo becauſe as Lovers of our ſelves, our Reaſon commandeth us to have ten thouſand fold more regard of a Probable or Poſſible Joy and Torment which are Endleſs, than of any that is ſmall and of ſhort continuance. And if this be ſo, that a Holy Life, is every mans duty, with reſpect to the life that is to come, then it is moſt evident, that there is ſuch a life to come indeed, and that it is more than probable or poſſible, even certain. For if it be but Mans duty to manage this life, by the Hopes and Fears of another life, then it muſt follow, that either there is ſuch a life to come, or elſe that God hath made it mans duty to hope, and fear, and care, and labour, and live in vain; and that he himſelf doth Tantalize and Cheat his creatures, and rule the world by Motives of deceit, and make Religion and Obedience to our Maker to be a life of folly, deluſion and our loſs. And he that believeth this of God, doth ſcarce believe him to be God. Though I have mention'd this Argument in another Treatiſe, I think it not unmeet here to repeat it for thy benefit.

13. That all the matters of this tranſitory life, are to be eſtimated as they refer to the life to come.

§. 16. 13. And ſeeing I ſuppoſe thee to be convinced of the Life to come, and that mans Happineſs and Miſery is there, I muſt needs ſuppoſe that thou doſt confeſs, that all things in this life, whether proſperity or adverſity, honour or diſhonour, are to be eſteemed and uſed as they refer to the life to come: For nothing is more plain, than that the Means are to have all their eſteem and uſe in order to their End. That only is Good in this life, which tendeth to the Happineſs of our Endleſs life: And that is Evil indeed in this life, that tendeth to our endleſs hurt, and to deprive us of the Everlaſting Good. And therefore no price or motive ſhould hire us, to ſin againſt God, and to forfeit or hinder our endleſs Happineſs.

14. That no man can love God too much, nor make too ſure of his ſalvation.

§. 17. 14. I may ſuppoſe if thou have reaſon, that thou wilt confeſs that God cannot be too much loved nor obeyed too exactly, nor ſerved too diligently (eſpecially by ſuch backward ſinners, that have ſcarce any mind to love or worſhip him at all): and that no man can make too ſure of Heaven, or pay too dear for it, or do too much for his ſalvation, if it be but that which God hath appointed him to do. And that you have nothing elſe that is ſo much worth your Time, and Love, and Care, and Labour. And therefore though you have need to be ſtopt in your love, and care, and labour for the World, becauſe for it you may eaſily pay too dear, and do too much, yet there is no need of ſtopping Men in their love, and care, and labour for God and their Salvation; which is worth more than ever we can do, and where the beſt are apt to do too little.

15. That this life is given us for tryal and preparation to the life to come.

§. 18. 15. I alſo ſuppoſe thee to be one that knoweſt, that this preſent Life is given us on tryal, to prepare for the life that ſhall come after: and that as men live here, they ſhall ſpeed for ever: and that time cannot be recalled, when it's gone; and therefore that we ſhould make the beſt of it while we have it.

Non temerè nec fortuito, ſati & creati ſumus; ſed profectò fuit quædam vis, quæ generi conſuleret humano; nec id gigneret aut aleret, quod cum exantlaviſſet omnes labores, tum incideret in mortis malum ſempiternum. Cic. 1. Tuſcul. Nec unquam bono quicquam mali evenire poteſt, nec vivo nec mortuo. Nec res ejus à Diis negliguntur. Idem. 1. Tuſc.

16. That mans thoughts ſhould be ſerious and frequent about his future ſtate.

§. 19. 16. I ſuppoſe thee alſo to be eaſily convinced, that ſeeing man hath his Reaſon and life for matters of everlaſting Conſequence, his Thoughts of them ſhould be frequent and very ſerious, and his Reaſon ſhould be uſed about theſe things, by retired ſober deliberation.

17. That you can tell or may do which way your hearts and diligence are bent, whether moſt for this life, or for that to come.

§. 20. 17. And I ſuppoſe thee to be a man, and therefore ſo far acquainted with thy ſelf, as that thou maiſt know if thou wilt, whether thy Heart and Life do anſwer thy convictions, and whether they are more for Heaven or Earth: and therefore that thou art capable of ſelf judging in this caſe.

Perhaps you will ſay, that while I am directing you to be Holy, I ſuppoſe you to be Holy firſt: For all this ſeemeth to go far towards it. But I muſt profeſs that I ſee not any thing in all theſe Suppoſitions, but what I may ſuppoſe to be in a Heathen: and that I think all this is but ſuppoſing thee to have the uſe of thy Reaſon, in the Points in hand. Speak freely: is there any one of all theſe points that thou canſt or dareſt deny? I think there is not. And therefore if Heathens and wicked men, deny them in their Practice, that doth but ſhew that ſin doth brutifie them, and that, as men aſleep or in a crowd of Buſineſs, they have not the uſe of the Reaſon which they poſſeſs, in the Matters which their minds are turned from.

18. That moſt among us profeſs to believe in Chriſt, and confeſs the Goſpel to be true, &c.

§. 21. 18. Yea, one thing more I think I may ſuppoſe in all or moſt that will read this Book; that you take on you alſo to believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and in the Holy Ghoſt the Sanctifier, and that the Scriptures are the Word of God: And if you do ſo indeed, I may then hope that my work is in a manner done, before I begin it: But if you do it but opinionatively and uneffectually, yet God and Man may plead with you the Truths which you profeſs.

§. 22. Having told you what I preſuppoſe in you, I proceed now to the Directions: But I again intreat and charge thee, Reader, as thou loveſt thy Soul, and wouldſt not be condemned for Hypocriſie and Sloth, that thou doſt not refuſe to put in practice what is taught thee, and ſhew thereby, that whatever thou pretendeſt, thou art not willing to do thy part for thy own Sal-

§. 1. If knowledge be unneceſſary, why have we Underſtanding? And wherein doth a man excel a Beaſt? If any knowledge at all be neceſſary, certainly it muſt be the Knowledge of the greateſt and moſt neceſſary things: And nothing is ſo great and neceſſary as to Obey thy Maker, and to ſave thy ſoul. Knowledge is to be valued according to its uſefulneſs: If it be a matter of as great concernment to know how to do your worldly buſineſs, and to trade and gather worldly wealth, and to underſtand the Laws, and to maintain your honour, as it is to know how to be reconciled unto God, to be pardoned and juſtified, to pleaſe your Creatour, to prepare in time for death and judgment, and an endleſs life, then let worldly wiſdom have the preheminence. But if all earthly things be dreams and ſhadows, and valuable only as they ſerve us in the way to Heaven, then ſurely the Heavenly Wiſdom is the beſt. Alas, how far is that man from being wiſe, that is acquainted with all the punctillio's of the Law, that is excellent in the knowledge of all the Languages, Sciences and Art, and yet knoweth not how to Live to God, to mortify the fleſh, to conquer ſin, to deny himſelf, nor to anſwer in judgment for his fleſhly life, nor to eſcape damnation! As far is ſuch a learned man from being wiſe, as he is from being happy.

§. 2. Two ſorts among us do quietly live in damning ignorance. Firſt, Abundance of poor people, who think they may continue in it, becauſe they were bred in it; and that becauſe they are not Book-learned, therefore they need not learn how to be ſaved; and becauſe their Parents neglected to teach them when they were young, therefore they may neglect themſelves ever after, and need not learn the things they were made for: Alas Sirs, What have you your lives, your time, and Reaſon for? Do you think it is only to know how to do your worldly buſineſs? Or is it to prepare for a better world? It is better that you knew not how to eat, or drink, or ſpeak, or go, or dreſs your ſelves, than that you know not the will of God, and the way to your Salvation. Hear what the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. [But if our Goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt: in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the Light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them.] Darkneſs is unſafe and full of Fears: the Light is ſafe and comfortable. A man in ignorance is never like to hit his way: Nor can he know whether he be in or out; nor what enemy or danger he is near. It is the Devil that is the Prince of Darkneſs, and his Kingdom is a Kingdom of Darkneſs, and his works are works of darkneſs. See Epheſ. 6. 12. Col. 1. 13. 1 John 2. 11. Luke 11. 34, 35. Grace turneth men from darkneſs to light, Acts 26. 18. and cauſeth them to caſt off the works of darkneſs. Rom. 13. 12. Becauſe we are the children of light and of the day, and not of darkneſs or of night, 1 Theſ. 5. 5. They that were ſometimes darkneſs, are light in the Lord, when they are converted, and muſt walk as the children of the light, Epheſ. 5. 8. In the dark the Devil and wicked men may cheat you, and do almoſt what they liſt with you; You will not buy your Wares in the dark, nor travel to do your Work in the dark: And will you judge of the ſtate of your ſouls in the dark? and do the work of your ſalvation in the Dark? I tell you the Devil could never entice ſo many ſouls to Hell, if he did not firſt put out the light, or put out their Eyes: They would never ſo follow him by crowds, to everlaſting torments, by day-light, and with open Eyes. If Men did but know well what they do when they are ſinning, and whither they go in a carnal life, they would quickly ſtop, and go no further. All the Devils in Hell could never draw ſo many thither, if Mens Ignorance were not the advantage of Temptations.

§. 3. Another ſort among us that are ignorant of the things of God are ſenſual Gentlemen, and Scholars, that have ſo much breeding as to underſtand the words, and ſpeak ſomewhat better than the ruder ſort, but indeed never knew the nature, truth, and goodneſs of the things they ſpeak of: They are many

Cum quem peccaſſe pene innocens eſt: Maxima purgatio num pars eſt voluntaria pœnitentia delictorum. Scal. Theſ. p. 742. Facilius ius ignoſcitur qui non perſeverare ſed ab errato ſe revocare, moliuntur; eſt enim humanum peccare, ſed belluinum in errore perſeverare. Cicero in Vat. Even Ariſtotle could ſay, that he that believed as he ought of the Gods, ſhould think as well of himſelf, as Alexander that commandeth ſo many men. Plutarch. de Tranquil. Anim. p. 155. Nullus ſuavior animo cibus eſt, quam cognitio veritatis. Lactant. Inſtit. l. 1. c. 1. It is a mavellous and doleful caſe to think how ignorant ſome People live, even to old age, under conſtant and excellent Teaching. Some learn neither words nor ſenſe, but hear as if they heard not: Some learn Words, and know the Senſe no more than if they had learnt but a tongue unknown: And will repeat their Creed and Catechiſm, when they know not what it is that they ſay. A worthy Miniſter of Helvetia told me, that their people are very conſtant at their Sermons, and yet moſt of them groſly ignorant of the things which they moſt frequently hear. It is almoſt incredible what ignorance ſome Miniſters report that they have found in ſome of the eldeſt of their Auditors. Nay, when I have examined ſome that have profeſſed ſtrictneſs in Religion, above the common ſort of People, I have found ſome ignorant of ſome of the Fundamentals of the Chriſtian Faith. And I remember what an ancient Biſhop about twelve hundred years ago, ſaith, Maximus Taurinenſis in his Homilies, that when he had long preached to his people, even on an Evening after one of his Sermons, he heard a cry or noiſe among the people, and hearkening what it was, they were by their outcry helping to deliver the Moon, that was in labour, and wanted help. His words are [Quis non moleſte ferat ſic vos eſſe veſtræ ſalutes immemores, ut etiam cœlo teſte peccetis? Nam cum ante dies pleroſque cum cupiditate pulſaverim, ipſa die circiter veſperam tanta vociferatio populi extitit, ut irreligioſitas ejus penetravet ad cœlum. Quod cum requirerem quid ſibi clamor hic velit? dixerunt mihi quod Laboranti Lunæ veſtra vociferatio ſubveniret; & defectum ejus ſuis clamoribus adjuvaret: Riſi equidem & miratus ſum vanitatem, quod quaſi devoti Chriſtiani Deo ferebatis auxilium. Clamabatis enim ne tacentibus vobis perderet elementum: tanquam infirmus enim & imbecillis, niſi veſtris adjuvaretur vocibus, non poſſet luminaria defendere quæ creavit.] It is cited alſo by Papirius Maſſonus in vita Hilarii Papæ, fol. 67. Therefore Popery is ſuitable to the children of darkneſs, and unſuitable to the children of light, becauſe it greatly befriendeth ignorance, hindring the People from reading the Holy Scriptures, and quieting them with the opiate of an eaſie implicite faith, in believing as the Roman Church believeth, though they know not what it believeth, or miſtake and think it believeth, that which it doth not: Ockam. lib. de Sacram. Altar. cap. 1. citeth Innocent. Extra de ſum. Trin. to prove the great benefit and efficacy of implicite Faith, that it would prove an errour to be no ſin: In tantum, inquit, valet fides implicita, ut dicunt aliqui, ut ſi aliquis eam habet, quod ſcilicet credit quicquid Eccleſia credit, ſi falſe opinatur, ratione naturali motus, quia pater eſt vel prior filio, vel quod tres perſonæ ſint tres res ab invicem diſtantes, non eſt hæreticus, nec peccat; dummodo hunc errorem non defendat, & hoc ipſum credit, quia credit Eccleſiam ſic credere, & ſuam opinionem fidei Eccleſiæ ſupponit. Quia licet ſic male opinetur, non tamen eſt illa fides ſua, immo fides ſua eſt fides Eccleſiæ. This implicite Faith, being nothing but to believe that the Church erreth not, is not an Implicite Faith in God (to believe that all that God revealeth is true) which all men have that believe in God, as rational an Excuſe for Ignorance and Errour, as a belief in the Church of Rome? This is too ſhort and eaſie a Faith to be effectual to the true ends of Faith. Si igitur tantæ ſit efficaciæ fides implicita, ut excuſet ignoranter errantem circa illa quæ in Scriptura Canonica ſunt expreſſa, multo magis excuſabit ignoranter opinantem aliquid quod nec in Scriptura Canonica reperitur expreſſum. Ockam ibid.

of them as ignorant of the nature of faith, and sanctification, and the working of the Holy Ghost in planting the Image of God upon the soul, and of the Saints communion with God, and the nature of a holy life, as if they had never heard or believed, that there is such a thing as any of these in being. Nicodemus is a lively instance in this case: A Ruler in Israel and a Pharisee, and yet knew not what it was to be born again. And the pride of these Gallants maketh their ignorance much harder to be cured, than other mens: because it hindereth them from knowing and confessing it. If any one would convince them of it, they say with scorn, as the Pharisees, to Christ, John 9. 40. Are we blind also? Yea, they are ready to insult over the Children of the Light, that are wise to salvation, because they differ from the loose or hypocritical Opinions of these Gentlemen, in some matters of Gods Worship; of which their Worships are as competent Judges, as the Pharisees of the Doctrine of Christ, or as Nicodemus of Regeneration, or as Simon Magus, or Julian, or Porphyry of the Gifts of the Holy Ghost. These Honourable miserable men, will bear no contradiction or reproof: who dare be so unmannerly, disobedient, or bold, as to tell them that they are out of the way to Heaven, and strangers to it, (that I say not, Enemies); and to presume to stop them in the way to Hell, or to hinder them from damning themselves, and as many others as they can? They think this talk of Christ, and Grace, and Life Eternal, if it be but serious, and not like their own, in Form, or Levity, or Scorn) is but the troublesome preciseness of hypocritical humours, crakt-brained fellows: And say of the godly, as the Pharisees, John 7. 47, 48, 49. Are ye also deceived? Have any of the Rulers, or of the Pharisees believed on him? but this people who knoweth not the Law are cursed.

§. 4. Well, Gentlemen or poor men, whoever you be that savour not the things of the Spirit (Rom. 8. 5, 6, 7, 13.) but live in ignorance of the mysteries of salvation, be it known to you, that Heavenly Truth and Holiness are works of Light, and never prosper in the dark: And that your best understanding should be used for God and your Salvation, if for any thing at all. It is the Devil and his deceits that fear the light. Do but Understand well what you do, and then be wicked if you can: and then set light by Christ and holiness if you dare! O come but out of darkness into the light, and you will see that which will make you tremble to live ungodly and unconverted another day: And you will see that which will make you with penitent remorse lament your so long neglect of Heaven, and wonder that you could live so far, and so long besides your wits, as to choose a course of vanity and bestiality in the chains of Satan, before the joyful liberty of the Saints: And, though we must not be so uncivil as to tell you where you are, and what you are doing, you will then more uncivilly call your selves, [exceedingly mad and foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures,] as one did that thought himself before as wise and good as any of you, Acts 26. 11. Tit. 3. 3. Live not in a sleepy state of ignorance, if ever you would have saving grace.

Dir. 2. Direction 2. Especially labour first to understand the true nature of a state of sin, and a state of Grace.

Pœnitenti optimus est portus, mutatio consilii. Cic. Phil. 12.

§. 1. It's like you will say that All are sinners; and that Christ dyed for sinners, and that you were Regenerate in your Baptism, and that for the sins that since then you have committed, you have Repented of them, and therefore you hope they are forgiven.

But stay a little man, and understand the matter well as you go; for it is your salvation that lyeth at the stake: it's very true that All are sinners: But it is as true that some are in a state of sin, and some in a state of grace; some are converted sinners, and some unconverted sinners: some live in sins inconsistent with Holiness (which therefore may be called Mortal) others have none but infirmities which consist with spiritual life (which in this sense may be called Venial:) some hate their sin and long to be perfectly delivered from it: and others so love it, as they are loath to leave it. And is there no difference think you between these?

§. 2. It is as true also that Christ dyed for sinners: (Or else where were our hope?) But it is true also that he dyed to save his people from their sins, Matth. 1. 21. and to bring them from darkness unto light, and from the power of Satan unto God, Acts 26. 18. and to redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie to himself a peculiar people zealous of good works, Tit. 2. 14. and that except a man be born again and converted, and become as a little child (in humility and beginning the world anew) he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Joh. 3. 3. 5. Mat. 18. 3. and that even he that dyed for sinners, will at last condemn the workers of iniquity, and say, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, Matth. 25. I never knew you, Matth. 7. 23.

Bonum Gratiæ unius hominis majus est quam bonum naturæ totius universi. Aquin. 12. q. 113. art. 9.

§. 3. It is very true that you were sacramentally regenerate in Baptism, and that he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, and all that are the Children of promise, and have that promise sealed to them by Baptism, are regenerate: The Ancients taught that Baptism puts men into a state of grace; that is, that all that sincerely renounce the world, the Devil and the flesh, and are sincerely given up to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, according to the covenant of Grace, and profess and seal this by their Baptism, shall be pardoned and made the heirs of life. But as it is true, that Baptism thus saveth, so is it as true, that it is not the outward washing only the filth of the flesh that will suffice, but the answer of a good conscience towards God, 1 Pet. 2. 21. And that no man can enter into the Kingdom of God, that is not born of the spirit, as well as of water, John 3. 5. And that Simon Magus and many another have had the water of Baptism, that never had the Spirit, but still remain in the gall of bitterness, and bond of iniquity, and had no part nor lot in that business, their hearts being not right in the sight of God, Act. 8. 13, 21, 23. And nothing is more sure, than that if any man have not the Spirit of Christ (for all his Baptism he is none of his, Rom. 8. 9. And that if you have his Spirit, you walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit: and are not carnally but spiritually minded, and are alive to God, and as dead to the world: Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14. Whether all that were baptized are such as these, when they come to age, judge you.

§. 4. It is true also, that if you truely Repent, you are forgiven: But it is as true, that true Repentance is the very Conversion of the soul from sin to God, and leaveth not any man in the power of sin. It is not for a man when he hath had all the pleasure ſure that ſin will yield him, to wiſh then that he had not committed it, (which he may do then at an eaſie rate) and yet to keep the reſt that are ſtill pleaſant and profitable to his fleſh. Like a man that caſts away the bottle which he hath drunk empty, but keeps that which is full; Or as men ſell off their barren Kine, and buy milch ones in their ſtead: This kind of Repentance is a mockery, and not a cure for the ſoul. If thou have true Repentance, it hath ſo far turned thy heart from ſin, that thou wouldſt not commit it, if it were to do again, though thou hadſt all the ſame temptations; And it hath ſo far turned thy heart to God and Holineſs, that thou wouldſt live a holy life, if it were all to do again, though thou hadſt the ſame temptations as afore againſt it. (Becauſe thou haſt not the ſame heart.) This is the nature of true Repentance: ſuch a Repentance indeed is never too late to ſave: but I am ſure it never comes too ſoon.

§. 5. Mark now I beſeech you, what a ſtate of ſin, and what a ſtate of Holineſs is.

He that is in a ſtate of ſin, hath habitually and predominantly a greater love to ſome Pleaſures, or profits, or honours of this world, than he hath to God and to the glory which he hath promiſed: He preferreth, and ſeeketh, and holdeth (if he can) his fleſhly proſperity in this world, before the favour of God and the happineſs of the world to come. His heart is turned from God unto the ceature, and is principally ſet on things on earth. Thus his ſin is the blindneſs, and madneſs, and perfidiouſneſs, and Idolatry of his ſoul, and his forſaking of God, and his ſalvation, for a thing of nought. It is that to his ſoul, which poyſon, and death, and ſickneſs, and lameneſs, and blindneſs are to his body: It is ſuch dealing with God, as that man is guilty of to his deareſt friend or Father, who ſhould hate him and his company, and love the company of a Dog or Toad much better than his, and obey his enemy, againſt him: And it is like a mad mans dealing with his Phyſician, who ſeeks to kill him as his enemy, becauſe he croſſeth his appetite or will to cure him. Think of this well, and then tell me whether this be a ſtate to be continued in. This ſtate of ſin, is ſomething worſe, than a meer inconſiderate act of ſin, in one that otherwiſe liveth an obedient holy life.

Nulla Religio vera eſt, niſi quæ virtute & juſtitia conſtat. Id. ibid.

§. 6. On the other ſide, a ſtate of Holineſs, is nothing elſe but the Habitual and predominant devotion and dedication of ſoul, and body, and life, and all that we have to God: An eſteeming, and loving, and ſerving, and ſeeking him, before all the pleaſures and proſperity of the fleſh: Making his favour and everlaſting Happineſs in Heaven our End, and Jeſus Chriſt our way, and referring all things in the world unto that end, and making this the ſcope, deſign and buſineſs of our lives. It is a turning from a deceitful world to God; and preferring the Creator before the creature, and Heaven before Earth, and Eternity before an inch of Time, and our ſouls before our corruptible bodies, and the authority and Laws of God the Univerſal Governour of the world, before the word or will of any man, how great ſoever; and a ſubjecting our ſenſitive faculties to our Reaſon, and advancing this reaſon by Divine Revelation; and living by faith, and not by ſight: In a word, it is a laying up our treaſure in Heaven, and ſetting our hearts there, and living in a Heavenly converſation, ſetting our affections on the things above, and not on the things that are on earth: and a rejoycing in hope of the glory to come, when ſenſualiſts have nothing but tranſitory brutiſh pleaſures to rejoyce in.

This is a ſtate and life of Holineſs: when we perſwade you to be Holy, we perſwade you to no worſe than this: When we commend a life of Godlineſs to your Choice, this is the life that we mean and that we commend to you. And can you underſtand this well, and yet be un willing of it? It can not be. Do but know well what Godlineſs and Ungodlineſs is, what Grace and ſin are, and the work is almoſt done.

Direction 3. TO know what a life of Holineſs is, believe the Word of God, and thoſe that have tryed it, and believe not the ſlanders of the Devil and of ungodly men, that never tryed or knew the things which they reproach. Dir. 3.

§. 1. Reaſon cannot queſtion the reaſonableneſs of this advice. Who is wiſer than God? or who is to be believed before him? And what men are liker to know what they talk of, than ſuch as ſpeak from their own experience? Nothing more familiar with wicked men, than to ſlander and reproach the holy ways and ſervants of the Lord. No wiſdom, no meaſure of Holineſs or righteouſneſs will exempt the Godly from their malice. Otherwiſe Chriſt himſelf at leaſt would have been exempted, if not his Apoſtles or other Saints, whom they have ſlandered and put to death. Chriſt hath foretold us what to expect from them, John 15. 18, 19, 20, 21. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you: If you were of the world, the world would love his own: But becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you: Remember the word that I ſaid unto you, The ſervant is not greater than the Lord: If they have perſecuted me they will alſo perſecute you: If they have kept my ſayings they will keep yours alſo.

§. 2. The truth is, wicked men are the ſeed and children of the Devil, and have his image, and obey him, and think, and ſpeak, and do as he would have them. And the Godly are the ſeed and members of Chriſt, and bear his Image, and obey him: And do you think that the Devil will bid his children ſpeak well of the wayes or followers of Chriſt? I muſt confeſs, till I had found the truth of it by experience, I was not ſenſible how Impudent in belying, and cruel in abuſing the ſervants of Chriſt, his wordly malicious enemies are. I had read oft how early an Enmity was put between the Womans and the Serpents ſeed, and I had read and wondred that the firſt man that was born into the world did murder his Brother, for worſhipping God more acceptably than himſelf; becauſe his own works were evil, and his brothers righteous, 1 John 3. 12. I had read the inference, ver. 13. Marvel not my brethren if the world hate you.] But yet I did not ſo fully underſtand, that wicked men and Devils are ſo very like, and ſo near of kin; till the words of Chriſt, John 8. 44. expounded by viſible demonſtrations had taught it me. Indeed the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 John 3. 12. that Cain was of that wicked one, that is, the Devil: But Chriſt ſaith more plainly [Ye are of your father the Devil, and the luſts of your Father ye will do: He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, becauſe there is no truth in him: When he ſpeaketh a lye,

Abundance of Paſtors were then baniſhed from their Churches, and many tormented, and Auguſtine himſelf dyed with Fear, ſaith Victor ib. p. 376. when he had written (ſaith he) two hundred thirty two Books, beſides innumerable Epiſtles, Homilies, Expoſitions on the Pſalms, Evangeliſts, &c.

he ſpeaketh of his own; for he is a lyar, and the Father of it.] Here note, that cruel murdering and lying are the principal actions of a Devil; and that as the Father of theſe he is the Father of the wicked, who are moſt notoriouſly addicted to theſe two courſes againſt the moſt innocent ſervants of the Lamb. How juſt it is that they dwell together hereafter, that are here ſo like in diſpoſition and action, even as the Righteous ſhall dwell with Chriſt, who bore his image, and imitated his holy ſuffering life.

§. 3. I conclude then, that if thou wilt never turn to God and a holy life, till wicked men give over belying, and reproaching them, thou maiſt as well ſay, that thou wilt never be reconciled to God, till the Devil be firſt reconciled to him; and never love Chriſt, till the Devil love him, or bid thee love him; or never be a Saint till the Devil be a Saint, or will give thee leave, and that thou wilt not be ſaved, till the Devil be willing that thou be ſaved.

Dir. 4. Direction 4. THat thy Underſtanding may be enlighten'd, and thy heart renewed, be much and ſerious in reading the Word of God, and theſe Books that are fitted to men in an unconverted ſtate, and eſpecially in hearing the plain and ſearching preaching of the Word.

§. 1. There is a heavenly light and power and Majeſty in the Word of God, which in the ſerious Reading or hearing of it, may pierce the heart; and prick it, and open it, that corruption may go out, and grace come in. The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the ſoul: The teſtimony of the Lord is ſure, making wiſe the ſimple: The Statutes of the Lord are right, rejoycing the heart. Pſal. 19. 7, 8. Moreover, by them it is that we are warned, and in keeping of them there is great reward, verſ. 11. The Eunuch was Reading the Scripture, when Philip was ſent to expound it to him for his converſion, Acts 8. The preaching of Peter did prick many thouſands to the heart to their converſion, Acts 2. 37. The heart of Lydia was opened to attend to the preaching of Paul, Acts 16. 14. The word of God is quick and powerful, and ſharper than any two-edged ſword, piercing even to the dividing of ſoul and ſpirit, Heb. 4. 11. Theſe weapons are mighty through God, to the pulling down of ſtrong holds, caſting down Imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt, 2. Cor. 4. 5. Haſt thou often read and heard already, and yet findeſt no change upon thy heart? yet read and hear again and again: Miniſters muſt not give over preaching, when they have laboured without ſucceſs: Why then ſhould you give over hearing or reading? As the Husbandman laboureth, and looketh to God for rain, and for the bleſſing, ſo muſt we, and ſo muſt you Look up to God: remember it is his Word, in which he calleth you to repentance, and offereth you mercy, and treateth with you concerning your everlaſting happineſs: Lament your former negligence and diſobedience, and beg his bleſſing on his Word, and you ſhall find it will not be in vain.

§. 2. And the ſerious Reading of Books which expound and apply the Scriptures ſuitable to your caſe, may by the bleſſing of God be effectual to your converſion. I have written ſo many to this Uſe my ſelf, that I ſhall be the ſhorter on this ſubject now, and deſire you to read them, or ſome of them, if you have not fitter at hand; viz. A Call to the Unconverted: A Treatiſe of Converſion: Now or Never: Directions for a ſound Converſion: A Saint or a Bruit: A Treatiſe of Judgment: A Sermon againſt making light of Chriſt: A Sermon of Chriſts Dominion: Another of his Soveraignty, &c.

Direction 5. IF thou wouldſt not be deſtitute of ſaving Grace, let thy Reaſon be exerciſed about the matters of thy ſalvation, in ſome proportion of frequent, ſober, ſerious Thoughts, as thou art convinced the weight of the matter doth require. Dir. 5.

§. 1. To have Reaſon is common to all men, even the ſleepy and diſtracted: To uſe Reaſon is common to all that have their ſenſes awake and fit to ſerve their Minds: To uſe Reaſon in the greateſt matters, is proper to wiſe men, that know for what end God made them Reaſonable. Inconſiderate men are all ungodly men: For Reaſon not uſed is as bad as no Reaſon (and will prove much worſe in the day of reckoning.) The truth is, though ſinners are exceeding blind and erroneous, about the things of God, yet all Gods precepts are ſo Reaſonable, and tend ſo clearly to our joy and happineſs, that if the Devil did not win moſt ſouls by ſilencing Reaſon, and laying it aſleep, or drowning its voice, with the noiſe and crowd of worldly buſineſs, Hell would not have ſo many ſad inhabitants. I ſcarce believe that God will condemn any ſinner that ever lived in the world (that had the uſe of Reaſon) no not the Heathens that had but one talent, but he will be able to ſay to them as Luke 19. 22. Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked ſervant: Thou kneweſt, &c. To ſerve God and labour diligently for ſalvation, and prefer it before all worldly things, is ſo Reaſonable a thing, that every one that Repenteth of the contrary courſe, doth call it from his heart an impious madneſs. Reaſon muſt needs be for God that made it. Reaſon muſt needs be for that which is its proper End and Uſe. Sin as it is in the Underſtanding, is nothing but Unreaſonableneſs: a blindneſs and errour: a loſs and corruption of Reaſon in the matters of God and our ſalvation. And Grace (as in the underſtanding) doth but cure this folly and diſtraction, and make us Reaſonable again: It is but the opening of our eyes, and making us wiſe in the greateſt matters. It is not a more unmanly thing to love and plead for blindneſs, madneſs and diſeaſes, and to hate both ſight, and health, and wit, than it is to love and plead for ſin, and to hate and vilifie a holy life.

1 Cor. 13. 5. Pſal. 4. 4, 5. 6, 7. 1 Cor. 11. 28. The word it ſelf exciteth Reaſon, and Preachers are by Reaſon to ſhame all ſin as a thing unreaſonable. And the want of ſuch excitation, by powerful preaching, and plain inſtructing, and the perſons conſidering, is a great cauſe of the worlds undoing. For thoſe Preachers that lay all the blame on the peoples ſtupidity or malignity, I deſire them to read a ſatisfactory anſwer in Acoſta the Jeſuit. li. 4. c. 2, 3, & 4. Few ſouls periſh comparatively where all the means is uſed which ſhould be uſed by their Superiours for their Salvation: If every Pariſh had holy, skilful, laborious Paſtors, that would publickly and privately do their part; great things might be expected in the World. But ſaith Acoſta, Itaque præcipua cauſa ad Miniſtros parum idoneos redit. Quenamque eſt prædicatio noſtra? quæ fiducia? ſigna certè non edimus: vitæ ſanctitate non eminemus; beneficentia non invitamus; verbi ac ſpiritus efficacia non perſuademus; lachrymis ac precibus à Deo non impetramus; imo ne magnopere quidem curamus. Que ergo noſtra querela eſt? quæ tanta Indorum accuſatio? (An ingenuous confeſſion of the Roman Prieſthood. And ſuch Prieſts can expect no better ſucceſs. But having ſeen another ſort of Miniſters, through Gods mercy, I have ſeen an anſwerable Fruit of their Endeavours.) lib. 4. p. 365.

§. 2. Grant me but this one thing, that thou wilt but ſoberly exerciſe thy Reaſon, about theſe great important queſtions; Where muſt I abide for ever? What muſt I do to be ſaved? What was I created and Redeemed for? And I ſhall hope that thy own underſtanding as erroneous as it is, will work out ſomething that will promote thy good. Do but withdraw thy ſelf one hour in a day from company and other buſineſs, and Conſider but as ſoberly and ſeriouſly of thy end and life, as thou knoweſt the nature and weight of the matter doth require, and I am perſwaded thy own Reaſon and Conſcience will call thee to Repentance, and ſet thee, at leaſt, in a far better way than thou waſt in before. When thou thou walkeſt alone, or when thou wakeſt in the night remember ſoberly that God is preſent, that time is haſting to an end, that judgement is at hand, where thou muſt give account of all thy hours, of thy luſts and Paſſions, and deſires; of all thy thoughts, and words and deeds; and that thy endleſs joy or miſery dependeth wholly and certainly on this little time; Think but ſoberly on ſuch things as theſe, but one hour in a day or two, and try whether it will not once recover thee to wit and godlineſs, and folly and ſin will vaniſh away before the force of Conſidering Reaſon, as the darkneſs vaniſheth before the light. I intreat thee now as in the preſence of God, and as thou wilt anſwer the denial of ſo reaſonable a Requeſt, at the day of Judgment, that thou wilt but reſolve to try this courſe of a ſober ſerious Conſideration, about thy ſin, thy duty, thy danger, thy hope, thy account, and thy everlaſting ſtate: Try it ſometimes; eſpecially on the Lords days; and do but mark the Reſult of all; and whither it is that ſuch ſober conſideration doth point or lead thee? Whether it be not towards a diligent holy heavenly life? If thou deny me thus much, God and thy Conſcience ſhall bear witneſs, that thou thoughteſt thy ſalvation of little worth, and therefore maiſt juſtly be denied it.

§. 3. Would it not be ſtrange that a man ſhould be penitent and Godly, that never once thought of the matter with any ſerioufneſs in his life? Can ſo many and great Diſeaſes of Soul be cured before you have once ſoberly conſidered that you have them, and how great and dangerous they are, and by what remedies they muſt be cured? Can grace be obtained and exerciſed, while you never ſo much as think of it? Can the main buſineſs of our lives be done without any ſerious thoughts; when we think it fit to beſtow ſo many upon the trivial matters of this world? Doth the world and the fleſh deſerve to be remembred all the day, and week and year? and doth not God and thy ſalvation deſerve to be thought on one hour in a day, or one day in a week? Judge of theſe things but as a man of reaſon. If thou look that God, who hath given thee reaſon to guide thy Will, and a Will to command thy Actions, ſhould yet carry thee to Heaven like a Stone, or ſave thee againſt or without thy will, before thou didſt ever once ſoberly think of it, thou maiſt have leiſure in Hell to lament the Folly of ſuch Expectations.

Dir. 6. Direction 6. SUffer not the Devil by company, pleaſure or worldly buſineſs to divert or hinder thee from theſe ſerious conſiderations.

§. 1. The Devil hath but two ways to procure thy damnation. The one is by keeping thee from any ſober Remembrance of ſpiritual and eternal things: and the other is, if thou wilt needs think of them, to deceive thee into falſe erroneous thoughts. To bring to paſs the firſt of theſe (which is the moſt common powerful means) his ordinary way is by diverſion: finding thee ſtill ſomething elſe to do, putting ſome other thoughts into thy mind, and ſome other work into thy hand; ſo that thou canſt never have leiſure for any ſober thoughts of God. When ever the Spirit of God knocks at thy door, thou art ſo taken up with other company, or other buſineſs, that thou canſt not hear, or wilt not open to him. Many a time he hath been ready to teach thee, but thou waſt not at leaſure to hear and learn. Many a time he ſecretly jog'd thy conſcience, and checkt thee in thy ſin, and called thee aſide to conſider ſoberly about thy ſpiritual and everlaſting ſtate, when the noiſe of fooliſh mirth and pleaſures, or the buſtles of encumbring cares and buſineſs, have cauſed thee to ſtop thy ears and put him off, and refuſe the motion. And if the abuſed Spirit of God depart, and leave thee to thy beloved mirth and buſineſs, and to thy ſelf, it is but juſt; And then thou wilt never have a ſerious effectual thought of Heaven perhaps till thou have loſt it; nor a ſober thought of Hell, till thou art in it; (unleſs it be ſome deſpairing, or ſome dull uneffectual thought.)

Even learning and honeſt ſtudies may be uſed as a diverſion from more neceſſary things. Saith Petrarch in vita ſua, ſic vixi ſub ad omne

§. 2. O therefore as thou loveſt thy ſoul, do not love thy pleaſure or buſineſs ſo well as to refuſe to treat with the Spirit of God, who comes to offer thee greater pleaſures, and to engage thee in a more important buſineſs: O lay by all to hear a while, what God and conſcience have to ſay to thee. They have greater buſineſs with thee, than any others that thou converſeſt with. They have better offers and motions to make to thee, than thou ſhalt hear from any of thy old companions. If the Devil can but take thee up a while, with one pleaſure one day, and another buſineſs another day, and keep thee from the work that thou cameſt into the world for, till time be gone, and thou art ſlipt unawares into damnation, then he hath his deſire, and hath the end he aimed at, and hath won the Day, and thou art loſt for ever.

§. 3. It's like thou ſetteſt ſome limits to thy folly, and purpoſeſt to do thus but a little while: But when one Pleaſure withereth, the Devil will provide a freſh one for thee; and when one buſineſs is over, which cauſeth thee to pretend Neceſſity, another, and another, and another will ſucceed, and thou wilt think thou haſt ſuch Neceſſity ſtill, till time is gone, and thou ſee too late how groſly thou waſt deceived. Reſolve therefore that whatever company, or pleaſure, or buſineſs would divert thee, that thou wilt not be befooled out of thy ſalvation, nor taken off from minding the One thing Neceſſary: If Company plead an intereſt in thee, know of them whether they are better company than the Spirit of God and thy Conſcience: If Pleaſure would detain thee, enquire whether it be more pure and durable pleaſures, than thou maiſt have in Heaven by hearkening unto grace: If buſineſs ſtill pretend Neceſſity, enquire whether it be a greater buſineſs than to prepare thy ſoul and thy accounts for judgment, and of greater Neceſſity than thy ſalvation. If not, let it not have the precedency: If thou be wiſe, do that firſt that muſt needs be done: and let that ſtand by, that may beſt be ſpared. What will it profit thee to win all the world, and loſe thy ſoul. At leaſt, if thou durſt ſay that thy Pleaſure and Buſineſs is better than Heaven, yet might they ſometime be forborn, while thou ſeriouſly thinkeſt of thy Salvation.

Direction 7. IF thou wouldſt be converted and ſaved, be not a malicious or peeviſh enemy to thoſe that would convert and ſave thee: Be not angry with them that tell thee of thy Sin or Duty, as if they did thee wrong or hurt. Dir. 7.

§. 1. God worketh by inſtruments: When he will convert a Cornelius, a Peter muſt be ſent for and willingly heard. When he will recall and ſave a ſinner, he hath uſually ſome publick Miniſter or private friend, that ſhall be a meſſenger of that ſearching and convincing truth, which is fit to awaken them, enlighten them and recover them. If God furniſh theſe his Inſtruments with compaſſion to your ſouls, and willingneſs to inſtruct you, and you will take them for your enemies, and peeviſhly quarrel with them, and contradict them, and perhaps reproach them, and do them a miſchief for their good will, what an inhuman barbarous courſe of ingrati-ingratitude is this? Will you be angry with men for endeavouring to save you from the fire of Hell? Do they endeavour to make any gain or advantage by you? or only to help your souls to Heaven? Indeed if their endeavours did serve any ambitious design of their own, to bring the world (as the Pope and his Clergy would do) under their own jurisdiction, you had reason then to suspect their fraud. But the truth is, Christ hath purposely appointed his greatest Church-Officers to be but Ministers, even the Servants of all, to rule and save men as Volunteers, without any coercive Power, by the Management of his powerful Word upon their consciences, and to beseech and intreat the poorest of the flock, as those that are not Lords over God's heritage, nor masters of their Faith, but their servants in Christ, and helpers of their Joy; that so whenever we deliver our message to them, they may see that we exercise not dominion over them, and aim at no worldly honours, or gain, or advantage to our selves; but at the meer conversion and saving of their souls: whereas if he had allowed us to exercise authority as the Kings of the Gentiles, and to be called Gracious Lords, and to encumber our selves with the affairs of this life, our doctrine would have been rejected by the generality of the world, and we should always have come to them on this great disadvantage, that they would have thought that we sought not them, but theirs; and that we preached not for them but for our selves, to make a prize of them: As the Jesuits when they attempt the conversion of the Indians, do still find this their great impediment, the Princes and People suppose them to pretend the Gospel, but as a means to subjugate them and their Dominions to the Pope, because they tell them that they must be all subject to the Pope, if they will be saved. Now when Christ hath appointed a poor self-denying, intreating Ministry, against whom you can have none of these pretences, to stoop to your feet, with the most submissive intreaties, that you would but turn to God and live, you have no excuse for your own barbarous ingratitude, if you will fly in their faces, and use them as your Enemies, and be offended with them for endeavouring to save you. You know they can hold their Tythes and Livings by smoothing, and cold, and general preaching, as well as by more faithful dealing (if not better): You know they can get no worldly advantage by dealing so plainly with you: You know that they hazard by it, their Reputation with such as you; and they cannot be ignorant that it is like to expose them to your ill will and indignation.

1 Pet. 5. 2, 3, 4. 2 Cor. 1. 24. 4. 2 Cor. 5. 19, 20. 2 Cor. 1. 24. 1 Cor. 4. 1. 2 Cor. 5. 9. & 11. 23. Joel 1. 9, 13. 2 Cor. 4. 5. Mark 10. 44. Matth. 20. 27. Luk. 22. 24, 25, 26.

§. 2. And they are men as well as you, and therefore undoubtedly desire the good will and the good word of others, and take no pleasure to be scorned or hated: Undoubtedly they break through much temptations and reluctancy of the flesh, before they can so far deny themselves as to endeavour your salvation on such terms: And seeing it is all for you, methinks you should be their chief encouragers: If others should oppose them, you should be for them, because they are for you. If I go with a Convoy to relieve a besieged Garrison, I shall expect opposition from the Enemy that besiegeth them: But if the besieged themselves shall shoot at us, and use us as Enemies for venturing our lives to relieve them, it's time to be gone, and let them take what they get by it.

§. 3. Perhaps you think that the Preacher (or private admoniser) is too plain with you: But you should consider that self love is like to make you partial in your own cause, and therefore a more unexcapable Judge than they. And you should consider that God hath commanded them to deal plainly, and told them that else the Peoples blood shall be required at their hands, Isa. 58. 1. Ezek. 18. And that God best knoweth what medicine and dyet is fittest for your Disease: And that the case is of such grand importance (whether you shall live in Heaven or Hell for ever?) that it is scarce possible for a Minister to be too plain and serious with you: And that your disease is so obstinate, that gentler means have been too long frustrate, and therefore sharper must be tried: else why were you not converted by gentler dealing until now? If you fall down in a swoon, or be ready to be drowned, you will give leave to the standers by to handle you a little more roughly than at another time, and will not bring your action against them for laying hands on you or ruffling your Silks or Bravery: If your House be on fire, you will give men leave to speak in another manner, than when they modulate their voices into a civil and complementing tone.

Seneca Ep. 87. Scribit, Arato nescio quem Romanum Poetam, non minus Catonem, quam Scipionem: Alter enim cum hostibus nostris, alter cum moribus bellum gessit.

It may be you think that they are censorious in judging you to be unconverted, when you are not, and to be worse and in more danger than you are, and speaking harder of you than you deserve. But it's you that should be most suspicious of your selves, and afraid of so great a matter of being deceived. A Stander-by may see more than a Player: I am sure he that is awake may know more of you, than you of your selves when you are asleep.

§. 4. But suppose it were as you imagine, it is his Love that mistakingly attempteth your good. He intendeth you no harm: It is your salvation that he desireth: It is your damnation that he would prevent: You have cause to love him, and be thankful for his good will, and not to be angry with him, and reproach him for his mistakes. He is none of those that brings you into the Inquisition, and would fine, or imprison, or banish, or burn, or hang, or torment you, in order to convert and save you: The worst he doth, is but to speak those words, which if true, you are deeply concerned to regard: and if mistaken can do you no hurt, unless you are the cause your self. If it be in publick preaching, he speaketh generally by descriptions, and not by nomination; no more of you, than of others in your case: Nor of you at all, if you are not in that case. If he speak privately to you, there is no witness but your self: and therefore it is no matter of disgrace. Never, for shame, pretend that thou art willing to be converted and saved, when thou hatest those that would promote it; and art angry with every one that tells thee of thy case, and couldst find in thy heart to stop their mouths, or do them a mischief.

Direction 8. IF thou art willing indeed to be converted, do thy best to discover that yet thou art unconverted, and in a lost and miserable state. Dir. 8.

§. 1. Who will endeavour to cure a disease which he thinks he hath not? Or to Vomit up the poison which he thinks he never took? or taketh to be no poison? or to come out of the ditch, that thinks he is not in it? Or who will turn back again, that will not believe but he is in the right way? Who will labour to be converted, that thinks he is converted already? Or who will come to Christ as the Physician of his soul, that thinks he is not sick, or is cured already. The common cause that men live and die without the grace of Repentance, Sanctification and Justification which should save them, is because they will not believe but that they have it, when they have it not, and that they are penitent, and and justified and sanctified already. It is not my desire to make any of you think worse of your condition than it is: But if you will not know what it is, you will not be fit for recovering grace, nor use the means for your own recovery; you think it is so sad a conclusion, to find your selves in a state of condemnation, that you are exceeding unwilling to know it or confess it.

Bernard. de grad. humil. grad. 8. describeth mens excusing their sins thus [If it may be, they will say, I did not do it; or else, It was no sin, but lawful; or else, I did it not oft or much: or else, I meant no harm; or else, I was perswaded by another, and drawn to it by temptation.]

§. 2. But I beseech you consider but these two things: First, Either it is true that you are in so miserable a state, or it is not true: If it be not true, the closest tryal will but comfort you, by discovering that you are sanctified already: But if it be true, then do you think it will save you to be ignorant of your danger? Will it cure your disease, to believe that you have it not? Will thinking well of your selves falsly, prove that you are well indeed? Is it the way to grace, to think you have it, when you have it not? Will it bring you to Heaven, to think that you are going thither, when you are in the way to Hell? Nay, do you not know, that it is the principal temptation of the Devil, to keep men from a state of Repentance and Salvation, to deceive them thus, and perswade them that they are in such a state already? Judge soberly of the case: Do you think if all the impenitent unconverted sinners in the World were certain that they are indeed in a graceless state, in which if they died, they were past all hope, that they would not quickly look about them, and better understand the offers of a Saviour, and live in continual solicitude and fear, till they found themselves in a safer state: If you were sure your selves, that you must yet be made new creatures, or be damned, would it not set you on work to seek more diligently after grace than ever you have done? The Devil knoweth this well enough; that he could scarce keep you quiet this night in his snares, but you would be ready to repent and beg for mercy, and resolve on a new life, before to morrow, if you were but sure that you are yet in a state of condemnation. And therefore he doth all he can to hide your sin and danger from your eyes, and to quiet you with the conceit, that though you are sinners, yet you are penitent, pardoned and safe.

§. 3. Well Sirs, there can be no harm in knowing the truth. And therefore will you but try your selves, Whether you are unsanctified or not? You were baptized into the name of the Holy Ghost as your Sanctifier: and if now you neglect or mock at Sanctification, what do you but deride your Baptism, or neglect that which is its fence and end? It doth not so much concern you to know that you live the life of nature, as to know whether sanctification have made you spiritually alive to God.

§. 4. And let me tell you this to your encouragement, that we do not call you to know that you are unconverted, and unpardoned, and miserable, as men that have no remedy, but must sit down in despair, and be tormented with the fore-knowledge of your endless pains before the time. No; it is but that you may speedily and thankfully accept of Christ, the full remedy, and turn to God, and quickly get out of your sin and terrour, and enter into a life of safety and of peace. We desire not your continuance in that life which tendeth to despair and horrour: we would have you out of it, if it were in our power before to morrow: and therefore it is that we would have you understand what danger you are in, that you may go no further, but speedily turn back, and seek for help. And I hope there is no hurt (though there be some present trouble) in such a discovery of your danger as this is.

Well, if you are but willing to know, I shall help you a little to know what you are.

Marks of an unconverted state.

§. 5. 1. IF you are persecutors, or haters, or derisers of men, for being serious and diligent in the service of God, and fearful of sinning, and because they go not with the multitude to do evil, it is a certain sign that you are in a state of death: Yea, if you love not such men, and desire not rather to be such your selves, than to be the greatest of the ungodly. See Gal. 4. 29. Acts 26. 11. 1 Tim. 1. 13. 1 Pet. 4. 2, 3, 4, 5. Psal. 15. 4. 1 John 3. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. John 13. 35. Psalm 84. 10.

§. 6. 2. If you love the world best, and set your affections most on things below, and mind most earthly things; nay, if you seek not first Gods Kingdom, and the righteousness thereof, and if your hearts be not in Heaven, and your affections set on the things that are above, and you prefer not your hopes of life eternal before all the pleasures and prosperity of this world, it is a certain sign that you are but worldly and ungodly men. See this in Matth. 6. 19, 20, 21, 33. Phil. 3. 18, 19, 20. Col. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4. Psal. 73. 25. 1 Joh. 2. 15, 16, 17. James 1. 27. Luke 12. 20, 21. & 16. 25.

§. 7. 3. If your estimation belief and hopes of everlasting life through Christ, be not such as will prevail with you, to deny your selves, and forsake Father and Mother, and the nearest friends, and house, and land, and life, and all that you have for Christ, and for these hopes of a happiness hereafter, you are no true Christians, nor in a state of saving grace. See Luke 14. 26, 33. Mat. 10. 37, 38, 39. Matth. 13. 21, 22.

§. 8. 4. If you have not been converted, regenerated and sanctified by the Spirit of Jesus Christ, making you spiritual, and causing you to mind the things of the Spirit above the things of the flesh. If this spirit be not in you, and you walk not after it, but after the flesh, making provision for the flesh, to satisfy its desires, and preferring the pleasing of the flesh, before the pleasing of God, it is certain that you are in a state of death. See Matth. 18. 3. John 3. 3, 5, 6. Heb. 12. 14. Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. & 13. 13, 14. Luk. 16 19, 25. & 12. 20, 21. Heb. 11. 25, 26. 2 Cor. 4. 16, 17, 18. & 5. 7. Rom. 8. 17, 18.

§. 9. 5. If you have any known sin which you do not hate, and had not rather leave it, than keep it, and do not pray, and strive and watch against it, as far as you know and observe it, but rather excuse it, plead for it, desire it, and are loth to part with it, so that your will is habitually more for it than against it, it is a sign of an impenitent unrenewed heart. 1 John 3. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 24. Gal. 5. 16. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Rom. 7. 22, 24. & 8. 13. Luke 13. 3, 5. Matth. 5. 19, 20. 2 Tim. 2. 19. Psal. 5. 5. Luke 13. 27.

§. 10. 6. If you love not the Word as it is a light discovering your sin and duty, but only as it is a general truth, or as it reproveth others: If you love not the most searching preaching, and would not know how bad you are, and come not to the light, that your deeds may be manifest, it is a sign that you are not children of the light, but of the darkness, John 3. 89, 20, 21.

§. 11. 7. If the Laws of your Creatour and Redeemer be not of greatest power and authority with you, and the will and word of God cannot do more with you, than the word or will of any man, and the threatnings and promises of God be not more prevalent with you, than the threats or promises of any men, it is a sign that you take not God for your God, but in heart are Atheists and ungodly men. Luke 19. 27. Matth. 7. 21, 22, 23, 26. Dan. 3. 16, 17, 18. & 6. 5, 10. Jer. 17. 5, 6. Luke 12. 4. Acts 5. 29. Psal. 14. 1, &c.

§. 12. 8. If you have not in a deliberate Covenant or resolution devoted and given up your selves to God as your Father and Felicity, to JesusChrist as your only Saviour, and your Lord and King, and to the Holy Ghost as your Sanctifier, to be made holy by him, desiring that your heart and life should be perfectly conformed to the will of God, and that you might know him, and love him, and enjoy him more; you are void of Godliness and true Christianity: For this is the very Covenant which you make in Baptism, which you call your Christening: Mat. 28. 19, 20. 2 Cor. 8. 5. 1 Cor. 6. 17. John 1. 10. 11, 12. Gal. 4. 6. Rom. 8. 14, 15.

Atq; haud scio an Pietate adversus Deos sublatâ, fides etiam, & societas humani generis, & una excellentissima virtus, Justitia, tollatur. Cicero de Nat. Deor. pag. 4.

§. 13. I Have now plainly shewed you, and fully proved, from the Word of God, by what infallible signs an ungodly man may know that he is Ungodly if he will: May you not know whether it be thus with you, if you are willing to know? May you not know if you will, whether your desire and design of life, be more for this world, or that to come? and whether Heaven or Earth be preferred and sought first? and whether your fleshly prosperity and pleasure, or your souls be principally cared for and regarded? May you not know if you will, whether you love or loath the serious worshippers of God? and whether you had rather be deliver'd from your sins, or keep them? and whether your wills be more against them, or for them? and whether you love a holy life or not? and whether you had rather be perfect in Holiness and Obedience to God, or be excused from it, and please the flesh? and whether you had rather be such a one as Paul, or as Caesar a persecuted Saint in poverty and contempt, or a persecuting Conquerour or King? May you not know if you will, whether you love a searching Ministry, that telleth you of the worst, and would not deceive you? May you not know, whether you are resolvedly devoted and given up to God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, as your Father and felicity, your Saviour and your Sanctifier, and whether the scope, design and business of your lives is more for God, or for the flesh, for Heaven or Earth; and which it is that bears the sway, and which it is that comes behind, and hath but the leavings of the other, or only so much as it can spare? Certainly these are things so neer you, and so remarkable in your hearts, that you may come to the knowledge of them if you will. But if you will not, who can help it?

§. 14. What a sottish cavil is it then of those ignorant men, that ask us, when we tell them of these things, whether ever we were in Heaven? or ever saw the Book of Life? and how we can tell who shall be saved, and who shall be damned? If it were about a May game this jetting were more seasonable; but to talk thus distractedly about the matters of Salvation and damnation, and to make such a jest of the damning of souls, is a kind of foolery that hath no excuse. What tho' we never were in Heaven? and never saw the Book of Life? Dost thou think I never saw the Scriptures? Why wretched sinner? dost thou not know, that Christ came down from Heaven, to tell us who they be that shall come thither, and who they be that shall be shut out? And did he not know what he said? Is God the Governour of the world, and hath he not a Law by which he governeth them? And can I not tell by the Law, who they be that the Judge will condemn or save? What else is the Law made for, but to be the Rule of Life, and the Rule of Judgment? Read Psal. 1. & 15. & Matth. 5. & 7. & 25. and all the Texts which I even now cited, and see in them whether God hath not told you who they be that shall be saved, and who they be that shall be condemned? Nay, see whether this be not the very business of the Word of God? And do you think that he hath written in vain? But some Men have loved ignorance and ungodliness so long, till the Spirit of grace hath cast them off, and left them to the sottishness of their carnal minds, so that they have eyes and see not, and ears and hear not, and hearts and understand not. But those that are Willing and Diligent to know their sin and duty in order to their recovery, God will not let them search in vain, nor hide the remedy from their Eyes.

Direction 9. When you have found your selves in a state of sin and death, Understand and Consider what a state that is. Dir. 9.

§. 1. It may be you will think it a tolerable condition, and linger in it, as if you were safe, or delay your Repentance, as if it were a matter of no great haste; unless you open your Eyes, and look round about you, and see in how slippery a place you stand. Let me name some instances of the misery of an unregenerate graceless state, and then judge of it as the word of God directs you.

1. As long as you are unconverted you must needs be loathsome and abominable to God. His holy nature is unreconcileable to sin, and would be unreconcileable to sinners, if it were not that he can cleanse and purifie them. Did you know what sin is, and know Gods holiness, you would understand this much better. Your own averseness to God, and your dislike of the holiness of his Laws and servants, might tell you what thoughts he hath of you. He hateth all the workers of iniquity, Psal. 5. 5. Indeed he taketh you for his enemies, and as such he will handle you, if you be not converted. I know many persons that are most deeply guilty, especially men of honour and esteem in the world, would scorn to have this title given to themselves: But verily God is not fearful of offending them, nor so tender of their defiled honour, as they are of their own, or as they expect the Preacher should be. If those be the King's enemies that refuse his Government and set up another, then those are the enemies of God and of the Redeemer, and of the Holy Ghost, that set up the base concupiscence of their flesh, and the honour and prosperity of this world, and the will of man, and refuse the Government of God their Creatour and Redeemer, and refuse the sanctifying teachings and operations of the Holy Ghost. Read Luke 19. 27.

Mira Ciceronis fictio in lib. de Universit. p. 358. Atque ille qui recte & honeste curriculum vitae à natura datum confecerit, ad illud astrum, quo cum aptus fuerit, revertetur. Qui autem immoderate & intemperate vixerit, cum secundus ortus in figuram mutabilem transferet, & sine tum quidem finem vitiorum faciet, gravius etiam jactabitur, & in suis moribus similimas figuras & ferarum transferetur: neque malorum terminum prius aspiciet, quàm illam sequi coperit conversionem, quam habebat in se, &c. cum ad primam & optimam affectionem animi pervenerit.

Some think it strange that any men should be called Haters of God; And I believe you will find it hard to meet with that man that will confess it by himself, till converting Grace or Hell constrain him: And indeed if God himself had not charged men with that sin, and called them by that name, we should scarce have found belief or patience when we had endeavoured to convince the world of it. Intreat but the worst of men to repent of Hating God, and try how they will take it. Yet they may read that name in Scripture, Rom. 1. 30. Psal. 81. 15. Luke 19. 14. Did not the Jews hate Christ think you, when they murdered him? and when they hated all his followers for his sake? Matth. 10. 22. Mark 13. 13. And doth not Christ say, that they shall be hated for his sake, not only of the Jews, but also of all Nations, and all men, Matth. 24. 9. & 10. 22. Even by the world, John 17. 14. & 15. 17, 18. 19, &c. And this was a hating both Christ and his Father, John 15. 23, 24. But you will say, It is not possible that any man can hate God? I answer, How then come the Devils to hate him? Yea, every ungodly man hateth God: Indeed no man hateth him as Good, or as Merciful to them: But they hate him as Holy and Just, as one that will not let them have the pleasure of sin, without damning them: as one engaged in justice to cast them into Hell, if they dye without conversion: and as one that hath made so pure and precise a Law to govern them, and convinceth them of sin, and calls them to that repentance and Holiness which they hate. Why did the world hate Christ himself? He tells you, John 7. 7. The world cannot hate you, but me it hateth, because I testifie against it, that the works thereof are evil. John 3. 19. This is the condemnation that Light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. Nay, it is a wonder of blindness, that this God-hating world and age, should not perceive that they are God-haters, while they hate his servants to the death, and implacably rage against them, and hate his holy ways and Kingdom, and bend all their power and interest in most of the Kingdoms of the world, against his interest and his people upon earth: While the Devil fighteth his battels against Christ thro' the World, by their hands, they will yet confess the Devils malice against God, but deny their own; as if he used their hands without their hearts. Well poor wretched worms! instead of denying your enmity to him, lament it, and know that he also taketh you for his enemies, and will prove too hard for you when you have done your worst. Read Psal. 2. and tremble and submit. This is especially the case of persecutors and open enemies; but in their measure also of all that would not have him to reign over them. And therefore Christ came to Reconcile us unto God, and God to us; and it is only the Sanctified that are Reconciled to him. See Col. 1. 21. Phil. 3. 18. 1 Cor. 15. 25. Rom. 5. 10. The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the Law of God; nor indeed can be, Rom. 8. 7. Mark that Text well.

§. 2. 2. As long as you are unsanctified, you are unjustified and unpardoned: you are under the guilt of all the sins that ever you committed: Every sinful thought, word and deed, of which the least deserveth Hell, is on your score, to be answered for by your self: And what this signifieth, the threatnings of the Law will tell you. See Acts 26. 18. Mark 4. 12. Col. 1. 14. There is no sin forgiven to an impenitent unconverted sinner.

§. 3. 3. And no wonder, when the unconverted have no special interest in Christ. The pardon and life that is given by God, is given in and with the Son: God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son, hath not life, 1 John 5. 10, 11, 12. Till we are members of Christ, we have no part in the pardon and salvation purchased by him: and ungodly sinners are not his members. So that Jesus Christ who is the hope and life of all his own, doth leave thee as he found thee; and that is not the worst: for,

Rom. 8. 9.

§. 4. 4. It will be far worse with the impenitent rejecters of the grace of Christ, than if they had never heard of a Redeemer. For it cannot be, that God having provided so precious a Remedy for sinful miserable souls, should suffer it to be despised and rejected, without encreased punishment. Was it not enough that you had disobeyed your Great Creatour, but you must also set light by a most Gracious Redeemer, that offered you pardon, purchased by his blood, if you would but have come to God by him? Yea, the Saviour that you despised shall be himself your judge, and the Grace and Mercy which you set so light by, shall be the heaviest aggravation of your sin and misery. For how shall you escape if you neglect so great salvation? Heb. 2. 3. And of how much sorer punishment (than the despisers of Moses Law) shall they be thought worthy, who have trodden under foot the Son of God, &c. Heb. 10. 29.

§. 5. 5. The very prayers and sacrifice of the wicked are abominable to God: (except such as contain their returning from their wickedness.) So that terrour ariseth to you from that which you expect should be your help. See Prov. 15. 8. & 21. 27. Isa. 1. 13.

§. 6. 6. Your common Mercies do but increase your sin and misery (till you return to God): Your carnal hearts turn all to sin, Tit. 1. 15. Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure: but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

§. 7. 7. While you are unsanctified, you are impotent and dead to any holy acceptable work: when you should redeem your time, and prepare for eternity, and try your states, or pray, or meditate, or do good to others, you have no heart to any such spiritual works: your minds are byassed against them. Rom. 8. 7. And it is not the excusable impotency of such, as would do good, but cannot: but it is the malicious impotency of the wicked, (the same with that of Devils) that cannot do good, because they will not; and will not because they have blind malicious and ungodly hearts, which makes their sin so much the greater, Tit. 1. 16.

§. 8. 8. While you have unsanctified hearts, you have at all times the seed and disposition unto every sin: And if you commit not the worst, it is because some providence restraining the Tempter hindreth you: No thanks to you that you do not daily commit Idolatry, Blasphemy, Theft, Murder, Adultery, &c. It is in your hearts to do it, when you have but temptation and opportunity: and will be till you are renewed by sanctifying Grace.

§. 9. 9. Till you are sanctified you are heirs of death and Hell, even under the curse, and condemned already in point of Law, tho' judgment have not past the final sentence. See John 3. 18, 19, 36. And nothing is more certain, than that you had been damned and undone for ever, if you had dyed before you had been renewed by the Holy Ghost; and that yet this will be your miserable portion, if you should dye unsanctified. Think then what a life you have lived until now? And think what it is to live any longer in such a case, in which if you dye, you are certain to be damned. Conversion may save you, but unbelief and self flattery will not save you from this endless misery, Heb. 12. 14. Heb. 2. 3. Matth. 25. ult.

Unus gehennæ ignis est in Inferno, sed non uno modo omnes excruciat peccatores. Unicuique enim quantum exigit culpa, tantum illic sentitur & pœna: Nam sicut hic unus sol non omnia corpora æqualiter calefacit, ita illic unus ignis animas pro qualitate criminum dissimiliter exurit.

§. 10. 10. As long as you are unsanctified, you are hasting to this misery. Sin is like to get more rooting; and your hearts to be more hardened, and at enmity with Grace; and God more provoked; and the Spirit more grieved; and you are every day nearer to your final doom, when all these things will be more sensibly considered, and better understood, 2 Tim. 3. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 3.

Hugo Etherianus de Anim. regres. cap. 12. Idem undique in infernum descensus est, saith Anaxarchus (in Laert.) to one that only lamented that he must dye in a strange Country.

Thus I have given you a brief account of the case of unrenewed souls, and but a brief one, because I have done it before more largely (Treat. of Convers.)

Direction 10. When you have found out how sad a condition you are in, consider what there is in sin to make you amends or repair your loss, that should be any hindrance to your Conversion.

§. 1. Certainly you will not continue for nothing (if you know it to be nothing) in ſo dangerous and doleful a caſe as this. And yet you do it for that which is much worſe than nothing, not conſidering what you do. Sit down ſometimes and well bethink you, what recompence the world or ſin will make you, for your God, your ſouls, your hopes, and all, when they are loſt and paſt recovery? Think what it will then avail or comfort you, that once you were honoured, and had a great eſtate; that once you fared of the beſt, and had your delicious cups, and merry hours, and ſumptuous attire, and all ſuch pleaſures Think whether this will abate the horrours of death, or put by the wrath of God, or the ſentence of your condemnation, or whether it will eaſe a tormented ſoul in Hell? If not; think how ſmall, and ſhort, and ſilly a commodity and pleaſure it is, that you buy ſo dear: And what a wiſe man can ſee in it, that ſhould make it ſeem worth the Joys of Heaven, and worth your enduring everlaſting torments. What is it that is ſuppoſed worth all this? Is it the ſnare of preferment? Is it vexing riches? Is it befooling honours? Is it diſtracting cares? Is it ſwiniſh luxury or luſt? Is it beaſtly pleaſures? Or what is it elſe that you will buy at ſo wonderful dear a rate? O lamentable folly of ungodly men! O fooliſh ſinners! Unworthy to ſee God! and worthy to be miſerable! O ſtrangely corrupted heart of man, that can ſell his Maker, his Redeemer, and his ſalvation, at ſo baſe a price.

Dir. 11. Direction 11. AND when you are caſting up your account, as you put all that ſin and the world will do for you in the one end of the ſcales, ſo put into the other the Comforts both of this life, and of that to come, which you muſt part with for your ſins.

§. 1. Search the Scriptures, and conſider how happy the Saints of God are there deſcribed: Think what it is, to have a purified cleanſed ſoul, to be free from the ſlavery of the fleſh and its concupiſcence, to have the ſenſitive appetite in ſubjection unto Reaſon, and Reaſon illuminated and rectified by faith; to be alive to God, and diſpoſed and enabled to love and ſerve him; to have acceſs to him in prayer, with boldneſs and aſſurance to be heard; to have a ſealed pardon of all our ſins, and an intereſt in Chriſt, who will anſwer for them all and juſtifie us, to be the Children of God, and the heirs of Heaven; to have peace of Conſcience, and the joyful hopes of endleſs joys; to have communion with the Father, thro' the Son, by the Spirit, and to have that Spirit dwelling in us, and working to our further holineſs and joy; to have communion with the Saints; and the help and comfort of all God's Ordinances, and to be under his many precious promiſes, and under his protection and proviſion in his family, and to caſt all our care upon him; to delight our ſelves daily in the remembrance and renewed Experiences of his Love, and in our (too little) knowledge of him, and love to him, and in the knowledge of his Son, and of the Myſteries of the Goſpel; to have all things work together for our good, and to be able with joy to welcome Death, and to live as in Heaven in the foreſight of our everlaſting happineſs. I would have orderly here given you a particular account of the priviledges of renewed ſouls, but that I have done ſo much in that already in my Treatiſe of Converſion, and Saints Reſt. This taſte may help you to ſee what you loſe, while you abide in an unconverted ſtate.

Direction 12. WHen you have thus conſidered of the condition you are in, conſider alſo whether it be a condition to be reſted in one day. Dir. 12

§. 1. If you dye unconverted, you are paſt all hope; for out of Hell there is no redemption: And certain you are to dye ere long; and uncertain whether it will be this night, Luke 12. 20. You never lay down with aſſurance that you ſhould riſe again: You never went out of doors, with aſſurance to return: You never heard a Sermon with aſſurance that you ſhould hear another: You never drew one breath with aſſurance that you ſhould draw another: A thouſand accidents and diſeaſes are ready to ſtop your breath, and end your time, when God will have it ſo: And if you dye this night in an unregenerate ſtate, there is no more time, or help, or hope. And is this a caſe then for a wiſe man to continue in a day, that can do any thing towards his own recovery? Should you delay another day or hour, before you fall down at the feet of Chriſt, and cry for mercy, and return to God, and reſolve upon a better courſe? May I not well ſay to thee, as the Angels unto Lot, Gen. 19. 15, 17, 22. Ariſe, leſt thou be conſumed——Eſcape for thy life: Look not behind thee——

Alienus eſt à fide qui ad agendam pœnitentiam tempus expectat ſenectutis. Jo Benedictus Pariſ in Annot. in Luc. 12. Multos vitam differentes mors incerta prævenit. Id. ib ex Senec.

Direction 13. WHen thou art Reſolved, paſt thy wavering and delayes, give up thy ſelf entirely and unreſervedly to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, as thy Happineſs, thy Saviour and thy Sanctifier, in an hearty Conſent to the Covenant of Grace. Dir. 13.

§. 1. This is thy Chriſtianity; thy eſpouſals with Chriſt: It is Sacramentally done in Baptiſm: But till it be perſonally owned and heartily renewed by men at age, they have no reaſon to be numbered with adult believers, nor to dream of a part in the bleſſings of the Covenant. It is pity it is not made a more ſerious ſolemn work, for men thus to renew their Covenant with God. (For which I have written in a Treatiſe of Confirmation, but hitherto in vain.) However do it ſeriouſly thy ſelf: It is the greateſt and weightieſt action of thy life.

§. 2. To this end peruſe well the Covenant of Grace which is offered thee in the Goſpel: Underſtand it well: In it God offereth, notwithſtanding thy ſins, to be thy Reconciled God and Father in Chriſt, and to accept thee as a Son, and an heir of Heaven:

The Son offereth to be thy Saviour, to juſtifie thee by his blood and grace, and teach thee, and govern thee as thy Head, in order to thy everlaſting happineſs. The Holy Spirit offereth to be thy Sanctifier, Comforter and Guide, to overcome all the enmity of the Devil, the World and the Fleſh, in order to the full accompliſhment of thy Salvation; nothing is expected of thee, in order to thy Title to the benefits of this Covenant, but deliberately, unfeignedly, entirely to Conſent to it, and to continue that conſent, and perform what thou conſenteſt to perform, and that by the help of the grace which will be given thee. See therefore that thou well deliberate of the matter (but without delays): And count what thou ſhalt gain or loſe by it: And if thou find that thou art like to be a loſer in the end, and knoweſt of any better way, even take it, and boaſt of it, when thou haſt tryed the end: But if thou art paſt doubt, that there is no way but this, diſpatch it reſolutely and ſeriouſly.

§. 3. And take heed of one thing; leſt thou ſay, Why, this is no more than every body knoweth, and than I have done a hundred times, to give up my ſelf self in Covenant to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Dost thou know it, and yet hast thou not done it? Or hast thou done it with thy lips, and not unfeignedly with thy heart? Lament it as one of thy greatest sins, that thou hast thus provokingly dallied with God: and admire his mercy, that he will yet vouchsafe to enter into Covenant with one, that hath hypocritically prophaned his Covenant. If thou hadst ever seriously thus Covenanted and given up thy self to God, thou wouldst not have neglected him by an ungodly life, nor lived after to the Devil, the world and the flesh, which were renounced. I tell you the making of this Christian Vow and Covenant with God in Christ, is the Act of greatest consequence of any in all thy life, and to be done with the greatest judgment, and reverence, and sincerity, and foresight, and firm resolution, of any thing that ever thou dost: And if it were done sincerely by all that do it ignorantly, for fashion, only with the lips, then all professed Christians would be saved: whereas now the Abusers of that holy Name and Covenant will have the deepest place in Hell. Write it out on thy Heart, and put thy heart and hand to it resolvedly, and stand to thy Consent, and all is thine own: Conversion is wrought when this is done.

Dir. 14. Direction 14. IN present performance of thy Covenant with God, away with thy former sinful life; and see that thou sin wilfully no more; but as far as thou art able, avoid the temptations which have deceived thee.

§. 1. God will never be reconciled to thy sins: If he be reconciled to thy person, it is as thou art justified by Christ, and sanctified by the Spirit: He entertaineth thee, as one that turneth with repentance from sin to him: If thou wilfully or negligently go on in thy former course of sin, thou shewest that thou wast not sincerely resolved in thy Covenant with God.

Ne illi falsi sunt, qui diversissimas res pariter expetant, voluptatem & præmia virtutis. Sallust. Tenebit te Diabolus sub specie libertatis addictum, ut sit tibi liberum peccare, non vivere: Captivum te tenet author scelerum, compedes tibi libidinis imposuit, & undique te sepsit armatâ custodiâ; Legem tibi dedit ut licitum putes omne quod non licet; & vivum te in eternæ mortis foveam demersit. Hugo Etherianus de Animar. regressu, cap. 9.

§. 2. I know infirmities and imperfections will not be so easily cast off, but will cleave to thee in thy best obedience, till the day of thy perfection come. But I speak of gross and wilful sin: such as thou canst forbear, if thou be but sincerely (though imperfectly) willing.

Hast thou been a prophane Swearer or Curser, or used to take Gods name in vain, or used to backbiting, slandering, lying, or to ribald filthy talk: It is in thy power to forbear these sins, if thou be but willing. Say not, I fall into them through custome before I am aware: For that is a sign that thou art not sincerely willing to forsake them. If thou wert truly penitent, and thy will sincerely opposite to these sins, thou wouldst be more tender and fearful to offend, and resolved against them, and make a greater matter of them, and abhor them, and not commit them, and say I did it before I was aware: No more than thou wouldst spit in the face of thy Father, or curse thy Mother, or slander thy dearest friend, or speak Treason against the King, and say, I did it through custome before I was aware. Sin will not be so played with by those that have been soundly humbled for it, and resolved against it.

§. 3. Hast thou been a Drunkard or Tipler, spending thy precious hours in an Ale-house, prating over a Pot, in the company of foolish tempting sinners: It is in thy power if thou be truly willing to do so no more. If thou love and choose such company, and places, and actions, and discourse, how canst thou say thou art willing to forsake them, or that thy heart is changed? If thou do not love and choose them, how canst thou commit them, when none compells thee? No one carrieth thee to the place: No one forceth thee to sin: If thou do it, it is because thou wilt do it, and lovest it. If thou be in good earnest with God, and wilt be saved indeed, and art not content to part with Heaven for thy cups and company, away with them presently without delay.

§. 4. Hast thou lived in wantonness, fornication, uncleanness, gluttony, gaming, pastimes, sensuality, to the pleasing of thy flesh, while thou hast displeased God? O bless the Patience and Mercy of the Lord, that thou wast not cut off all this while, and damned for thy sin before thou didst repent! And, as thou lovest thy soul, delay no longer: But make a stand, and go no further, not one step further in the way which thou knowest leads to hell. If thou knowest that this is the way to thy damnation, and yet wilt go on, what pity dost thou deserve from God or man?

§. 5. If thou have been a Covetous worldling, or an Ambitious seeker of honour or preferment in the world, so that thy gain, or rising, or reputation, hath been the game which thou hast followed, and hath taken thee up instead of God and life eternal; away now with these known deceits, and hunt not after Vanity and Vexation: Thou knowest beforehand what it will prove when thou hast overtaken it, and hast enjoyed all that it can yield thee; and how useless it will be as to thy comfort or happiness at last.

§. 6. Surely if men were willing, they are able to forbear such sins, and to make a stand, and look before them, to prevent their misery: Therefore God thus pleadeth with them, Isa. 1. 16, 17, 18. Wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil, learn to do well, &c. Isa. 55. 2, 3. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread, and your labour for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight it self in fatness: Incline your ear, and come unto me, hear and your soul shall live, and I will make an everlasting Covenant with you. Ver. 6, 7. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found: Call ye upon him while he is near: Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God for he will abundantly pardon: Christ supposeth that the foresight of judgement may restrain men from sin, when he saith, Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee, John 5. 14. & 8. 11. Can the presence of men restrain a Fornicator; and the presence of the Judge restrain a Thief, yea, or the foresight of the Assizes? And shall not the presence of God, with the foresight of judgement and damnation restrain thee? Remember that impenitent sin and damnation are conjoyned. If you will cause one, God will cause the other. Choose one, and you shall not choose whether you will have the other. If you will have the Serpent, you shall have the sting.

Direction 15. IF thou have sincerely given up thy self to God, and consented to his Covenant, shew it by turning the face of thy endeavours and conversation quite another way, and by seeking Heaven more fervently and diligently, than ever thou soughtest the world, or fleshly pleasures. Dir. 15.

§. 1. Holiness consisteth not in a meer forbearance of a sensual life, but principally in living unto God. The principal or heart of Holiness is within, and consisteth in the Love of God, and of his Word and Ways, and Servants, and Honour, and Interest in

in the world, and in the souls delight in God, and the Word and Ways of God, and in its inclination towards him, and desire after him, and care to please him, and lothness to offend him. The expression of it in our lives, consisteth in the constant diligent exercise of this internal life, according to the directions of the Word of God. If thou be a believer and hast subjected thy self to God, as thy absolute Soveraign King and Judge, it will then be thy work to obey and please him, as a Child his Father, or a Servant his Master, Mal. 1. 6. Do you think that God will have Servants, and have nothing for them to do? Will one of you commend or reward your servant for doing no thing, and take it at the years end for a satisfactory answer or account, if he say, I have done no harm? God calleth you not only to do no harm, but to love and serve him with all your heart, and soul, and might. If you have a better master than you had before, you should do more work than you did before. Will you not serve God more zealously than you served the Devil? will you not labour harder to save your souls, than you did to damn them? Will you not be more zealous in good, than you were in evil? What fruit had you then in those things whereof you are now ashamed? For the end of those things is death. Rom. 6. 21, 22. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, you have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. If you are true Believers, you have now laid up your hopes in Heaven, and therefore will set your selves to seek it, as worldlings set themselves to seek the world. And a sluggish wish, with heartless, lazy, dull endeavours is no fit seeking of eternal joyes. A creeping pace beseemeth not a man that is in the way to Heaven; especially who went faster in the way to Hell. This is not running as for our lives. You may well be diligent and make hast, where you have so great encouragement and help, and where you may expect so good an end, and where you are sure you shall never in life or death, have cause to repent of any of your just endeavours, and where every step of your way is pure, and clean, and delectable, and paved with mercies, and fortified and secured by Divine protection, and where Christ is your Conductor, and so many have sped so well before you, and the wisest and best in the world are your companions. Live then as men that have changed their Master, their end, their hopes, their way and work. Religion layeth not men to sleep, though it be the only way to Rest. It awakeneth the sleepy soul, to higher thoughts, and hopes, and labours, than ever it was well acquainted with before. He that is in Christ, is a new creature; old things are past away, behold all things are become new, 2 Cor. 5. 17. You never sought that which would pay for all your cost and diligence till now: You never were in a way that you might make hast in, without repenting of your haste, till now. How glad should you be, that Mercy hath brought you into the right way, after the wandrings of such a sinful life? And your gladness and thankfulness should now be shewed, by your cheerful diligence and zeal. As Christ did not raise up Lazarus from the dead, to do nothing, or live to little purpose (though the Scripture giveth us not the history of his life;) So did he not raise you from the death of sin, to live idlely, or to be unprofitable in the world. He that giveth you his Spirit, to be a principle of heavenly life within you, expecteth that you stir up the gift that he hath given you, and live according to that heavenly principle.

Such a faith, that the Jews are to be addicted to their Idolatry, and unwarned is it that he knoweth not what words are sufficient! By dwelling love totally their minds are transformed into it, no Whoremonger having so mad a love to his Whore, as they to their Idols: so that neither in their Labours, or their business, neither in publick or in private, will they do any thing, till they have first used their Superstition to their Idol's: They will neither rejoice at Weddings, nor mourn at Funerals, neither make a Feast, or partake of it, nor so much as move a Foot out of Doors, or a Hand to any Work, without this Heathenish Sacriledge: And all this they do with the greatest secresie, lest the Christians should know it. Lib. 5 cap. 8. p. 401. See here how nature teacheth all men that there is a Deity to be worshipped with all possible love and industry! And shall the Worshippers of the true God then think it unnecessary precisenes, to be as diligent and hearty in his service?

Direction 16. ENgage thy self in the chearful constant use, of the means and helps appointed by God, for thy confirmation and salvation. Dir. 16.

§. 1. He can never expect to attain the end, that will not be perswaded to use the means. Of your selves you can do nothing. God giveth his help by the means which he hath appointed and fitted to your help. Of the use of these, I shall treat more fully afterwards: I am now only to name them to thee, that thou maist know what it is that thou hast to do.

1. That you must hear, or read the Word of God, and other good Books which expound it and apply it, I shewed you before. The new born Christian doth encline to this, as the new born child doth to the breast, 1 Pet. 2. 1, 2. Laying aside all malice, and guile, and hypocricies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new born babes that desire the sincere milk of the word that ye may grow thereby. Psal. 1. 2, 3. The blessed mans delight is in the Law of the Lord, and therein doth he meditate day and night.

How Penitents of old, did rise even from a particular sin, judge by these words of Pacianus Paranes. ad Pœnit. Bibl. Pat. To. 3. p. 74. [You must not only do that which may be seen of the Priest, and praised by the Bishop——to weep before the Church, to lament a loss or sinful life in a sordid garment, to fast, pray, to roll on the earth, if any invite you to the Bath (or such pleasures) to refuse to go: If any bid you to a Feast, to say, These things are for the happy; I have sinned against God, and am in danger to perish for ever? What should I do at Banquets, who have wronged the Lord? Besides these, you must take the poor by the Hand, you must beseech the Widow, lye at the Feet of the Presbyters, beg of the Church to forgive you, and pray for you: you must try all means rather than perish.

§. 2. 2. Another means is the publick worshipping of God in communion with his Church and people: Besides the benefit of the word there preached, the prayers of the Church are effectual for the members: and it it raiseth the soul to holy joys, to join with well ordered Assemblies of the Saints, in the Praises of the Almighty. The Assemblies of holy worshipppers of God, are the places of his delight, and must be the places of our delight. They are most like to the Celestial Society, that sound forth the Praises of the glorious Jehovah, with purest minds and cheerful voice. In his Temple doth every one speak of his Glory, Psal. 29. 9. In such a Chore, what Soul will not be wrapt up with delight, and desire to joyn in the consort and harmony? In such a flame of united desires and praises, what soul so cold and dull that will not be enflamed, and with more than ordinary facility and alacrity fly up to God?

§. 3. 3. Another means is private prayer unto God. When God would tell Ananias that Paul was converted, he saith of him, Behold he prayeth, Acts 9. 11. Prayer is the breath of the new creature. The Spirit of Adoption given to every child of God, is a Spirit of prayer, and teacheth them to cry Abba Father, and helpeth their infirmities, when they know not what to pray as they ought, and when words are wanting, it (as it were) intercedeth for them with groans, which they cannot express in words, Gal. 4. 6. Rom. 8. 15, 26, 27. And God knoweth the meaning of the Spirit in those groans. The first workings of grace are in Desires after grace, provoking the Soul to fervent Prayer, by which more Grace is speedily obtained. Ask then, and ye shall have, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened to you, Luke 11. 9.

§. 4. 4. Another means to be used is Confession of sin, not only to God (for so every wicked man may do, because he knoweth that God is already acquainted with it all, and this is no addition to his shame:

He

He so little regardeth the eye of God, that he is more ashamed when it is known to men) But in three Cases Confession must be made also to Man. 1. In case you have wronged man, and are thus bound to make him satisfaction: As if you have robbed him, defrauded him, slandered him or born false witness against him. 2. In case you are Children or Servants, that are under the government of Parents or Masters, and are called by them to give an account of your actions: You are bound then to give a true account. In case you have need of the Counsel or Prayers of others for the setling of your consciences in peace: In this case you must so far open your case to them, as is necessary to their effectual help for your recovery. For if they know not the disease, they will be unfit to apply the remedy. In these cases it is true, that He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but he that confesseth and forsaketh them, shall have mercy, Prov. 28. 13.

§. 5. 5. Another Means to be used, is the familiar company, and holy converse with humble, sincere, experienced Christians: The Spirit that is in them, and breatheth, and acteth by them, will kindle the like holy flames in you: Away with the company of idle, prating, sensual men, that can talk of nothing but their worldly wealth, or business, or their reputations, or their appetites and lusts; Associate your selves with them that go the way to Heaven, if you resolve your selves to go it. O what a deal of difference will you find between these two sorts of companions? The one sort, if you have any thoughts of Repentance, would stifle them, and laugh you out of the use of your Reason, into their own distracted mirth and dotage: And if you have any serious thoughts of your salvation, or any inclinations to repent and be wise, they will do much to divert them, and hold you in the power and snares of Satan, till it be too late: If you have any zeal or heavenly mindedness, they will do much to quench it, and fetch down your minds to earth again. The other sort will speak of things of so great weight and moment, and that with seriousness and reverence, as will tend to raise and quicken your souls; and possess you with a taste of the heavenly things which they discourse of; They will encourage you by their own Experiences, and direct you by that truth which hath directed them, and zealously communicate what they have received: they will pray for you, and teach you how to pray: They will give the example of holy, humble, obedient lives; and lovingly admonish you of your duties, and reprove your sins. In a word, as the carnal mind doth savour the things of the flesh, and is enmity against God, the company of such will be a powerful means to infect you with their plague, and make you such, if you were escaped from them; much more to keep you such, if you are not escaped: And as they that are spiritual, do mind the things of the Spirit, so their converse tendeth to make you spiritually minded, as they are, Rom. 8. 7, 8. Though there are some useful qualities and gifts in some that are ungodly, and some lamentable faults in many that are spiritual, yet experience will shew you so great a difference between them in the main, in heart and life, as will make you the more easily believe the difference that will be between them in the life to come.

§. 6. 6. Another means is serious meditation on the life to come, and the way thereto: Which tho' all cannot manage so methodically as some, yet all should in some Measure and Season be acquainted with it.

Of how great concernment faithful Pastors are for §. 7. 7. The last Means is, to choose some prudent faithful Guide and Counsellor for your soul, to open those cases to, which are not fit for all to know; and to resolve and advise you in cases that are too hard for you: Not to lead you blindfold after the interest of any seduced or ambitious men, nor to engage you to his singular conceits, against the Scripture or the Church of God; but to be to your soul, as a Physitian to your Body, or a Lawyer to your estates, to help you where they are wiser than you, and where you need their helps.

the Conversion of the ungodly, see a Jesuite Acosta l. 4. c. 1. & 2, 3, 4. Infinitum est cætera persequi, quæ contra hos fatuos principes Tanaos, contra Pastores stultos, vel potius idola pastorum, contra seipsos potius pascentes, contra væsanos Prophetas, contra Sacerdotes contemptores, atque arrogantes, contra flercus solennitatum, contra popularis plausus captatores, contra inexplebiles pecuniæ gurgites, cæteraque pestes, Prophetjcus sermo declamat. Vix alias sancti Patres plenioribus velis feruntur in Pelagus, quam cum de sacerdotali contumelia oratio est. Acosta ib. p. 353. Non est iste sacerdos, non est sed infestus, atrox, dolosus, illusor sui, & lupus in dominicum gregem ovina pella armatus. Ibid.

Resolve now that instead of your idle company and pastime, your excessive cares and sinful pleasures, you will wait on God in the seasonable use of these his own appointed means; and you will find, that he hath appointed them not in vain, and that you shall not lose your labour.

Direction 17. THat in all this you may be sincere, and not deceived by an hypocritical change, be sure that God be all your Confidence, and all your hopes be placed in Heaven, and that there be no secret reserve in your hearts, for the world and flesh; and that you divide not your hearts between God and the things below, nor take up with the Religion of an Hypocrite, which giveth God what the flesh can spare. Dir. 17.

§. 1. When the Devil cannot keep you from a change and reformation, he will seek to deceive you with a superficial change and half reformation, which goeth not to the root, nor doth not recover the heart to God, nor deliver it intirely to him. If he can by a partial deceitful change, perswade you that you are truly renewed and sanctified, and fix you there that you go no further, you are as surely his, as if you had continued in your grosser sins. And of all other this is the most common and dangerous cheat of souls, when they think to halve it between God and the World, and to secure their fleshly interest of pleasure and prosperity, and their salvation too: and so they will needs serve God and Mammon.

The full description of a false Conversion, and of an Hypocrite. Whereas there are two great and grievous sorts of trouble raised, one in the Churches at the tryal of members, and another in mens Consciences in trying their states, about this Question,

§. 2. This is the true Character of a self-deceiving hypocrite. He is neither so fully perswaded of the certain truth of the Scripture and the life to come, nor yet so mortified to the flesh and the world, as to take the joys of Heaven for his whole portion, and to subject all his worldly prosperity and hopes thereunto, and to part with all things in this world, when it is necessary to the securing of his salvation: and therefore he will not lose his hold of present things, nor forsake his worldly interest for Christ, as long as he can keep it Nor will he be any further religious, than may stand with his bodily welfare; resolving never to be undone by his godliness, but in the first place to save himself, and his Prosperity in the World, as long as he can: And therefore he is truly a carnal worldly minded man; being denominated from what is predominant in him: And yet because he knoweth that he must dye, and for ought he knows, he may then find against his will, that there is another life which he must enter upon, lest the Gospel should prove true, he must have some Religion: And therefore he will take up as much as will stand with his temporal welfare, hoping that he may have both that and Heaven hereafter: and he will be as Religious as the predominant interest of the flesh will give him leave. He is resolved rather to venture his soul, than to be here undone: and that's his first principle. But he is resolved to be as godly as will stand with a worldly fleshly life: that's his second principle. And he will hope for Heaven as the end of such a way as this: that's his third. Therefore he will place most of his Religion in those things which are most consistent with worldliness and carnality, and will not cost his flesh too dear; as in being of this or that Opinion, Church, or Party, (whether Papist, Protestant, or some smaller party) in adhering to that party, and being zealous for them, in acquiring and using such parts and gifts, as may make him highly esteemed by others; and in doing such good works as cost him not too dear, and in forbearing such sins as would procure his disgrace and shame, and cost his flesh dearer to commit them than forbear them; and such other as his flesh can spare: This is his fourth Principle: And he is resolved, when tryal calleth him to part with God and his Conscience, or with the world, that he will rather let go God and Conscience, and venter upon the pains hereafter, which he thinks to be uncertain, than to run upon a certain calamity or undoing here: At least, he hath no Resolution to the contrary, which will carry him out in a day of Tryal. This is his fifth Principle: And his sixth Principle is, That yet he will not torment himself, or blot his Name, with confessing himself a temporizing worldling, resolved to turn any away to save himself. And therefore he will be sure to believe nothing to be Truth and Duty that is dangerous; but will furnish himself with Arguments to prove that it is not the will of God; and that sin is no sin: Yea perhaps conscience and duty shall be pleaded for his sin: It shall be out of tenderness, and piety, and charity to others, that he will sin: and will charge them to be the sinners that comply not and do not wickedly as well as he. He will be one that shall first make a Controversie of every sin which his flesh calls necessary, and of every Duty which his Flesh counts intolerably dear; And then when it is a Controversie, and many reputed Wise, and some reputed Good are on his side, he thinks he is on equal terms with the most honest and sincere: He hath got a Burrow for his Conscience and his Credit: He will not believe himself to be an Hypocrite, and no one else must think him one, lest they be uncharitable: For then the censure must fall on the whole party, and then it is sufficient to defend his Reputation of Piety to say, Tho' we differ in Opinion, we must not differ in Affection, and must not condemn each other for such Differences (A very great Truth where rightly applied.) But what is it O Hypocrite, that makes thee differ in cases where thy flesh is interested rather than in any other? And why wast thou never of that mind till now, that thy worldly interest requireth it? And how cometh it to pass, that thou art always on the self saving opinion? And whence is it that thou consultest with those only that are of the opinion which thou desirest should be true, and either not at all, or partially and slightly with those that are against it? Wast thou ever conscious to thy self that thou hast accounted what it might cost thee to be saved, and reckoned on the worst, and resolved, in the strength of grace, to go thro' all? Didst thou ever meddle with much of the self-denying part of Religion, or any Duties that would cost thee dear? May not thy Conscience tell thee, that thou never didst believe that thou shouldst suffer much for thy Religion, that is, thou hadst a secret purpose to avoid it?

How to know true Conversion or Sanctification: I must tell them in both these Troubles plainly, that Christianity is but one thing, the same in all Ages, which is their Consent to the Baptismal Covenant: And there is no such way to resolve this question, as to write or set before you the Covenant of Baptism in its proper sense, and then ask your Hearts, whether you unfeignedly and resolvedly consent. He that consenteth truly, is Converted and Justified; and he that professeth Consent, is to be received into the Church by Baptism, (if his Parents Consent did not bring him in before, which he is to do nevertheless himself at age.)

§. 3. O Sirs, take warning from the Mouth of Christ, who hath so oft and plainly warned you of this sin and danger? and told you how necessary self-denyal and a suffering disposition is to all that are his Disciples; and that the worldly fleshly principle predominant in the Hypocrite, is manifest by his self-saving course: He must take up his Cross, and follow him in a conformity to his sufferings that will indeed be his Disciple. We must suffer with him if we will reign with him, Rom. 8. 17, 18. Mat. 13. 20, 21, 22. He that received the seed in stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it, yet hath he not the root in himself, but dureth for a while; for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended. He also that received seed among the Thorns, is he that heareth the word, and the care of this World, and the deceitfulness of Riches choak the word, and he becometh unfruitful. If thou have not taken Heaven for thy part, and art not resolved to let go all that would keep thee from it, I must say to thy Conscience, as Christ to one of thy Predecessors, Luke 18. 22. Yet lackest thou one thing, and such a one, as thou wilt find of flat necessity to thy salvation. And it's likely some trying time even in this Life, will detect thine Hypocrisie, and make thee, Go away sorrowful, for thy riches sake: as he ver. 23. If godliness with contentment seem not sufficient gain to thee, thou wilt make thy Gain go instead of Godliness, that is, thy Gain shall be next thy heart, and have the precedency which Godliness should have, and thy gain shall chuse thee thy Religion, and over-rule thy Conscience, and sway thy life.

O Sirs, take warning by the Apostates, and temporizing Hypocrites, that have lookt behind them, and with Demas, for the World forsaken their Duty, and are set up by Justice as Pillars of Salt, for your warning and remembrance. And as ever you would make sure work in turning to God, and escape the too late Repentance of the hypocrite, see that you go to the root, and resign the World to the Will of God, and reckon what it may cost you to be Followers of Christ, and look not after any Portion, but the Favour of God Life Eternal, and see that there be no secret Reserve in your Hearts for your Worldly Interest or Prosperity, and think not of halfing it between God and the World, nor making your Religion complyant with the Desires and Interest of the Flesh. Take God as enough for you, yea, as All, or else you take him not as your God.

Direction 18. IF you would prove true Converts, come over to God as your Father and Felicity, with Desire and Delight, and close with Christ, as your only Saviour with Thankfulness and Joy, and set upon the Way of Godliness with Pleasure and Alacrity, as your exceeding Priviledge, and the only way of Profit, Honour, and Content: and do it not as against your Wills, as those that had rather do otherwise if they durst, and account the Service of God an unsuitable and unpleasant thing. Dir. 18.

§. 1. You are never truly changed, till your Hearts be changed: And the Heart is not changed till the Will or Love be changed. Fear is not the man: but usually is mixt with unwillingness and dislike, and so is contrary to that which is indeed the Man. Tho' Fear may do much for you, it will not do enough: It is oft more sensible than Love even in the best, as being more passionate and violent: but yet there is no more Acceptableness in all, than there is Will or Love. God sent not Souldiers, or Inquisitors, or Persecutors, to convert the World by working upon their Fear, and driving them upon that which they take to be a mischief to them: But he sent poor Preachers that had no matter of worldly fears or hopes to move their auditors with; but had authority from Christ to offer them eternal life; and who were to convert the World by proposing to them the best and most desirable condition, and shewing them where is the true felicity, and proving the certainty and excellency of it to them, and working upon their Love, Desire, and Hope: God will not be your God against your wills, while you esteem him as the Devil, that is only terrible and hurtful to you, and take his service for a slavery, and had rather be from him, and serve the world and the flesh, if it were not for fear of being damned. He will be feared as Great, and Holy and Just: but he will also be loved as Good, and Holy, and Merciful, and every way suited to be the felicity and Rest of souls. If you take not God to be better than the Creature, (and better to you) and Heaven to be better for you than earth, and Holiness than Sin, you are not converted: But if you do, then shew it by your willingness, alacrity, and delight. Serve him with gladness and chearfulness of heart, as one that hath found the way of Life, and never had cause of gladness until now. If you see your servant do all his work with groans, and tears, and lamentations, you will not think he is well pleased with his Master, and his Work. Come to God willingly with your hearts, or you come not to him indeed at all. You must either make him and his service your delight, or at least your Desire; as apprehending him most fit to be your delight, so far as you enjoy him.

Passibilis timor est irrationabilis, & ad irrationabilia constitutus, sed cum præcipit qui cum disciplina & recta ratione consistit, cujus proprium est reverentia. Qui enim propter Christum & doctrinam ejus Deum timet, cum reverentia ei subjectus est; cum ille qui per verbera aliaque tormenta timet Deum, passibilem timorem habere videtur. Didymus Alex. in Pet. 1.

Dir. 19. Direction 19. REmember still that Conversion, is the turning from your carnal selves to God; and therefore that it engageth you in a perpetual opposition to your own corrupt Conceits and Wills, to mortify and annihilate them, and captivate them wholly to the holy Word and Will of God.

§ 1. Think not that your Conversion dispatcheth all that is to be done in order to your salvation. No, it is but the beginning of your work (that is, of your delight and happiness:) You are but engaged by it, to that which must be performed throughout all your lives: It entreth you into the right way; not to sit down there, but to go on till you come to the desired end. It entereth you into Christs Army, that afterwards you may there win the Crown of life: And the great Enemy that you engage against, is your selves. There will still be a Law in your members, rebelling against the Law that the Holy Ghost hath put into your minds: Your Own Conceits and your Own Wills are the great Rebels against Christ, and enemies of your sanctification. Therefore it must be your resolved daily work to mortify them, and bring them clean over to the Mind and Will of God which is their Rule and End. If you feel any conceits arising in you that are contrary to the Scripture, and quarrel with the Word of God, suppress them as rebellious, and give them not liberty to cavil with your Maker, and malepertly dispute with your Governour and Judge; but silence it, and force it reverently to submit: If you feel any Will in you contrary to your Creator's Will, and that there is something which you would have or do, which God is against, and hath forbid you, remember now how great a part of your work it is, to fly for help to the Spirit of Grace, and to destroy all such rebellious desires. Think it not enough, that you can bear the denyal of those desires; but presently destroy their desires themselves. For if you let alone the desires, they may at last lay hold upon their prey, before you are aware: Or if you should be guilty of nothing but the Desire themselves, it is no small iniquity; being the corruption of the Heart and the Rebellion and Adultery of the principal faculty, which should be kept loyal and chaste to God. The crookedness of thy Will to the Will of God, is the summ of all the impiety and evil of the soul: And the subjection and conformity of thy Will to his, is the Heart of the New Creature, and of thy Rectitude and Sanctification. Favour not therefore any self-conceitedness or self-willedness, nor any rebelliousness against the Mind and Will of God, any more than you would bear with the dis-jointing of your bones, which will be little for your ease or use, till they are reduced to their proper place.

Direction 20. LAstly, Be sure that you renounce all conceit of self-sufficiency or merit in any thing you do, and wholly rely on the Lord Jesus Christ, as your Head, and Life, and Saviour, and Intercessor with the Father. Dir. 20.

§ 1. Remember that without him you can do nothing, John 15. 5. Nor can any thing you do be acceptable to God, any other way than in him, the beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased. As your persons had never been accepted but in him, no more can any of your services: All your repentings, if you had wept out your eyes for sin, would not have satisfied the Justice of God, nor procured you pardon and justification without the satisfaction and merit of Christ. If he had not first taken away the sins of the world, and reconciled them so far to God, as to procure and tender them the pardon and salvation contained in his Covenant, there had been no place for your Repentance, nor faith, nor prayers, nor endeavours, as to any hope of your salvation. Your Believing would not have saved you, nor indeed had any justifying object, if he had not purchased you the promise and gift of pardon and salvation to all Believers.

§ 2. Objection. But perhaps you'l say, That if we had Loved God, without a Saviour, we should have been saved: for God cannot hate and damn those that Love him: To which I answer, You could not have Loved God as God, without a Saviour: To have Loved him as the giver of your worldly prosperity, with a Love subordinate to the Love of sin and your carnal selves, and to Love him as one that you imagine so unholy and unjust, as to give you leave to sin against him, and prefer every Vanity before him, this is not to love God, but to love an image of your own fantasie; nor will it at all procure your salvation. But to love him as your God and Happiness, with a superlative love, you could never have done without a Saviour. For, 1. Objectively; God being not your Reconciled Father, but your enemy, engaged in Justice to damn you for ever, you could not love him as thus related to you, because he could not seem amiable to you and therefore the damned hate him as their destroyer, as the Thief or Murderer hates the Judge. 2. And as to the Efficiency, your blinded minds, and depraved wills could never have been restored so far to their rectitude, as to have loved God as God, without the teaching of Christ, and the renewing sanctifying work of his Spirit. And without a Saviour you could never have expected this gift of the Holy Ghost. So that your supposition it self is groundless.

§. 3. Indeed Conversion is your implanting into Christ, and your uniting to him, and marriage with him, that he may be your life, and help, and hope. He is the way, the truth and the life: And no man cometh to the Father, but by him. John 14. 6. God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son, hath not life. 1 John 5. 11, 12. He is the Vine, and we are the branches: As the branch cannot bear fruit of it self, except it abide in the Vine, so neither can we, except we abide in him: He that abideth not in Christ, is cast forth as a branch and withered to be burned: John 15. 4, 5, 6. All your life and help is in him, and from him: Without Christ you cannot Believe in the Father, as in one that will shew you any saving Mercy, but only as the Devils that believe him Just, and tremble at his Justice; without Christ you cannot Love God, nor have any lively apprehensions of his Love. Without Christ you can have no Hope of Heaven, and therefore no endeavours for it. Without him you cannot come near to God in prayer, as having no confidence, because no admittance, acceptance or hope. Without him how terrible are the thoughts of death, which in him we may see as a conquered thing: and when we remember that he was dead and is now alive, and the Lord of life, and hath the Keys of Death and Hell, with what boldness may we lay down this flesh, and suffer death to undress our souls? It is only in Christ that we can comfortably think of the world to come; when we remember that he must be our Judge, and that in our Nature glorified he is now in the Highest, Lord of all; and that he is preparing a place for us, and will come again to take us to himself, that where he is, there we may be also, John 14. 3. Alas, without Christ, we know not how to live an hour; nor can have hope or peace in any thing we have or do; nor look with comfort either upward or downward, to God or the Creature, nor think without terrors of our sins, of God, or of the life to come. Resolve therefore that as true Converts, you are wholly to Live upon Jesus Christ, and to do all that you do by his Spirit and strength; and to expect all your acceptance with God upon his account: when other men are reputed Phylosophers or Wise, for some unsatisfactory knowledge of these transitory things, do you desire to know nothing but a crucified and glorified Christ: study him, and take him (objectively) for your Wisdom: When other men have confidence in the flesh, and in their shew of Wisdom, in Will worship and Humility, after the Commandments and Doctrines of men, (Col. 2. 20, 21, 22, 23.) and would establish their own righteousness, do you rejoice in Christ your Righteousness: And set continually before your eyes, his Doctrine and Example as your Rule: Look still to Jesus the Author and finisher of your faith, who contemned all the Glory of the world, and trampled upon its Vanity, and subjected himself to a life of suffering, and made himself of no reputation, but for the joy that was set before him, endured the Cross, despising the shame, and underwent the contradiction of sinners against himself. Live so, that you may truly say as Paul, Gal. 2. 20. I am crucified with Christ: Nevertheless I live: yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.

§. 4. HAving given you these Directions, I most earnestly beseech you to peruse and practise them, that my labour may not rise up as a witness against you, which I intend for your Conversion and Salvation: Think on it, Whether this be an Unreasonable course, or an unpleasant life, or a thing unnecessary? and what is Reasonable, necessary and pleasant, if this be not?

And if you meet with any of those distracted sinners that would deride you from Christ and your salvation, and say, this is the way to make men mad, or, this is more ado than needs; I will not stand here to manifest their brutishness and wickedness, having largely done it already, in my Book called, A Saint or a Brute, and Now or Never, and in the third Part of the Saints Rest: But only I desire thee as a full defensative against all the pratings of the Enemies of a holy Heavenly life, to take good notice but of these three things.

Every one is not a Thief, that a Dog barks at; nor an hypocrite, that hypocrites call so.

§. 5. 1. Mark well the language of the holy Scriptures, and see whether it speak not contrary to these men: And bethink thee whether God or they be wiser, and whether God or they must be thy Judge?

§. 6. 2. Mark whether these men do not change their minds, and turn their tongues when they come to dye? Or think whether they will not change their minds, when death hath sent them into that world where there is none of these deceits? And think whether thou shouldst be moved with that mans words, that will shortly change his mind himself, and wish he had never spoke such words?

As the Athenians that condemned Socrates to death, and then lamented it, and erected a Brazen Statue for his Memorial.

§. 7. 3. Observe well whether their own profession do not condemn them: and whether the very thing that they hate the godly for, be not that they are serious in Practising that which these malignants themselves profess as their Religion? And are they not then notorious Hypocrites? To profess to believe in God, and yet scorn at those that diligently seek him (Heb. 11. 6.) To profess faith in Christ, and hate those that obey him: To profess to believe in the Holy Ghost as the Sanctifier, and yet hate and scorn his sanctifying work. To profess to believe the day of Judgement and everlasting torment of the ungodly, and yet to deride those that endeavour to escape it: To profess to believe that heaven is prepared for the Godly, and yet to scorn at those that make it the chief business of their lives to attain it: To profess to take the holy Scriptures for Gods Word and Law, and yet to scorn those that obey it: To pray after each of the Ten Commandments [Lord have mercy upon us, and encline our hearts to keep this Law] and yet to hate all those that desire and endeavour to keep them: What impudent hypocrisie is joyned with this malignity? Mark whether the greatest diligence of the most godly be not justified by the formal profession of those very men that hate and scorn them? The difference between them is, that the Godly Profess Christianity in good earnest, and when they say what they believe, they believe as they say: But the ungodly customarily and for company take on them to be Christians when they are not, and by their own mouths condemn themselves, and hate and oppose the serious Practice of that which they say they do themselves believe.

Acosta saith, that he that will be a Pastor to the Indians, must not only resist the Devil and the flesh, but must resist the custom of men which is grown powerful by time and multitude: and must oppose his breast to receive the darts of the envious and malevolent, who, if they see any thing contrary to their prophane fashion, they cry out, A Traytor, an Hypocrite, an Enemy, Li. 4. c. 15. p. 404. It seems among Papists and Barbarians, the Serpents seed do hiss in the same manner against the good among themselves, as they do against us.

PART II.

The Temptations whereby the Devil hindreth Mens Conversion; with the Proper Remedies against them.

§. 1. THE Most Holy and Righteous Governour of the World, hath so restrained Satan and all our Enemies, and so far given us Free will, that no Man can be forced to sin against his will: It is not sin if it be not (posi-

(poſitively or privatively) voluntary. All our Enemies in Hell or Earth cannot make us miſerable without our ſelves; nor keep a ſinner from true Converſion, and Salvation, if he do it not himſelf; no nor compel him to one ſinful thought, or Word, or Deed, or Omiſſion, but by tempting and enticing him to be willing: All that are Graceleſs, are wilfully Graceleſs. None go to Hell, but thoſe that choſe the way to Hell, and would not be perſwaded out of it: None miſs of Heaven, but thoſe that did ſet ſo light by it, as to prefer the World and ſin before it, and refuſed the Holy Way that leadeth to it. And ſurely Man that naturally loveth himſelf, would never take ſo mad a courſe, if his reaſon were not laid aſleep, and his Underſtanding were not wofully deluded: And this is the buſineſs of the Tempter, who doth not drag Men to ſin by violence, but draw and entice them by Temptations. I ſhall therefore take it for the next part of my work, to open theſe Temptations, and tell you the Remedies.

Temp. 1. §. 2. Tempt. 1. The firſt endeavour of the Tempter, is in General to keep the ſinner aſleep in ſin: ſo that he ſhall be as a dead man, that hath no uſe of any of his faculties: that hath eyes and ſeeth not, and ears but heareth not, and a heart that un-
Eph. 2. 1. Col. 2. 13. 1 Cor. 15. 35. 1 Tim. 5. 6. derſtandeth not, nor feeleth any thing that concern-eth his peace: The light that ſhineth upon a man aſleep, is of no uſe to him: His work lyeth undone: His friends, and wealth, and greateſt concernments are all forgotten by him, as if there were no ſuch
Joel 1. 5. things or perſons in the world; You may ſay what you will againſt him, or do what you will againſt him, and he can do nothing in his own defence. This is the caſe that the Devil moſt laboureth to keep the world in; even in ſo dead a ſleep, that their Reaſon, and their Wills, their fear, and hope, and all their powers ſhall be of no uſe to them: That when they hear a Preacher, or read the Scripture or good Books, or ſee the holy examples of the godly, yea, when they ſee the Grave, and know where they muſt ſhortly lye, and know that their ſouls muſt ſtay here but a little while, yet they ſhall hear, and ſee, and know all this, as men aſleep, that mind it not, as if it concerned not them at all; never once ſoberly Conſidering and laying it to heart.

Dir. 1. §. 3. Direct. 1. For the Remedy againſt this deadly ſin, 1. Take heed of ſleeping opinions, or Doctrines and conceits which tend to the Lethargy of Security: 2. Sit not ſtill but be up and doing: Stirring tends to ſhake off drowzineſs. 3. Come into the light: Live under an awakening Miniſter and in wakening company, that will not ſleep with you; nor eaſily let you ſleep: Agree with them to deal faithfully with you, and promiſe them to take it thankfully. 4. And meditate oft on wakening conſiderations. Think whether a ſleepy ſoul beſeem one in thy dangerous condition. Canſt thou ſleep with ſuch a load of ſin upon thy ſoul? Canſt thou ſleep under the thundring threatnings of God? and the Curſe of his Law; with ſo many wounds in thy Conſcience, and Ulcers in thy ſoul? If thy body were ſick, or in the caſe of Job, yea, if thou hadſt but an aking Tooth, it would not let thee ſleep: And is not the guilt of ſin, a thing more grievous? If Thorns, or Toads and Adders were in thy Bed, they would keep thee waking? And how much more 2 Tim. 2. 26. odious and dangerous a thing is ſin? If thy Body want but Meat, or drink, or covering, it will break thy ſleep: And is it nothing for thy ſoul to be deſtitute of Chriſt and Grace? A condemned Man will be eaſily kept awake: and if thou be unregenerate, thou art already condemned, John 3. 18. 3. 5. Thou ſleepeſt in Irons: in the captivity of the Devil: among the walking Judgments of God: in a life that is ſtill expecting an end: in a Boat that is ſwiftly carried to eternity: juſt at the Entrance of another world; and that World will be Hell, if Grace awake thee not: Thou art going to ſee the Face of God: to ſee the world of Angels or Devils, and to be accompanied with one of them for ever: And is this a place or caſe to ſleep in? Is thy Bed ſo ſoft? thy dwelling ſo ſafe? God ſtandeth over thee, man; and doſt thou ſleep? Chriſt is coming, and death is coming, and judgment coming, and doſt thou ſleep? Didſt thou never read of the fooliſh Virgins, that ſlept out their time, and knockt and cryed in vain when it was too late? Matth. 25. 5. Thou mighteſt wiſelyer ſleep on the Pinnacle of a Steeple in a Storm, than have a Soul aſleep in ſo dangerous a caſe as thou art in. The Devil is awake, and is rocking thy Cradle! How buſie is he to keep off Miniſters, or Conſcience, or any that would awake thee? None of thine enemies are aſleep; and yet wilt thou ſleep, in the thickeſt of thy Foes? Is the battle a ſleeping time, or thy race a ſleeping time, when Heaven or Hell muſt be the End? While he can keep thee aſleep, the Devil can do almoſt what he liſt with thee. He knows that thou haſt now no uſe of thy Eyes, or underſtanding, or power to reſiſt him: The Learneдſt Doctor in his ſleep is as unlearned actually as an Ideot, and will diſpute no better than an unlearned man: This makes many learned men to be ungodly: they are aſleep in ſin. The Devil could never have made ſuch a drudge of thee, to do his work againſt Chriſt and thy ſoul, if thou hadſt been awake. Thou wouldſt never have followed his whiſtle to the Alehouſe, the Play houſe, the Gaming houſe, and to other ſins, if thou hadſt been in thy wits, and well awake. Read Prov. 7. 23, 24. I cannot believe that thou longeſt to be damned, or ſo hateſt thy ſelf, as to have done as thou haſt done, to have lived a Godleſs, a Graceleſs, a Prayerleſs, and yet a merry careleſs life, if thy eyes had been opened, and thou hadſt known, and feelingly known, that this was the way to Hell. Nature it ſelf will hardly go to Hell awake. But it's eaſie to abuſe a man that is aſleep: Thou haſt Reaſon; but didſt thou ever awake it to one Hours ſerious Conſideration, of thy endleſs ſtate and preſent caſe? O dreadful judgment to be given over to the Spirit of ſlumber! Rom. 11. 8. Is it not high time now to awake out of ſleep? Rom. 13. 11. When the light is ariſen and ſhines about thee! When others that care for their ſouls, are buſie at work! When thou haſt ſlept out ſo much precious time already! Many a Mercy, and perhaps ſome Miniſters, have been as Candles burnt out to light thee while thou haſt ſlept! How oft haſt thou been called already, How long wilt thou ſleep, O ſluggard? Prov. 6 9, 10. Yet thou haſt thundering calls and alarms to awake thee. God calls, and Miniſters call! Mercies call, and judgments call! and yet wilt thou not awake? The voice of the Lord is powerful; full of Majeſty; breaketh the Cedars; ſhaketh the wilderneſs: and yet cannot it awake thee? Thou wilt not ſleep about far ſmaller matters! at meat, or drink, or in common talk, or Market: But O how much greater buſineſs haſt thou to keep thee awake? Thou haſt yet an unholy ſoul to be renewed; and an ungodly life to be reformed! an offended God to be reconciled to; and many thouſand ſins to be forgiven! thou haſt death and judgment to prepare for: thou haſt Heaven to win, and Hell to ſcape! Thou haſt many a needful Truth to learn, and many a holy duty to perform; and yet doſt thou think it time to ſleep? Paul that had leſs need than thou, did watch, and pray, and labour day and night, Acts 20. 31. 1 Theſ. 3. 10. O that thou knewеſt how much better it is to be awake. While thou ſleepeſt, thou loſeſt the benefit of the Light, and all the mercies that attend thee: The Sun is out as a clod to a man aſleep: The world is as no world to him: The beauty of Heaven and Earth are no thing to him: Princes, Friends, and all things are forgotten by him! So doth thy ſleep in ſin make nothing of health, and patience, time and health, Miniſters, Books and daily warnings: O what a day haſt thou for everlaſting, if thou hadſt but a heart to uſe it! What a price haſt thou in thine hand? Prov. 10. 5. Sleep not out thy day, thy harveſt time, thy tide time: They that ſleep, ſleep in the night, 1 Theſ. 5. 7. Awake and Chriſt will give thee light, Rom. 13. 12. Epheſ. 5. 14. Awake to righteouſneſs, and ſin not, 1 Cor. 15. 34. O when thou ſeeſt the Light of Chriſt, what a wonder will it poſſeſs thee with, at the things which thou now forgetteſt? What joy will it fill thee with? and with what pity to the ſleepy world? —— But if thou wilt needs ſleep on, be it known to thee, ſinner, it ſhall not be long. If thou wilt wake no ſooner, death and vengeance will awake thee: Thou wilt wake when thou ſeeſt the other world, and ſeeſt the things which thou wouldſt not believe, and comeſt before thy dreadful Judge! Thy damnation ſlumbreth not, 2 Pet. 2. 3. There are no ſleepy ſouls in Heaven or Hell, all are awake, there: and the day that hath awakened ſo many, ſhall waken thee: Watch then if thou love thy ſoul leaſt thy Lord come ſuddenly and find thee ſleeping, Mark 13. 34, 35, 36, 37. What I ſay to one, I ſay to all, Watch.

Temp. 2. §. 4. Tempt. 2. If Satan cannot keep the ſoul in a ſleepy, careleſs, inconſiderate forgetfulneſs, he would make the unregenerate ſoul believe that there is no ſuch thing as Regenerating Grace; but that it is a fancied thing, which no man hath experience of, Joh. 3. 4. and he ſaith as Nicodemus, How can theſe things be? He thinks that natural conſcience is enough.

Dir. 2. §. 5. Direct. 2. But this may eaſily be refuted by obſerving, that Holineſs is but the very Health and rectitude of the ſoul; and is no otherwiſe ſupernatural, than as Health to him that is born a Leper. It is the rectitude of Nature, or its diſpoſition to the uſe and end that it was made for. Though Grace be called ſupernatural. 1. Becauſe it is not born with us; and 2. Corrupted Nature is againſt it; 3. And the end of it is the God of Nature, who is above Nature. 4. And the Revelation and other means are ſupernatural (as Chriſts incarnation, reſurrection, &c.) Yet both Nature, and Scripture, and experience tell you, that man is made for another life, and for ſuch works which he is utterly unfit for, till Grace have changed and renewed him, as it doth by many before your eyes.

See 2 Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 6. 15. Gal. 4. 19. John 3. 3, 5, 6. Mat. 18. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 23.

Temp. 3. §. 6. Tempt. 5. But, ſaith the Tempter, if ſupernatural grace be neceſſary, yet it may be born in you: Infants have no ſin; Chriſt ſaith, Of ſuch is the Kingdom of God: Abraham is your Father, yea, God, John 8. 39. 41. You are born of Chriſtian Parents.

Dir. 3. §. 7. Direct. 3. See the full proof of Original Sin in all Infants, in my Treatiſe of the Divine Life, Part 1. Chap. 11. & 12. Grace may indeed be put betimes into Nature, but comes not by nature. Except you be born again, you cannot enter into the kingdom of God, John 3. 3, 5. If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt away: behold all things are become new, 2 Cor. 5. 17. But how vain is it for him to boaſt that he was born holy, who finds himſelf at the preſent unholy. Shew that you have a holy heavenly heart and life, and then you are happy when ever it was wrought.

Rom. 8. 9. 16. Rom. 5. 2. Eph. 2. 3.

Temp. 4. §. 8. Tempt. 4. But, ſaith the Tempter, Baptiſm is the laver of Regeneration: You are Baptized, and therefore you are Regenerated. The Antients taught that all ſins were waſht away in Baptiſm, and Grace conferred.

§. 9. Direct. 4. Anſw. The Antients by Baptiſm meant the Internal and external acts conjunct, the ſouls delivering up it ſelf to God in the Covenant, and ſealing it by Baptiſm: And ſo it includeth Converſion, and true Repentance, and Faith: And all that are thus baptized are pardoned, juſtified, and holy: But they that have only Sacramental Regeneration, or the external Ordinance, are not for that in a ſtate of life: For Chriſt expreſly ſaith, that except you are born of the Spirit as well as Water, you cannot enter into the kingdom of Heaven, John 3. 5, 6. And Peter told Simon Magus after he was baptized, that he was yet in the gall of bitterneſs and bond of iniquity, Acts 8. 13. It is not the putting away the filth of the fleſh, but the anſwer of a good conſcience, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Chriſt cleanſeth his Church by the waſhing of water by the Word, Eph. 5. 26. But if you had been cleanſed in Baptiſm, if at preſent you are unclean, and unholy, can you be ſaved ſo? Dir. 4. Matth. 28. 19, 20.

§. 10. Temp. 5. When this faileth, the Tempter would perſwade them, that Godlineſs is nothing but a matter of meer Opinion or belief: to believe all the Articles of the faith, and to be no Papiſt nor Heretick, but of true Religion, and to be confident of Gods mercy through Chriſt: For he that believeth ſhall be ſaved, Mark 16. 16. Temp. 5.

§. 11. Direct. 5. To this you muſt anſwer, that it will not ſave a man that his Religion is true, unleſs he be true to it! Read James 2. againſt ſuch a dead faith. Saving faith is the hearty entertainment of Chriſt as our Lord and Saviour, and the delivering up the ſoul to him to be ſanctified and ruled, as well as pardoned. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. He that knoweth his Maſters will and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes, Luke 12. 47. It's ſad that men ſhould think to be ſaved by that which will condemn them! by being of a right opinion, and a wrong converſation; by believing their duty, inſtead of doing it; and then preſuming that Chriſt forgiveth them, and that their ſtate is good: Opinion and preſumption are not faith. Dir. 5.

§. 12. Tempt. 6. But, ſaith the Tempter, Holineſs is the excellency of holy perſons: but vulgar unlearned people may be ſaved, without ſuch high matters which are above them. Temp. 6.

§ 13. Direct. 6. But God telleth you, that without Holineſs none ſhall ſee him, Heb. 12. 14. The unlearned may be ſaved, but the ungodly cannot, Pſal. 1. 6. Holineſs is to the ſoul, as life to the body: He that hath it not, is dead; though all have not the ſame degree of health: Sin is ſin, and hated of God in learned or unlearned: All men have ſouls that need regenerating at firſt: And as all bodies that live, muſt live on the earth, by the Air, and Food, &c. ſo all ſouls that live, do live upon the ſame God, and Chriſt, and Heaven, by the ſame Word and Spirit; and all this may be had by the unlearned. Dir. 7.

§. 14. Tempt. 7. But, ſaith the Tempter, God is not ſo unmerciful as to damn all that are not holy: This is but a talk to keep men in awe; and not to be believed. Temp. 7.

§. 15. Direct. 7. But if Gods threatnings be neceſſary to keep men in awe, then are they neceſſary to be executed. For God needs not awe men by a lye. He beſt knows to whom he will be merciful, and how far! Did you never read, Iſa. 27. 11. It is a people of no underſtanding. therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them, will ſhew them no favour. And Pſal. 59. 5. Be not merciful to any wicked tranſgreſſor. Is he not juſt, as well as merciful? Exod. 34. 6, 7. Do you not ſee that men are ſick, and pained, and dye for all that God is merciful? And Dir. 7.

do not Merciful Judges condemn Malefactors? are not Angels made Devils by ſin, for all that God is merciful? The Devil knoweth this to his ſorrow. And if God ſpared not the Angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to Hell——2 Pet. 2. 4. will he be unjuſt for you?

Temp. 8. §. 16. Tempt. 8. But Chriſt dyed for all: and God will not puniſh him and you both, for the ſame fault.

Dir. 8. §. 17. Direct. 8. Chriſt dyed ſo far for all that have the Goſpel, as to procure and ſeal them a free and general pardon of all their ſins, if they will repent and take him for their Saviour, and ſo to bring ſalvation to their choice. But will this ſave the ungodly obſtinate refuſers? Chriſt dyed to ſanctifie, as well as to forgive, Eph. 5. 27. and to purifie to himſelf a peculiar people zealous of good works, Tit. 2. 14. and to deſtroy the works of the devil, 1 John 3. 8. and to bring all men under his Dominion and Government, Rom. 14. 9. Luke 19. 27. If any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, the ſame is none of his, Rom. 8. 9.

Temp. 9. §. 18. Tempt. 9. No man can be certain of his ſalvation: but all muſt hope well: and to raiſe doubts in mens hearts, whether they ſhall be ſaved or no, will not help them, but puzzle them and caſt them into deſpair.

Dir. 9. §. 19. Direct. 9. But is there ſo little difference between a child of God and of the Devil, and between the way to Heaven and the way to Hell, that they cannot be known aſunder? Hath not Chriſt taught us plainly how to know them? Pſal. 1. & 15. 1 John 3. and bid us give diligence to make our calling and election ſure? 2 Pet. 1. 10. If all men muſt hope that they ſhall be ſaved, then moſt muſt hope for that which they ſhall never have: But it is no hope of Gods making, which deceiveth men. Should ſo great a matter as our everlaſting joy or miſery, be caſt out of our Care, and ventured ſo regardleſly in the dark? When is it that we have life, and time, and all for to make it ſure? And what hurt can it do you, to find out the truth of your own condition? If you are indeed unregenerate and unholy, diſcover it now in time, and you have time to be recovered: You muſt deſpair of being ſaved without converſion: But that preventeth abſolute final deſpair. Whereas if you find not out your caſe till time is paſt, then hope is paſt, and the Devil hath you in endleſs deſperation, where he would.

Tem. 10. §. 20. Tempt. 10. If this prevail not, the Devil will ſeek to carry it by noiſe inſtead of reaſon, and will ſeek to keep you in jovial, merry, voluptuous company, that ſhall plead by Pots, and Playes, and pleaſures, and ſhall daily make a jeſt of Godlineſs, and ſpeak of the godly with ſcorn, as a company of fanatick Hypocrites.

Dir. 10. §. 21. Direct. 10. But conſider, that this is but the rage of fools, that ſpeak of what they never underſtood? Did they ever try the way they ſpeak againſt? Are they to be believed before God himſelf? Will they not eat their words at laſt themſelves? Will their merry lives laſt always: Do they dye as merrily as they live? and bring off themſelves as well as they promiſed to bring off you? He that will be cheated of his ſalvation, and forſake his God, for the ranting ſcorns of a diſtracted ſinner, is worthy to be damned.

See Prov. 13. 20. Pro. 28. 7. Eph. 5. 7. 11.

Tem. 11. §. 22. Tempt. 11. Next he telleth them, that a godly life is ſo hard and tedious, that if they ſhould begin, they ſhould never endure to hold on, and therefore it is in vain to try it.

Dir. 11. §. 23. Direct. 11. But this pretence is compounded of wickedneſs and madneſs. What but a wicked heart can make it ſo hard a thing to live in the Love of God and holineſs, and in the hopes and ſeeking of eternal life? Why ſhould not this be a ſweeter and pleaſanter life, than drinking, and roaring, and gaming, and fooling away time in vain; or than the enjoying of all the delights of the fleſh? There's nothing but a ſick diſtempered heart againſt it, that nauſeateth that which in it ſelf is moſt delightful. When Grace hath changed your hearts, it will be eaſie. Do you not ſee that others can hold on in it? and would not be as they were for all the world? And why may not you? God will help you: It is the Office of Chriſt and the Spirit to help you: Your encouragements are innumerable. The hardneſs is moſt at firſt: It is the longer the eaſier. But what if it were hard? Is it not neceſſary? Is Hell eaſier, and to be preferred before it? And will not Heaven pay for all your coſt and labour? Will you ſit down in deſperation, and reſolve to let your ſalvation go, upon ſuch ſilly bug-bear words as theſe?

§. 24. Tempt. 12. Next the Devils endeavour will be, to find them ſo much employment with worldly cares, or hopes, or buſineſs, that they ſhall find no leiſure to be ſerious about the ſaving of their ſouls. Tem. 12.

§. 25. Direct. 12. But this is a ſnare, though frequently prevalent, yet ſo irrational, and againſt ſo many warnings and witneſſes, even of all men in the World either firſt or laſt, at Converſion, or at Death, that he who after all this, will neglect his God and his Salvation, becauſe he hath worldly things to mind, is worthy to be turned over to his choice, and have no better help or portion in the hour of his neceſſity and diſtreſs. Of this ſin I have ſpoken afterward, Chap. 4. Part 6. Dir. 12.

§. 26. Tempt. 13. Leſt the ſoul ſhould be converted, the Devil will do all that he can to keep you from the acquaintance and company of thoſe whoſe holineſs and inſtructions might convince and ſtrengthen you; and eſpecially from a lively convincing Miniſter, and to caſt you under ſome dead hearted Miniſter and Society. Tem. 13.

§. 27. Direct. 13. Therefore, if it be poſſible, though it be to your loſs or inconvenience in the World, live under a ſearching heavenly Teacher, and in the company of them that are reſolved for Heaven! It is a dead heart indeed that feeleth not the need of ſuch aſſiſtance, and is not the better for it when they have it. If ever you be fair for Heaven, and like to be converted, it will be among ſuch helps as theſe. Dir. 13.

§ 28. Tempt. 14. But one of the ſtrongeſt Temptations of Satan, is by making their ſin exceeding pleaſant to them; for the gain, or honour, or fleſhly ſatisfaction; and ſo encreaſing the violence of their ſenſual appetite and luſt, and making them ſo much in Love with their ſin, that they cannot leave it: Like the thirſt of a man in a burning Fever, which makes him cry for cold drink, though it would kill him, the fury of the appetite conquering reaſon. So we ſee many drunkards, fornicators, worldlings, that are ſo deeply in Love with their ſin, that come on it what will, they will have it, though they have Hell with it. Tem. 14.

§. 29. Direct. 14. Againſt this Temptation I deſire you to read what I have ſaid after, Chap. 4. Part 7. & Chap. 3. Direct. 6. & 8. O that poor ſinners knew what it is that they ſo much Love! Is the pleaſing of the fleſh ſo ſweet a thing to you? and are you ſo indifferent to God Dir. 14.

God and holy things? Are theſe leſs aimable? Do you foreſee what both will be at laſt? Will your ſin ſeem better than Chriſt, and Grace, and Heaven, when you are dying? O be not ſo in love with damning folly, and the pleaſure of a Beaſt; as for it to deſpiſe the heavenly wiſdom and delights!

Tem. 15. §. 30. Temp. 15. Another great Temptation is, the proſperity of the Wicked in this Life; and the Reproach and Suffering which uſually falls upon the godly: If God did ſtrike every notorious Sinner dead in that place, as ſoon as he had ſinned, or ſtruck him Blind, or Dumb, or Lame, or inflicted preſently ſome ſuch Judgment, then many would fear him, and forbear their ſin: But when they ſee no Men proſper ſo much as the moſt Ungodly, and that they are the Perſecutors of the Holy Seed, and that Sentence againſt an Evil Work is not ſpeedily executed, then are their Hearts ſet in them to do Evil, Eccleſ. 8. 11.

Dir. 15. §. 31. Direct. 15. But alas, how ſhort is the proſperity of the wicked! Read Pſal. 73. & 37. Delay is no forgiveneſs: They ſtay but till the Aſſize: And will that tempt you to do as they? How unthankfully do ſinners deal with God! If he ſhould kill you and plague you, that would not pleaſe you: And yet if he forbear you, you are emboldened by it in your ſin. Thus his patience is turned againſt him. But the ſtroke will be the heavier when it falls. Doſt thou think thoſe men will always flouriſh! Will they alway domineer and revell! Will they always dwell in the Houſes where they now dwell, and poſſeſs thoſe Lands, and be honoured and ſerved as now they are! O how quickly and how dreadfully will the caſe be changed with them! O could you but foreſee now what faces they will have, and what heavy Hearts, and with what bitter exclamations they will at laſt cry out againſt themſelves, for all their Folly, and wiſh that they had never been deceived by Proſperity; but rather had the Portion of a Lazarus! If you ſaw how they are but fatted for the ſlaughter, and in what a dolorous miſery their Wealth, and Sport, and Honours will leave them, you would lament their caſe, and think ſo great a Deſtruction were ſoon enough, and not deſire to be Partners in their Lot!

Tem. 16. §. 32. Tempt. 16. Another temptation is, their own proſperity: They think God when he proſpereth them, is not ſo angry with them as Preachers tell them: And it is a very hard thing in Health and Proſperity, to lay to heart either Sin or Threatnings, and to have ſuch ſerious lively thoughts of the life to come, as men that are wakened by Adverſity have: and ſpecially Men that are familiar with Death. Proſperity is the greateſt Temptation to Security, and delaying repentance, and putting off Preparation for Eternity. Overcome Proſperity, and you overcome your greateſt Snare.

Dir. 16. §. 33. Direct. 16. Go into the Sanctuary, yea, go into the Church-yard, and ſee the End: And judge by thoſe Skulls, and Bones, and Duſt, if you cannot judge by the Fore warnings of God, what Proſperity is! Judge by the Experience of all the World! Doth it not leave them all in Sorrow at laſt? Wo to the Man that hath his Portion in this Life. O miſerable Health, and Wealth, and Honour, which procureth the Death, and Shame, and utter Deſtruction of the Soul! Was not he in as proſperous a caſe as you. Luke 16. that quickly cryed out in vain, for a drop of Water to cool his Tongue? There is none of you ſo fenſleſs as not to know that you muſt dye? And muſt you die? Muſt you certainly dye? And ſhall that Day be no better prepared for? Shall preſent Proſperity make you forget it, and live as if you muſt live here for ever? Do you make ſo great difference between that which is, and that which will be? as to make as great a matter of it as others, when it comes; and to make no more of it when it is but coming? O Man, what is an inch of haſty time! How quickly is it gone? Thou art going hence apace, and almoſt gone! Doth God give thee the mercy of a few Days or Years of health to make all thy Preparations in for Eternity, and doth this Mercy turn to thy Deceit, and doſt thou turn it ſo much contrary to the Ends for which it was given thee? Wilt thou ſurfeit on Mercy, and deſtroy thy Soul with it? Senſe feeleth and perceiveth what now is, but thou haſt Reaſon to foreſee what will be? Wilt thou play in Harveſt, and forget the Winter?

Tem. 17. §. 34. Temp. 17. Another great Temptation to hinder Converſion, is the Example and Countenance of Great Ones that are ungodly; when Landlords and men in power are ſenſual, and enemies to a holy life, and ſpeak reproachfully of it, their Inferiours by the reverence which they bear to worldly wealth and greatneſs, are eaſily drawn to ſay as they: Alſo, when men reputed Learned and Wiſe, are of another mind: and eſpecially when ſubtile enemies ſpeak that reproach againſt it, which they cannot anſwer.

Dir. 17. §. 35. Direct. 17. To this I ſpake in the end of the firſt Part of this Chapter. No man is ſo great and wiſe as God. See whether he ſay as they do in his word! The greateſt that provoke him can no more ſave themſelves from his vengeance, than the pooreſt Beggars! What work made he with a Pharoah! and got himſelf a name by his hard Heartedneſs and Impenitency? He can ſend Worms to eat an arrogant Herod, when the People cry him up as a God! Where are now the Cæſars and Alexanders of the World? The Rulers and Phariſees believed not in Chriſt; John 7. 48. Wilt not thou therefore believe in him? The Governour of the Country condemned him to dye; and wilt thou condemn him? The Kings of the Earth ſet themſelves, and the Rulers take counſel together againſt the Lord and his anointed, ſaying, Let us break their bands aſunder, and caſt away their cords from us, Pſal. 2. 2, 3. Wilt thou therefore joyn in the Conſpiracy? When he that ſitteth in the Heavens ſhall laugh; the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion ——— He will break them with an Iron rod, and daſh them in pieces like a Potters Veſſel, unleſs they be wiſe, and kiſs the Son, and ſerve the Lord with fear, before his wrath be kindled and they periſh, Pſal. 2. 4, 9, 10, 11, 12. If thy Landlord or Great ones ſhall be thy God, and be honoured and obeyed before God and againſt him, truſt to them, and call on them in the Hour of thy diſtreſs, and take ſuch a ſalvation as they can give thee: Teach not God what choice to make, and whom to reveal his Myſteries to: He chooſeth not always the Learned Scribe, nor the mighty Man; Chriſt himſelf ſaith, Matth. 11. 25. I thank thee O Father, Lord of Heaven and Earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them to babes: Even ſo father; for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight! if this reaſon ſatisfie you not, follow them, and ſpeed as they. If they are Greater and Wiſer than God, let them be your Gods, 1 Cor. 1. 26. You ſee your calling how that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called: but God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe; and God hath choſen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and baſe things of the world, and the things that are deſpiſed hath God choſen, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are. It is another kind of Greatneſs, Honour and Wiſdom which God beſtoweth on on the pooreſt Saints, than the world can give; Worldlings will ſhortly be aweary of their portion: In your baptiſm you renounced the world with its pomps and vanity. and now do you deifie, what you then defied?

*Tem.*18. §. 36. Temp. 18. Another Temptation is to draw on the ſinner into ſuch a cuſtom in ſin, and long neglect of the means of his Recovery, till his Heart is utterly Hardened.

Dir. 18. §. 37. Direct. 18. Againſt this read after Chap. 4. Part 2. againſt hardneſs of Heart.

*Tem.*19. § 38. Temp. 19. Another Temptation is, to Delay Repentance, and purpoſe to do it hereafter.

Dir. 19. §. 39. Direct. 19. Of this I entreat you to read the many Reaſons which I have given to ſhame and waken delayers, in my Book of Directions for a ſound Converſion.

*Tem.*20. §. 40. Temp. 20. The worſt of all is, to tempt them to flat unbelief of Scripture and the life to come.

Dir. 20. §. 41. Direct. 20. Againſt this read here Chap. 3. Dir. 1. Chap. 4. Part 1. and my Treatiſe againſt Infidelity.

*Tem.*21. §. 42. Temp. 21. If they will needs look after Grace, he will do all he can to deceive them with counterfeits, and make them take a ſeeming half converſion for a ſaving change.

Dir. 21. §. 43. Direct 21. Of this read my Directions for ſound Converſion, and the Formal Hypocrite, and Saints Reſt, Part 3. c. 10.

*Tem.*22. §. 44. Temp. 22. If he cannot make them flat Infidels, he will tempt them to queſtion and contradict the ſenſe of all thoſe Texts of Scripture which are uſed to convince them, and all thoſe doctrines which grate moſt upon their galled conſciences; as of the Neceſſity of Regeneration, the fewneſs of them that are ſaved, the difficulty of ſalvation, the torments of Hell, the neceſſity of mortification, and the ſinfulneſs of all particular ſins: They will hearken what Cavillers can ſay for any ſin, and againſt any part of Godlineſs; and with this they wilfully delude themſelves.

Dir. 22. §. 45. Direct. 22. But if men are reſolved to joyn with the Devil, and ſhut their eyes, and cavil againſt all that God ſpeaketh to them to prevent their miſery, and know not, becauſe they will not know, what remedy is left or who can ſave men againſt their wills? This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds are evil. He that doth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved, John 3. 19, 20. In Scripture, ſome things are hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable, wreſt to their own deſtruction, 2 Pet. 3. 16. Of particulars read the end of my Treatiſe of Converſion.

*Tem.*23. §. 46. Temp. 23. Yea, Satan will do his worſt to make them Hereticks, and teach them ſome doctrine of licentiouſneſs ſuitable to their luſts: It's hard being wicked ſtill againſt Conſcience in the open light: This is kicking againſt the pricks: too ſmarting work to be eaſily born: Therefore the Devil will make them a Religion which ſhall pleaſe them and do their ſins no harm: Either a Religion made up of looſe Opinions, like the Familiſts, Ranters, Libertines and Antinomians (and the Jeſuits too much;) or elſe made up of trifling formalities, and a great deal of bodily exerciſe and Stage actions and complements, as much of the Popiſh devotion is: And a little will draw a carnal heart to believe a carnal doctrine: It's eaſier to get ſuch a new Religion, than a new heart. And then the Devil tells them that now they are in the right way, and therefore they ſhall be ſaved. A great part of the world think their caſe is good, becauſe they are of ſuch or ſuch a Sect, or Party, and of that which (they are told by their Leaders) is the true Church and way.

§. 47. Direct. 23. But remember that what ever Law you make to your ſelves, God will judge you by his own Law. Falſifying the Kings Coyn is no good way to pay a debt, but an addition of Treaſon to your former miſery. It is a new and a holy heart and life, and not a new Creed, or a new Church or Sect that is neceſſary to your ſalvation. It will never ſave you to be in the ſoundeſt Church on earth, if you be unſound in it your ſelves; and are but the duſt in the Temple that muſt be ſwept out: Much leſs will it ſave you, to make your ſelves a Rule, becauſe Gods Rule doth ſeem too ſtrict. Dir. 23.

§. 48. Temp. 24. Another way of the Tempter is, to draw men to take up with meer Convictions, inſtead of true Converſion: when they have but learnt that it is Neceſſary to ſalvation, to be Regenerate, and have the Spirit of Chriſt, they are as quiet, as if this were indeed to be regenerate, and to have the Spirit: As ſome think they have attained to perfection, when they have but received the opinion that perfection may here be had; ſo abundance think they have ſanctification and forgiveneſs, becauſe now they ſee that they muſt be had, and without ſanctification there is no ſalvation: And thus the knowledge of all Grace and Duty ſhall go with them for the grace and duty it ſelf; and their judgement of the thing, inſtead of the poſſeſſion of it: and inſtead of having grace, they force themſelves to believe that they have it. *Tem.*24.

§. 49. Direct. 24. But remember God will not be mocked: He knoweth a convinced head from a holy heart. To think you are Rich, will not make you Rich: To believe that you are well, or to know the remedy, is not enough to make you well. You may dream that you eat, and yet awake hungry: Iſa. 29. 8. All the Land or Money which you ſee, is not therefore your own. To know that you ſhould be holy, maketh your unholineſs to have no excuſe: Ahab did not eſcape by believing that he ſhould return in peace: Self-flattery in ſo great and weighty a caſe, is the greateſt folly. If you know theſe things, happy are ye if you do them, John 13. 17. Dir. 24.

§. 50. Temp. 25. Another great Temptation is, by hiding from men the intrinſick evil and odiouſneſs of ſin. What harm (ſaith the Drunkard, and Adulterer, and voluptuous Senſualiſt) is there in all this, that Preachers make ſo great ado againſt it? What hurt is this to God or man? that they would make us believe that we muſt be damned for it, and that Chriſt dyed for it? and that the Holy Ghoſt muſt mortifie it? Wherefore, ſay the Jews, Jer. 16. 10. hath God pronounced all this great evil againſt us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our ſin that we have committed —— he that knoweth not God, knoweth not what ſin againſt God is: eſpecially when the Love of it, and Delight in it blindeth them. *Tem.*25.

§. 51. Direct. 25. Againſt this I intreat you to ponder on thoſe forty intrinſecal evils in ſin, which I have after named, Chap. 3. Dir. 8. §. 16. and the aggravations, §. 17, 18. If the Devil can but once perſwade you, that ſin is harmleſs, all Faith, all Religion, all Honeſty, and your ſouls and all are gone. For then all Gods Laws and government muſt be fictions: Then there is no work for Chriſt as a Saviour, or the Spirit as a Sanctifier to do: Then all Ordinances and Means are troubleſome Vanities: and Godlineſs, and Obedience deſerve to be baniſhed from the earth, as unneceſſary troublers of mankind: Then may this poyſon be ſafely taken and made your food. But O how mad a conceit is this! How quickly will God make the proudeſt know, what harm it was to refuſe the Government of his Maker, and ſet up the Government of his beaſtly appetite and miſguided will! and that ſin is bad, if Hell be bad. Dir. 25. Pſal. 40. 12. Pſal. 51.

Tem. 25. §. 52. Tempt. 26. The Devil alſo tempteth them to think, that though they ſin, yet their good works are a compenſation for their bad, and therefore they pray, and do ſome acts of Phariſaical devotion, to make God amends for what they do amiſs.

Dir. 26. §. 53. Direct. 26. Againſt this conſider, that if you had never ſo many good works, they are all but your duty; and make no ſatisfaction for your ſin. But what good works can you do, that ſhall ſave a wicked ſoul! and that God will accept without your Hearts! Your Hearts muſt be firſt cleanſed, and your ſelves devoted and ſanctified to God: For an evil Tree will bring forth evil fruit: Firſt make the Tree good, and the fruit will be good! It is the Love of God, and the Hatred of ſin, and a holy and heavenly life which are the good works that God chiefly calleth for; and Faith, and Repentance, and Converſion in order to theſe: And will God take your lip-labour, or the leavings of your fleſh by way of alms, while the world and fleſhly pleaſure have your hearts? Indeed, you do no work that's truly good! The matter may be good: but you poyſon it with bad principles and ends. The carnal mind is not ſubject to the law of God, nor indeed can be; but is enmity to God, Rom. 8. 6, 7.

See Prov. 28. 9. Prov. 15. 28. 8. Pro. 21. 27 Iſa. 1. 13, 14.

Tem. 27. §. 54. Tempt. 27. Some are tempted to think, that God will not condemn them becauſe they are poor and afflicted in this life, and have their ſufferings here: And that he that condemneth the rich for not ſhewing mercy to the poor, will himſelf ſhew them mercy.

Dir. 27. §. 55. Direct. 27. Hath he not ſhewed you mercy? And is it not mercy which you vilify and refuſe? Even Chriſt, and his Spirit, and holy communion with God? Or muſt God ſhew you the mercy of Glory, without the mercy of Grace? Which is a contradiction: Strange! that the ſame men that will not be intreated to accept of mercy, nor let it ſave them, are yet ſaying, that God will be merciful and ſave them.

And for your poverty and ſuffering, it is not againſt your will: You cannot deny it: And will God ſave any man, for that which is againſt his will? You would have riches, and honour, and pleaſure, and your good things in this life as well as others, if you could tell how: You love the world as well as others, if you could get more of it. And to be carnal and worldly for ſo poor a pittance, and to love the world when you ſuffer in it, doth make you more unexcuſable than the rich. The Devils have ſuffered more than you; and ſo have many thouſand ſouls in Hell; And yet they ſhall be ſaved never the more. If you are poor in the world, but rich in faith, and holineſs, then you may well expect ſalvation, James 2. 5. But if your ſufferings make you no more holy, they do but aggravate your ſin.

See Heb. 11. 6, 7, 10.

Tem. 28. § 56. Tempt. 28. Alſo the Devil blindeth ſinners, by keeping them ignorant of the nature and power of Holineſs of heart and life! They know it not by any experience: And he will not let them ſee it and judge of it in the Scripture, where it is to be ſeen without any mixed contraries; but he points them only to profeſſors of holineſs, and commonly to the weakeſt and the worſt of them, and to that which is worſt in them, and ſheweth them the miſcarriages of hypocrites, and the falls of the weaker ſort of Chriſtians, and then tells them, This is their Godlineſs and Religion; They are all alike.

Dir. 28. §. 57. Direct. 28. But it's eaſie to ſee, how theſe men deceive and condemn themſelves. This is as if you ſhould plead that a Beaſt is wiſer than a Man, becauſe ſome men are drunk, and ſome are paſſionate, and ſome are mad. Drunkenneſs and Paſſions which are the diſturbances of Reaſon, are no diſgrace to Reaſon, but to themſelves: Nor were they a diſgrace themſelves, if Reaſon which they hinders were not honourable. So no mans ſins are a diſgrace to Holineſs, which condemneth them: nor were they bad themſelves, if holineſs were not good, which they oppoſe. It is no diſgrace to the day-light or Sun that there is night and darkneſs: Nor were darkneſs bad, if light were not good. Will you refuſe health, becauſe ſome men are ſick? Nay, will you rather chooſe to be dead, becauſe the living have infirmities? The Devils reaſoning is ſoolifher than this! Holineſs is of abſolute neceſſity to ſalvation: If many that do more than you, are as bad as you imagine, what a caſe then are you in, that have not near ſo much as they? If they that make it their greateſt care to pleaſe God, and be ſaved, are as very Hypocrites, as the Devil would perſwade you, what a hopeleſs caſe then are you in, that come far ſhort of them? If ſo, you muſt do more than they, and not leſs, if you will be ſaved? Or elſe out of your own mouths will you be condemned.

Tem. 29. §. 58. Tempt. 29. Another way of the Tempter is, by drawing them deſperately to venture their ſouls; Come on them what will, they'le put it to the venture, rather than live ſo ſtrict a life.

Dir. 29. §. 59. Direct. 29. But, O man, conſider what thou doſt, and who will have the loſs of it! and how quickly it may be too late to recall thy adventure! What ſhould put thee on ſo mad a reſolution? Is ſin ſo good? Is Hell ſo eaſie? Is thy ſoul ſo contemptible? Is Heaven ſuch a trifle? Is God ſo hard a Maſter? Is his work ſo grievous, and his way ſo bad? Doth he require any thing unreaſonable of you? Hath God ſet you ſuch a grievous task, that it's better venture on damnation, than perform it? You cannot believe this, if you believe him to be God. Come near, and think more deliberately on it, and you will find you might better run from your food, your friend, your life, than from your God, and from a holy life, when you run but into ſin and Hell.

Tem. 30. §. 60. Tempt. 30. Another great Temptation is, in making them believe that their ſins are but ſuch common infirmities as the beſt have; They cannot deny but they have their faults, but are not all men ſinners! They hope that they are not reigning unpardoned ſins.

Dir. 30. §. 61. Direct. 30. But O how great a difference is between a converted and an unconverted ſinner! between the failings of a Child, and the contempt of a Rebel! between a ſinner that hath no groſs or mortal ſin, and hateth, bewaileth, and ſtriveth againſt his infirmities; and a ſinner that loveth his ſin, and is loth to leave it, and maketh light of it, and loveth not a holy life. God will one day ſhew you a difference between theſe two, when you ſee that there are ſinners that are juſtifyed and ſaved, and ſinners that are condemned.

Temp. 1. §. 62. Temp. 1. But here are many ſubordinate Temptations by which Satan perſwades them that their ſins are but infirmities: One is, becauſe their ſin is but in the heart, and appeareth not in outward deeds: And they take reſtraint for ſanctification.

Dir. 1. §. 63. Direct. 1. Alas man, the Life and Reign of ſin is in the Heart: That is its Garriſon and Throne: The life of ſin lyeth in the prevalence of your luſts within, againſt the Power of Reaſon and Will. All outward ſins are but Acts of obedience to the reigning ſin within, and a gathering Tribute for this which is the King. For this it is that they make proviſion, Rom. 13. 14. On this all is conſumed, James 4. 3 Original ſin may be reigning ſin (as a King may be born a King). Sin certainly reigneth, till the ſoul be converted and born again.

Temp. 2. §. 64. Tempt. 2. The Devil tells them, it is but an infirmity, becauſe it is no open groſs diſgraceful ſin:

ſin : It's hard to believe that they are in danger of Hell, for ſins which are accounted ſmall.

Dir. 2. §. 65. Direct. 2. But do you think it is no mortal heinous ſin, to be void of the Love of God and holineſs? to Love the fleſh and the world above him? to ſet more by Earth than Heaven, and do more for it? However they ſhew themſelves, theſe are the great and mortal ſins. Sin is not leſs dangerous for lying ſecret in the heart. The root and heart are uſually unſeen. Some Kings (as in China, Perſia, &c.) keep out of ſight for the honour of their Majeſty. Kings are the ſpring of Government, but actions of State are executed by Officers. When you ſee a man go or work, you know that it is ſomething within which is the Cauſe of all. If ſin appeared without, as it is within, it would loſe much of its Power and Majeſty. Then Miniſters, and Friends, and every good man would caſt a ſtone at it: but its ſecreſie is its peace. The Devil himſelf prevaileth by keeping out of ſight. If he were ſeen, he would be leſs obeyed. So is it with the Reigning ſins of the heart. Pride and Covetouſneſs may be Reigning ſins, though they appear not in any notorious diſgraceful courſe of life. David's hiding his ſin, or Rachel her Idol, made them not the better. It is a mercy to ſome men, that God permitteth them to fall into ſome open ſcandalous ſin, which may tend to humble them, who would not have been humbled nor convinced by heart ſins alone. An Oven is hotteſt when it is ſtopped.

See Jer. 4. 14. Hoſ. 7. 6, 7.

Temp. 3. §. 66. Tempt. 3. Satan tells them, they are not unpardoned reigning ſins, becauſe they are common in the world: If all that are as bad as I muſt be condemned, ſay they, God help a great number.

Dir. 3. §. 67. Direct. 3. But know you not that Reigning ſin is much more common than ſaving holineſs? and that the gate is wide, and the way is broad that leadeth to deſtruction, and many go in at it? Salvation is as rare as holineſs: and damnation as common as Reigning ſin, where it is not cured. This ſign therefore makes againſt you.

Temp. 4. §. 68. Tempt. 4. But, ſaith the Tempter, they are ſuch ſins as you ſee good men commit: You play at the ſame games as they: you do but what you ſee them do; and they are pardoned.

Dir. 4. §. 69. Direct. 4. You muſt judge the man by his works, and not the works by the man. And there is more to be lookt at, than the bare matter of an act. A good man and a bad may play at the ſame game, but not with the ſame end, nor with the ſame love to ſport, nor ſo frequently and long to the loſs of time. Many drops may wear a ſtone: Many ſtripes with ſmall twigs may draw blood. Many mean men in a Senate have been as great Kings: You may have many of theſe little ſins ſet all together, which plainly make up a carnal life. The power of a ſin, is more conſiderable than the outward ſhew. A poor man if he be in the place of a Magiſtrate, may be a Ruler. And a ſin materially ſmall, and ſuch as better men commit, may be a ſin in Power and Rule with you, and concur with others which are greater.

Temp. 5. §. 70. Tempt. 5. But, ſaith the Tempter, they are but ſins of Omiſſion, and ſuch are not reigning ſins.

Dir. 5. §. 71. Direct. 5. Sins of Omiſſion are always accompanied with ſome poſitive ſenſual affection to the creature, which diverteth the ſoul, and cauſeth the omiſſion. And ſo Omiſſion is no ſmall part of the Reigning ſin. The not uſing of Reaſon and the Will for God, and for the mattering of ſenſuality, is much of the ſtate of ungodlineſs in man. Denying God the heart and life, is no ſmall ſin. God made you to do good, and not only to do no harm: Elſe a Stone or Corpſe were as good a Chriſtian as you; for they do leſs harm than you. If ſin have a Negative voice in your Religion, whether God ſhall be worſhipped and obeyed or not, it is your King: It may ſhew its power as well by commanding you not to pray, and not to conſider, and not to read, as in commanding you to be drunk or ſwear. The wicked are deſcribed by omiſſions: ſuch as will not ſeek after God: God is not in all his thoughts, Pſal. 10. 4. Such as know not God, and call not on his name, Jer. 10. 25. That have no truth, or mercy, or knowledge of God, Hoſ. 4. 1. That feed not, clothe not, viſit not Chriſt in his members, Matth. 25. that hide their Talents, Matth. 25. Indeed, if God have not your hearts, the creature hath it; and ſo it is omiſſion and commiſſion that go together in your reigning ſin.

Temp. 6. §. 72. Tempt. 6. But, ſaith the Tempter, they are but ſins of ignorance, and therefore they are not reigning ſins: At leaſt you are not certain that they are ſins.

Dir. 6. §. 73. Direct. 6. And indeed do you not know that it is a ſin to love the world better than God? and fleſhly pleaſure better than Gods ſervice; and Riches better than grace and holineſs? and to do more for the body, than for the ſoul, and for earth, than for Heaven? Are you uncertain whether theſe are ſins? And do you not feel that they are your ſins? You cannot pretend ignorance for theſe. But what cauſeth your Ignorance? Is it becauſe you would fain know, and cannot? Do you read, and hear, and ſtudy, and enquire, and pray for knowledge, and yet cannot know? Or is it not becauſe you would not know, or think it not worth the pains to get it? or becauſe you love your ſin? And will ſuch wilful ignorance as this excuſe you? No, it doth make your ſin the greater. It ſheweth the greater dominion of ſin, when it can uſe thee as the Philiſtines did Sampſon, put out thy eyes, and make a drudge of thee; and conquer thy Reaſon, and make thee believe that evil is good, and good is evil. Now it hath maſtered the principal fortreſs of thy ſoul, when thy underſtanding is maſtered by it. He is reconciled indeed to his enemy, who taketh him to be a friend: Do you not know, that God ſhould have your heart, and Heaven ſhould have your chiefeſt care and diligence; and that you ſhould make the Word of God your Rule, and your delight and meditation day and night? If you know not theſe things, it is becauſe you would not know them. And it is a miſerable caſe to be given up to a blinded mind! Take heed leſt at laſt you commit the horrideſt ſins, and do not know them to be ſins. For ſuch there are that mock at Godlineſs, and perſecute Chriſtians and Miniſters of Chriſt, and know not that they do ill, but think they do God ſervice, John 16. 2. If a man will make himſelf drunk, and then kill, and ſteal, and abuſe his neighbours, and ſay, I knew not that I did ill, it ſhall not excuſe him: This is your caſe. You are drunken with the love of fleſhly pleaſure and worldly things, and theſe carry you ſo away, that you have neither heart nor time to ſtudy the Scriptures, and hear, and think what God ſaith to you, and then ſay, that you did not know.

Temp. 7. §. 74. Tempt. 7. But, ſaith the Tempter, it cannot be a mortal reigning ſin, becauſe it is not committed with the whole heart, nor without ſome ſtrugling and reſiſtance: Doſt thou not feel the Spirit ſtriving againſt the fleſh? And ſo it is with the Regenerate, Gal. 5. 17. Rom. 7. 20, 21, 22, 25. The good which thou doſt not do, thou wouldſt do; and the evil which thou doſt, thou wouldſt not do, ſo then it is no more thou that doſt it, but ſin that dwelleth in thee. In a ſenſual unregenerate perſon, there is but one party, there is nothing but fleſh, but thou feeleſt the combat between the Fleſh and the Spirit within thee.

§. 75. Direct. 7. This is a Snare so subtile and dangerous, that you have need of Eyes in your Head to scape it. Understand therefore, 1. That as to the two Texts of Scripture much abused by the Tempter, they speak not at all of mortal reigning sin, but of the unwilling infirmities of such as had subdued all such sin, and walked not after the flesh, but after the Spirit; and whose Wills were habitually bent to good; and fain would have been perfect, and not have been guilty of an idle thought, or word, or of any Imperfection in their holiest service, but lived up to all that the Law requireth: but this they could not do, because the flesh did cast many flops before the will in the performance. But this is nothing to the case of one that liveth in gross sin, and an ungodly life, and hath strivings and convictions, and uneffectual wishes to be better and to turn, but never doth it: This is but sinning against Conscience, and resisting the Spirit that would convert you; and it maketh you worthy of many stripes, as being rebellious against the importunities of Grace. Sin may be resisted, where it is never conquered: It may reign nevertheless for some contradiction. Every one that resisteth the King, doth not depose him from his Throne. It's a dangerous deceit to think that every good Desire that contradicteth sin, doth conquer it, and is a sign of saving grace. It must be a desire after a State of Godliness, and an effectual desire too. There are degrees of Power: some may have a less and limited power, and yet be Rulers. As the evil Spirits that possessed mens bodies, were a Legion in one, and but one in others, yet both were possessed: So is it here Grace is not without resistance in a holy Soul: there is some remnants of corruption in the will it self, resisting the Good: and yet it followeth not, that Grace doth not rule. So is it in the sin of the unregenerate. No man in this life is so good, as he will be in Heaven, or so bad, as he will be in Hell: Therefore none is void of all moral good. And the least good will resist evil, in its degree, as Light doth darkness. As in these cases,

What Resistance of sin may be in the Ungodly.

§. 76. 1. There is in the unregenerate a remnant of Natural Knowledge and Conscience: some Discoveries of God and his will there are in his works: God hath not left himself without witness. See Acts 14. 17. & 17. 27. Rom. 1. 19, 20. & 2. 7, 8, 9. This Light and Law of Nature governed the Heathens: And this in its measure resisteth sin, and afflicteth conscience.

§. 77. 2. When supernatural extrinsick Revelation in the Scripture, is added to the Light and Law of Nature, and the ungodly have all the same Law as the best; it may do more.

§. 78. 3. Moreover an ungodly man may live under a most powerful Preacher, that will never let him alone in his sins, and may stir up much fear in him, and many good purposes, and almost perswade him to be a true Christian, and not only to have some uneffectual wishings and strivings against sin, but to do many things after the Preacher, as Herod did after John, and to escape the common pollutions of the world, 2 Pet. 2. 20.

§. 79. 4. Some sharp affliction added to the rest, may make him seem to others a true Penitent: when he is stopt in his course of sin, as Balaam was by the Angel with a drawn Sword, and seeth that he cannot go on but in danger of his life; and that God is still meeting him with some cross, and hedging up his way with thorns (for such mercy he sheweth to some of the ungodly) this may not only breed resistance of sin, but some reformation. When the Babylonians were planted in Samaria, they feared not God, and he set Lyons among them; and then they feared him, and set up some kind of service to him, performed by a base sort of Priests; they feared the Lord, and served their own Gods, thinking it was safest to please all, 2 Kings 17. 25, 32, 33. Affliction maketh bad men, likest to the good.

§. 80. 5. Good Education and Company may do very much: It may help them to much knowledge, and make them Professors of strict Religion; and constant Companions with those that fear sin, and avoid it; and therefore they must needs go far then, as Joash did all the Days of Jehojada, 2 Chron. 24. 2. As Plants and Fruits change with the soil by transplantation, and as the Climate maketh some Blackmoors and some White, so education and converse have so great a Power on the Mind, that they come next to grace, and are oft the means of it.

§. 81. 6. And God giveth to many internally some grace of the Spirit, which is not proper to them that are saved, but common or preparatory only. And this may make much resistance against sin, tho' it do not mortify it. One that should live but under the Convictions that Judas had when he hang'd himself, I warrant him would have Strivings and combats against sin in him, though he were unsanctified.

§. 82. 7. Yea, the interest and power of one sin, may resist another. As covetousness may make much resistance against sensuality and pride of life, and pride may resist all disgraceful sin.

§. 83. Temp. 8. But, saith the Tempter, it is not unpardoned sin, because thou art sorry and dost repent for it when thou hast committed it: and all sin is pardoned that is repented of. Temp. 8.

§. 84. Direct. 8. All the foresaid causes which may make some resistance of sin in the ungodly, may cause also some sorrow and repenting in them. There is repenting and sorrow for sin in Hell. All men repent and are sorry at last: but few repent so, as to be pardoned and saved. When a sinner hath had all the sweetness out of sin that it can yield him, and seeth that it's all gone, and the sting is left behind, no marvel if he repent. I think there is scarce any Drunkard, or Whoremonger, or Glutton, (that is not a flat Infidel) but he repenteth of the sin that's past, because he hath had all out of it that it can yield him, and there is nothing left of it that's lovely: But yet he goeth on still; which sheweth that his Repentance was unsound: True Repentance is a thorough change of the heart and life: a turning from sin to a holy life: and such a sorrow for what is past, as would not let you do it, if it were to do again. If you truly repent, you would not do so again if you had all the same Temptations. Dir. 8.

§. 85. Temp. 9. But, saith the Tempter, it is but one sin, and the rest of thy life is good and blameless: and God judgeth by the greater part of thy life: whether the evil or the good be most. Temp. 9.

§. 86. Direct. 9. If a man be a Murderer, or a Traytor, will you excuse him, because the rest of his life is good, and it is but one sin that he is charged with? One sort of poyson may kill a man; and one stab at the Heart, tho' all his Body else be whole: you may surfeit on one dish: One leak may sink a Ship. Jam. 2. 10. Whosoever shall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one Point, is guilty of all. See Ezek. 18. 10, 11. Indeed God doth judge by the bent of thy heart, and the main Drift and Endeavour of thy Life. But canst thou say, that the bent of thy heart, and the main endeavour of thy life, is for God, and Heaven, and Holiness? No: If it were, thou wert Regenerate; and this would not let thee live in any one beloved, chosen, wilful sin. The bent of a mans heart and life may be sinful, earthly, fleshly, though it run but in the channel of one way of gross sinning! As a Man may be covetous, that hath but Dir. 9.

one Trade; and a Whoremonger, that hath but one Whore; and an Idolater, that hath but one Idol. If thou lovedst God better, thou wouldst let go thy sin: And if thou love any one sin better than God, the whole bent of thy heart and life is wicked: For it is not set upon God and Heaven, and therefore is ungodly.

Tem. 10. §. 87. Temp. 10. But, saith the Tempter, it is not reigning unpardoned sin, because thou believest in Jesus Christ: And all that believe, are pardoned and justified from all their Sin.

Dir. 10. §. 89. Direct. 10. He that savingly believeth in Christ, doth take him entirely for his Saviour and Governour; and giveth up himself to be saved, sanctified and ruled by him: As Trusting your Physician, implyeth that you take his Medicines, and follow his Advice, and so trust him: and not that you trust to be cured while you disobey him, by bare trusting: so is it as to your faith and trust in Christ: It is a Belief or Trust that he will save all those, that are ruled by him in order to salvation. He is the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him: Heb 5. 9. If you believe in Christ, you believe Christ: And if you believe Christ, you believe that except a man be converted and born again, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, John 3. 3, 5. Matth. 18. 3. and that he that is in Christ, is a new creature; old things are past away, and all is become new, 2 Cor. 5. 17. And that without holiness none shall see God. Heb 12. 14. And that no fornicator, effeminate, theives, covetous, drunkards, revilers, extortioners, murderers, lyars, shall enter into, or have any inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Ephes. 5. 4, 5, 6. Rev. 21. 27. & 22. 14, 15. If you believe Christ, you must believe that you cannot be saved, unless you be converted. It is the Devil and not Christ, that telleth you, you may be pardoned and saved in an unholy unregenerate state: And it's sad, that men should believe the Devil, and call this a Believing in Christ, and think to be saved for so believing! as if false faith and presumption pleased God. Christ will not save men for believing a lye, and believing the Father of lyes before him: Nor will he save all that are confident they shall be saved. If you think you have any part in Christ, remember, Rom. 8. 9. If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, the same is none of his.

CHAP. II.

Directions to young Christians or Beginners in Religion, for their Establishment and safe Proceeding.

BEfore I come to the Common Directions for the Exercise of Grace, and walking with God containing the common Duties of Christianity, I shall lay down some previous Instructions proper to those that are but newly entred into Religion, (presupposing what is said in my Book of Directions to those that are yet under the work of Conversion, to prevent their miscarrying by a false superficial change.)

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. TAke heed lest it be the Novelty or reputation of Truth and Godliness, that takes with you, more than the solid Evidence of their Excellency and Necessity: lest when the Novelty and Reputation are gone, your Religion wither and consume away.

§. 1. It is said of John and the Jews by Christ, [He was a burning and a shining light, and ye were willing for a season to rejoyce in his light.] John 5. 35. All men are affected most with things that seem new and strange to them. It is not only the Infirmity of Children, that are pleased with new Cloaths, and new Toyes and Games; but even to graver wiser persons, new things are most affecting, and commonness and custom dulls delight. Our Habitations, and Possessions, and Honours, are most pleasing to us at the first: And every condition of life doth most affect us, at the first: If nature were not much for Novelty, the publishing of News-books would not have been so gainful a Trade so long, unless the matter had been truer and more desirable. Hence it is that Changes are so welcome to the world, though they prove ordinarily to their cost. No wonder then, if Religion be the more acceptable, when it comes with this advantage. When Men first hear the Doctrine of Godliness, and the Tydings of another World, by a powerful Preacher opened and set home, no wonder if things of so great moment affect them for a time: It is said of them that received the seed of Gods Word as into stony ground, that [forthwith it sprung up] and they [anon with joy received it] Matth. 13. 5, 20. but it quickly withered for want of rooting. These kind of Hearers can no more delight still in one Preacher, or one Profession, or way, than a Glutton in one Dish, or an Adulterer in one Harlot: For it is but a kind of sensual or natural Pleasure that they have in the highest truths: And all such delight must be fed with Novelty and variety of objects. The Athenians were inquisitive after Pauls doctrine as Novelty, though after they rejected it, as seeming to them incredible, Acts 17. 19, 20, 21. May we know what this new Doctrine whereof thou speakest is? For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean: For all the Athenians and Strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but to tell or hear some new thing.

§. 2. To this kind of Professours, the greatest Truths grow out of fashion, and they grow weary of them, as of dull and ordinary things: They must have some New Light, or new way of Religion that lately came in fashion: Their Souls are weary of that Manna that at first was acceptable to them, as Angels Food. Old things seem low, and new things high to them: And to entertain some Novelty in Religion, is to grow up to more maturity: And too many such at last so far overthrive their old apparel, that the Old Christ, and Old Gospel are left behind them.

§. 3. The Light of the Gospel is speedilier communicated, than the Heat: And this first part being most acceptable to them, is soon received: and Religion seemeth best to them at first. At first they have the Light of Knowledge alone: and then they have the Warmth of a new and prosperous Profession: there must be some time for the operating of the Heat, before it burneth them: and then they have enough, and cast it away in as much haste as they took it up: If Preachers would only lighten and shoot no Thunderbolts; even a Herod himself would hear them gladly, and do many things after them: But when their Herodias is medled with, they cannot bear it. If Preachers would speak only to mens Fancies or Understandings, and not meddle too smartly with their Hearts, and Lives, and carnal Interests, the World would bear them, and hear them as they do Stage-Players, or at least as Lecturers in Philosophy or Physick: A Sermon that hath nothing but some general toothless notions in a handsome dress of words, doth seldom procure offence or persecution: It is rare that such mens preach-preaching is distasted by carnal hearers, or their persons hated for it. It is a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the Sun, Eccles. 11. 7. But not to be scorched by its heat. Christ himself at a distance as promised, was greatly desired by the Jews: but when he came, they could not bear him; his doctrine and life were so contrary to their expectations, Mal. 3. 1, 2, 3. [The Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come into his Temple; even the Messenger of the Covenant whom you delight in, behold he shall come saith the Lord of Hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a Refiners fire, and like Fullers soap.] Many when they come first (by profession) to Christ, do little think that he would cast them into the fire, and refine them, and purge away their dross, and cast them anew into the mould of the Gospel, Rom. 6. 17. Many will play a while by the Light; that will not endure to be melted by the fire. When the Preacher cometh once to this, he is harsh and intolerable, and loseth all the praise which he had won before, and the pleasing Novelty of Religion is over with them. The Gospel is sent to make such work in the soul and life, as these tender persons will not endure: It must captivate every thought to Christ, and kill every lust and pleasure which is against his will; and put a new and heavenly life into the soul: It must possess men with deep and lively apprehensions of the great things of eternity: It is not wavering dull Opinions, that will raise and carry on the soul, to such vigorous, constant, victorious action, as is necessary to salvation. When the Gospel cometh to the Heart, to do this great prevailing work, then these men are impatient of the search and smart, and presently have done with it. They are like Children, that love the Book for the gilding and fineness of the Cover, and take it up as soon as any: but it is to play with, and not to learn: They are weary of it when it comes to that. At first many come to Christ with wonder, and will needs be his servants for something in it that seemeth fine: till they hear that the Son of Man hath not the accommodation of the Birds or Foxes; and that his doctrine and way hath an enmity to their worldly fleshly interest, and then they are gone. They first entertained Christ in complement, thinking that he would please them, or not much contradict them; But when they find that they have received a guest, that will rule them, and not be ruled by them, that will not suffer them to take their pleasure, nor enjoy their riches, but hold them to a life which they cannot endure, and even undo them in the world, he is then no longer a guest for them. Whereas if Christ had been received as Christ, and Truth and Godliness deliberately entertained for their well-discerned Excellency and Necessity, the deep rooting would have prevented this Apostasie, and cured such Hypocrisie.

§. 4. But alas, poor Ministers find by sad experience, that all prove not Saints that flock to hear them, and make up the crowd, not that for a season rejoyce in their light, and magnify them, and take their parts: The blossom hath its beauty and sweetness; but all that blossometh or appeareth in the bud, doth not come to perfect fruit: Some will be blasted; and some blown down; some nipt with frosts; some eaten by Worms; some quickly fall; and some hang on till the strongest blasts do cast them down: some are deceived and poysoned by false Teachers: some by worldly cares, and the deceitfulness of riches, become unfruitful and are turned aside: The lusts of some had deeper rooting than the Word: And the friends of some had greater interest in them than Christ, and therefore they forsake him to satisfie their importunity: some are corrupted by the hopes of preferment, or the favour of man: some feared from Christ by their threats and frowns, and choose to venture on damnation, to scape persecution: And some are so worldly wise, that they can see reason to remit their zeal, and can save their souls and bodies too, and prove that to be their duty, which other men call sin (if the end will but answer their expectations:) And some grow weary of truth and duty as a dull and common thing, being not supplyed with that variety which might still continue the delights of Novelty.

§. 5. Yet mistake not what I have said, as if all the affection furthered by Novelty, and abated by Commonness and use, were a sign that the person is but an Hypocrite. I know that there is something in the Nature of man, remaining in the best, which disposeth us to be much more passionately affected with things when they seem New to us, and are first apprehended, than when they are old, and we have known or used them long. There is not, I believe, one man of a thousand, but is much more delighted in the Light of Truth when it first appeareth to him, than when it is trite and familiarly known; and is much more affected with a powerful Minister at first, than when he hath long sate under him. The same Sermon that even transported them at the first hearing, would affect them less, if they had heard it preach'd an hundred times. The same Books which greatly affected us at the first or second reading, will affect us less when we have read them over twenty times: The same words of Prayer that take much with us when seldom used, do less move our affections, when they are daily used all the year. At our first conversion we have more passionate sorrow for our sin, and love to the godly, than we can afterwards retain. And all this is the case of learned and unlearned, the sound and unsound, though not of all alike. Even heaven it self is spoken of by Christ, as if it did participate of this, when he saith that Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, that need no repentance, Luke 15. 7, 10. And I know it is the duty of Ministers to take notice of this disposition in their hearers, and not to dull them with giving them still the same, but to profit them by a pleasant and profitable variety: Not by preaching to them another Christ, or a new Gospel: It is the same God, and Christ, and Spirit, and Scripture, and the same heaven, the same Church, the same faith, and hope, and repentance and obedience, that we must preach to them as long as we live: Though they say, we have heard this an hundred times; Let them hear it still, and bring them not a new Creed. If they hear so oft of God, and Christ, and Heaven, till by Faith, and Love, and Fruition they attain them as their end, they have heard well. But yet there is a grateful variety of subordinate particulars, and of words, and methods, and seasonable applications, necessary to the right performance of our Ministry, and to the profiting of the flocks: Though the Physician use the same Apothecaries Shop and Dispensatory and Drugs, yet how great a variety must he use of compositions, and times, and manner of administration?

§. 6. But for all this, though the best are affected most with things that seem new, and are dulled with the long and frequent use of the same expressions, yet they are never weary of the substance of their Religion, so as to desire a change: And though they are not so passionately affected with the same Sermons, and Books, or with the thoughts or mention of the same substantial matters of Religion, as at first they were: Yet do their Judgments more solidly and tenaciously embrace them, and esteem them, and their wills as

Resolvedly

Fere idem exitus est odii & amoris insani. Senec. de Ben.

Resolvedly adhere to them and use them, and in their Lives they practise them better than before. Whereas they that take up their Religion but for Novelty, will lay it down when it ceaseth to be new to them, and must either change for a newer, or have none at all.

§. 7. And as unsound are they that are religious, only because their Education or their Friends, or the Laws, or Judgment of their Rulers, or the Custom of the Country, hath made it necessary to their Reputation: These are Hypocrites at the first setting out, and therefore cannot be saved by continuance in such a carnal Religiousness as this: I know Law, and Custom, and Education, and Friends, when they side with Godliness, are a great Advantage to it, by affording Helps, and removing those Impediments that might stick much with carnal minds. But truth is not your own, till it be received in its proper evidence; nor your faith divine, till you believe what you believe, because God is true who doth reveal it; nor are you the Children of God, till you love him for himself; nor are you truly Religious, till the Truth and Goodness of Religion it self be the principal thing that maketh you Religious. It helpeth much to discover a mans sincerity, when he is not only Religious among the Religious, but among the prophane, and the Enemies, and Scorners, and Persecutors of Religion: And when a Man doth not pray only in a praying Family, but among the Prayerless, and the Deriders of fervent constant Prayer: And when a Man is Heavenly among them that are earthly; and temperate among the intemperate and riotous; and holdeth the truth among those that reproach it, and that hold the contrary: When a man is not carried only by a stream of Company, or outward Advantages to his Religion; nor avoideth Sin for want of a Temptation; but is Religious though against the Stream, and innocent when cast (unwillingly) upon Temptations; and is Godly where Godliness is accounted singularity, hypocrisie, faction, humour, disobedience or heresie: and will rather let go the reputation of his honesty, than his honesty it self.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Take heed of being Religious only in Opinion, without Zeal and holy practice; or only in Zealous affection without a sound well grounded Judgment: But see that Judgment, Zeal, and Practice be conjunct.

§. 1. Of the first part of this Advice (against a bare Opinionative Religion) I have spoken already, in my Directions for a Sound Conversion. To change your Opinions is an easier matter than to change the Heart and Life. A holding of the truth, will save no man, without a Love and practice of the truth. This is the meaning of James 2. where he speaketh so much of the unprofitableness of a dead unaffected belief, that worketh not by love, and commandeth not the Soul to practice and obedience. To believe that there is a God, while you neglect him and disobey him, is unlike to please him: To believe that there is a heaven while you neglect it, and prefer the world before it, will never bring you thither. To believe your duty, and not to perform it, and to believe that sin is evil, and yet to live in it, is to sin with Aggravation, and have no excuse, and not the way to be accepted or justified with God. To be of the same Belief with holy men, without the same hearts and conversations, will never bring you to the same felicity. He that knoweth his Masters Will and doth it not, shall be so far from being accepted for it, that he shall be beaten with many stripes. To believe that Holiness and Obedience is the best way, will never save the disobedient and unholy.

§. 2. And yet if Judgment be not your Guide, the most zealous affections will but precipitate you; and make you run, though quite out of the way, like the Horses when they have cast the Coachman, or the Riders. To ride Post when you are quite out of the way, is but laboriously to lose your time, and to prepare for further labour. The Jews that persecuted Christ and his Apostles, had the Testimony of Paul himself, that they had a zeal of God but not according to knowledge. And Paul saith of the Deceivers and Troublers of the Galatians (whom he wished even cut off) that they did zealously affect them, but not well. Rom. 10. 2. Gal. 4. 17. And he saith of himself, while he persecuted Christians to prison and to death, [I was zealous towards God as ye are all this day] Acts 22. 3, 4. Was not the Papists Saint Dominick, that stirred up the Persecution against the Christians in France and Savoy, to the murdering of many thousands of them, a very zealous man? And are not the Butchers of the Inquisition zealous men? And were not the Authors of the third Canon of the General Council at the Lateran under Pope Innocent the third, very zealous men, that decreed that the Pope should depose Temporal Lords, and give away their Dominions, and absolve their Subjects, if they would not exterminate the Godly, called Hereticks? Were not the Papists Powder-Plotters zealous men? Hath not zeal caused many of latter times, to rise up against their lawful Governours? and many to persecute the Church of God, and to deprive the people of their faithful Pastors, without compassion on the Peoples souls? Doth not Christ say of such Zealots, The time cometh, when whosoever killeth you, will think he doth God service? John 16. 2. (or offereth a service (acceptable) to God.) Therefore Paul saith, It is good to be zealously affected always in a good matter, Gal. 4. 18. Shewing you that zeal indeed is good, if sound judgment be its guide. Your first question must be, Whether you are in the right way? and your second, Whether you go apace? It is sad to observe what odious Actions are committed in all Ages of the world, by the instigation of misguided zeal? And what a shame an imprudent Zealot is to his Profession, while making himself ridiculous in the Eyes of the Adversaries, he brings his Profession it self into contempt, and maketh the ungodly think that the Religious are but a company of transported brain-sick Zealots: And thus they are hardened to their Perdition. How many things doth unadvised affection provoke well-meaning people to, that afterwards will be their shame and sorrow?

§. 3. Labour therefore for knowledge and soundness of understanding; that you may know truth from falshood, good from evil; and may walk confidently, while you walk safely; and that you become not a shame to your profession, by a furious persecution of that which you must afterwards confess to be an errour; by drawing others to that which you would after wish that you had never known your selves. And yet see that all your knowledge have its efficacy, upon your Heart and Life: And take every truth as an Instrument of God, to reveal himself to you, or to draw your heart to him, and conform you to his holy will.

Scintilla quæ in remota a justitia, calditas ipsa quam sapientia appellandæ est. P. Scalig. Of the necessity of Prudence in Religious zeal, read Mr. Tidelius de Prudent. Veterum. The imprudencies of well meaning men, have done as much hurt to the Church sometimes as the persecution of Enemies, as e. g. When Constantine the Son of Constans was Emperour, some busie men would prove from the Orthodox Doctrine of the Trinity, That his two Brethren, Tiberius and Heraclius should reign with him: saying, Si in Trinitate credimus, tres etiam coronamus: which cost the chief of them a hanging. Abbas Urspergen. Edit. Basilæth. p. 133.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. Labour to understand the true Method of Divinity, and see Truths in their several Degrees and Order; that you take not the last for the first; nor the lesser for the greater. Therefore see that you be well grounded in the Catechism; and refuse not to learn some Catechism that that is found and full, and keep it in memory while you live.

Leg. Acost. l. 4. c. 21. & 22. de fruendo & utendo. Aug. de Doct. Christ. l. 1. c. 5.

Opus est. Imprimis duplici catechismo: Uno compendario & brevi quem memoriter addiscant; ubi summa sit eorum omnium quæ ad fidem & mores Christianos sunt necessaria: altero uberiore, ubi eadem amplius, atque denique dicantur, & confirmentur: ut ille prior discipulis detur, hic posterior ipsis præceptoribus usui sit. Acosta l. 6. c. 14. p. 490.

§. 1. Method or right Order exceedingly helpeth Understanding, Memory, and Practice. Truths have a Dependance on each other: The lesser Branches spring out of the greater, and those out of the stock and root. Some Duties are but means to other duties, or subservient to them, and to be measured accordingly: And if it be not understood which is the chief, the other cannot be referred to it. When two things materially good come together, and both cannot be done, the greater must take place, and the lesser is no duty at that time, but a sin, as preferred before the greater. Therefore it is one of the commonest Difficulties among Cases of Conscience, to know which Duty is the greater, and to be preferred. Upon this ground Christ healed on the Sabbath day, and pleaded for his Disciples rubbing the Ears of Corn, and for Davids eating the shew bred, and telleth them, that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, and that God will have mercy, and not Sacrifice.

Divinity is a curious well composed Frame. As it is not enough that you have all the parts of your Watch or Clock; but you must see that every part be in its proper place, or else it will not go, or answer its end: so it is not enough that you know the several parts of Divinity or Duty, unless you know them in their true Order and Place. You may be confounded before you are aware, and led into many dangerous Errours, by mistaking the Order of several Truths: And you may be misguided into heinous Sins, by mistaking the Degrees and Order of Duties? As when Duties of Piety and Charity seem to be Competitors: And when you think that the Commands of men contradict the Commands of God; and when the Substance and the Circumstances or Modes of Duty are in question before you as inconsistent: or when the Means seemeth to cease to be a means, by crossing of the end: and in abundance of such cases, you cannot easily conceive what a snare it may prove to you, to be ignorant of the Methods and Ranks of duty.

§. 2. Object. If that be so, what man can choose but be confounded in his Religion, when there be so few that observe any Method at all, and few that agree in Method, and none that hath published a Scheme or Method so exact and clear, as to be commonly approved by Divines themselves. What then can Ignorant Christians do?

Spiridonius contextes sibi in idem ideam cum conaretur, ut qui unam habuerit, omnes habeat, Laertius in Zenone.

Answ. Divinity is like a Tree that hath one Trunk, and thence a few greater arms or boughs, and thence a thousand smaller branches: Or like the Veins, or Nerves, or Arteries in the Body, that have first one or few trunks divided into more, and those into a few more, and those into more, till they multiply at last into more than can easily be seen or numbred. Now it is easie for any man to begin at the chief trunk, and to discern the first Divisions, and the next, tho' not to comprehend the number and order of all the extream and smaller Branches. So is it in Divinity: It is not very hard to begin at the Unity of the Eternal God-head, and see there a Trinity of Persons, and of Primary Attributes, and of Relations; and to arise to the principal Attributes and Works of God as in these Relations, and to the Relations of Man to God, and to the great Duties of these Relations, to discern Gods Covenants and chiefest Laws, and the Duty of man in Obedience thereto, and the Judgment of God in the Execution of his Sanctions: though yet many particular Truths be not understood. And he that beginneth, and proceedeth as he ought, doth know methodically so much as he knoweth: And he is in the right way to the knowledge of more: And the great Mercy of God hath laid so great a Necessity on us to know these few Points that are easily known, and so much less need of knowing the many small Particulars, that a mean Christian may live uprightly, and holily, and comfortably, that well understandeth his Catechism, or the Creed, Lords Prayer, and ten Commandments; and may find daily Work and Consolation in the use of these.

§. 3. A sound and well composed Catechism studied well and kept in memory, would be a good measure of knowledge, to ordinary Christians, and make them solid and orderly in their understanding, and in their proceeding to the smaller points, and would prevent a great deal of Errour and Miscarriage, that many by ill teaching are cast upon, to their own and the Churches grief! Yea, it were to be wished, that some Teachers of late had learnt so much and orderly themselves.

Direct. 4. BEgin not too early with Controversies in Religion: and when you come to them, let them have but their due proportion of your time and zeal: But live daily upon these certain great Substantials, which all Christians are agreed in. Dir. 4.

§. 1. I. Plunge not your selves too soon into Controversies: For, 1. It will be exceedingly to your loss, by diverting your Souls from greater and more necessary things: You may get more encrease of holiness, and spend your time more pleasingly to God, by drinking in deeper the Substantials of Religion, and improving them on your hearts and lives.

2. It will corrupt your minds, and instead of humility, charity, holiness, and heavenly mindedness, it will feed your Pride, and kindle Faction and a dividing zeal, and quench your charity, and possess you with a wrangling contentious Spirit, and you will make a Religion of these sins and lamentable distempers.

3. And it is the way to deceive and corrupt your Judgments, and make you erroneous or heretical, to your own Perdition, and the Disturbance of the Church: For it's two to one, but either you presently err, or else get such an itch after Notions and Opinions that will lead you to errour at the last. Because you are not yet ripe and able to judge of those things, till your minds are prepared by those truths that are first in order to be received. When you undertake a work that you cannot do, no wonder if it be ill done, and must be all undone again, or worse.

Perhaps you will say, That you must not take your Religion upon trust, but must prove all things, and hold fast that which is good.

Answ. Tho' your Religion must not be taken upon trust, there are many controverted smaller Opinions that you must take upon trust, till you are capable of discerning them in their proper evidence. Till you can reach them your selves, you must take them on trust, or not at all. Though you must believe all things of common necessity to salvation with a Divine Faith; yet many subservient truths must be received first by a human Faith, or not received at all, till you are more capable of them. Nay, there is a human Faith necessarily subservient to the Divine faith, about the substance of Religion; and the Officers of Christ are to be trusted in their Office, as Helpers of your Faith. Nay, let me tell you, that while you are young and ignorant, you are not fit for Controversies about the Fundamentals of Religion themselves. You may believe that there is a God, long before you are fit to hear an Atheist proving that there is no God: You may believe the Scripture to be the Word of God; and Christ to be the Saviour, and the Soul to be immortal, long before you will be fit to manage, or study Controversies hereupon. For nothing is so false or bad, which a wanton or wicked Wit may not put a plausible gloss upon: And your raw unfurnished understandings will scarce be able to see through the pretence, or escape the cheat. When you cannot answer the Arguments of Seducers, you will find them leave a doubting in your minds; For you know not how plain the answer of them is, to wiser men. And though you must prove all things, you must do it in due order, and as you are able: and stay till your furnished minds, are capable of the tryal. If you will needs read before you know your Letters, or pretend to judge of Greek and Hebrew Authors, before you can read English, you will but become ridiculous in your undertaking.

§. 2. II. When you do come to smaller Controverted points, let them have but their due proportion of your time and zeal. And that will not be one hour in many dayes, with the generality of private Christians. By that time you have well learned the more necessary truths, and practised daily the more necessary duties, you will find that there will be but little time to spare for lesser controversies. Opinionists that spend most of their Time in studying and talking of such points, do steal that time from greater matters, and therefore from God, and from themselves. Better work is undone the while. And they that here lay out their chiefest zeal, divert their zeal from things more necessary, and turn their natural heat into a Feavor.

§. 3. III. The Essential necessary Truths of your Religion, must imprint the Image of God upon your hearts, and must dwell there continually, and you must live upon them as your bread, and drink, and daily necessary food: All other points must be studied in subserviency to those: All lesser duties must be used as the exercise of the Love of God or man, and of a humble heavenly mind. The Articles of your Creed, and points of Catechism, are fountains ever running, affording you matter for the continual exercise of Grace: It is both plentiful and solid nourishment of the soul, which these great substantial points afford. To know God the Creatour, Redeemer and Sanctifier, the Laws and Covenant of God, and his Judgement, and Rewards and Punishments, with the parts and method of the Lords Prayer, which must be the daily exercise of our desires, and Love, this is the Wisdom of a Christian; and in these must he be continually exercised.

You'l say perhaps that the Apostle saith, Heb. 6. 1. Leaving the Principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, &c.

Answ. 1. By [leaving] he meaneth not passing over the practice of them as men that have done with them, and are past them: But his leaving at that time to discourse of them, or his supposing them taught already: Though he lay not the foundation again, yet he doth not pluck it up. 2. By [Principles] he meaneth the first points to be taught, and learnt, and practised: And indeed Regeneration and Baptism is not to be done again: But the Essentials of Religion which I am speaking of, contain much more: especially to live in the love of God, which Paul calls the more excellent way, 1 Cor. 12. & 13. 3. Going on to perfection, is not by ceasing to believe and Love God, but by a more distinct knowledge of the mysteries of salvation, to perfect our Faith, and Love, and Obedience.

The points that Opinionists call Higher, and think to be the principal matter of their growth, and advancement in understanding, are usually but some smaller less necessary truths, if not some uncertain doubtful questions. Mark well 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 6. 4. 2 Tim. 2. 23. Tit. 3. 9. compared with John 17. 3. Rom. 13. 8, 9, 10. 1 Cor. 13. 1 John 3. 1 Cor. 1. 23. & 15. 1, 2, 3. & 2. 2 Gal. 6. 14. James 2. & 3. 1.

Direct. 5. BE very thankful for the great mercy of your Conversion: but yet overvalue not your first degrees of knowledge or holiness, but remember that you are yet but in your infancy, and must expect your growth and ripeness as the consequent of Time and Diligence. Dir. 5.

§. 1. You have great reason to be more glad and thankful, for the least measure of true Grace, than if you had been made the Rulers of the Earth: it being of a far more excellent nature, and entitling you to more, than all the Kingdoms of the world. (See my Sermon called Right Rejoycing, on those words of Christ, Rejoyce not that the Spirits are subject to you: but rather rejoyce because your names are written in Heaven, Luke 10. 20.) Christ will warrant you to Rejoyce, though enemies envy you, and repine both at your victory and triumph. If there be joy in Heaven in the presence of the Angels at your Conversion, there is great reason you should be glad your selves. If the Prodigals Father will needs have the best Robe and Ring brought forth, and the fat Calf killed, and the Musick to attend the Feast, that they may eat and be Merry, Luke 15. 23. there is great reason that the Prodigal Son himself should not have the smallest share of joy: (though his Brother repine.)

§. 2. But yet take heed lest you think the measure of your first endowments, to be greater than it is. Grace imitateth Nature, in beginning (usually) with small Degrees, and growing up to maturity by leisurely proceeding. We are not new born in a state of manhood, as Adam was created: Though those Texts that liken the Kingdom of God to a grain of Mustard-seed, and to a little leaven, Matt. 13. 31, 33. be principally meant of the small beginnings, and great encrease of the Church or Kingdom of Christ in the world; yet it is true also of his Grace, or Kingdom in the soul. Our first Stature is but to be [New born babes desiring the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow by it,] 1 Pet. 2. 2. Note here that the new birth bringeth forth but babes, but growth is by degrees, by feeding on the Word. The Word is received by the heart, as seed into the ground, Matth. 13. And seed useth not to bring forth the blade and fruit to ripeness in a day.

Fear is a cautelous preserving grace. Laert. saith of Cleanthes, Cum aliquando probro illi duretur, quod esset timidus, At ideo inquit, parum pecco.

§. 3. Yet I deny not but that some men (as Paul) may have more Grace at their first Conversion, than many others have at their full growth. For God is free in the giving of his Own, and may give more or less, as pleaseth himself. But yet in Paul himself that greater measure is but his smallest measure, and he himself is capable of increase to the last. And so great a measure at first is as rare, as his greater measure at last in his full growth, is rare, and scarce to be expected now.

§. 4. And if God should give a great measure of Holiness at first, to any now (as possibly he may) yet their measure of gifts is never great at first, unless they had acquired or received them before conversion. If Grace find a man of great parts and understanding, which by study and other helps, he had attained before, no wonder if that man, when his parts are sanctified, be able in knowledge the first day. For he had it before, though he had not a heart to use it. But if Grace find a man ignorant, unlearned, and of mean abilities, he must not expect to be suddenly lifted up to great understanding, and high degrees of knowledge by Grace. For this knowledge is not given (now) by sudden infusion, as Gifts were extraordinarily in the Primitive Church. You need no other proof of this but Experience, to stop the Mouth of any Gain-sayer. Look about you, and observe whether those that are men of knowledge, did obtain it by infusion in a moment? Or whether they did not obtain it by diligent study by slow degrees? (Though I know God blesseth some mens studies more than others.) Name one man that ever was brought to great understanding but by Means, and Labour, and slow Degrees? Or that knoweth any truth in Nature, or Divinity, but what he read, or heard, or studied for, as the result of what he read or heard. The Person that is proudest of his knowledge, must confess that he came to it in this way himself.

How the Spirit doth illuminate.

§. 5. But you'l ask, What then is the Illumination of the Spirit, and enlightning the mind, which the Scripture ascribeth to the Holy Ghost? Hath not our understanding need of the Spirit for light, as well as the Heart or Will for life?

Answ. Yes no doubt; and it is a great and wonderful mercy; and I'le tell you what it is. 1. The Holy Spirit by immediate inspiration revealed to the Apostles the doctrine of Christ, and caused them infallibly to indite the Scriptures. (But this is not that way of ordinary illumination now.) 2. The Holy Spirit assisteth us in our hearing, reading, and studying the Scriptures, that we may come by diligence to the true understanding of it; but doth not give us that understanding, without hearing, reading or study. Faith cometh by hearing, Rom. 10. It blesseth the use of means to us, but blesseth us not in the neglect of means. 3. The Holy Spirit doth open the eyes and heart of a sinner who hath heard and notionally understood the Substance of the Gospel, that he may know that piercingly, and effectually, and practically, which before he knew but notionally and effectually: So that the knowledge of the same truth, is now become powerful, and as it were of another kind. And this is the Spirits sanctifying of the mind, and principal work of saving Illumination: Not by causing us to know any thing of God, or Christ, or Heaven without means: But by opening the heart, that through the means it may take in that knowledge deeply, which others have but notionally, and in a dead opinion; and by making our knowledge clear, and quick, and powerful, to affect the heart, and rule the life. 4. The Holy Spirit sanctifieth all that notional knowledge which men had before their renovation: All their learning and parts are now made subservient to Christ, and to the right End, and turned into their proper channel. 5. And the Holy Ghost doth by sanctifying the heart, possess it with such a Love to God, and Heaven, and Holiness, and Truth, as is a wonderful advantage to us in our studies for the attaining of further knowledge. Experience telleth us, how great a help it is to knowledge, to have a constant love, delight and desire to the thing which we would know. All these ways the Spirit is the Enlightner of Believers.

The not observing this Direction, will have direful effects; which I will name, that you may see the necessity of avoiding them.

The danger of overvaluing your young abilities or graces.

§. 6. 1. If you imagine that you are presently men of great understanding, and abilities, and holiness, while you are young beginners, and but new born babes, you are entring into the snare and condemnation of the Devil, even into the odious sin of Pride: yea, a Pride of those spiritual gifts which are most contrary to Pride: yea, and a Pride of that which you have not, which is most foolish Pride. Mark the words of Paul when he forbids to choose a young beginner in Religion to the Ministry, 1 Tim. 3. 6. [Not a Novice (that is, a young raw Christian) lest being lifted up (or besotted) with Pride, he fall into the condemnation of the Devil.] Why are young Beginners more in danger of this, than other Christians? One would think their Infancy should be conscious of its own infirmity. But Paul knew what he said. It is 1. Partly because the suddenness of their change, coming out of darkness, in to a light which they never saw before, doth amaze them, and transport them, and make them think they are almost in Heaven, and that there is not much more to be attained. Like the Beggar that had an hundred pound given him (having never seen the hundredth part before) imagined that he had as much money as the King. 2. And it is partly because they have not knowledge enough to know how many things there are, that yet they are ignorant of: They never heard of the Scripture-difficulties, and the knots in School-divinity, nor the hard cases of Conscience: Whereas one seven years painful studies, will tell them of many hundred difficulties which they never saw: and forty or fifty years study more, will cloth them with shame and humility in the sense of their lamentable darkness. 3. And it is also because the Devil doth with greatest industry, lay this Net to entrap young Converts, it being the way in which he hath the greatest hope.

Qui desiderium [illegible] claudum habet, contra vertum adversa studet [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] tum exoptat, hostem docet, Petrarch. Dial. 41. li. 2.

2. Your hasty conceits of your own Goodness or Ability, will make you presumptuous of your own strength, and so to venter upon dangerous temptations, which is the way to ruine. You will think you are not so ignorant, but you may venter into the company of Papists, or any Hereticks or Deceivers, or read their Books, or be present at their Worship. And I confess you may scape: but it may be otherwise, and God may leave you, to shew you all that was in your hearts, as it is said of Hezekiah, 2 Chron. 32. 21, 25, 26.

3. And your overvaluing your first grace, will make you too secure, when your souls have need of holy awfulness and care, to work out your salvation with fear and trembling, Phil. 2. 12. and to serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear, as knowing that he is a consuming fire, Heb. 12. 28, 29. And security is the fore-runner of a fall.

Beatus est cui vel in senectute contigerit, qua sapientiam veraſq; opiniones consequi possit. Cicero de fin.

4. It will make you neglect the due labour and patience in the use of means for further knowledge and increase of grace, while you think you are so well already. And so you will be worse than those that are ever learning, and never come to any ripe knowledge: For you will think that you are fit to be Teachers, when you have need to be taught that which you will not submit to learn. And then [When for the time ye ought to have been Teachers, you will have need to be catechized, or taught again which be the first Principles of the Oracles of God, as having need of milk, and not of strong meat.] Mark here how the Holy Ghost maketh Time and exercise necessary to such growth as must enable you to be Teachers, Heb. 5. 12, 13, 14. Therefore he addeth [But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil] Mark here how wisdom and strength is to be expected.

5. This over-hasty conceit of your own ability, will tempt you to run into Controversies, and matters that you are not fit for; and so divert you from necessary and seasonable studies.

6. It will make you over confident of all your own Opinions, and stiff in all your own conceits: Too like him, Prov. 14. 16. The fool rageth and is confident. How many and many a time have I heard a man that understood not what he talkt of, and could scarce speak sense, to plead for his opinion so confidently, as to scorn or pity the wisest contradictor, when his ignorance and phrenetick confidence and rage, did make him a real object of pity, to men of ordinary ordinary understandings. There is a kind of madness in this disease, that will not leave you wit enough to know that are you mad.

6. It will make you also very censorious of others: This ignorant Pride will make you think other mens knowledge to be ignorance, if they be not just of your fond opinions; and other mens graces to be none, if they be not of your mind and way. None are so ready as such to censure those that are better than themselves, or that they have no acquaintance with, as being but Civil morral men, or being erroneous or deluded: It's a very loathsome thing to hear, an ignorant self-conceited fellow to talk of those that are an hundred times wiser and much better than himself, as Magisterially with a proud compassion or contempt, as if he were indeed the wise man, that knoweth not what he saith.

Even when a Teacher is impatient with his peoples unprofitableness, they oft think highliest of their knowledge, and they are proud while their dulness tireth out their Guides: For Quo quisque est solertior & ingeniosior, hoc docet iracundius & laboriosius. Quod enim ipse celeriter arripuit, id quum tarde percipi videt, discruciatur. Cicero pro Ros.

7. And it will make you rebellious against your Governours and Teachers, and utterly unteachable, as despising those that should instruct and rule you. You will think your selves wiser than your Teachers while you are but in the lowest form. It is such that James speaks to, James 3. 1. My brethren, be not many Masters (or Teachers) knowing that ye shall receive the greater condemnation: And that whole Chapter well worth your studying, is spoke to such.

8. And thus it will entangle you in Heretical Opinions, to which there is no greater preparatory, than pride possessing half-witted young beginners in Religion.

9. And so it will make you troublers of the Church, contending unpeaceably for that which you understand not.

10. And it tendeth to hypocrisy, making you give thanks for that which you never had, as puffed up with a knowledge that is not enough to keep you humble, and wanting the Charity which would edify your selves and others, 1 Cor. 8. 1.

11. And it tendeth to delude you in point of assurance of salvation, taking your own over valuing self esteem for true assurance; which is not ordinarily to be expected, till grace be come to strength.

12. Lastly, It tendeth to corrupt your apprehensions of the nature of Christianity it self; while you will judge of it in others according to your own over valued measure: When if you knew it as it is in the Heart and Practice of the sober, wise, humble, charitable, peaceable, mortified, heavenly believer, you would see that it hath a higher glory, than any that's manifested by you.

§. 7. I have named to you all these sad effects of overvaluing your beginnings in Religion, that as you love you souls, you may avoid them. I take it to be a matter of exceeding great moment, for your safety and perseverance, that while you are Infants in Grace, you know your self to be such; that you may keep your form, and learn first the lessons that must first be learnt, and walk humbly with your God, and obey those that are over you in the Lord, Heb. 13. 7. 17. 1 Thes. 1. 5. 12. and may wait on the Spirit in the use of means, and may not rejoyce the Tempter by corrupting all that you have received, and imitating him in falling from your state of hope.

Direction 6. BE not discouraged at the difficulties and oppositions which will rise up before you, when you begin resolvedly to walk with God.

Against discouragements in tryals.

§. 1. As discouragements keep off multitudes from Religion, so they are great temptations to many young beginners to turn back, and as the Israelites in the Wilderness, ready to wish themselves again in Ægypt. Three sorts of discouragements arise before them. 1. Some from the nature of the work: 2. Some from Gods tryals. 3. And some from the malice of the Devil and his instruments: or all these.

§. 2. 1. It cannot be expected but that Infants and weaklings should think a little burden heavy, and an easie work or journey to be wearisome: young beginners are ordinary puzzled and at a loss, in every Trade, or Art, or Science. Young Scholars have a far harder task, than when they are once well entered: Learning is wondrous hard and unpleasant to them at the first: But when they are once well entered, the knowledge of one thing helps another, and they go on with ease. So a young Convert that hath been bred up in ignorance, and never used to Prayer, or to Heavenly discourse, nor to hear or joyn with any that did, will think it strange and hard at first. And those that were used to take their pleasure, and fulfill the desires of the flesh, and perhaps to swear and talk filthily, or idly, or to lie, will find at first some difficulty to overcome their customs, and live a mortified holy life (yet grace will do it and prevail.) Especially in point of knowledge and ability of expression, be not too hasty in your expectation, but wait with patience in a faithful diligent use of means, and that will be easie and delightful to you afterwards, which before discouraged you with its difficulties.

§. 3. 2. And God himself will have his servants and his graces tryed and exercised by difficulties: He never intended us the Reward for sitting still; nor the Crown of Victory, without a fight; nor a fight without an enemy and opposition. Innocent Adam was unfit for his state of Confirmation and reward, till he had been tryed by temptation. Therefore the Martyrs have the most glorious Crown, as having undergone the greatest tryal. And shall we presume to murmur at the Method of God?

§. 4. 3. And Satan having liberty to tempt and try us, will quickly raise up Storms and Waves, before us, as soon as we are set to Sea, which make young beginners often fear, that they shall never live to reach the Haven. He will shew thee the greatness of thy former sins, to perswade thee that they shall not be pardoned. He will shew thee the strength of thy passions and corruptions, to make thee think they will never be overcome: He will shew thee the greatness of the opposition and suffering which thou art like to undergo, to make thee think thou shalt never persevere. He will do his worst to meet thee with poverty, losses, crosses, injuries, vexations, persecutions and cruelties, yea, and unkindness from thy dearest friends, as he did by Job, to make thee think ill of God, or of his service. If he can, he will make them thy enemies that are of thine own household. He will stir up thy own Father, or Mother, or Husband, or Wife, or Brother, or Sister, or Children against thee, to perswade or persecute thee from Christ: Therefore Christ tells us, that if we hate not all these, that is, cannot forsake them, and use them as men do hated things, when they would turn us from him, we cannot be his Disciples, Luke 14. 26. Matth. 10. Look for the worst that the Devil can do against thee, if thou hast once lifted thy self against him, in the Army of Christ, and resolvest what ever it cost thee to be saved. Read Heb. 11. But how little cause you have to be discouraged, though Earth and Hell should do their worst, you may perceive by these few Considerations.

Nihil homini metuendum nisi ne justitiam excludat. Solon in Laert. p. 33

1. God is on your side, who hath all your enemies in his hand, and can rebuke them, or destroy them in a moment. O what is the breath or fury, of dust or Devils against the Lord Almighty? If God be for us, who shall be against us? Rom. 8, 32, 33.

32, 33. Read often that Chapter, Rom. 8. In the day when thou didst enter into Covenant with God, and he with thee, thou didst enter into the most impregnable Rock and Fortress, and house thy self in that Castle of defence, where thou maist (modestly) defie all adverse powers of Earth or Hell. If God cannot save thee, he is not God. And if he will not save thee, he must break his Covenant. Indeed he may resolve to save thee, not from affliction and persecution, but in it and by it. But in all these sufferings you will be more than Conquerors, through Christ that loveth you! that is, it is far more desirable and excellent to conquer by patience in suffering for Christ, than to conquer our Persecutors in the field by force of Arms. O think on the Saints triumphant boastings in their God. Psal. 46. 1, 2, 3. God is our refuge and strength; a very present help in trouble: therefore will we not fear though the earth be removed; and though the Mountains be carryed into the midst of the Sea.—— Psal. 56 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. When his enemies were many, and wrested his words daily, and fought against him, and all their thoughts were against him, yet he saith, What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee: In God will I praise his word: In God have I put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me, Remember Christs charge, Luke 12. 4. Fear not them that can kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do: But I will fore-warn you whom you shall fear: Fear him which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into Hell; yea, I say unto you, fear him. If all the world were on thy side, thou might yet have cause to fear, but to have God on thy side, is infinitely more.

Securus ego sum de vultu Dei, qui domino meo. Hoc Regi debitis, Subigat ignifer, adigat bestias, excruciet omnium tormentorum generibus, si cessero, frustra sum in Ecclesiæ Catholica baptizatus; Nam si hæc præsens vita sola esset, & aliam quæ vera est, non speraremus æternam, nec ita facerem ut modicum & temporaliter gloriarer, & ingratus existerem qui suam fidem mihi contulit, Creatori. Victorianus ad Hunnerychum in Vict. Uttic. p. 461. Victor Uticensis saith, that before the persecution of Hunnerychus these Visions were seen: 1. All the Lights put out in the Church, and a darkness and stink succeeded. 2. The Church filled with abundance of Swine and Goats. 3. Another saw a great heap of Corn unwinnowed, and a sudden Whirlwind blew away all the Chaff: and after that one came and cast out all the stricken dead and useless Corn, till a very little heap was left. 4. Another heard one cry on the top of a Mount, Migrate, Migrate. 5. Another saw great Stones cast from Heaven on the Earth, which flamed and destroyed: But he hid himself in a Chamber, and none of them could touch him. Page 405. Sed hoc ædificium ubi construere visus est diabolus, statim illud destruere dignatus est Christus. Id. ib.

§. 6. 2. Jesus Christ is the Captain of thy salvation, Heb. 2. 10. and hath gone before thee this way himself, and hath conquered for thee; and now is engaged to make thee Conqueror: and darest thou not go on where Christ doth lead the way? He was perfected through suffering himself, and will see that thou be not destroyed by it. Canst thou draw back, when thou seest his steps and his blood?

§. 7. 3. Thou art not to conquer in thy own strength, but by the Spirit of God, and the power of that grace which is sufficient for thee, and his strength which appeareth most in our weakness, 2 Cor. 12. 9. And you can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth you: Phil. 4. 13. Be of good cheer, he hath overcome the world, John 16. 33.

Id. is saith that an Arian Bishop being put over a City, all that would take the Oath of Allegiance to the King of Spain, and the rest were only to be banished, refused all the temptations of the Bishop, but also publickly celebrated the Divine Mysteries in one of their houses; and the King being hereat enraged, caused them in the open Market-place to have their tongues and right hands cut off by the root: and that they yet spake after as well as before. And them that will not believe it, he referreth to one of them then living, and honoured for this in the Emperours Court, that still spake perfectly, page 462, 463.

§. 8. 4. All that are in Heaven have gone this way, and overcome such oppositions and difficulties as these: They were tempted, troubled, scorned, opposed as well as you: And yet they now triumph in glory. These are they that come out of the great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb: Therefore are they before the Throne of God, and serve him day and night in his Temple: and he that sitteth on the Throne shall dwell among them, Rev. 7. 14. And all that ever (in age) are like to come this way. And doth not the company encourage you? and the success of those that have overcome before you? Will you have the end, and yet refuse the way?

§. 9. 5. Consider how much greater difficulties ungodly men go through to Hell. They have stronger enemies than you have: The Devil and wicked men are your enemies: but God himself is theirs, and yet they will go on. Men threaten but death to discourage you, and God threatneth damnation to discourage them: And yet they go on, and are not discouraged. And will you be more afraid of man, than sinners are of God? and of death or scorns, than they are of Hell?

§. 10. 6. Yea, and you your selves must cast your souls on these greater evils, if by discouragement you turn from the way of Godliness. You must run into Hell for fear of burning: and upon everlasting death, to escape a temporal death, or less: You will choose God for your Enemy, to escape the enmity of man: And how wise a course this is, judge you: when if you do but see that your ways please God, he can make your enemies be at peace with you, if he see it for your good, Prov. 16. 7. If you will fear, fear him that can damn the soul.

§. 11. 7. Lastly, Remember what abundance of mercies you have to sweeten your present life, and to make your burden easie to you: You have all that is good for you in this life, and the promise of everlasting joy: For godliness thus is profitable to all things, 1 Tim. 4. 8. What abundance of mercy, have you in your Bodies, Estates, Friends, names, or souls, which are the greatest. What promises and experiences to refresh you? What liberty of access to God? A Christ to rejoice in! A Heaven to rejoice in: and yet shall a stony or a dirty way discourage you more, than these shall comfort you?

§. 12. The summ of all is, your work will grow easier and sweeter to you, as your skill and strength encreaseth: Your enemies are as Grashoppers before you: The power of the Almighty is engaged by Love and Promise for your help: And do you pretend to trust in God, and yet will fear the face of man? Isa. 50. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting: For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded, therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed. He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? Let us stand together: Who is mine adversary: Let him come near to me. Behold, the Lord God will help me: who is he that shall condemn me: Lo, they all shall wax old as a garment: the moth shall eat them up, Isa. 51. 7, 8. Hearken to me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my Law: fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revilings: For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wooll: but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation. He is no Souldier for Christ, that will turn back for fear of scorns, or of any thing that man can do against him.

§. 13. And consider whether Heaven should be easilier come to? They are things of unspeakable glory that you strive for: And they are unworthily despised, if any thing be thought too good to part with for them, or any labour, or difficulties, or sufferings too great to undergo to procure them.

Dir. 7.

Direct. 7. IF it be in your power, live under a judicious, faithful, serious, searching, powerful Minister; and diligently attend his publick Teaching, and use his private Counsel for more particular directions and application, for the setling and managing the affairs of your souls; even as you take the advice of Physitians for your health, and of Lawyers for your estates, and Tutors for your studies.

Sulpitius severus in Vit. Martini, noteth that none but Bishops were against him because he was unlearned and of no presence.

§. 1. I give this direction only to those that may enjoy so great a mercy if they will. Some live where no such Minister is: Some are Children, or Servants, or Wives, that are bound and cannot remove their habitations, or enjoy such liberty, by reason of the unwillingness and restraint of others. Some are so poor, that they cannot remove their dwelling for such advantages. And some are so serviceable in their places, that they may be bound to stay under a very weak Minister, that they may do good to others, where they have best opportunity. But let him that can be free, and possess so great a mercy, accept it thankfully, though to his cost. As Christ said in another case, Every man cannot receive the saying; but he that can receive it, let him.

Look more in your Teachers at matter than fine words: Augustin. de Catechizand. rud. cap. 9. His maxime utile est nosse ita esse præponendas verbis sententias, ut præponitur animus corpori: ex quo fit, ut ita malle debeant veriores quam disertiores audire Sermones, sicut malle debent prudentiores quam formosiores habere amicos. Noverint etiam non esse vocem ad aures Dei nisi animi affectum: Ita enim non irridebunt si aliquos antistites & Ministros forte animadverterint vel cum barbarismis & solœcismis Deum invocare, vel eadem verba quæ pronunciant, non intelligere, perturbateq; distinguere. Vid. Filesacum de Episc. autorit. p. 105. Pœnituit multos vanæ steriliq; Cathedræ. Juven. Italis Ciceronianis sum iniquior, quia tantum loquuntur verba, non res, & Rhetorica ipsorum plerumq; est κολακευτική: Est glossa sine textu: nux sine nucleo: nubes sine pulviâ. Plumæ sunt meliores quam avis ipsa. Buchozer. Take heed least prejudice or any corruption possess your minds, for then all that you hear will be unsavoury or unprofitable to you: Magna debet esse eloquentia, quæ invitis placeat, ait Senec. præf. lib. 10. Controv.

§. 2. There is abundance of difference between a weak, unskilful, unexperienced, dead-harted, formal Teacher, and such a one as is described in the Direction. Some that are sensless or indifferent in such matters as these themselves, would perswade you to be so too, and look first in your settlement to your bodily conveniences, and be content with such a Teacher as accidentally you are cast upon. And they'l tell you, that the work of grace dependeth not on the Preachers gifts, but on the gift, and blessing of the Spirit of God: The Formalists and the Enthusiasts concur in this, though from different principal: But though God can frustrate the fittest means, and can work without means, or by that which is least fitted to the end, yet it is his ordinary way to work by means, and that for the soul as well as for the body; and to work most by the aptest means. And I am sure it is the duty of every Teacher, to preach in the fittest manner that he can, for the peoples edification; and not to do Gods work deceitfully, and ineptly, because God can bless the unfittest means: And it is the peoples duty to attend upon the best they can enjoy, though God can equally work by the weakest or by none. As that pretence will not excuse the contemners of Gods Ordinances, that upon every little business, stay at home, and attend upon no Ministry at all: no more will it excuse them, that refuse that help is most suited to their edification, and take up with a worse, when they might have better. We are not to neglect duty upon a presumptuous expectation of miraculous or extraordinary works: When we can have no better, we may hope for the greater benefit from the weakest; but not when it is the choice of our own presumptuous irreligious hearts. God can make Daniel and His companions to thrive better by eating Pulse, than others that fed at the Table of the King: And rather than sin against God, we must cast our selves on him for unusual supplies, or leave all to his will. But few would therefore be perswaded causlessly to live on Pulse, when they may have better. And one would think this Truth should have no contradiction, especially from those men, that are apt to obscure and extenuate the Spirits operations on the soul, and to confess no Grace, but what consisteth in a congruous ordination of Means and Circumstances? When their doctrine layeth all a mans hopes of salvation upon this Congruity of Means, and Circumstances, should they afterwards teach men to undervalue or neglect the fittest, and wilfully cast their souls upon the most unfit and unlikely means? But Ungodliness first resolveth what to speak against, before it resolveth what to say; and will contradict Gods Word, though it contradict its own: and will oppose holiness, though by a self-opposing.

§. 3. But the spiritual relish and experience of the Godly, is a very great preservative to them against such deluding reasonings as these. It's harder for a Sophister of greatest subtilty or authority, to perswade him that hath tasted them, that Sugar is bitter, or Wormwood sweet, than to perswade him to believe it, that never tasted them: And it's hard to make a healthful man believe it is best for him to eat but once a week, or best to live on Grass or Snow. I doubt not but those that now I speak to, have such experience and perception of the benefit of a judicious and lively Ministry, in comparison of the ignorant, cold and lifeless, that no words will make them indifferent herein. Have you not found the Ministry of one sort enlighten, and warm, and quicken, and comfort, and strengthen you, much more than of the other? I am sure I have the common sense and experience of the faithful on my side in this, which were enough of it self against more than can be said against it. Even new-born babes in Christ have in their new natures a desire (not to sensless or malicious pratings, but) to the Rational sincere milk (τὸ λογικὸν ἄδολον γάλα) that they may grow by it, and to perform to God a Rational service, Rom. 12. 1.

§. 4. And it must needs be a very proud and stupid heart that can be so insensible of its own infirmity, sinfulness and necessity, as to think the weakest dullest Minister may serve their turns, and that they are able to keep up their life, and vigour, and watchfulness, and fruitfulness, with any little ordinary help: I cannot but fear such men know not what the power and efficacy of the Word upon the heart and conscience meaneth: nor what it is to live a life of faith and holiness, and to watch the heart, and walk with God. If they did, they could not but find so much difficulty herein, and so much backwardness and unskilfulness in themselves hereto, as would make them feel the necessity of the greatest helps; And it could not be but they must feel the difference between a clear and quickning Sermon, and an ignorant heartless, dead discourse, that is spoken as if a man were talking in his sleep, or of a matter that he never understood, or had experience of.

§. 5. Alas, how apt are the best to cool, if they be not kept warm by a powerful Ministry? How apt to lose the hatred of sin, the tenderness of conscience, the fervency in prayer, the zeal and fulness in edifying discourse, and the delights and power of heavenly Meditations, which before we had? How apt is faith to stagger if it be not powerfully underpropt by the helpers of our faith? How hardly do we keep up the heat of Love, the confidence of hope, the resolution and fulness of obedience, without the help of a powerful Ministry? Nay, Nay, how hardly do we do our part in these, in any tolerable sort, even while we have the clearest livelyest helps, that are ordinarily to be had? And can any that are not blind and proud, imagine that they are so holy and good, that they are above the necessity of such assistance, and that the weakest breath is enough to kindle the fire of holy Love and zeal, and keep them in the fear and obedience of God? Alas, we are under languishing weakness, and must be dyeted with the best, or we shall soon decay: we are Cripples, and cannot go or stand without our Crutches? And there must be some savour of the Spirit in him that will be fit to make us spiritual, and some savour of faith and love in him, that would kindle faith and love in us: and he must speak clearly and convincingly that will be understood, and will prevail with such as we; and he must speak feelingly, that would make us feel, and speak seriously, that would be much regarded by us, and would make us serious.

§. 6. And Ministers are not set up only for publick Preaching, but for private Counsel also, according to our particular needs. As Physitians are not only to read you instructions for the dyeting and curing of your selves, but to be present in your sickness to direct you in the particular application of remedies? And as Lawyers are to assist you in your particular cases to free your estates from encumbrances, and preserve or rescue them from contentious men. Choose therefore some able Minister to be your ordinary Counsellor in the matters of God. And let him be one that is humble, faithful, experienced and skilful, that hath leisure, ability, and willingness to assist you.

It noteth it as a great hinderance of the Indians conversion that their Teachers shift for better livings, and stay not till they are well acquainted with the people, and that the Bishops are of the same temper: Hæc tanta clades est animarum, ut satis deplorari non possit; Nihil Sacerdos Christi præclari præstet in salute Indorum, sine familiari & hominum & rerum notitia, l. 4. c. 10 p. 390. Sunt autem multi qui injuncto muneri copiose se satisfacere existimant, Orationem dominicam & symbolum & salutationem angelicam, tum præcepta decalogi Hispan. idiomate identidem Indis recitantes, eorum infantes baptizantes, mortuos sepelientes, matrimonio juvenes collocantes, & rem sacram festis diebus facientis ——— Neque conscientia, quam utinam cauterizatam non habeant, mordentur quod dispersæ sint oves domini, &c. c. 7. p. 373.

§. 7. As Infants in a family are unable to help themselves, and need the continual help of others, and therefore God hath put into the hearts of Parents a special Love to them, to make them diligent and patient in helping them: so is it in the Family of Christ: Most Christians (by far) are young or weak, in understanding and in grace: It is long before you will be past the need of others help (if ever in this life.) If you feel not this your infirmity and need, it is so much the greater. God will have no men to be self-sufficient: we shall all have need of one another, that we may be useful to one another; and God may use us as his messengers and instruments of conveying his mercies to each other; and that even self-love may help us to be sociable, and to love one another: And our souls must receive their part of mercy, by this way of communication, as well as our bodies: And therefore, as the poor above all men, should not be against charity and communicating, that need it most; so young Christians that are weak and unexperienced, above all others, should be most desirous of help, especially from an able faithful guide.

§. 8. But be sure you deal sincerely, and cheat not your selves, by deceiving your counsellor, and hiding your case. To do so by your Lawyer, is the way to lose your suit: And to do so by your Physician is the way to lose your life: And to do so with your Pastor, and soul counsellor is the way to lose your souls. And let the judgment of your Pastor or judicious friend about the state of your souls, be much regarded by you, though it be not infallible. How far such must be trusted, I am afterward to open to you, with other of your duties belonging to you in this Relation. I now only proceed to General advice.

Direct. 8. KEep right apprehensions of the excellency of Charity and Unity among believers, and receive nothing hastily that is against them; especially take heed least under pretence of their Authority, their Number, their Soundness, or their Holiness, you too much addict your selves to any Sect or Party, to the withdrawing of your special Love and just Communion from other Christians, and turning your Zeal to the interest of your Party, with a neglect of the common interest of the Church: But Love a Christian as a Christian, and promote the Unity and welfare of them all.

Dir. 8. Against Uncharitableness & Schism. See more in Tom. 2. Ch. 23.

§. 1. Use often to read and well consider the meaning and reason of those many urgent passages in Scripture, which exhort all Christians to Unity and Love. Such as John 11. 52, & 17. 11, 21, 22, 23. 1 Cor. 3. 10. 17. & 12. throughout: 2 Cor. 11. 13. 1 Thess. 5. 12, 13. Phil. 2. 1, 2, 3. 1 Pet. 3. 8. Rom. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 1. 10. & 3. 3. & 11. 18. And John 13. 35. Rom. 12. 9, 10. & 13. 10 2 Cor. 13. 11. Gal. 5. 6, 13, 22. Col. 1. 4. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 John 3. 11, 14, 23. & 4. 7, 11, 16, 19, 20, 21. Surely if the very life of Godliness lay not much in Unity and Love, we should never have had such words spoken of it, as here you find. Love is to the soul, as our Natural heat is to the Body: whatever destroyeth it, destroyeth Life; and therefore cannot be for our good. Be certain, that opinion, course or motion, tends to death, that tends to abate your Love to your Brethren, much more which under pretence of zeal, provoketh you to hate and hurt them. To Divide the Body, is to kill it or to maim it: Dividing the essential necessary parts, is killing it: Cutting off any integral part, is maiming it. The first can never be an act of friendship, which is the worst that an enemy can do: The second is never an act of friendship, but when the cutting off a member which may be spared, is of absolute necessity to the saving of the whole man, from the worse division between soul and body. By this judge what friends Dividers are to the Church, and how well they are accepted of God.

Utrumque imperium, & Mahometicum & Pontificium ortum est, ex dissidiis de doctrina---- Cum in Oriente dilaceratæ essent Ecclesiæ —— & hæc varietas in multorum animis dubitationes & odium Religionis Christianæ accenderet, & Disciplina laxata esset, &c. Melancth. Ep. Dedic. Chron. Carionis.

§. 2. He that loveth any Christian aright, must needs love all that appear to him as Christians: And when malice will not suffer men to see Christianity in its profession, and credible appearance in another, this is as well contrary to Christian Love, as hating him when you know him to be a true Christian. Censoriousness (not constrained by just evidence) is contrary to Love, as well as hatred is.

§. 3. There is a Union and Communion with Christians as such: This consisteth in having one God, one Head, one Spirit, one Faith, one Baptismal Covenant, one Rule of holy living, and in loving and praying for all, and doing good to as many as we can. This is a Union and Communion of Mind, which we must hold with the Catholick Church through the world. And there is a Bodily local Union and Communion, which consisteth in our joyning in body, as well as mind, with particular Congregations: And this as we cannot hold it with all, nor with any Congregation, but one at once; so we are not bound to hold it with any, that will drive us from it, unless we will commit some sin: Statedly we must hold it, with the Church which regularly we are joined to, and live with: and Occasionally we must hold it with all others, where we have a call and opportunity, who in the Substance worship God according to his Word, and force us not to sin in conformity to them. It is not Schism to lament the sins of any Church, or of all the Churches in the world: The Catholick Church on earth consists of sinners. It is not Schism to refuse to be partaker in any Sin of the purest Church in the World: Obedience to God is not Schism. It is not Schism that you joyn not Bodily with those Congregations where you dwell not, nor have any particular call to joyn with them: Nor that you choose the purest and most edifying Society, rather than one that is less pure and profitable to you: cæteris paribus, supposing you are at liberty: nor that you hold not Bodily Communion with that Church, that will not suffer you to do it, without sinning against God: Nor that you joyn not with the purest Churches, when you are called to abide with one less pure.

But it is worse than Schism to separate from the Universal Church: To separate from its Faith is Apostasie to infidelity. To separate from it in some one or few essential Articles, while you pretend to hold to Christ the Head, is Heresie: To separate from it in Spirit, by refusing Holiness, and not loving such as are truly holy, is damning ungodliness or wickedness: To differ from it by any error, of judgment or life, against the Law of God, is sin. To magnifie any one Church or party, so as to deny due Love and Communion to the rest, is Schism. To limit all the Church to your Party, and deny all or any of the rest to be Christians, and parts of the Universal Church, is Schism by a dangerous breach of Charity: Aud this is the principal Schism that I here admonish you to avoid. It is Schism also to condemn unjustly any particular Church, as no Church: And it is Schism to withdraw your Bodily Communion from a Church that you were bound to hold that Communion with, upon a false Supposition that it is no Church, or is not lawfully to be communicated with. And it is Schism to make Divisions or Parties in a Church, though you divide not from that Church. Thus I have (briefly) told you what is Schism.

§. 4. 1. One Pretence for Schism is (Usurped) Authority, which some one Church may claim to command others that owe them no subjection. Thus Pride which is the Spirit of Hell, having crept into the Church of Christ, and animated to Usurpations of Lordship and Dominion, and contending for superiority, hath caused the most dangerous Schisms in the Church, that ever it was infested with. The Bishop of Rome (advantaged by the Seat and Constitution of that Empire) having claimed the Government of all the Christian World, condemneth all the Churches that will not be his Subjects: And so hath made himself the head of a Sect, and of the most pernicious Schisms that ever did rend the Church of Christ: And the Bishop of Constantinople, and too many more, have followed the same Method in a lower degree, exalting themselves above their Brethren, and giving them Laws, and then condemning and persecuting them that obey them not. And when they have imposed upon other Churches, their own usurped Authority and Laws, they have laid the plot to call all men Schismaticks and Sectaries, that own not their tyrannical Usurpation, and that will not be Schismaticks and Sectaries with them: And the cheat lyeth in this, that they confound the Churches Unity, with their pretended Authority, and Schism with the refusal of Subjection to them. If you will not take them for your Lords, they cry out that you divide from the Church: As if we could hold Communion with no Churches, but those whose Bishops we obey? Communion with other Churches is maintained by Faith and Charity, and agreement in things necessary, without subjection to them. As we may hold all just Communion with the Churches in Armenia, Arabia, Russia, without subjection to their Bishops, so may we with any other Church besides that of which we are members. Division or Schism is contrary to Unity and Concord, and not to an Usurped Government: Tho' disobedience to the Pastors which God hath set over us, is a Sin and Dividing from them, is a Schism. Both the Pope and all the lower Usurpers, should do well first to shew their Commission from God to be our Rulers, before they call it Schism to refuse their Government. If they had not made better advantage of Fire and Sword, than of Scripture and Argument, the world would but have laughed them to scorn, when they had heard them say, All are Schismaticks that will not be our Subjects: Our Dominion and Will shall be necessary to the Unity of the Church. The Universal Church indeed is One, united under One Head and Governour: but it is only Jesus Christ that is that Head, and not any Usurping Vicar or Vice-Christ. The Bishops of particular Churches are his Officers; but he hath Deputed no Vicar to his own Office, as the Universal Head. Above all Sects take heed of this pernicious Sect, who pretend their Usurped Authority for their Schism, and have no way to promote their Sect, but by calling all Sectaries that will not be Sectaries and Subjects unto them.

§. 5 2. Another pretence for Schism is the Numbers of the Party: This is another of the Papists motives: As if it were lawful to Divide the Church of Christ, if they can but get the greater Party? They say, We are the most, and therefore you should yield to us: (And so do others where by the Sword they force the most to submit to them.) But we answer them, As many as they are, they are too few, to be the Universal Church. The Universal Church containing all true professing Christians, is much more than they. The Papists are not a third part (if a fourth) of the whole Church. Papists are a corrupted Sect of Christians: I will be against Dividing the Body of Christ into any Sects; rather than to be of one of that Sect or dividing party, which is the greatest.

§. 6. 3. Another Pretence for Schism, is the soundness or Orthodoxness of a Party: Almost all Sects pretend that they are wiser and of sounder judgement than all the Christian World besides: yea, those that most palpably contradict the Scriptures, (as the Papists in their half-communion and unintelligible service) and have no better reason why they will so Believe or Do, but because others have so Believed and Done already.

But 1. The greatest pretenders to Orthodoxness, are not the most Orthodox: 2. And if they were, I can value them for that in which they excel, without abating my due respect to the rest of the Church. 3. For the whole Church is Orthodox in all the Essentials of Christianity; or else they were not Christians: And I must love all that are Christians with that special Love that's due to the members of Christ, though I must superadd such esteem for those that are a little wiser or better than others, as they deserve.

§. 7. The fourth pretence for Schism, is the Holiness of the party that men adhere to. But this must make but a gradual difference in our esteem and love to some Christians above others: If really they are most Holy, I must Love them most, and labour to be as Holy as they: But I must not therefore unjustly deny Communion or due Respect to other Christians that are less holy: nor cleave to them as a Sect or divided party whom I esteem most holy. For the holiest are most charitable, and most againſt the Diviſions among Chriſtians, and tendereſt of their Unity and Peace.

§. 8. The ſumm of this Direction is: 1. Highly value Chriſtian Love and Unity: 2. Love thoſe moſt that are moſt Holy, and be moſt familiar with them for your own Edification: and if you have your choice, hold local perſonal Communion, with the ſoundeſt, pureſt and beſt qualified Church. 3. But entertain not haſtily any odd opinion of a divided party: or if you do hold it as an opinion, lay not greater weight on it, than there is cauſe. 4. Own the beſt as beſt but none as a divided Sect; and eſpouſe not their dividing intereſt. 5. Confine not your ſpecial Love to a party, eſpecially for agreeing in ſome Opinions with you: but extend it to all the members of Chriſt. 6. Deny not local communion, when there is occaſion for it, to any Church that hath the Subſtance of true Worſhip, and forceth you not to ſin. 7. Love them as true Chriſtians and Churches, even when they thus drive you from their communion.

§. 9. It is a moſt dangerous thing to a young Convert, to be enſnared in a Sect: It will before you are aware, poſſeſs you with a feavouriſh ſinful Zeal, for the Opinions and Intereſt of that Sect: It will make you bold in bitter Invectives and Cenſures againſt thoſe that differ from them: It will corrupt your Church-communion, and fill your very prayers with partiality and human paſſions: It will ſecretly bring Malice under the name of Zeal, into your minds and words: In a word, it is a ſecret, but deadly enemy to Chriſtian Love and Peace. Let them that are wiſer and more Orthodox and Godly than others, ſhew it as the Holy Ghoſt directeth them: James 3. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. [Who is a wiſe man, and endued with knowledge among you? Let him ſhew out of a good converſation, his works with meekneſs of Wiſdom. But if ye have bitter envying (or zeal) and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, and lye not againſt the truth: This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh: For where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion (or tumult) and every evil work; But the wiſdom that is from above, is firſt Pure, then Peaceable, gentle, eaſie to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality (or wrangling) and without hypocriſie. And the fruit of righteouſneſs is ſown in peace of them that make peace.]

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. TAke heed leſt any Perſecution or Wrong from others, provoke you to any unwarrantable Paſſions and Practices, and deprive you of the Charity, Meekneſs, and innocency of a Chriſtian; or make you go beyond your bounds, in cenſuring, reviling, or reſiſting your Rulers, who are the Officers of God.

When the Arrian Biſhops had made Hunnerychus believe that the Orthodox turned the appointed diſputation into popular clamour, and were againſt the King, he forbad them to Meet, or to Baptize, or Ordain, and turned all the ſame Laws againſt them which had been made againſt the Arrians. Victor. Vtic. p. 447, 448.

§. 1. Perſecution and Wrongs are called Temptations in Scripture, becauſe they try you, whether you will hold your integrity. As many fall in ſuch Tryals through the fear of men, and the love of the world and their Proſperity; ſo when you ſeem moſt confirmed againſt any ſinful complyance, there is a ſnare laid for you on the other ſide, to draw you into paſſions and practices that are unwarrantable.

Thoſe that are tainted with Pride, Uncharitableneſs, and Schiſm, will itch to be perſecuting thoſe that comply not with them in their way: And yet while they do it, they will moſt cry out againſt Pride, Uncharitableneſs and Schiſm themſelves. This is, and hath been, and will be too ordinary in the world: You may think that Schiſm ſhould be far from them that ſeem to do all for Order and Unity. But never look to ſee this generally cured, when you have ſaid and done the beſt you can: you muſt therefore reſolve not only to fly from Church diviſion your ſelves, but alſo to undergo the Perſecutions or Wrongs of Proud or Zealous Church-dividers. It is great weakneſs in you to think ſuch uſage ſtrange: Do you not know that Enmity is put from the beginning between the Womans and the Serpents ſeed. And do you think the name or dead profeſſion of Chriſtianity doth extinguiſh the enmity in the Serpents ſeed. Do you think to find more kindneſs from proud ungodly Chriſtians, than Abel might have expected from his Brother Cain? Do you not know that the Phariſees (by their zeal for their prehemineence, and Traditions, and Ceremonies, and the expectation of worldly dignity and rule from the Meſſiah) were more zealous enemies of Chriſt, than the Heathens were? and that the carnal members of the Church, are oft the greateſt perſecutors of the ſpiritual members? As then he that was born after the fleſh, did perſecute him that was born after the Spirit, even ſo it is now (and will be) Gal. 4. 29. It is enough for you, that you ſhall have the Inheritance, when the Sons of the Bondwoman ſhall be caſt out. It is your taking the ordinary caſe of the godly for a ſtrange thing, that makes you ſo diſturbed and paſſionate when you ſuffer: and Reaſon is down, when paſſion is up: It is by overwhelming Reaſon with Paſſion and Diſcontent, that oppreſſion maketh ſome wiſe men mad: Eccleſ. 7. 7. For Paſſion is a ſhort imperfect madneſs. You will think in your Paſſion that you do well, when you do ill; and you will not perceive the force of reaſon, when it is never ſo plain and full againſt you. Remember therefore, that the great motive that cauſeth the Devil to perſecute you, is not to hurt your Bodies, but to tempt your ſouls to impatiency and ſin: and if it may but be ſaid of you, as of Job 1. 22. [In all this Job ſinned not.] You have got the victory, and are more than Conquerours, Rom. 8. 37, 38, 39.

Doth it ſeem ſtrange to you, that few rich men are ſaved, when Chriſt telleth you it is ſo hard, as to be impoſſible with men? Luke 18. 27. Mark 10. 27. Or is it ſtrange, that Rich Men ſhould be the ordinary Rulers of the Earth? Or is it ſtrange, that the wicked ſhould hate the godly, and the world hate them that are choſen out of the world? What of all this ſhould ſeem ſtrange? Expect it as the common lot of the faithful, and you will be better prepared for it.

§. 2. See therefore that you reſiſt not evil (by any Revengeful irregular violence) Mat. 5. 39. Let every ſoul be ſubject to the higher powers, and not reſiſt leſt they receive damnation. Rom. 13. 1, 2, 3. Imitate your Lord, that [When he was reviled, reviled not again; when he ſuffered he threatned not, but committed all to him that judgeth righteouſly, leaving us an enſample, that ye ſhould follow his ſteps;] 1 Pet. 2. 21, 23. An angry zeal againſt thoſe that croſs and hurt us is ſo eaſily kindled, and hardly ſuppreſſed, that it appeareth there is more in it of corrupted nature, than of God. We are very ready to think that we may call for fire from Heaven upon the enemies of the Goſpel: But you know not what manner of Spirit ye are then of, Luke 9. 55. But Chriſt ſaith unto you, Love your Enemies, bleſs them that curſe you: do good to them that hate you: and pray pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven, Matth. 5. 44, 45. You find no such prohibition against patient suffering wrong from any. Take heed of giving way to secret wishes of hurt to your adversaries; or to reproachful words against them: Take heed of hurting your self by passion, or sin, because others hurt you by slanders or persecutions. Keep you in the way of your duty, and leave your names and lives to God. Be careful that you keep your innocency, and in your patience possess your souls, and God will keep you from any hurt from enemies, but what he will cause to work for your good. Read Psal. 37. [Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass: And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgement as the noon-day. Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him: fret not thy self because of him that prospereth in his way, because of the man that bringeth wicked devices to pass. Cease from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thy self in any wise to do evil.] vers. 5, 6, 7, 8.

Dir. 10. Direct. 10. When you are repenting of, or avoiding any extream, do it not without sufficient fear and caution of the contrary extream.

Extreams in Religion.

§. 1. In the esteem and Love of God, your Ultimate End, you need not fear over doing: Nor any where, when impediments and backwardness or impotency, do tell you that you can never do too much. But sin lyeth on both sides the Rule and Way: And nothing is more common than to turn from one sin to another; under the name of duty or amendment: Especially this is common in matter of opinion: Some will first believe, that God is nothing else but Mercy, and after take notice of nothing but his Justice. First, They believe that almost all are saved, and afterwards that almost none: First, That every Profession is credible; and next that none is credible without some greater testimony: First, that Christ satisfied for none at all that will not be saved: and next that he dyed for all alike: First, that none are now partakers of the Holy Spirit: and next that all Saints have the Spirit not only to illuminate and Sanctifie them, by transcribing the written Word upon their hearts, but also to inspire them with new Revelations instead of Scripture. First, they think that all that Papists hold and do must be avoided: and after that there needed no reformation at all: Now they are for Legal bondage, and anon for Libertinism: To day for a liberty in Religion to none that agree not with them in every circumstance. and to morrow for a liberty for all: This year all things are lawful to them: and the next year nothing is lawful, but they scruple all that they say or do: One while they are all for a Worship of meer shew and Ceremony; and another while against the determination of meer circumstances of order and decency by man: One while they cry up nothing but Free grace; and another while nothing but Free-will: One while they are for a Discipline stricter than the Rule; and another while for no Discipline at all. First for timorous complyance with evil, and afterwards for boisterous contempt of Government. Abundance such instances we might give you.

§. 2. The remedy against this disease is, to proceed deliberately, and receive nothing, and do nothing rashly and unadvisedly in Religion. For when you have found out your first errour, you will be affrighted from that into the contrary error. See that you look round about you: as well to the error that you may run into on the other side, as into that which you have run into already. Consult also with wise experienced men: And mark their unhappiness that have fallen on both sides; and stay not to know evil by sad experience. True mediocrity is the only way that's safe: Though negligence and lukewarmness be odious even when cloked with that name.

Direct. 11. Let not your first Opinions about the controverted difficulties in Religion, (where Scripture is not very plain) be too peremptory, confident or fixed: But hold them modestly, with a due suspicion of your unripe understandings, and with room for further information, supposing it possible, or probable, that upon better instruction, evidence and maturity, you may, in such things, change your minds. Dir. 11. For Modesty in your first Opinions.

§. 1. I know the factions that take up their Religion on the credit of their party, are against this Direction, thinking that you must first hit on the right Church, and then hold all that the Church doth hold; and therefore change your mind in nothing, which you this way receive. I know also that some Libertines and half-believers, would corrupt this Direction, by extending it to the most plain and necessary truths; perswading you to hold Christianity it self, but as an uncertain probable Opinion.

But as Gods foundation standeth sure, so we must be surely built on his foundation: He that believeth not the Essentials of Christianity as a certain necessary revelation of God, is not a Christian, but an Infidel. And he that believeth not all that which he understandeth in the Word of God, believeth nothing on the credit of that Word. Indeed faith hath its weakness on those that are sincere; and they are fain to lament the remnants of unbelief, and cry, [Lord increase our faith: Help thou our unbelief:] But he that approveth of his Doubting, and would have it so, and thinks the revelation is uncertain, and such as will warrant no firmer a belief, I should scarcely say this man is a Christian. Christianity must be received as of Divine infallible revelation. But controversies about less necessary things cannot be determined peremptorily by the ignorant or young beginners, without hypocrisie, or a humane faith going under the name of a Divine. I am far from abating your Divine belief of all that you can understand in Scripture, and implicitely of all the rest in general. And I am far from diminishing the credit of any truth of God. But the Reasons of this Direction are these.

§. 2. 1. When it is certain that you have but a dark uncertain apprehension of any point, to think it is clear and certain, is but to deceive your selves by pride. And to cry out against all uncertainty as scepticism, which yet you cannot lay aside, is but to revile your own infirmity, and the common infirmity of mankind, and foolishly to suppose that every man can be as wise and certain when he list as he should be. Now reason and experience will tell you, that a young unfurnished understanding is not like to see the evidence of difficult points, as by nearer approach, and better advantage it may do.

§. 3. 2. If your conclusions be peremptory, upon meer self-conceitedness, you may be in an errour for ought you know: and so you are but confident in an errour. And then how far may you go in seducing others, and censuring dissenters, and come back back when you have done, and confess that you were all this while mistaken your selves?

§. 4. 3. For a man to be confident that he knoweth what he knoweth not, is but the way to keep him ignorant, and shut the door against all means of further information. When the Opinion is fixt by prejudice and conceit, there is no ready entrance for the light.

§. 5. 4. And to be ungroundedly confident so young, is not only to take up with your Teachers word, instead of a faith and knowledge of your own, but also to forestall all diligence to know more; and so you may lay by all your studies, save only to know what those men hold, whose judgements are your Religion; (Too Popish and easie a way to be safe.)

§. 6. 5. If you must never change your first opinions or apprehensions, how will you grow in understanding? Will you be no wiser at age, than you were in childhood, and after long study and experience than before? Nature and Grace do tend to increase.

§. 7. Indeed, if you should be never so peremptory in your opinions, you cannot resolve to hold them to the end: For Light is powerful; and may change you whether you will or no: you cannot tell what that Light will do which you never saw. But prejudice will make you resist the light, and make it harder for you to understand.

§. 8. I speak this upon much experience and observation: Our first unripe apprehensions of things, will certainly be greatly changed, if we are studious and of improved understandings. Study the Controversies about Grace and Free-will, or about other such Points of difficulty when you are young, and it's two to one that ripeness will afterward make them quite another thing to you. For my own part, my judgement is altered from many of my youthful confident apprehensions: And where it holdeth the same conclusion, it rejecteth abundance of the arguments as vain, with once it rested in: And where I keep to the same Conclusions and Arguments, my apprehension of them is not the same, but I see more satisfying light in many things which I took but upon trust before. And if I had resolved to hold to all my first Opinions, I must have forborn most of my studies, and lost much truth which I have discovered, and not made that my own which I did hold, and I must have resolved to live and dye a child.

§. 9. The summ is, Hold fast the substance of Religion, and every clear and certain Truth which you see in its own evidence; and also reverence your Teachers; especially the Universal Church, or the generality of wise and godly men; and be not hasty to take up any private opinion: And especially to contradict the Opinion of your Governours and Teachers in small and controverted things. But yet in such matters receive their Opinions but with a humane faith (till indeed you have more) and therefore with a supposition that time and study is very like to alter your apprehensions, and with a reserve impartially to study, and entertain the truth, and not to sit still just where you were born.

Dir. 12. What to do when Controversies do divide the Church.

Direct. 12. IF Controversies occasion any Divisions where you live, be sure to look first to the interest of Common Truth and Good, and to the exercise of Charity: And become not passionate contenders for any party in the division, or censurers of the peaceable, or of your Teachers that will not over-run their own understandings, to obtain with you the esteem of being Orthodox or zealous men: But suspect your own unripe understandings, and silence your Opinions till you are clear and certain; and joyn rather with the moderate and the peace-makers than with the Contenders and Dividers.

§. 1. You may easily be sure that Division tendeth to the ruine of the Church, and the hinderance of the Gospel, and the injury of the common interest of Religion. You know it is greatly condemned in the Scriptures: You may know that it is usually the exercise and the increase of Pride, uncharitableness and passion; and that the Devil is best pleased with it, as being the greatest gainer by it. But on the other side, you are not easily certain which party is in the right: And if you were, you are not sure that the matter will be worth the cost of the contention: Or if it be, it is to be considered whether the Truth is not like to get more advantage, by managing it in a more peaceable way, that hath no contention, nor stirreth up other men so much against it, as the way of controversie doth. And whatever it prove you may and should know, that young Christians that want both parts, and helps, and time, and experience to be throughly seen in controversies, are very unfit to make themselves parties, And that they are yet more unfit to be the hottest leaders of these parties, and to spur on their Teachers that know more than they. If the work be fit for another to do, that knoweth on what ground he goeth, and can foresee the end, yet certainly it is not fit for you. And therefore forbear it till you are more fit.

Stoici dicunt cum nemine stultorum esse litigandum: omnesque stultos insanire. Laert. in Zenone.

§. 2. I know those that would draw you into such a contentious zeal, will tell you that their cause is the cause of God, and that you desert him and betray it, if you be not zealous in it: and that it is but the counsel of flesh and blood which maketh you pretend Moderation and Peace; and that it is a sign that you are hypocrites, that are so luke warm and carnally comply with errour: and that the cause of God is to be followed with the greatest zeal and self-denyal. And all this is true, if you but be sure that it is indeed the cause of God; and that the greater works of God, be not neglected on such pretences; and that your Zeal be much greater for Faith, and Charity, and Unity, than for your opinions. But upon great experience I must tell you, that of the zealous contenders in the world, that cry up The Cause of God, and Truth, there is not one of very many, that understandeth what he talks of: but some of them cry up the Cause of God, when it is a brat of a proud and ignorant brain, and such as a judicious person would be ashamed of; and some of them are rashly zealous, before they have parts or time to come to any judicious tryal; and some of them are mis-guided by some person or party that captivateth their minds; and some of them are hurried away by passion and discontent; and many of the ambitious and worldly are blinded by their carnal interests: and many of them in meer pride, think highly of an Opinion in which they are somewhat singular, and which they can with some glorying call their Own, as either invented by them, or that in which they think they know more than ordinary men

Consuming Zeal, doth use at last to burn up the owners of it. Whatever they say or do against others in their intemperate violence, they teach others at last to say and do against them, when they have opportunity: How the Orthodox taught the Arians to use severity against them, may be seen in Victor. Utic. p. 447, 448, 449. in the edict of Hunnerychus: Legem quam dudum Christiani Imperatores nostri contra eos & alios hæreticos pro honorificentia Ecclesiæ Catholicæ dederunt, adversus nos illi proponere non erubuerunt, v. g. Rex. Hun. &c. Triumphalis & Majestatis Regiæ probatur esse virtutis, mala in autores consilia retorquere: Quisquis enim pravitatis aliquid invenerit, sibi imputet quod incurret. —— Nullos conventus homousion Sacerdotes assumant, nec aliquid mysteriorum, quæ magis polluunt, sibi vendicent. Nullam habeant ordinandi licentiam. —— Quod ipsarum legum continentia demonstratur quas induxisse Imperatoribus, &c. viz. Ut nulla exceptis superstitionis suæ antistibus Ecclesia pateret; nullis liceret aliis aut convictus agere, aut exercere conventus nec Ecclesias, aut in urbibus, aut in quibusdam minimis locis.

do: And abundance after long experience, confess that to have been their own erroneous cause, which they before entitled the cause of God: Now when this is the case, and one cryeth, Here is Christ, and another, There is Christ, one saith, This is the cause of God, and another saith, That is it; no man that hath any care of his Conscience, or of the honour of God and his profession, will leap before he looketh where he shall alight; or run after every one that will whistle him with the name or pretence of truth or a good cause: It is a sad thing to go on many years together in censuring, opposing and abusing those that are against you, and in seducing others, and mis-imploying your zeal, and parts, and time, and poysoning all your prayers and discourses, and in the end to see what mischief you have done for want of knowledge, and with Paul to confess, that you were mad in opposing the truth and servants of God, though you did it in a zeal of God through ignorance. Were it not much better to stay till you have tryed the ground, and prevent so many years grievous sin, than to scape by a sad repentance, and leave behind you stinking and venomous fruit of your mistake? (And worse, if you never repent your selves;) Your own and your Brethrens souls are not so lightly to be ventured upon dangerous untryed ways. It will not make the Truth and Church amends, to say at last, I had thought I had done well. Let those go to the Wars of disputing and contending, and censuring, and siding with a Sect that are riper, and better understand the cause: Wars are not for Children: Do you suspend your judgment till you can solidly and certainly inform it, and serve God in Charity, quietness and peace: And it's two to one, but you will live to see the day, that the contenders that would have led you into their Wars, will come off with so much loss themselves, as will teach them to approve your peaceable course, or teach you to bless God that kept you in your place and duty.

§. 3. In all this I deny not, but every truth of God is to be valued at a very high rate; and that he that shall carry himself in a neutrality, when Faith or Godliness is the matter in controversie, or shall do it meerly for his worldly ends, to save his stake by temporizing, is a false hearted hypocrite, and at the heart of no Religion. But withal I tell you, that all is not matter of Faith or Godliness that the Autonomian-Papist, the Antinomian-Libertine, or other passionate parties shall call so: And that as we must avoid contempt of the smallest Truth, so we must much more avoid the most heinous sins which we may commit for the defending of an errour. And that some Truths must be silenced for a time (though not denyed) when the contending for them is unseasonable, and tendeth to the injury of the Church. If you were Masters in the Church, you must not teach your Scholars to their hurt, though it be truth you teach them. And if you were Physicians you must not cram them or Medicate them to their hurt. Your power and duty is not to Destruction, but to Edification. The good of the Patient is the end of your Physick. All truth is not to be spoken, nor all Good to be done by all men, nor at all times. He that will do contrary, and take this for a carnal principle, doth but call folly and sin by the name of zeal and duty, and set the house on fire to rost his Egg, and with the Pharisees, prefer the outward rest of their Sabbath before his Brothers life or health. Take heed what you do when Gods honour, and mens souls, and the Churches peace are concerned in it.

§. 4. And let me tell you my own observation. As far as my judgment hath been able to reach, the men that have stood for Pacification and Moderation, have been the most judicious; and those that have best understood themselves, in most controversies that ever I heard under debate among good Christians: And those that furiously censured them as lukewarm or corrupted, have been men that had least judgment, and most passion, pride and foul mistakes in the points in question.

§. 5. Nay, I will tell you more of my observation, of which these times have given us too much proof: Profane and formal Enemies on the one hand, and ignorant self-conceited wranglers on the other hand, who think they are champions for the truth, when they are venting their passions and fond opinions, are the two Thieves between whom the Church hath suffered from the beginning to this day. The first are the Persecutors, and the other the Dividers and disturbers of the Church. Mark what the Holy Ghost saith in this case, 2 Tim. 2. 23, 24. But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strife; and the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, Phil. 2. 14, 15. Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the Sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom you shine, as lights in the world, 1 Tim. 6. 3, 4, 5, 6. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholsome words, even to the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, &c. So 1 Tim. 1. 4, 5. Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister Questions, rather than godly edifying, which is in faith: Now the end of the commandment is Charity, out of a pure heart, and a good conscience, and faith unfeigned.

§. 6. Yet I must here profess, that if any false-hearted worldly hypocrite, that resolveth to be on the saving side, and to hold all to be lawful that seemeth necessary to his safety or preferments, shall take any encouragement from what I have here said, to debauch his conscience, and sell his soul, and then call all those [furious zealots] that will not be as false to God as he, let that man know, that I have given him no cloak for so odious a sin, nor will he find a cover for it at the bar of God, though he may delude his conscience, and bear it out by his carnal advantages before the world.

Direct. 13. KNow that true Godliness is the best Life upon Earth, and the only way to perfect Happiness; Still apprehend it therefore, and Use it as the best: and with great diligence resist those Temptations which would make it seem to you a confounding grievous or unpleasant thing. Dir. 13.

§. 1. There are all things concurrent in a Holy life, to make it the most delectable life on earth, to a rational purified mind, that is not captivated to the flesh, and liveth not on Air or Dung. The Object of it is the Eternal God himself; the Infallible Truth, the only satisfactory Good; and all these condescending and appearing to us, in the mysterious, but suitable glass of a Mediatour, Redeeming, Reconciling, teaching, governing, sanctifying, justifying and glorifying all that are his own. The End of it is the pleasing and glorifying of our Maker, Redeemer and Sanctifier; and the everlasting happiness of our selves and others. The Rule of it is the infallible Revelation of God, delivered to the Church by his Prophets, and his Son, and his Apostles, and comprized in the Holy Scrip- Godliness what.

ptures, and sealed by the Miracles and Operations of the Holy Ghost that did indite them. The Work of Godliness is a living unto God, and preparing for everlasting life, by foreseeing, foretasting, seeking and rejoycing in that endless Happiness which we shall have with God; and by walking after the Spirit, and avoiding the filthiness, delusions and vexations of the world and the flesh. The nature of man is not capable of a more noble, profitable and delectable life, than this which God hath called us to by his Son. And if we did but rightly know it, we should follow it with continual alacrity and delight. Be sure therefore to conceive of Godliness as it is, and not as it is mis-represented by the Devil and the Ungodly. Read what I have written of this in my [A Saint or a Bruit.]

§. 2. As long as a Man conceiveth of Religion as it is, even the most sweet and delectable Life, so long he will follow it willingly and with his heart, and despise the temptations and avocations of fleshly gain and pleasure: He will be sincere, as not being only drawn by other men, or outward Advantages, nor frightned into it by a passion or fearfulness, but loving Religion for it self, and for its excellent ends: And then he will be chearful in all the duties, and under all the Sufferings and Difficulties of it: And he will be most likely to persevere unto the end. We cannot expect that the Heart or Will should be any more for God and Godliness, than the Understanding practically apprehendeth them as Good. Nay, we must always perceive in them a transcendent Goodness, above all that is to be found in a wordly life: Or else the appearing Goodness of the Creature, will divert us and carry away our minds: We may see in the very Brutes, what a power apprehension hath upon their actions. If your Horse be but going to his home or pasture, how freely will he go thro' thick and thin? but if he go unwillingly, his travel is troublesome and slow, and you have much ado to get him on. It will be so with you in your way to Heaven.

§. 2. It is therefore the principal design of the Devil, to hide the Goodness and Pleasantness of Religion from you; and to make it appear to you as a terrible or tedious life. By this means it is that he keeps men from it: and by this means he is still endeavouring to draw you back again, and frustrate your good Beginnings and your Hopes. If he can thus mis-represent Religion to your understandings; he will suddenly alienate your Wills, and corrupt your Lives, and make you turn to the World again, and seek for Pleasure somewhere else, and only take up with some heartless lip-service, to keep up some deceitful Hope of being saved. And the means which Satan useth to these ends are such as these.

How Satan would make Religion seem to be a confounding unpleasant thing. 1. By difficulties.

§. 3. 1. He will do his work to overwhelm you with appearing Doubts and Difficulties, and bring you to a loss, and to make Religion seem to you a confounding, and not a satisfying thing. This is one of his most dangerous Assaults upon the weak and young Beginners. Difficulties and Passions are the things which he makes use of to confound you, and put you out of a regular cheerful seeking of salvation. When you read the Scriptures he will mind you of abundance of Difficulties in all you read or hear. He will shew you seeming Contradictions: and tell you that you will never be able to understand these things. He will cast in thoughts of Unbelief and Blasphemy, and cause you, if he can, to rowl them in your mind: If you cast them not out with abhorrence, but dispute with the Devil, he hopes to prove too hard at least for such children and unprovided Souldiers as you: And if you do reject them and refuse to dispute it with him, he will sometimes tell you that your cause is naught, or else you need not be afraid to think of all that can be said against it; and this way he gets advantage of you to draw you to unbelief: And if you scape better than so, at least he will molest and terrifie you with the hideousness of his temptations; and make you to think that you are forsaken of God, because such blasphemous thoughts have been so often in your minds: and thus he will one while tempt you to Blasphemy, and another while affright and torment you with the thoughts of such Temptations.

§. 4. So also in the study of other good Books, he will tempt you to fix upon all that seems difficult to you, and there to confound and perplex your selves: and in your Meditations, he will seek to make all to tend, but to confound and overwhelm you; keeping still either hard or fearful things before your eyes; or breaking and scattering your thoughts in pieces, that you cannot reduce them to any order, nor set them together, nor make any thing of them, nor drive them to any desirable end. So in your Prayers he would fain confound you, either with fear, or with doubtful and distracting thoughts about God, or your sins, or the matter or manner of your duty, or questioning whether your Prayers will be heard. And so in your self-examination, he will still seek to puzzle you, and leave you more in darkness than you began, and make you afraid of looking homeward, or conversing with your selves; like a man that is afraid to lye in his own House when he thinks it haunted with some Apparitions. And thus the Devil would make all your Religion to be but like the unwinding of a bottom of Yarn, or a Skein of Silk that is ravelled; that you may cast it away in weariness or despair.

§. 5. Your Remedy against this dangerous temptation is, to remember that you are yet young in knowledge, and that Ignorance is like darkness that will cause Doubts and Difficulties and fears; and that all these will vanish as your Light increaseth: and therefore you must wait in patience, till your riper knowledge fit you for satisfaction: And in the mean time be sure that you take up your hearts most with the great, fundamental, necessary, plain and certain points, which your Salvation is laid upon, and which are more suited to your state and strength: If you will be gnawing bones, when you should be sucking milk, and have not patience to stay till you are past your childhood, no marvel if you find them hard, and if they stick in your throats, or break your teeth. See that you live upon God in Christ, and love and practice what you know, and think of the excellency of so much as is already revealed to you: You know already what is the end that you must seek, and where your Happiness consisteth; and what Christ hath done to prepare it for you, and how you must be justified and sanctified and walk with God: Have you God, and Christ, and Heaven to think on, and all the mercies of the Gospel to delight in, and will you lay by these as common matters, or overlook them, and perplex your selves about every difficulty in your way? Make clean work before you as you go, and live in the joyful acknowledgment of the mercies which you have received, and in the practice of the things you know, and then your Difficulties will vanish as you go on.

§. 6. 2. Another of Satans wiles is, to confound you with the noise of Sectaries, and divers Opinions in Religion; while the Popish Sect tell you that if you will be saved, you must be of their Church; and others say, you must be of theirs: And when you find that the Sects are many, and their reasonings such as you cannot answer, you will be in danger either to take up some of their deceits, or to be confounded

2. By various Sects. Sed jactur. but not optimum quærens be- founded among them all, not knowing which Church and Religion to chooſe.

§. 7. But here conſider, that there is but one Univerſal Church of Chriſtians in the World, of which Chriſt is the only King and Head, and every Chriſtian is a member. You were Sacramentally admitted into this Catholick Church by Baptiſm, and Spiritually by your being born of the Spirit: You have all the promiſes of the Goſpel, that if you believe in Chriſt you ſhall be ſaved; and that all the living members of this Church are loved by Chriſt as Members of his Body, and ſhall be preſented unſpotted to the Father, by him who is the Saviour of his Body, Eph. 5. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29. And that by one Spirit we are all baptized or entered into this one body, 1 Cor. 12. 12, 13. If then thou haſt faith, and love, and the Spirit, thou art certainly a Chriſtian, and a Member of Chriſt, and of this Univerſal Church of Chriſtians. And if there were any other Church, but what are the Parts of this one, then this were not Univerſal, and Chriſt muſt have two Bodies. Thou art not ſaved for being a Member of the Church of Rome, or Corinth, or Epheſus, or Philippi, or Theſſalonica, or of any other ſuch; but for being a Member of the Univerſal Church or body of Chriſt, that is, a Chriſtian. And as thou art a Subject of the King, and a Member of this Kingdom, whatever Corporation thou be a member of (perhaps ſometime of one, and ſometime of another) ſo thou art a ſubject of Chriſt, what ever particular Church thou be of: For it is no Church, if they be not Chriſtians, or Subjects of Chriſt. For one Sect then to ſay, Ours is the true Church, and another to ſay, Nay, but ours is the true Church, is as mad as to diſpute, whether your Hall, or Kitchin, or Parlor, or Cole-houſe, is your Houſe: and for one to ſay, This is the Houſe, and another, Nay, but it is that: when a child can tell them, that the beſt is but a part, and the Houſe containeth them all: And for the Papiſts that take on them to be the whole, and deny all others to be Chriſtians and ſaved, except the Subjects of the Pope of Rome, it is ſo irrational, Antichriſtian a Fiction and Uſurpation, and odious, cruel and groundleſs a Damnation, of the far greateſt part of the body of Chriſt, that it's fitter for deteſtation, than diſpute. And if ſuch a crack would frighten the World out of their Wits, no doubt but other Biſhops alſo would make uſe of it, and ſay, All are damned that will not be ſubject to us. But if you would ſee the Folly and Miſchief of Popery, both in this and other points, I refer you to my Treatiſe of the Catholick Church, and my Key for Catholicks, and my Safe Religion, and my Diſputat. againſt Johnſon, and my Winding-ſheet for Popery.

3. By Scrupulosity.

§. 8. 3. Another temptation to confound you in your Religion, is, by filling your Heads with practical ſcrupuloſity; ſo that you cannot go on for doubting every ſtep whether you go right: and when you ſhould cheerfully ſerve your Maſter, you will do nothing but diſquiet your minds with Scruples, whether this or that be right or wrong. Your Remedy here, is not by caſting away all care of pleaſing God, or fear of ſinning, or by debauching conſcience; but by a cheerful and quiet obedience to God, ſo far as you know his will, and an upright Willingneſs and Endeavour to underſtand it better; and a thankful receiving the Goſpel-pardon for your Failings and Infirmities. Be faithful in your obedience; but live ſtill upon Chriſt, and think not of reaching to any ſuch obedience, as ſhall ſet you above the need of his merits, and a daily pardon of your ſins: Do the beſt you can to know the will of God and do it: But when you know the Eſſentials of Religion, and obey ſincerely, let no remaining wants deprive you of the comfort of that ſo great a Mercy, as proves your right to life eternal: In your ſeeking further for more knowledge and obedience, let your care be ſuch as tendeth to your profiting, and furthering you to your end, and as doth not hinder your joy and thanks for what you have received: But that which deſtroyeth your joy and thankfulneſs, and doth but perplex you, and not further you in your way, is but hurtful Scrupuloſity, and to be laid by. When you are right in the main, thank God for that, and be further ſolicitous ſo far as to help you on, but not to hinder you. If you ſend your ſervant on your meſſage, you had rather he went on his way as well as he can, than ſtand ſcrupling every ſtep whether he ſhould ſet the right or left foot forward? and whether he ſhould ſtep ſo far or ſo far at a time, &c. Hindering Scruples pleaſe not God.

4 By ſetting you on overdoing by your own inventions.

§. 9. 4. Another way to confound you in your Religion is, by ſetting you upon overdoing by Inventions of your own; when a poor ſoul is moſt deſirous to pleaſe God, the Devil will be Religious, and ſet him upon ſome ſuch task of Voluntary humility, or Will-worſhip, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, Col. 2. 18, 20, 21, 22, 23. or ſet him upon ſome enſnaring unneceſſary Vows or Reſolutions, or ſome Popiſh works of conceited ſupererrogation, which is that which Solomon calleth, being righteous overmuch, Eccleſ. 7. 16. Thus many have made duties to themſelves, which God never made for them; and taketh that for ſin, which God never forbad them: The Popiſh Religion is very much made up, of ſuch Commandments of their own, and Traditions of men. As if Chriſt had not made us work enough, men are forward to make much more for themſelves. And ſome that ſhould teach them the Laws of Chriſt, do think that their Office is in vain, unleſs they may alſo preſcribe them Laws of their own, and give them new Precepts of Religion. Yea, ſome that are the bittereſt enemies to the ſtrict obſervance of the Laws of God, as if it were a tedious needleſs thing, muſt yet needs load us with abundance of unneceſſary Precepts of their own. And thus Religion is made both weariſom and uncertain, and a door ſet open for men to enlarge it, and increaſe the burden at their pleaſure. Indeed Popery is fitted to delude and quiet ſleepy conſciences, and to torment with Uncertainties the Conſciences that are awaked.

And there is ſomething in the corrupted nature of Man, that inclineth him to ſome Additions and voluntary Service of his Own Inventions, as an offering moſt acceptable unto God: Hence it is that many poor Chriſtians do raſhly entangle their Conſciences with Vows, of circumſtances and things unneceſſary, as to give ſo much, to obſerve ſuch days or hours, in faſting and prayer, not to do ſuch or ſuch a thing that in its ſelf is lawful, with abundance of ſuch things, which perhaps ſome change of Providence may make accidentally their duty afterwards to do: or diſable them to perform their Vows: And then theſe ſnares are Fetters on their perplexed Conſciences, perhaps as long as they live. Yea, ſome of the Antonomians teach the People, that things indifferent are the fitteſt matter of a Vow; as to live ſingle, to poſſeſs nothing, to live in ſolitude, and the like: Indeed all things lawful when they are vowed, muſt be performed: But it is unfit to be vowed if it be not firſt profitable and beſt, for our ſelves or others: and that which is beſt is not indifferent, it being every mans duty to chooſe what what is best. Vows are to bind us to the Performance of that which God had bound us to by his Laws before: They are our expreſſion of conſent and reſolution by a ſelf-obligation to obey his will: And not to make new duties of Religion to our ſelves, which elſe would never have been our duty.

§. 10. To eſcape theſe ſnares, it is neceſſary that you take heed of corrupting your Religion by burdens and mixtures of your own deviſing: You are called to Obey Gods Laws, and not to make Laws for your ſelves. You may be ſure that his Laws are juſt and good, but yours may be bad and fooliſh. When you obey him, you may expect your Reward and Encouragement from him: but when you will obey your ſelves, you muſt reward your ſelves. You may find it enough for you to keep his Laws, without deviſing more work for your ſelves; or feigning Duties which he commanded not, or ſins which he forbad not. Be not raſh in making Vows: Let them reach but unto neceſſary Duties: And let them have their due Exceptions when they are about alterable things: Or if you are entangled by them already, conſult with the moſt judicious, able, impartial men, that you may come clearly off without a wound. There is a great deal of Judgment, and Sincerity neceſſary in your Counſellors, and a great deal of Submiſſion and ſelf denyal in your ſelves, to bring you ſafely out of ſuch a ſnare. Avoid ſin whatever you do: for ſinning is not the way to your deliverance. And for the time to come, be wiſer, and lay no more ſnares for your ſelves; and clog not your ſelves with your own Inventions, but cheerfully obey what God commandeth you, who hath Wiſdom and Authority ſufficient to make you perfect Laws. Chriſts yoke is eaſie, and his burden light, Matth. 11. 30. and his Commandments are not grievous, 1 John 5. 3. But if your mixtures and ſelf-deviſed ſnares are grievous to you, blame not God, but your ſelves that made them.

5. By overwhelming Fears and Sorrows.

§. 11. 5. Another of Satans ways to make Religion burdenſome and grievous to you, is by overwhelming you with fear and ſorrow. Partly by perſwading that Religion conſiſteth in exceſs of Sorrow, and ſo cauſing you to ſpend your time in ſtriving to trouble and grieve your ſelves unprofitably, as if it were the courſe moſt acceptable to God: and partly by taking the advantage of a timerous paſſionate nature; and ſo making every thought of God, or ſerious exerciſe of Religion, to be a torment to you, by raiſing ſome overwhelming Fears. For fear hath torment, 1 John 4. 18. In ſome feminine, weak and melancholy perſons, this Temptation hath ſo much advantage in the Body, that the holieſt ſoul can do but little in reſiſting it; ſo that tho' there be in ſuch a ſincere Love to God, his Ways and Servants, yet fear ſo playeth the tyrant in them, that they perceive almoſt nothing elſe. And it is no wonder if Religion be grievous and unpleaſant to ſuch as theſe.

§. 12. But alas, it is you your ſelves that are the cauſes of this, and bring the matter of your grievance with you. God hath commanded you a ſweeter work. It is a life of Love, and joy, and cheerful progreſs to eternal joy that he requireth of you; and no more fear or grief than is neceſſary to ſeparate you from ſin, and teach you to value and uſe the Remedy. The Goſpel preſenteth to you ſuch abundant matter of joy and peace, as would make theſe the very complexion and temperature of your ſouls, if you received them as they are propounded. Religious fears when they are inordinate and hurtful, are ſinful and indeed againſt Religion; and muſt be reſiſted as other hurtful Paſſions. Be better acquainted with Chriſt and his promiſes, and you will find enough in him to pacify the Soul, and give you confidence and holy boldneſs in your acceſs to God, Heb. 4. 16. Epheſ. 3. 12. Heb. 10. 19. The Spirit which he giveth, is not the Spirit of bondage, but the Spirit of Adoption, of Love and Confidence, Rom. 8. 15. Heb. 2. 15.

6. By unmortified luſts.

§. 13. 6. Another thing that maketh Religion ſeem grievous, is retaining unmortified ſenſual deſires. If you keep up your luſt, they will ſtrive againſt the Goſpel, and all the works of the Spirit which ſtrive againſt them, Gal. 5. 17. And every duty will be ſo far unpleaſant to you as you are carnal, becauſe it is againſt your carnal inclination and deſire. Away therefore with your beloved ſickneſs, and then both your Food and your Phyſitian will be leſs grievous to you. Mortifie the fleſh, and you will leſs diſreliſh the things of the Spirit. For the carnal mind is enmity againſt God: For it is not ſubject to his Law, nor can be. Rom. 8. 7, 8.

7. By actual ſin.

§. 14. 7. Another cauſe of confounding and wearying you, is the mixture of your actual ſins, dealing unfaithfully with God, and wounding your Conſciences, by renewing guilt, eſpecially of ſins againſt knowledge and conſideration. If you thus keep the bone out of joint, and the wound unhealed, no marvel if you are loth to work or travail. But it is your ſin and folly that ſhould be grievous to you, and not that which is contrary to it, and would remove the cauſe of all your troubles. Reſolvedly forſake your wilful ſinning, and come home by Repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (Acts 20. 21.) and then you will find, that when the Thorn is out, your Pain will ceaſe, and that the cauſe of your trouble was not in God or Religion, but in your ſin.

8. By ignorance of the tenor of the Goſpel.

§. 15. 8. Laſtly, To make Religion unpleaſant to you, the Tempter would keep the Subſtance of the Goſpel unknown or unobſerved to you: He would hide the wonderful Love of God revealed in our Redeemer, and all the riches of ſaving grace, and the great deliverance and Priviledges of believers, and the certain hopes of life eternal: And the Kingdom of God which conſiſteth in righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall be repreſented to you as conſiſting in errors only, or in trifles; in ſhadows and ſhews, and bodily exerciſe which profiteth little, 1 Tim. 4. 8. If ever you would know the pleaſures of faith and holineſs, you muſt labour above all to know God as revealed in his infinite love in the Mediator, and read the Goſpel as Gods Act of Oblivion, and the Teſtament and Covenant of Chriſt, in which he giveth you life eternal: and in every duty draw near to God as a reconciled Father, the Object of your everlaſting Love and Joy. Know and uſe Religion as it is, without miſtaking or corrupting it, and it will not appear to you as a grievous tedious or confounding thing.

Direction 14. BE very diligent in mortifying the deſires and pleaſures of the fleſh; and keep a continual watch upon your Senſes, Appetite and Luſts; and caſt not your ſelves upon temptations, occaſions or Opportunities of ſinning, remembring that your Salvation lyeth on your Succeſs. Dir. 14.

§. 1. The luſts of the fleſh, and the pleaſures of the world, are the common enemy of God and Souls, and the damnation of thoſe Souls that periſh. And there is no ſort more lyable to temptations of this kind, than thoſe that are in the flower of their youth and ſtrength. When all the Senſes are in their vigour, and luſt and appetite are in their their ſtrength and fury, how great is the danger? and how great muſt your diligence be if you will eſcape; The appetite and luſt of the weak and ſick, are weak and ſick as well as they; and therefore they are no great temptation or danger to them. The deſire and pleaſure of the ſenſes do abate, as natural ſtrength and vigour doth abate: To ſuch there is much leſs need of watchfulneſs; and where nature hath mortified the fleſh, there is ſomewhat the leſs for grace to do. There needs not much grace to keep the aged and weak from fornication, uncleanneſs, exceſſive ſports and carnal mirth: and gluttony and drunkenneſs alſo are ſins which youth is much more lyable to. Eſpecially ſome bodies that are not only young and ſtrong, but have in their temperature and complexion a ſpecial inclination to ſome of theſe (as luſt, or ſport, or fooliſh mirth) there needeth a great deal of diligence, reſolution and watchfulneſs for their preſervation. Luſt is not like a corrupt opinion, that ſurprizeth us through a defect of Reaſon, and vaniſheth as ſoon as truth appeareth: But it is a brutiſh inclination, which though Reaſon muſt ſubdue and govern, yet the perfecteſt Reaſon will not extirpate, but there it will ſtill dwell. And as it is conſtantly with you, it will be ſtirring when objects are preſented by the ſenſe or fantaſie to allure. And it is like a torrent or a head-ſtrong Horſe, that muſt be kept in at firſt, and is hardly reſtrained if it once break looſe and get the head. If you are bred up in temperance and modeſty, where there are no great temptations to gluttony, drinking, ſports or wantonneſs, you may think a while that your natures have little or none of this concupiſcence, and ſo may walk without a guard: But when you come where baits of luſt abound? where Women, and Playes, and Feaſts, and Drunkards are the Devils ſnares, and tinder, and bellows, to enflame your luſts, you may then find to your ſorrow, that you had need of watchfulneſs, and that all is not mortified, that is aſleep, or quiet in you. As a man that goeth with a Candle among Gunpowder, or near Thatch, ſhould never be careleſs, becauſe he goeth in continual danger; ſo you that are young, and have naturally eager appetites and luſts, ſhould remember that you carry fire and Gunpowder ſtill about you, and are never out of danger while you have ſuch an enemy to watch.

§. 2. And if once you ſuffer the fire to kindle, alas, what work may it make ere you are aware? James 1. 14, 15. Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own luſt and enticed: Then when luſt hath conceived it bringeth forth ſin; and ſin when it is finiſhed bringeth forth death. Little knoweth the Fiſh when he is catching or nibling at the bait, that he is ſwallowing the hook which will lay him preſently on the bank. When you are looking on the cup, on gazing or alluring beauty, or wantonly dallying and pleaſing your ſenſes with things unſafe, you little know how far beyond your intentions you may be drawn, and how deep the wound may prove, how great the ſmart, or how long and difficult the cure. As you love your ſouls, obſerve Pauls counſel, 2 Tim. 2. 22. Flee youthful luſts: Keep at a full diſtance: Come not near the bait. If you get a wound in your conſciences by any wilful heinous ſin, O what a caſe will you be in? How heartleſs unto ſecret duty? afraid of God that ſhould be your joy; deprived of the comforts of his preſence, and all the pleaſure of his ways? How miſerably will you be tormented between the tyranny of your own concupiſcence, the ſting of ſin, the gripes of Conſcience, and the terrors of the Lord? How much of the life of faith, and love, and heavenly zeal, will be quenched in a moment? I am to ſpeak more afterwards of this; and therefore ſhall only ſay at preſent to all young Converts that care for their ſalvation: Mortifie the fleſh, and always watch, and avoid temptations.

Direction 15. BE exceeding wary not only what Teachers you commit the guidance of your Souls unto, but alſo with what company you familiarly converſe: That they be neither ſuch as would corrupt your minds with error, or your hearts with viciouſneſs, profaneneſs, lukewarmneſs, or with a ſeaveriſh factious zeal: But chooſe, if poſſible, judicious, holy, heavenly, humble, unblameable, ſelf denying perſons, to be your ordinary companions, and familiars, but eſpecially for your near Relations.

Dir. 15. Namſi falſi & ſolo nomine tumidi, non modo non conſulendi, ſed vitandi ſunt, quibus nihil eſt importunius, nihil inſulſius, &c. Petrach.

§. 1. It is a matter of very great importance, what Teachers you chooſe in order to your ſalvation. In this the free grace of God much differenceth ſome from others: For as poor Heathens and Infidels have none that know more, than what the Book of Nature teacheth (if ſo much;) ſo in the ſeveral Nations of Chriſtians, it is hard for the people to have any, but ſuch as the Sword of the Magiſtrate forceth on them, or the ſtream of their Countreys Cuſtom recommendeth to them. And it is a wonder if pure Truth and Holineſs be countenanced by either of theſe. But when and where his mercy pleaſeth, God ſendeth wiſe and holy Teachers, with compaſſion and diligence to ſeek the ſaving of mens ſouls, ſo that none but the malignant and obſtinate are deprived of their help.

Dial. 157. lib. 2. Scientia eſt poſſe docere. Proverb. Sub indocta tamen doctus evadere potes. affatu alicujus divino, ut Cicero loquitur. Auguſtinus de ſeipſo teſtatur (cui non omnia credere nefas eſt) quod & Ariſtotelicas Categorias, quæ inter difficillima numerantur, & artes liberales, quas ſingulas à præceptoribus didiciſſe magnum dicitur) nullo tradente, omnes intellexit. Bernardus item, vir doctrina & ſanctitate clariſſimus, omnes ſuas literas (quarum inter cunctos ſui temporis abundantiſſimus fuit) in ſilvis & in agris didicit non hominum magiſterio, ſed meditando & orando, nec ullos unquam alios præceptores habuit, quam quercus & fagos. Petrarch. lib. 2. Dialog. 40.

§. 2. Ambitious, proud, covetous, licentious, ungodly men, are not to be choſen for your Teachers if you have your choice. In a Nation where true Religion is in credit, and hath the Magiſtrates countenance or the Major Vote, ſome graceleſs men may joyn with better, in preaching and defending the purity of doctrine, and holineſs of life: And they may be very ſerviceable to the Church herein; eſpecially in expounding and diſputing for the truth: But even there, more experienced ſpiritual Teachers are much more deſirable: They will ſpeak moſt feelingly, who feel what they ſpeak: And they are fitteſt to bring others to faith and love, who believe and love God and holineſs themſelves. They that have life will ſpeak more lively than the dead. And in moſt places of the world, the ungodlineſs of ſuch Teachers makes them enemies to the Truth which is according to godlineſs: Their natures are at enmity to the life and power of the doctrine which they ſhould preach: And they will do their worſt to corrupt the Magiſtrates, and make them of their mind: And if they can but get the Sword to favour them, they are uſually the cruelleſt perſecutors of the ſincere. As it is notorious among the Papiſts, that the baits of Power, and Honour, and Wealth, have ſo vitiated the body of their Clergy, that they conſpire to uphold a worldly Government and Religion, and in expreſs contradiction to ſenſe and Reaſon, and to Antiquity and the judgment of the Church, and to the holy Scriptures, they captivate the ignorant and ſenſual to their tyranny and falſe worſhip, and uſe the ſeduced Magiſtrates and multitude to the perſecuting of thoſe that will not follow them, to ſin and to perdition. Take heed of proud and worldly Guides,

§. 3. And yet it is not every one that pretendeth Piety and Zeal, that is to be heard or taken for a Teacher: But 1. Such as preach ordinarily the substantial Truths which all Christians are agreed in: 2. Such as make it the drift of their preaching, to raise your souls to the Love of God, and to a holy heavenly life, and are zealous against confessed sins. 3. Such as contradict not the essential Truths by errors of their own; nor the doctrine of Godliness by wicked malicious applications. 4. Such as drive not on any ambitious tyrannical designs of their own, but deny themselves, and aim at your salvation. 5. Such as are not too hot in proselyting you to any singular opinion of their own: it being the prediction of Paul to the Ephesians, Acts 20. 30. Of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. 6. Such as are judicious with holy zeal, and zealous with judgment. 7. Such as are of experience in the things of God, and not young beginners or Novices in Religion. 8. Such as bear reverence to the judgments of the generality of wise and godly men, and are tender of the Unity of the Church, and not such as would draw you into a Sect or Party, to the contempt of other Christians; no not to a party that hath the favour of Rulers and the people to promote them. 9. Such as are gentle, peaceable, and charitable, and not such as burn with hellice malish against their Brethren, nor with an ungodly, or cruel, consuming zeal. 10. Such as live not sensually and wickedly contrary to the doctrine which they preach, but shew by their lives, that they believe what they say, and feel the power of the truths which they preach.

Imperat (Rex) ut nostræ religionis illorum mensa nullum communem haberent, neque cum Catholicis omnino versarentur. Quæ res non ipsis aliquod præsidii beneficium, sed nobis maximum contulit lucrum: Nam sicuti cancer consuevit serpere, quanto magis communis mensa ciborum potuit inquinare, cum dicat Apostolus, cum nefariis nec cibum habere communem. Victor. Utic. p. 418. Magnum virtutis præsidium societas bonorum, socius exemplo excitat, sermone recreat, consilio instruit, orationibus adjuvat, autoritate continet, quæ omnia solitudini desunt, Jos. Acosta, l. 4. c. 13. Dicunt Stoici Amicitiam solos inter bonos, quos sibi invicem studiorum similitudo conciliet, posse consistere. Porro amicitiam ipsam societatem quandam esse dicunt omnium quæ sunt ad vitam necessaria, cum amicis ut nobismet ipsis utamur: atque ob id amicum eligendum, amicorumque multitudinem inter expetenda ponunt: inter malos non posse constare amicitiam. Laert. in Zenone.

§. 4. And your familiar companions have great advantage to help or hinder your salvation, as well as your Teachers. The matter is not so great whom you meet by the way, or travel with, or trade and buy and sell with, as whom you make your intimate, or familiar friends. For such have both the advantage of their interest in your affections, and also the advantage of their nearness and familiarity; and if they have but also the advantage of higher abilities than you, they may be powerful instruments of your good or hurt. If you have a familiar friend that will defend you from error, and help you against temptations, and lovingly reprove your sin, and feelingly speak of God, and the life to come, inditing his discourse from the inward power of faith, and love, and holy experience, the benefit of such a friend may be more to you, than of the learnedst or greatest in the world. How sweetly will their speeches relish of the Spirit, from which they come? How deeply may they pierce a careless heart? How powerfully may they kindle in you a love and zeal to God and his Commandments? How seasonably may they discover a temptation, prevent your fall, reprove an error, and recover your souls? How faithfully will they watch over you? How profitably will they provoke and put you on? and pray with you fervently when you are cold, and mind you of the Truth and duty, and mercy, which you forget? It is a very great mercy to have a judicious, solid, faithful companion, in the way to Heaven.

§. 5. But if your ears are daily filled with froth and folly, with ribaldry or idle stories, with Oaths and Curses, with furious words, or scorns and jears against the godly, or with the Sophistry of deceivers, it is likely this should leave a pleasant or wholsome relish on your minds? Is it likely that the effect should not be seen in your lean or leprous hearts and lives, as well as the effects of an infected or unwholsome air or diet, will be seen upon your diseased bodies? He is ungodly that liketh such company best: And he is proud and presumptuous that will unnecessarily cast himself upon it, in confidence that he shall receive no hurt: And he is careless of himself, that will not cautelously avoid it: And few that long converse with such, come off without some notable loss; except when we live with such, as Lot did in Sodom, grieving for their sin and misery, or as Christ conversed with publicans and sinners, with a holy zeal and diligence to convert and save them, or as those that have not liberty, who bear that which they have not power to avoid.

§. 6. Among the rest, your danger is not least from them that are eager to proselyte you to some party or unsound opinion: that they think they are in the right, and that they do it in love, and that they think it necessary to your salvation, and that Truth or Godliness are the things which they profess, all this makes the danger much the greater to you, if it be not Truth and Godliness indeed, which they propose and plead for. And none are in more danger than the ungrounded and unexperienced, that yet are so wise in their own esteem, as to be confident that they know Truth from Error when they hear it, and are not afraid of any deceit, nor much suspicious of their own understandings. But of this before.

§. 7. The like danger there is of the familiar company of lukewarm ones, or the prophane. At first you may be troubled at their sinful or unsavoury discourse, and make some resistance against the infection: But before you are aware, it may so cool and damp your graces, as will make your decay discernable to others! First, You will hear them with less offence; and then you will grow indifferent what company you are in; and then you will laugh at their sin and folly; and then you will begin to speak as they, and then you will grow cold and seldomer in prayer and other holy duties; and if God prevent it not, at last your judgments will grow blind, and you will think all this allowable.

Non tamen ut corporum, sic animorum morbi, transeunt ad nolentes: Imo vero nobilis animus, vitiorum odio, ad amorem virtutis accenditur. Petrarch. Dialog. de alior. morib.

§. 8. But of all bad company, the nearest is the worst: If you choose such into your families, or into your nearest conjugal relations, you cast water upon the fire; you imprison your selves in such fetters as will gall and grieve you, if they do not stop you; you choose a life of constant, close and great temptations: Whereas your grace, and comfort and salvation, might be much promoted by the society of such as are wise and gracious and suitable to your state. To have a constant companion to open your heart to, and joyn with in prayer and edifying conference, and faithfully help you against your sins, and yet to be patient with you in your frailties, is a mercy which worldlings neither deserve nor value.

Direct. 16. MAke careful choice of the Books which you read. Let the Holy Scriptures ever have the preheminence, and next them, the solid, lively, heavenly Treatises which best expound and apply the Scriptures: and next these, the credible Histories, especially of the Church, and Tractates upon inferior Sciences and Arts: But take heed of the poyson of the Writings of false Teachers, which would corrupt your understandings: and Dir. 16.

and of vain Romances, Play-books, and false Stories, which may bewitch your fantasies, and corrupt your hearts.

§. 1. As there is a more excellent appearance of the Spirit of God in the Holy Scriptures, than in any other Book whatever, so it hath more power and fitness to convey the Spirit, and make us spiritual, by imprinting it self upon our hearts. As there is more of God in it, so it will acquaint us more with God, and bring us nearer him, and make the Reader more reverent, serious and Divine. Let Scripture be first and most in your hearts and hands, and other Books be used as subservient to it. The endeavours of the Devil and Papists to keep it from you, doth shew that it is most necessary and desirable to you. And when they tell you, that all Hereticks plead the Scriptures, they do but tell you, that it is the common Rule or Law of Christians, which therefore all are fain to pretend: As all Lawyers and wranglers plead the Laws of the Land, be their cause never so bad, and yet the Laws must not be therefore concealed or cast aside: And they do but tell you, that in their concealment or dishonouring the Scriptures, they are worse than any of those Hereticks. When they tell you that the Scriptures are misunderstood and abused, and perverted to maintain mens errors, they might also desire that the Sun might be obscured, because the purblind do mistake, and Murderers and Robbers do wickedly by its light: And that the earth might be subverted, because it bears all evil doers; and High-wayes stopt up, because men travel in them to do evil: And food prohibited, because it nourisheth mens diseases. And when they have told you truly of a Law or Rule (whether made by Pope or Council) which bad men cannot misunderstand or break, or abuse and misapply, then hearken to them and prefer that Law, as that which preventeth the need of any judgement.

§. 2. The Writings of Divines are nothing else but a preaching the Gospel to the eye, as the voice preacheth it to the ear. Vocal preaching hath the preheminence in moving the affections, and being diversified according to the state of the Congregations which attend it: This way the Milk cometh warmest from the breast. But Books have the advantage in many other respects: you may read an able Preacher, when you have but a mean one to hear. Every Congregation cannot hear the most judicious or powerful Preachers: but every single person may read the Books of the most powerful and judicious; Preachers may be silenced or banished, when Books may be at hand: Books may be kept at a smaller charge than Preachers: We may choose Books which treat of that very subject which we desire to hear of; but we cannot choose what subject the Preacher shall treat of. Books we may have at hand every day and hour: when we can have Sermons but seldom, and at set times. If Sermons be forgotten, they are gone. But a Book we may read over and over till we remember it: and if we forget it, may again peruse it at our pleasure, or at our leisure. So that good Books are a very great mercy to the world: The Holy Ghost chose the way of writing, to preserve his Doctrine and Laws to the Church, as knowing how easie and sure a way it is of keeping it safe to all generations, in comparison of meer Verbal Tradition, which might have made as many Controversies about the very terms, as there be memories or persons to be the preservers and reporters.

Books are (if well chosen) domestick, present, constant, judicious, pertinent, yea, and powerful Sermons: and always of very great use to your salvation: but especially when Vocal preaching faileth, and Preachers are ignorant, ungodly or dull, or when they are persecuted, and forbid to preach.

§. 3. You have need of a judicious Teacher at hand, to direct you what Books to use or to refuse. For among Good Books there are some very good that are sound and lively: and some are good, but mean, and weak, and somewhat dull: and some are very good in part, but have mixtures of error, or else of incautelous injudicious expressions, fitter to puzzle, than edifie the weak. I am loth to name any of these later sorts, (of which abundance have come forth of late): But to the young beginner in Religion, I may be bold to recommend (next to a sound Catechism) Mr. Rutherford's Letters, Mr. Robert Bolton's Works, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Whateleyes, Mr. Ball of Faith, Dr. Prestons, Dr. Sibbes, Mr. Hildersham, Mr. Pinkes Sermons, Mr. Jo. Rogers, Mr. Rich. Rogers, Mr. Rich. Allens, Mr. Gurnall, Mr. Swinnocke, Mr. Jos. Simonds: And to stablish you against Popery, Dr. Challoner's Credo Eccles. Cathol. Dr. Field of the Church, Dr. Whites Way to the Church, with the Defence, Bishop Usher's Answer to the Jesuit; and Chillingworth, with Drelincourt's Summary. And for right Principles about Redemption, &c. Mr. Truman's Great Propitiation; and of Natural and Moral Impotency; and Mr. William Fenner of Wilful Impenitency, Mr. Hotchkis of Forgiveness of Sin. To pass by many other excellent ones, that I may not name too many.

§. 4. To a very judicious able Reader, who is fit to censure all he reads, there is no great danger in the reading the Books of any Seducers: It doth but shew him how little and thin a cloak is used, to cover a bad cause. But alas, young Souldiers, not used to such Wars, are startled at a very Sophism, or at a terrible threatning of damnation to dissenters, (which every censorious Sect can use) or at every confident triumphant boast, or at every thing that hath a fair pretence of truth or godliness: Injudicious persons can answer almost no deceiver which they hear: and when they cannot answer them, they think they must yeild, as if the fault were not in them, but in the case, and as if Christ had no wiser followers, or better defenders of his truth than they. Meddle not therefore with poyson, till you better know how to use it, and may do it with less danger; as long as you have no need.

§. 5. As for Play-books and Romances, and idle Tales, I have already shewed in my Book of self-denyal, how pernicious they are, especially to youth, and to frothy, empty, idle wits, that know not what a man is, nor what he hath to do in the world. They are powerful baits of the Devil, to keep more necessary things out of their minds, and better Books out of their hands, and to poyson the mind so much the more dangerously, as they are read with more delight and pleasure: and to fill the minds of sensual people with such idle fumes, and intoxicating fancies, as may divert them from the serious thoughts of their salvation: And (which is no small loss) to rob them of abundance of that precious time, which was given them for more important business; and which they will wish and wish again at last, that they had spent more wisely. I know the fantasticks will say, that these things are innocent, and may teach men much good (like him that must go to a Whore house to learn to hate uncleanness, and him that would go out with Robbers to learn to hate Thievery): But I shall now only ask them as in the presence of God, 1. Whether they could spend that time no better? 2. Whether better Books and practices would not edifie them more. 3. Whether the greateſt Lovers of Romances and Playes be the greateſt Lovers of the Book of God and of a holy life? 4. Whether they feel in themſelves that the Love of theſe vanities, doth increaſe their love to the Word of God, and kill their ſin, and prepare them for the life to come? or clean contrary? And I would deſire men not to prate againſt their own experience and reaſon, nor to diſpute themſelves into damnable impenitency, nor to befool their ſouls by a few ſilly words, which any but a ſenſualiſt may perceive to be meer deceit and falſhood. If this will not ſerve, they ſhall be ſhortly convinced and anſwered in another manner.

Dir. 17. Direct. 17. TAke heed that you receive not a Doctrine of Libertiniſm as from the Goſpel; nor conceive of Chriſt as an encourager of ſin; nor pretend free grace for your carnal ſecurity or ſloth: For this is but to ſet up another Goſpel, and another Chriſt, or rather the Doctrine and works of the Devil againſt Chriſt and the Goſpel, and to turn the Grace of God into wantonneſs.

Siquis eſt hoc vehore animi, atque hac indole virtutis ac conſtantiæ, ut reſpuat omnes voluptates, omnemque vitæ ſuæ curſum labore corporis, atque animi contentione conficiat, quem non quies, non remiſſio non ſæpialium ſtudia, non ludi, non convivia delectant; nihil in vita expetendum putet niſi quod eſt cum laude & honore conjunctum; hunc mea ſententia divinis quibuſdam bonis inſtructum atque ornatum puto. Cic. pro Cæl.

§. 1. Becauſe the Devil knoweth that you will not receive his doctrine in his own Name, his uſual method is to propound and preach it in the name of Chriſt, which he knoweth you reverence and regard. For if Satan concealed not his own Name and Hand in every temptation, it would ſpoil his game: And the more excellent and ſplendid is his pretence, the more powerful the temptation is. They that gave heed to ſeducing Spirits and Doctrines of Devils, no doubt thought better of the Spirits and the Doctrines, eſpecially ſeeming ſtrict (for the Devil hath his ſtrictneſſes) as forbidden to marry, and abſtinence from meats which God hath created to be received with thankſgiving, 1 Tim. 4. 1, 3. But the ſtrictneſſes of the Devil, are alwayes intended to make men looſe. They ſhall be ſtrict as the Phariſees in Traditions and vain Ceremonies, and building the Tombs of the Prophets, and garniſhing the Sepulchers of the Righteous, that they may hate and murder the living Saints that worſhip God in Spirit and in truth. Licentiouſneſs is the proper Doctrine of the Devil, which all his ſtrictneſs tendeth to promote. To receive ſuch principles is pernicious: but to father them upon Chriſt and the Goſpel, is blaſphemous.

§. 2. The Libertines, Antinomians and Autonomians of this age, have gathered you too many inſtances. The Libertine ſaith, [The Heart is the man; therefore you may deny the truth with your tongue, you may be preſent at falſe Worſhip, (as at the Maſs,) you need not ſuffer to avoid the ſpeaking of a word, or ſubſcribing to an untruth or error, or doing ſome little thing; but as long as you keep your hearts to God, and mean well, or have an honeſt mental reſervation, and are forced to it by others, rather than ſuffer, you may ſay, or ſubſcribe, or ſwear any thing which you can your ſelves put a lawful ſenſe upon in your own minds, or comply with any outward actions or cuſtoms to avoid offence and ſave your ſelves.]

For ſound Principles in theſe points, read Mr. Gibbons's Sermon of Juſtification in the Morning Exerciſes at S. Giles. And Mr. Truman's two Books before named, and Le Blanks Theſes in Latin, with the Theſ. Salmurienſ. &c.

The Antinomians tell you, that [The Moral Law is abrogated, and that the Goſpel is no Law; (and if there be no Law, there is no Governour nor Government, no duty, no ſin, no judgment, no puniſhment, no reward); that the elect are juſtified before they are born, or repent, or believe; that their ſin is pardoned before it is committed, that God took them as ſuffering and fulfilling all the Law in Chriſt, as if it had been they that did it in him: that we are juſtified by faith only in our conſciences: that juſtifying Faith is but the believing that we are juſtified: that every man muſt believe that he is pardoned, that he may be pardoned in his conſcience; and this he is to do by a Divine Faith, and that this is the ſenſe of the Article, [I believe the forgiveneſs of ſins] that is, that my ſins are forgiven; and that all are forgiven that believe it: that it is legal and ſinful to work or do any thing for ſalvation: that ſin once pardoned need not be confeſſed and lamented, or at leaſt, we need not ask pardon of ſin daily, or of one ſin oft: that caſtigations are no puniſhments; and yet no other Puniſhment is threatned to believers for their ſins; and conſequently that Chriſt hath not procured them a pardon of any ſin after believing, but prevented all neceſſity of pardon: and therefore they muſt not ask pardon of them, nor do any thing to obtain it: that fear of Hell muſt have no hand in our obedience, or reſtraint from ſin: And ſome add, that he that cannot repent or believe, muſt comfort himſelf that Chriſt repented and believed for him: (a contradiction):] Many ſuch Doctrines of Licentiouſneſs the Abuſers of Grace have brought forth.

And the Sect which imitateth the Father of Pride in affecting to be from under the Government of God, and to be the Law-givers and Rulers of themſelves and all others (which I therefore call the Autonomians) are Licentious and much more. They equally contend againſt Chriſts Government, and for their own: They fill the world with Wars and Bloodſhed, Oppreſſion, and Cruelty, and the Ears of God with the cries of the Martyrs and oppreſſed ones, and all that the Spiritual and holy Diſcipline of Chriſt may be ſuppreſſed, and Ungodlineſs and Religion made odious, or baniſhed from the Earth, and that themſelves may be taken for the Center, and Pillars, and Law-givers of the Church, and the Conſciences of all men may be taught to caſt off all Scruples or Fears of offending God, in compariſon of offending them; and may abſolutely ſubmit to them; and never ſtick at any feared Diſobedience to Chriſt: They are the Scorners and Perſecutors of ſtrict obedience to the Laws of God, and take thoſe that fear his judgments, to be men affrighted out of their wits; and that to obey him exactly (which alas who can do, when he hath done his beſt) is but to be hypocritical or too preciſe: but to queſtion their domination, or break their Laws (impoſed on the world, even on Kings and States without any Authority) this muſt be taken for Hereſie, Schiſm, or a Rebellion like that of Corah and his Company. This Luciferian Spirit of the proud Autonomians hath filled the Chriſtian world with bloodſhed, and been the greateſt means of the Miſeries of the Earth, and eſpecially of hindring and perſecuting the Goſpel, and ſetting up a Phariſaical Religion in the world: It hath fought againſt the Goſpel, and filled with blood, the Countries of France, Savoy, Rhætia, Bohemia, Belgia, Helvetia, Polonia, Hungary, Germany, and many more: that it may appear how much of the Satanical nature they have, and how punctually they fulfil his will.

§ 3. And natural corruption containeth in it, the ſeeds of all theſe damnable Hereſies; nothing more natural to lapſed man, than to ſhake off the Government of God, and to become a Law-giver to himſelf, and as many others as he can; and to turn the grace of God into wantonneſs. Therefore the prophane, that never heard it from any Hereticks but themthemſelves, do make themſelves ſuch a Creed as this that [God is merciful, and therefore we need not fear his threatnings, for he will be better than his word: It belongeth to him to ſave us, and not to us, and therefore we may caſt our ſouls upon his care, though we care not for them our ſelves. If he hath predeſtinated us to ſalvation, we ſhall be ſaved, and if he have not, we ſhall not; whatever we do, or how well ſoever we live: Chriſt dyed for ſinners, and therefore though we are ſinners, he will ſave us: God is ſtronger than the Devil, and therefore the Devil ſhall not have the moſt: That which pleaſeth the fleſh, and doth God no harm, can never be ſo great a matter, or ſo much offend him, as to procure our damnation. What need of ſo much ado to be ſaved, or ſo much haſte to turn to God, when any one that at laſt doth but repent, and cry God mercy, and believe that Chriſt dyed for him, ſhall be ſaved? Chriſt is the Saviour of the world, and his grace is very great and free, and therefore God forbid that none ſhould be ſaved but thoſe few that are of ſtrict and holy lives, and make ſo much ado for Heaven. No man can know who ſhall be ſaved, and who ſhall not: and therefore it is the wiſeſt way, to do no body any harm, and to live merrily, and truſt God with our ſouls, and put our ſalvation upon the venture: no body is ſaved for his own works or deſervings; and therefore our lives may ſerve the turn as well as if they were more ſtrict and holy.] This is the Creed of the ungodly: by which you may ſee how natural it is to them, to abuſe the Goſpel, and plead Gods grace to quiet and ſtrengthen them in their ſin, and to embolden themſelves on Chriſt to diſobey him.

§. 4. But this is but to ſet Chriſt againſt himſelf, even his Merits and Mercy againſt his Government and Spirit; and to ſet his Death againſt the Ends of his death; and to ſet our Saviour againſt our ſalvation, and to run from God and rebel againſt him, becauſe Chriſt dyed to recover us to God, and to give us Repentance unto life; and to ſin, becauſe he dyed to ſave his people from their ſins, and to purifie a peculiar people to himſelf zealous of good works, Matth. 1. 21. Tit. 2. 14. He that committeth ſin is of the Devil; for the Devil ſinneth from the beginning: For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted that he might deſtroy the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 8. John 8. 44.

Dir. 18. Direct. 18. WAtch diligently both againſt the more diſcernable decays of grace, and againſt the degenerating of it into ſome carnal affections: or ſomething counterfeit, and of another kind: And ſo alſo of Religious duties.

§. 1. We are no ſooner warmed with the cœleſtial flames, but natural corruption is enclining us to grow cold: Like hot water, which loſeth its heat by degrees, unleſs the fire be continually kept under it. Who feeleth not that as ſoon as in a Sermon or Prayer, or holy Meditation, his heart hath got a little heat, as ſoon as it is gone, it is prone to its former earthly temper, and by a little remiſneſs in our duty, or thoughts, or buſineſs about the world, we preſently grow cold and dull again. Be watchful therefore leſt it decline too far: Be frequent in the means that muſt preſerve you from declining; when faintneſs telleth you, that your ſtomachs are emptied of the former meat, ſupply it with another, leſt ſtrength abate. You are rowing againſt the ſtream of fleſhly intereſt and inclinations; and therefore intermit not too long, leſt you go faſter down by your eaſe, than you get up by labour.

How Grace may degenerate.

§. 2. The Degenerating of Grace, is a way of backſliding, very common, and too little obſerved. It is, when good affections do not directly cool, but turn into ſome carnal affections ſomewhat like them, but of another kind: As if the body of a man inſtead of dying, ſhould receive the life or ſoul of a Beaſt, inſtead of the reaſonable humane ſoul. For inſtance: 1. Have you Believed in God, and in Jeſus Chriſt, and Loved him accordingly? You ſhall ſeem to do ſo ſtill as much as formerly; when your corrupted minds have received ſome falſe repreſentation of him, and ſo it is indeed another thing that you thus corruptly Believe and Love. 2. Have you been fervent in Prayer? you ſhall be fervent ſtill; if Satan can but corrupt your prayers, by corrupting your judgment or affections, and get you to think that to be the cauſe of God, which is againſt him; and that to be againſt him, which he commandeth; and thoſe to be the troublers of the Church, which are its beſt and faithfulleſt members: Turn but your prayers againſt the cauſe and people of God by your miſtake, and you may pray as fervently againſt them as you will. The ſame I may ſay of preaching, and conference, and zeal: Corrupt them once, and turn them againſt God, and Satan will joyn with you for zealous and frequent preaching, or conference, or diſputes. 3. Have you a confidence in Chriſt and his promiſe for your ſalvation? Take heed leſt it turn into carnal ſecurity, and a perſwaſion of your good eſtate upon ill grounds, or you know not why. 4. Have you the Hope of glory? Take heed leſt it turn into a careleſs venturouſneſs of your ſoul, or the meer laying aſide of fear and cautelous ſuſpicion of your ſelves. 5. Have you a Love to them that fear the Lord? Watch your hearts leſt it degenerate into a carnal or a partial Love. Many unheedful young perſons of different Sexes, at firſt love each other with an honeſt, chaſte, and pious Love; but imprudently uſing too much familiarity, before they were well aware it hath turned into a fleſhly Love, which hath proved their ſnare, and drawn them further into ſin or trouble. Many have honoured them that fear the Lord, who inſenſibly have declined to honour only thoſe of them that were eminent in wealth and worldly honour, or that were eſteemed for their parts or place by others, and little honoured the humble, poor, obſcure Chriſtians, who were at leaſt as good as they: Forgetting that the things that are highly eſteemed among men, are abomination in the ſight of God, Luke 16. 15. and that God valueth not men by their places and dignities in the world, but by their graces and holineſs of life. Abundance that at firſt did ſeem to Love all Chriſtians as ſuch, as far as any thing of Chriſt appeared in them, have firſt fallen into ſome Sect, and over-admiring their party, and have ſet light by others as good as them, and cenſured them as unſound, and then withdrawn their ſpecial Love, and confined it to their party, or to ſome few; and yet thought that they loved the godly as much as ever, when it was degenerate into a factious Love. 6. Are you zealous for God, and truth, and holineſs, and againſt the errors and ſins of others? Take heed leaſt you loſe it, while you think it doth increaſe in you: Nothing is more apt to degenerate than zeal; In how many thouſands hath it turned from an innocent, charitable, peaceable, tractable, healing, profitable, heavenly zeal, into a partial zeal for ſome Party or Opinions of their own? and into a fierce, cenſorious, uncharitable, ſcandalous, turbulent, diſobedient, unruly, hurting and deſtroying zeal, ready to wiſh for fire from Heaven, and kindling contention, confuſion, and every evil work. Read well James 3. 7. So if you are meek or patient, take heed leſt it degenerate into ſtupidity or contempt of thoſe you ſuffer by: To be patient is not to be meerly inſenſible of the affliction; but by the power of faith to bear the sense of it, as over-ruled by things of greater moment.

§. 3. How apt men are to corrupt and debase all duties of Religion, is too visible in the face of the far greatest part of the Christian world: Throughout both the Eastern and the Western Churches, the Papists, the Greeks, the Armenians, the Abassines, and too many others, (though the Essentials of Religion through Gods mercy are retained, yet) how much is the face of Religion altered from what it was in the days of the Apostles? The antient simplicity of Doctrines, is turned into abundance of new or private opinions introduced as necessary Articles of Religion (and alas, how many of them false?) So that Christians being too proud to accept of the antient test of Christianity, cannot now agree among themselves what a Christian is, and who is to be esteemed a Christian? and so they deny one another to be Christians, and destroy their Charity to each other, and divide the Church, and make themselves a scorn by their divisions to the Infidel world: And thus the Primitive Unity, Charity and Peace, is partly destroyed, and partly degenerate into the Unity, Charity, and Peace of several Sects among themselves. The primitive simplicity in Government and Discipline, is with most turned into a forcible Secular Government, exercised to advance one man above others, and to satisfie his will and lusts, and make him the Rule of other mens lives, and to suppress the power and spirituality of Religion in the world. The primitive simplicity of Worship is turned into such a Masque of Ceremony, and such a task of formalities and bodily exercise, that if one of the Apostolical Christians should come among them, he would scarce think that this is the same employment which formerly the Church was exercised in, or scarce know Religion in this antick dress. So that the amiable glorious face of Christianity, is so spotted and defiled, that it is hidden from the Unbelieving world, and they laugh at it as irrational, or think it to be but like their own: And the principal hinderance of the conversion of Heathens, Mahometans, and other Unbelievers, is the corruption and deformity of the Churches that are near them, or should be the instruments of their conversion: And the probablest way to the conversion of those Nations, is the true Reformation of the Churches both in East and West: which, if they were restored to the antient spirituality, rationality and simplicity of Doctrine, Discipline and Worship, and lived in charity, humility and holiness, as those whose hearts and conversations are in Heaven, with all worldly glory and honour as under their feet, they would then be so illustrious and amiable in the eyes, even of Heathens and other Infidels, that many would flock in to the Church of Christ, and desire to be such as they: And their light would so shine before these men, that they would see their good works, and glorifie their heavenly Father, and embrace their Faith.

§. 4. The commonest way of the degenerating of all Religious duties, is into this dead formality, or lifeless Image of Religion: If the Devil can but get you to cast off the spirituality and life of duty, he will give you leave to seem very devout, and make much ado with outward actions, words and beads: and you shall have so much zeal for a dead Religion, or the Corpse of Worship as will make you think that it is indeed alive. By all means take heed of this turning the Worship of God into lip service. The commonest cause of it is, a carnality of mind (Fleshly men will think best of the most fleshly Religion): or else a slothfulness in duty, which will make you sit down with the easiest part: It is the work of a Saint, and a diligent Saint, to keep the soul it self both regularly and vigorously employed with God. But to say over certain words by rote, and to lift up the hands and eyes is easie: And hypocrites that are conscious that they are void of the life and spirituality of Worship, do think to make all up with this formality, and quiet their consciences, and delude their souls with an handsome Image: Of this I have spoken more largely in a Book called, The Vain Religion of the Formal Hypocrite.

§. 5. Yet run not here into the contrary extream, as to think that the Body must not worship God as well as the soul, or that the decent and edifying determination of the outward circumstances of Religion, and the right ordering of Worship, is a needless thing, or sinful; or that a form of prayer in it self, or when imposed is unlawful: But let the Soul and Body of Religion go together, and the alterable adjuncts be used, as things alterable, while the life of Holiness is still kept up.

Direct. 19. PRomise not your selves long life, or prosperity and great matters in the world, lest it entangle your hearts with transitory things, and engage you in ambitious or covetous designs, and steal away your hearts from God, and destroy all your serious apprehensions of Eternity. Dir. 19.

§. 1. Our own experience, and the alterations which the approach of death makes upon the most, doth sensibly prove, that the expectation of a speedy change, and reckoning upon a short life, doth greatly help us in all our preparation, and in all the work of Holiness through our lives. Come to a man that lyeth on his death-bed, or a prisoner that is to dye to morrow, and try him with discourse of riches, or honours, or temptations to lust, or drunkenness, or excess: and he will think you are mad or very impertinent, to tell him of such things: If he be but a man of Common Reason, you shall see that he will more easily vilifie such temptations, than many religious persons will do, in their prosperity and health: O how serious are we in repenting and perusing our former lives, and casting up our accounts, and asking, What we shall do to be saved, when we see that death is indeed at hand, and time is at an end, and we must away! Every sentence of Scripture hath then some life and power in it: Every word of Exhortation is savoury to us: Every reproof of our negligence and sin is then well taken: Every thought of sin or Christ, or Grace, or Eternity goes then to the quick: Then time seems precious: and if you ask a man whether it be better spent in Cards and Dice, and Plays and Feastings, and needless recreations and idleness, or in Prayer, and Holy conference, and reading and meditating on the Word of God and the life to come, and the holy use of our lawful labours? How easily will he be satisfied of the truth? and confute the Cavils of voluptuous time-wasters? Then his judgment will easilier be in the right, than Learning or Arguments before could make it. In a word, the expectation of the speedy approach of the soul into the presence of the Eternal God, and of our entring into an unchangeable endless life, of joy or torment, hath so much in it to awaken all the powers of the soul, Nemini exploratum potest esse quomodo sese habiturum sit corpus, non dico ad annum sed ad vesperum, Cicero 2 de fin.

Dii boni! quid est in hominis vita diu? Mihi ne diuturnum quidem quicquam videtur, in quo est aliquid extremum. Cum enim id advenit, tum illud præterüit, effluxit: tantum remanet quod virtute & recte factis sit consecutus: horæ quidem cedunt, & dies, & menses, & anni, nec præteritum tempus unquam revertitur, nec quid sequatur sciri potest: Cic. in Cat. Maj. Quem sæpe transit, casus aliquando invenit.

that if ever we will be ſerious, it will make us ſerious, in every thought, and ſpeech, and duty. And therefore as it is a great mercy of God, that this life which is ſo ſhort, ſhould be as uncertain, and that frequent dangers and ſickneſſes call to us, to look about us, and be ready for our change, ſo uſually the ſickly that look for death, are moſt conſiderate, and it is a great part of the duty of thoſe that are in youth and health, to conſider their frailty, and the ſhortneſs and uncertainty of their lives, and always live as thoſe that wait for the coming of their Lord. And we have great reaſon for it, when we are certain it will be ere long; and when we have ſo many perils and weakneſſes to warn us, and when we are never ſure to ſee another hour; and when time is ſo ſwift, ſo quickly gone, ſo unrecoverable, and nothing when it is paſt. Common reaſon requireth ſuch to live in a conſtant readineſs to dye.

Nihil tam firmum cui periculum non ſit; etiam ab invalido.

§. 2. But if youth or health do once make you reckon of living long, and make you put away the day of your departure, as if it were far off; this will do much to deceive and dull the beſt, and take away the power of every truth, and the life of every good thought and duty, and all will be apt to dwindle into cuſtomarineſs and form: You will hardly keep the faculties of the ſoul awake, if you do not ſtill think of death and judgment as near at hand. The greateſt Certainty of the greateſt Change, and the greateſt Joy or Miſery for ever, will not keep our ſtupid hearts awake, unleſs we look at all as near, as well as certain. This is plain in the common difference that we find among all men, between their thoughts of death in health, and when they ſee indeed that they muſt preſently dye. They that in health cold think and talk of death with laughter, or lightly without any awakening of ſoul, when they come to dye are oftentimes as much altered, as if they had never heard before that they are mortal. By which it is plain, that to live in the houſe of mirth is more dangerous, than to live in the houſe of mourning; and that the expectation of long life is a grievous enemy to the operations of grace, and the ſafety of the ſoul.

§. 3. And it is one of the greateſt ſtrengtheners of your temptations to luxury, ambition, worldlineſs and almoſt every ſin: When men think that they ſhall have many years leiſure to repent, they are apt the more boldly to tranſgreſs: when they think that they have yet many years to live, it tempteth them to paſs away time in idleneſs, and to loiter in their race; and trifle in all their work, and to over-value all the pleaſures, and honours, and ſhadows of felicity that are here below. He that hath his life in his Houſe or Land, or hath it for inheritance, will ſet more by it, and beſtow more upon it, than if he thought he muſt go out of it the next year. To a man that thinks of living many years, the favour of great ones, the raiſing of his eſtate, and name, and family, and the accommodations and pleaſing of his fleſh, will ſeem great matters to him, and will do much with him, and will make ſelf-denyal a very hard work.

§. 4. Therefore though Health be a wonderful great mercy, as Enabling him to duty, that hath a heart to uſe it to that end; yet it is by accident a very great danger and ſnare to the heart it ſelf, to turn it from the way of duty. The beſt life for the ſoul, is that which leaſt endangereth it by being over pleaſing to the Body, and in which the fleſh hath the ſmalleſt intereſt, to ſet up and plead againſt the Spirit. Not but that the largeſt ſtock muſt be accepted and uſed for God, when he truſteth us with it, for when he ſerveth us the hardeſt work, we may expect his greateſt help: But a dwelling as in Tents, in a conſtant unſetledneſs, in a moveable condition, having little, and needing little, never feeling any thing in the creature to tempt us to ſay, Soul take thy Reſt; this is to moſt the ſafeſt life, which giveth us the freeſt advantages for Heaven.

§. 5. Take heed therefore as you love your ſouls, of falling into the ſnare of worldly Hopes, and laying deſigns for riſing, and riches, and pleaſing your ſelves in the thoughts and proſecution of theſe things: For then you are in the readieſt way to perdition; even to idolatrous worldlineſs, and apoſtaſie of heart from God, and opening a door to every ſin, that ſeems but neceſſary to your worldly ends, and to odious Hypocriſie for a cloke to all this, and to quiet your guilty minds with ſomething that is like Religion. When once you are ſaying with worldly ſecurity, as he, Luke 12. 17, 18, 19. I will pull down my barn, and build greater, and there will I beſtow all my fruits and goods, and I will ſay to my ſoul, Soul thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry, you are then befooling your ſelves, and near being called away as fools by death, v. 20, 21. And when, without a ſenſe of the uncertainty of your lives, you are ſaying as thoſe in James 4. 13, 14. To day or to morrow we will go into ſuch a City, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain, whereas you know not what will be on the morrow: You forget what your lives are, that they are a vapour appearing a little while, and then vaniſhing away, ver. 14. Boaſt not thy ſelf therefore of to morrow, for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth, Prov. 27. 1.

Direct. 20. SEE that your Religion be purely Divine, and animated all by God, as the Beginning, the Way and the End, and that firſt upon thy Soul and then upon all that thou haſt or doſt, there be written HOLINESS TO THE LORD; and that thou corrupt not all with an inordinate hypocritical reſpect to man.

§. 1. To be Holy is to be Divine, or devoted to God, and appropriated to Him, and his Will, and Uſe; and that our Hearts and Lives be not Common and Unclean: To be Godly, is to Live to God, as thoſe that from their hearts believe, that he is God indeed, and that he is the Rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, that he is our God All-ſufficient, our ſhield and exceeding great reward, Heb. 11. 6. Gen. 15. 1. & 17. 1. And that Of Him, and Through Him, and To Him are all things, that all may give the Glory for ever unto him, Rom. 11. 36. As God is infinitely above all Creatures, ſo Living upon God and unto God, muſt needs advance us above the higheſt ſenſual life: And therefore Religion is tranſcendently above all Sciences or Arts: ſo much of God as is in you and upon you, ſo much you are more excellent than the higheſt worldly perfection can advance you to: GOD ſhould be the Firſt and Laſt and All in the mind and mouth, and life of a believer. God muſt be the Principal Matter of your Religion: The Underſtanding and Will muſt be exerciſed upon him: When you awake you ſhould be ſtill with him, Pſal. 139. 8. Your Meditations of him ſhould be ſweet, and you ſhould be glad in the Lord, Pſal. 104. 34. Yet creatures under Him, may be the frequent leſs principal matter of your Religion; but ſtill as referred unto Him. God muſt be the Author of your Religion:

God

God must institute it, if you expect he should accept it and reward it. God must be the Rule of your Religion, as Revealing his Will concerning it in his Word. God must be the Ultimate End of your Religion; It must be intended to Please and Glorifie him: God must be the continual Motive and Reason of your Religion, and of all you do: you must be able truly to fetch your Reason from Heaven, and to say, I do it because it is his will: I do it to please, and glorifie and enjoy him: God must be taken as the Soveraign Judge of your Religion, and of you, and of all you do: And you must wholly look to his Justification and Approbation, and avoid whatever he condemneth. Can you take God for your Owner, your Soveraign, your Saviour, your sufficient Protector, your Portion, your All? If not, you cannot be godly, nor be saved: If his Authority have not more Power upon you, than the authority of the Greatest upon earth, you are Atheistical Hypocrites, and not truly Religious, whatever you pretend. IF HOLINESS TO THE LORD, be written upon you, and all that's yours, you are devoted to him as his own peculiar ones: If your Names be set upon your Sheep, or Plate, or Clothes, you will say, if another should take them, They are mine? Do you not see my Mark upon them? Slavery to the Flesh, the World and the Devil, is the mark that is written upon the ungodly (upon the foreheads of the prophane, and upon the Hearts of Hypocrites and all:) and Satan, the world and the flesh have their service: If you are Consecrated to God, and bear his Name and Mark upon you, tell every one that would lay claim to you, that you are His, and resolved to live to him; to Love Him, to Trust Him, and to stand or fall to him alone. Let God be the very Life, and Sense, and End of all you do.

§. 2. When once Man hath too much of your regard and observation, that you set too much by his favour and esteem, or eye him too much in your profession and practice; when Mans approbation too much comforteth you, and mans displeasure or dispraise doth too much trouble you; when your fear, and love, and care, and obedience are too much taken up for Man; You so far withdraw your selves from God, and are becoming the servants of men, and friends of the world, and turning back to bondage, and forsaking our Rock and Portion and your excellency: The soul of Religion is departing from you, and it is dying and returning to the dust. And if once Man get the preheminence of God, and be preferred and set above him in your hearts or lives, and feared, trusted, and obeyed before him, you are then dead to God, and alive to the world, and as Men are taken for your Gods, you must take up with such a salvation as they can give you: If your Alms and Prayers are done to be seen of men, and to procure their good thoughts and words; if you get them, make your best of them; For verily, your Judge hath said unto you, you have your reward, Matth. 6. 1, 2, 3.

Not that man is absolutely to be contemned or disregarded: No; under God your Superiours must be obeyed; you must do wrong to none, and do good to all, as far as in you lyeth: you must avoid offence, and give good example, and under God have so much regard to men, as to become all things to all men for their salvation. But if once you set them above their rank, and turn your selves to an inordinate dependance on them, and make too great a matter of their opinion or words concerning you, you are losing your godliness or divine disposition; and turning it into man-pleasing and Hypocrisie.

Alte jacere si vales, atq; hanc sedem, & æternam domum contueri, neq; Sermonibus vulgi dederis te, nec in præmia humana ferue: sua tua sunt: suis te illecebris oportet ipsa virtus trahat ad verum decus. Cicero somn. Scip. Cœlestia semper spectato: illa humana contemnito Id. Ibid.

When man stands in competition with God, for your first and chief regard, or in opposition to him, or as a sharer in co-ordination with him, and not purely in subordination to him, he is to be numbred with things to be forsaken. Even good men, whom you must love and honour, and whose communion and help you must highly value, yet may be made the object of your sin, and may become your snare. Your honouring of them, or love to them must not entice you to desire inordinately to be honoured by them, nor cause you to set too much by their approbation. If you do, you will find that while you are too much eying man, you are losing God, and corrupting your Religion at the very heart. And you may fall among those, that how Holy soever, may have great Mistakes in matters of Religion, tending to much sin, and may be somewhat censorious against those that are not of their mind; and so the retaining of their esteem, and the avoiding of their censures, may become one of the greatest temptations of your lives. And you will find that man-pleasing is a very difficult and yet uprofitable task. Love Christ as he appeareth in any of his servants, and be followers of them, as they are followers of Christ, and regard their approbation as it agreeth with Christs: But O see that you are able to live upon the Favour of God alone, and to be quieted in his acceptance, though man despise you; and to be Pleased so far as God is pleased, though man be displeased with you; and to rejoyce in his Justification, tho' men condemn you with the odiousest slanders, and the greatest infamy, and cast out your names as evil doers: See that God be taken as enough for you, or else you take him not as your God: Even as Enough without man, and Enough against man; That you may be able to say, If God be for us, who can be against us? Who is he that condemneth? It is God that justifieth, Rom. 8. 31, 33, 34. Do I seek to please men? For if I yet pleased men, I should not be a servant of Christ, Gal. 1. 10. Jer. 17. 5. Thus saith the Lord: Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord: For he shall be like the Heath in the Desert, and shall not see when good cometh ——— Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is: For he shall be as a Tree planted by the Waters, and that spreadeth out her Roots by the Rivers, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green, and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit.] [Cease ye from man whose Breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of? Isa. 2. 22.]

§. 3. HAving given you these Directions, I must tell you in the Conclusion, that they are like food, that will not nourish you by standing on your Table, or like Physick, that will not cure you by standing in the Box: They must be taken and digested, or you will find none of the benefit. It is not the Reading of them that will serve the turn to so great use, as the safe proceeding and confirmation of Beginners or Novices in Religion: It will require humility to perceive the need of them; and labour to learn, digest and practice them. Those slothful souls, that will refuse the labour, must bear the sad effects of their negligence: There is not one of all these Directions, as to the Matter of them, which can be spared. Study them, Understand them, and Remember them, as things that must be done. If either a senselessness of your necessity, or a conceit that the Spirit must do it without so much labour and diligence of your own, do prevail with you you, to put off all these, with a meer approbation, the consequent may be sadder than you can yet foresee. Though I suppose you to have some beginnings of Grace; I must tell you, that it will be comparatively a sad kind of life, to be erroneous, and scandalous, and troublesome to the Church, or full of Doubts, and Fears, and Passions, and to be burdensome to others and your selves! Yea, it is reason that you be very suspicious of your Sincerity, if you desire not to increase in grace, and be not willing to use the means, which are necessary to your encrease. He is not sincere, that desireth not to be perfect: And he desireth not sincerely, who is not willing to be at the labour and cost which is necessary to the obtaining of the thing desired. I beseech you therefore, as you love the happiness, of prudent, strong and comfortable Christians, and would escape the misery of those grievous diseases, which would turn your lives into languishing, unserviceableness, and pain, that you seriously study these Directions, and get them into your minds, and memories, and hearts; and let the faithful practice of them be your greatest care, and the constant employment of your lives.

CHAP. III.

The General Grand Directions for walking with God, in a Life of Faith and Holiness: Containing the Essentials of Godliness and Christianity.

I Am next to Direct you in that Exercise of Grace, which is common to all Christians. Habits are for Use: Grace is given you, not only that you may have it, but also that you may Use it. And it is fit that we direct you how to Use it, before we direct you how to know that you have it; because it is Grace in Exercise that you must discern; and Habits are not perceived in themselves, but by their Acts: And the more lively and powerful the exercise is, the more easily is Grace perceived: So that this is the neareſt and surest way to a Certainty of our own Sincerity: He that Useth Grace most and best, hath most Grace: And he that hath most, and useth it most, may most easily be assured that he hath it in sincerity and truth.

In these Directions, I shall begin with those great internal duties, in which the very Life of all Religion doth consist; and the General Practice of these Principles and Graces: And all these Generals shall be briefly set together for the easiness of Understanding and Remembring them. And then I shall give you such particular Directions, as are needful in subordination to those Generals.

DIRECT. I.

Grand Dir. 1. For a well-grounded Faith.

Labour to understand well the Nature, Grounds, Reason and Order of Faith and Godliness: and to Believe upon such Grounds, so well understood, as will not suffer you to stagger, or entertain a contrary belief.

§. 1. IGnorance and ungrounded, or ill grounded Perswasions in matters of Religion, are the cause that abundance of People delude themselves, with the empty name and dead profession of a Faith and Religion which they never were indeed Possessours of. I know there are low degrees of knowledge comparatively in many that are true believers: and that there may be much Love and Holiness, where knowledge is very small or narrow, as to the objective extent of it: And that there is a knowledge that puffeth up, while Charity edifieth: And that in many that have the narrower knowledge, there may be the fastest faith and adherence to the truth, which will conquer in the time of tryal. But yet I must tell you, that the Religion which you profess, is not indeed your own Religion, if you know not what it is, and know not in some measure the true Grounds and Reasons why you should be of that Religion. If you have only learnt to say your Creed, or repeat the words of Christian Doctrine, while you do not truly understand the sense, or if you have no better Reasons why you profess the Christian faith, than the custom of the Country, or the command of Princes or Governours, or the Opinion of your Teachers, or the example of your Parents, Friends, or Neighbours you are not Christians indeed. You have a human belief or opinion, which objectively is true; but subjectively in your selves you have no true divine belief. I confess there may be some insufficient, yea, and erroneous Reasons, which a true Believer may mistakingly make use of, for the proof of certain fundamental truths: But then that same man hath some other Reason for his Reception of that Truth, which is more sound; and his faith is sound because of those sound infallible Principles, though there be a mixture of some other Reasons that are unsound. The true Believer buildeth on the Rock, and giveth deep rooting to the holy Seed, Matth. 7. 24. & 13. 5, 8. Though some deluded men may tell you, that Faith and Reason are such enemies, that they exclude each other as to the same object, and that the less Reason you have to prove the truth of the things believed, the stronger and more laudable is your Faith; yet when it cometh to the tryal, you will find, that Faith is no unreasonable thing; and that God requireth you to believe no more, than you have sufficient reason for, to warrant you, and bear you out; and that your faith can be no more, than is your perception of the Reasons why you should believe; and that God doth suppose Reason when he infuseth Faith; and useth Reason in the use of Faith. They that Believe, and know not why, or know no sufficient Reason to warrant their Belief, do take a Fansie, an Opinion, or a Dream for Faith. I know that many honest hearted Christians are unable to dispute for their Religion, or to give to others a satisfactory account of the Reasons of their Faith or Hope: but yet they have the true Apprehension of some solid Reasons in themselves; and they are not Christians they know not why; And tho' their Knowledge be small as to the number of propositions known, yet it doth always extend to all that is essential to Christianity and Godliness, and they do not believe they know not what: And their knowledge is greater intensively, and in its value, and Operation, than the knowledge of the learnedst ungodly man in the world.

§. 2. Though I may not here digress, or stay so long, as largely to open to you the Nature, Grounds, Reason, and Method of Faith and Godliness which I am perswading you to understand, yet I shall first lay before you a few Propositions, which will be useful to you, when you are enquiring into these things, and then a little open them unto you.

Prop. 1. A life of Godliness, is our living unto God as God, as being absolutely addicted to him.

2. A life of Faith, is a living upon the unseen everlasting Happiness as purchased for us by Christ (with all the Necessaries thereto) and freely given us by God.

3. The contrary life of sense and unbelief, is a living, in the prevalency of sense or flesh, to this present present world, for want of such believing apprehensions of a better, as should elevate the soul thereto, and conquer the fleshly inclination to things present.

4. Though man in innocency needing no Redeemer, might live to God without Faith in a Redeemer; yet lapsed man is not only unable to redeem himself, but also unable to live to God without the grace of the Redeemer. It was not only necessary that he satisfy Gods justice for us, that he may pardon and save us without any wrong to his Holiness, Wisdom or Government, but also that he be our Teacher by his Doctrine and his Life, and that he Reveal from Heaven the Fathers will, and that Objectively in him we may see the wonderful condescending Love and Goodness of a reconciled God and Father, and that effectually he illuminate, sanctifie and quicken us by the operations of his Word and Spirit, and that he protect and govern, Justifie and Glorifie us; and be the head of Restored Man, as Adam was the Root of lapsed man, and as the lapsed Spirits had their Head: And therefore we must wholly live upon him as the Mediatour between God and Man, and the only Saviour by Merit and by Efficacy.

5. Faith is a knowledge by certain credible Testimony or Revelation from God by means supernatural or extraordinary.

6. The knowledge of things naturally revealed (as the cause by the effect, &c.) is in order before the Knowledge or Belief of things revealed supernaturally.

7. It is matter of natural Revelation that there is a God, that he is infinite in his Immensity and Eternity, in his Power, Wisdom, and Goodness; that he is the first Cause and Ultimate End of all things; that he is the Preserver and over-ruling Disposer of all things, and the Supream Governour of the Rational world, and the great Benefactor of all mankind, and the special Favourer and Rewarder of such as truly love him, seek him and obey him: Also that the Soul of Man is immortal; and that there is a life of Reward or Punishment to come, and that this life is but preparatory unto that: that man is bound to love God his Maker, and serve him, with all his Heart and Might; and to believe that this Labour is not vain: that we must do our best to know Gods will, that we may do it: This with much more (of which some part was mentioned, Chap. 1. §. 2, 3, &c.) is of Natural Revelation, which Infidels may know.

Laert. faith of the Magi, that they did Deorum vacare cultui: signa statuasque reprehendere: & eorum imprimis, qui mares esse Deos & fœminas dicunt, errores improbare. Signa & statuas ex disciplinæ instituto è medio tulisse: And that some thought that the Jews came from them, p. 4. 6. And Laertius himself saith to those that make Orpheus the first Philosopher, Videant certe qui ita volunt, quo sit censendus nomine, qui Diis cuncta hominum vitia, & quæ raro à turpibus quibusque & flagitiosis hominibus geruntur, aseribit, pag. 4. He saith also that the said Magi held, and Theopompus with them, that Men should live again, and become immortal. The like he saith of many other Sects. It is a thing most irrational to doubt of the Being of the unseen Worlds, and the more excellent Inhabitants thereof: When we consider that this low and little part of Gods Crearion is so full of Inhabitants: If a Microscope will shew your very Eyes a thousand visible Creatures which you could never see without it, nor know that they had any Being, will you not allow the pure intellectual sight to go much further beyond your Microscope?

8. There is so admirable a concord and correspondency of Natural Divinity with supernatural, the natural leading towards the supernatural, and the supernatural falling in so meet where the natural endeth, or falls short, or is defective, that it greatly advantageth us in the Belief of supernatural Divinity. Nay, as the Law of Nature was exactly fitted to man in his natural innocent state; so the Law and Way of Grace in Christ is so admirably and exactly fitted to the state of lapsed man for his Recovery and Salvation, that the experience which man hath of his sin and misery, may greatly prepare him to perceive and believe this most suitable Gospel or Doctrine of Recovery: And though it may not be called Natural, as if it were fitted to innocent Nature, or as if it were revealed by Natural ordinary means, yet it may be so called, as it is exactly suited to the restoration of lapsed miserable nature; even as Lazarus his restored soul, though supernaturally restored, was the most natural associate of his body; or as Bread, or Milk, or Wine, though it should fall from Heaven, is in it self the most natural Food for Man.

Thales sayings in Laert. are Animas esse immortales: Antiquissimum omnium entium Deus; ingenitus enim: Pulcherrimum mundus, à Deo enim factus. Maximum locus; capit enim omnia: Velocissimum mens; nam per universa discurrit: Fortissimum necessitas; cuncta enim superat. Sapientissimum tempus: invenit namque omnia. Q. Utrum prius factum nox an dies? R. Nox, una prius die. Q. Latet ne Deos homo male agens? R. Ne cogitans quidem. Q. Quid difficile? R. Seipsum noscere. Q. Quid facile? R. Ab alio moveri. Q. Quid suavissimum? R. Frui. Q. Quid Deus? R. Quod initio & fine caret. p. 14. 20, 21.

9. The same things in Divinity which are revealed Naturally to all, are again revealed supernaturally in the Gospel: and therefore may and must be the matter both of natural knowledge and of Faith.

10. When the malicious Tempter casteth in doubts of a Deity, or other points of natural Certainty, it so much discrediteth his Suggestions, as may help us much to reject them when withal he tempteth us to doubt of the truth of the Gospel.

11. There are many needful appurtenances to the objects of a Divine faith, which are the matter of a human faith: (Of which more anon.)

12. Christ as Mediatour is the Way, or principal means to God, as coming to restore man to his Maker. And so Faith in Christ is but the Means to bring us to the Love of God (though in Time they are connexed.)

13. Knowledge and Faith are the Eye of the new creature, and Love is the Heart: There is no more spiritual Wisdom, than there is Faith: and there is no more life or acceptable qualification, or amiableness, than there is Love to God.

14. All truths in Divinity are revealed in order to a holy life: Both Faith and Love are the Principles and Springs of Practice.

15. Practice affordeth such experience to a believing soul, as may confirm him greatly in the belief of those supernatural revelations, which he before received without that help.

16. The everlasting fruition of God in Glory being the end of all Religion, must be next the heart, and most in our Eye, and must objectively animate our whole Religion, and actuate us in every duty.

17. The pleasing of God being also our End, and both of these, (Enjoying him and Pleasing him) being in some small Foretastes attainable in this life, the Endeavour of our Souls and Lives must be by FAITH to exercise LOVE and OBEDIENCE; for thus God is Pleased and Enjoyed.

18. All things in Religion are fitted to the good of man, and nothing to his hurt: God doth not command us, to honour him by any thing which would make us miserable; but by closing with and magnifying his Love and Grace.

Conjungi vult nos inter nos, atque connecti per mutua beneficia Charitatis: Adeo ut tota justitia & præceptum hoc Dei, communis sit utilitas hominum. O miram clementiam Domini! O ineffabilem Dei benignitatem! Præmium nobis pollicetur, si nos invicem diligamus; id est, si nos ea præstemus invicem, quorum vicissim indigemus: & nos superbo & ingrato animo, ejus remittimur voluntati, cujus etiam imperium beneficium est. Hieron. ad Celant. See my Book of the Reasons of the Christian Religion.

19. But yet it is his own Revelation by which we must judge what is finally for our good or hurt; and we may not imagine that our shallow or deceivable wit is sufficient to discern without his Word, what is best or worst for us; Nor can we rationally argue from any present temporal adversity, or unpleasing bitterness in the means, that [This is worst for us, and therefore it is not from the Goodness of God:] But we must argue in such cases [This is is from the Goodness and Love of God, and therefore it is Best.]

20. The grand impediment to all Religion and our Salvation, which hindereth both our Believing, Loving and Obeying, is the inordinate sensual inclination to Carnal self and present transitory things, cunningly proposed by the Tempter to ensnare us, and divert, and steal away our hearts from God and the life to come. The understanding of these Propositions will much help you in discerning the Nature and Reason of Religion.

DIRECT. II.

Grand Dir. 2. To use Christ and live upon him as our Mediator.

Diligently labour in that part of the Life of Faith, which consisteth in the constant use of Christ, as the Means of the Souls access to God, acceptance with him, and comfort from him: And think not of coming to the Father, but by him.

§. 1. TO talk and boast of Christ is easie, and to use him for the increase of our carnal security, and boldness in sinning: But to live in the daily Use of Christ to those Ends of his Office, to which he is by us to be made use of, is a matter of greater skill and diligence, than many self-esteeming Professours are aware of. What Christ himself hath done, or will do, for our salvation, is not directly the thing that we are now considering of; but what Use he requireth us to make of him in the life of faith. He hath told us, that his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed; and that except we eat his flesh and drink his blood, we have no life in us. Here is our Use of Christ expressed by eating and drinking his flesh and blood which is by faith. The General parts of the work of Redemption, Christ hath himself performed for us without asking our Consent, or imposing upon us any Condition on our parts, without which he would not do that work: As the Sun doth illustrate and warm the earth whether it will or not, and as the Rain falleth on the Grass without asking whether it consent, or will be thankful; so Christ without our consent or knowledge, did take our nature, and fulfil the Law, and satisfie the offended Law-giver, and Merit Grace, and conquer Satan, Death and Hell, and became the Glorified Lord of all: But for the exercise of his graces in us, and our advancement to communion with God, and our living in the strength and joyes of faith, he is himself the Object of our Duty, even of that Faith which we must daily and diligently exercise upon him: And thus Christ will profit us no further than we make Use of him by faith. It is not a forgotten Christ that objectively comforteth or encourageth the soul; but a Christ believed in, and skilfully and faithfully Used to that end. It's Objectively (principally) that Christ is called Our wisdom, 1 Cor. 1. 30. The knowledge of him, and the mysteries of Grace in him, is the Christian or Divine Philosophy or Wisdom, in opposition to the vain Philosophy, which the Learned Heathens boasted of. And therefore Paul determined to know nothing but Christ crucified, that is, to make ostentation of no other knowledge, and to glory in nothing but the Cross of Christ, and so to preach Christ as if he knew nothing else but Christ. See 1 Cor. 1. 23. & 2. 2. Gal. 6. 14. And it is Objectively that Christ is said to dwell in our hearts by faith, Ephes. 3. 17. Faith keepeth him still upon the heart by continual cogitation, application and improvement: As a friend is said to dwell in our hearts, whom we continually love and think of.

Vel propter Unionem inter creaturam & creatorem necessaria fuit incarnatio. Sicut in Divinitate una est essentia & tres personæ; ita in Christo una persona & tres essentiæ, Deitas, anima, & caro. Christus secundum naturam Divinitatis est genitus; secundum animam creatus; & secundum carnem factus. Unio in Christo triplex est; Deitatis ad animam; Deitatis ad carnem; & animæ ad carnem. Paul. Scaliger Thes. p. 725. Christus solus, & quidem secundum utramque naturam dicitur Caput Ecclesiæ. Id. p. 726.

§. 2. Christ himself teacheth us to distinguish between Faith in God (as God) and faith in himself (as Mediator:) John 14. 1. [Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God: (or, Believe ye in God?) believe also in me.] These set together are the sufficient cure of a troubled heart. It is not Faith in God as God, but Faith in Christ as Mediator, that I am now to speak of: And that not as it is inherent in the understanding, but as it is operative on the heart and in the life: And this is not the smallest part of the life of faith, by which the just are said to live: Every true Christian must in his measure be able to say with Paul, Gal. 2. 20. I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live: yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. The Pure Godhead is the Beginning and the End of all; But Christ is the Image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature; and by him all things were created that are in Heaven and that are in Earth, visible and invisible, whether they be Thrones or Dominions, or Principalities or Powers, all things were created by him and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things do consist. And he is the Head of the Body, the Church; who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the preheminence. Col. 1. 16, 17, 18, 19. In him it is that we who were sometime far off, are made nigh, even by his blood: For he is our Peace, who hath reconciled both Jew and Gentile unto God in one body by the Cross, having slain the enmity thereby: and came and preached peace to them that were far off, and to them that were nigh: For through him we both have an access by one Spirit unto the Father: so that now we are no more strangers and forreigners, but fellow Citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God, Ephes. 2. 13, 14, 16. 17, 18. in him it is that we have boldness and access with confidence through faith in him; Eph. 3. 12. He is the Way, the Truth and the Life: and no man cometh to the Father, but by him: John 14. 6. It is by the blood of Jesus that we have boldness (and liberty) to enter into the holiest: by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the vail, that is to say, his flesh; Because we have so Great a Priest over the House of God, we may draw near, with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, &c. Heb. 10. 19, 20, 21, 22. By him it is that we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and boast in hope of the Glory of God, Rom. 5. 1, 2. So that we must have all our Communion with God through him.

Ex apostolica & veteri traditione, nemo baptizatur in Filii fide, nisi prius Deum Patrem, & Jesum Christum Dei filium & Spiritum sanctum sperserit, & creaturæ creatore: Quamobrem vos ergo horres sit, si judicii aliquid habet, & itaque fatur, & ita respondet professique ita expresse redere jubetur: Namque implicite & involute non ista sunt, sed quæcunque Divinæ istæ prodiderunt, credit, de quibus tamen non omnibus interrogatur, quod ea expresse credat omnia, illi minime opus sit. Acostal. 5 c. 6. p. 461. Christian Religion beginneth not at the Highest, but the Lowest: with Christ incarnate, teaching, dying, &c. Dr. Boys postil. p. 121. out of Luther.

§. 3. Supposing what I have said of this subject in my Directions for a sound Conversion, Dir. 5. (which I hope the Reader will peruse) I shall here briefly name the Uses which we must make of Christ by faith, In order to our holy converse with God: But I must tell you that it is a Doctrine which requireth a prepared heart, that hath life within to enable it to relish holy truth, and to dispose it to diligence, delight and constancy in practice. A senseless Reader will feel but little savour in it, and a sluggish Reader that suffereth it to dye as soon as it hath toucht his ears or fantasie, will fall short of the practice and the pleasure of this life. He must have faith that will live by faith: And he must have the heart and nature of a child, that will take pleasure in loving, reverent and obedient converse with a Father.

Sane omnium virtutum radix & fundamentum fides est; quæ certantes adjuvat, vincentes coronat, & cœlesti dono quosdam defectu signorum remunerat: Nihil enim quod sinceræ fidei denegetur, quia nec aliud à nobis Deus quam fidem exigit: Hanc diligit, hanc requirit, huic, cuncta promittit & tribuit. S. Eulogius Mart. Arch. Toled. Memorial. Sanct. p. 4. Notandum, quod cum fides mortua sit præter opera, jam neque fides est: Nam neque homo mortuus, homo est. ——— Non enim sicut spiritum corpore meliorem, ita opera fidei præponenda sunt, quando gratia salvatur homo, non ex operibus sed ex fide: nisi forte & hoc in quæstione sit, quod salvet fides quæ cum operibus propriis vivit; tantum aliud genus operum sit, præter quæ salus ex fide provenit: nec autem sunt opera quæ sub umbra Legis observantur. Didymus Alex. and, in Jac. cap. 2.

§. 4. 1. The darkness of Ignorance and Unbelief is the great impediment of the soul that desireth to draw near to God: When it knoweth not God, or knoweth not mans capacity of enjoying him, and how much he regardeth the heart of man; or knoweth not by what way he must be sought and found; or when he doubteth of the certainty of the word which declareth the duty of the hopes of man; all this or any of this, will suppress the ascending desires of the soul, and clip its wings, and break the heart of its holy aspirings after God, by killing or weakning the hopes of its success.

Here then make Use of Jesus Christ, the great Reveiler of God and his will to the blinded world, and the great Confirmer of the Divine Authority of his Word. Life and immortality are brought more fully to light by the Gospel, than ever they were by any other means. Moses and the Prophets did bring with their Doctrine sufficient evidence of its credibility. But Christ hath brought both a fuller Revelation, and a fuller Evidence to help belief. An inspired Prophet which proveth his inspiration to us, is a credible messenger: But when God himself shall come down into flesh, and converse with man, and teach him the knowledge of God, and the way to life, and tell him the Mysteries of the world to come, and seal his testimony with unquestionable proofs, who will not learn of such a Teacher? and who will deny belief to such a messenger, except absurd unreasonable men? Remember then, when Ignorance or Unbelief would hinder your access to God, that you have the ablest Teacher and the surest Witness to acquaint you with God in all the world. If God had sent an Angel from Heaven, to tell you what he is, and what he requireth of you, and what he will do for you, would it not be very acceptable to you? But he hath done much more; he hath sent his Son: The Deity it self hath appeared in flesh: He that hath seen God, and he that is God, hath come among men to acquaint them with God: His testimony is more sure and credible than any Angels: Heb. 1. 1, 2, 3. God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past to the Fathers by the Prophets, hath in these last days spoken to us by his Son. John 1. 18. No Man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son who is in the Bosom of the Father, he hath declared him. We have neither heard the Voice of God, nor seen his shape. John 5. 37. No man hath seen the Father, save he which is of God; he hath seen the Father, John 6. 46. No man knoweth the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. Matth. 11. 27. What more can we desire, that is short of the sight of the Glory of God, than to have him revealed to us by a messenger from Heaven, and such a Messenger as himself hath seen him, and is God himself? Plato and Plotinus may describe God to us according to their dark conjectures: something we may discern of him by observing his works: But Christ hath declared what he saw, and what he knew beyond all possibility of mistake. And lest his own testimony should seem questionable to us, he hath confirmed it by a life of Miracles, and by Raising from the dead himself, and ascending visibly to Heaven, and by the Holy Ghost, and his miraculous gifts which he gave to the Messengers of his Gospel. Had it been no more than his Resurrection from the dead, it had been enough to prove the utter unreasonableness of unbelief.

Dilectio Dei misit nobis salvatorem: cujus Gratia salvati omnes: ut per fidem simus hanc gratiam, communicatio facti fuitus. Ambrosius in Ps. 118. 13.

§. 5. 2. It is also a great impediment to the soul in its approach to God, that Infinite distance disableth us to conceive of him aright: We say as Elihu, Job 36. 26. Behold, God is Great, and we know him not. And indeed it is impossible that mortal man should have any adequate apprehensions of his Essence. But in his Son he hath come down to us, and shewed himself in the clearest Glass that ever did reveal him: Think of him therefore as he appeared in our flesh: As he shewed himself in his Holiness and Goodness to the world. You may have positive thoughts of Jesus Christ: Though you may not think that the Godhead was flesh, yet may you think of it as it appeared in flesh. It may quiet the understanding to conceive of God as incarnate, and to know that we cannot yet know him as he is, or have any adequate conceptions of him: These may delight us till we reach to more.

§. 6. 3. It hindreth the Souls Approach to God, when the Infinite distance makes us think that God will not regard or take notice of such contemptible worms as we: we are ready to think that he is too high for our converse or delight. In this case the soul hath no such remedy, as to look to Christ; and see how the Father hath regarded us, and set his heart upon us, and sent his Son to seek and save us: O wonderful astonishing condescension of Eternal Love! Believe that God assumed flesh to make himself familiar with man; and you can never question whether he regard us, or will hold communion with us.

§. 7. 4. It hindreth our comfortable access to God, when we are deterred by the Glory of his Infiniteness and Majesty: As the eye is not able to gaze upon the Sun, unless it be overshadowed. So the Soul is afraid of the Majesty of God, and overwhelmed by it when it should be delighted in it. Against this there is no such Remedy, as to behold God appearing to us in his Son, where his Majesty is veiled, and where he approacheth us familiarly in our nature, to invite us to him with holy confidence and reverent Boldness. Christ did not appear in a terrible form: Women durst discourse with him: Beggars, and cripples, and diseased People durst ask his help: sinners durst eat with him: The proud contemned him, but the lowly were not frighted from him. He took upon him the form of a Servant, and made himself of no reputation, that he might converse familiarly with the meanest and those of no reputation. Tho' we may not debase the Godhead, to imagine that it is humbled in Glory, as it was on earth, in the flesh of Christ; yet this condescension is unspeakable encouragement to the soul to come with boldness unto God, that was frighted from him.

§. 8. 5. When the guilt of sin affrighteth us from God, and we are thinking that God will not accept such great offenders as we have been, then Christ is our remedy who hath paid our debt, and born our stripes, and procured and sealed us a pardon by his blood. Shall pardoned sins drive us from him that pardoneth them? He hath justified us by his righteousness: The curse and damnation are terrible indeed; but he hath taken them away, and given us a free discharge.

O Domine Jesu doles non tua sed mea vulnera! Ambrof. de fide ad Grat. l. 2. c. 3. Nos immortalitate made usi sumus ut moreremur: Christus mortalitate benè usus est ut viveremus. Augusti. de Doct. Christ. l. 1. c. 14.

§. 9. 6. The infirmities also of our souls in duty, are oftentimes a great discouragement to us, in our approaches to the most Holy Jealous God: To find so little knowledge of God, so little love to him, such cold desires, such wandring and distracted thoughts, such dull requests: It is hard to have lively and thankful apprehensions, of Gods acceptance of such defective, lame meditations or prayers: But we are apt to think that he will abhor both them and us, and that he can take no pleasure in them, yea, that it is as good not pray at all. Here faith hath full relief in Christ: Two things it can say from him to encourage rage the fearful soul: 1. That our acceptance with the Father is thro' the Merits of his Son: And he is worthy, tho' we are unworthy. If we have but the worthiness of Faith, and Repentance, and sincere Desire, Christ hath the worthiness of perfect Holiness and obedience for us. We go not to the Father in our own names, but in his: And whatever we ask the Father in the name of Christ according to his will, he will give it us: Joh. 16. 23. & 14. 13. & 15. 16. 2. That all the Infirmities of our Souls and Services are forgiven us thro' Christ: He hath undertaken to answer for them all, and to justifie us from all such accusations. By faith thou maist, as it were, hear Christ thus speaking for thine encouragement [Go boldly, poor sinner, into my Fathers Presence: Fear not the guilt of thy Sins, nor the imperfection of thy prayers; as long as thou truly repentest of them, and desirest to be delivered from them, and Trustest in me, I am thy worthiness; my Righteousness is perfect without spot; I have taken all thy faults and failings upon me: I have undertaken to answer for all the Imperfections of thy holy things: Sincerity is thy Endowment; Perfection is mine: Trust me in the Performance of the Trust which I have undertaken.]

§. 10. 7. Sometime the soul that would draw near to God, is overwhelmed with Grief and Terrour, so that the sense of sin, and danger, and misery do even distract men, and cast them into an agony; so that they say with David, Psal. 77. 2, 3, 4. [My soul refused to be comforted, I remembred God and was troubled; I complained, and my Spirit was overwhelmed; Thou holdest mine eyes waking: I am so troubled that I cannot speak.] Yea, they think they feel God thrust them from him, and tell them that he hath utterly forsaken them. In this case Faith must look to Christ, and remember that He was in an Agony when he prayed, and in greater agony than ever you were, so that he sweat even drops of Blood, and yet in that agony he prayed more earnestly, Luke 22. 44. He himself once cried out upon the Cross, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me: and yet he was the Beloved of the Father, and is now at his right hand in glory; and all this he did that we might not be forsaken: He hath removed the enmity: He hath reconciled us to God: By grief he passed himself to joy, and he will wipe away his Servants tears, and cause their griefs to end in joy.

§. 11. 8. Sometime the soul that would draw near to God, is molested with a storm of hideous Temptations, and even confounded with a swarm of disordered perplexed thoughts: Satan assaulteth it with Temptations to despair, Temptations to horrid blasphemous thoughts, temptations to entangle, intermit, corrupt or pervert the Duty which they are about; so that the Soul is discouraged, overwhelmed and broken with the inward assaults, and troubles, and distractions which it undergoeth. In this case Faith hath a Saviour suitable to our relief. It can look to him that was tempted in all points like as we are, without sin, and is now such an High Priest as can be touched with the Feeling of our Infirmities; and therefore we may come boldly to the Throne of Grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need, Heb. 4. 14, 15, 16. In all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high Priest, in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people: For he himself having suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted, Heb. 2. 17, 18. He submitted not only to be tempted by Satan, but tempted in a Wilderness where he had no man to comfort him; and to be tempted to the most horrid Blasphemy and wickedness, even to fall down and worship the Devil himself; and he suffered the Tempter violently to carry him to the Pinnacle of the Temple, Matth. 4. What should we think of our selves, if we had been used thus? Should we not think that God had utterly forsaken us? He suffered himself to be tempted also by men; by the abuses and reproaches of his enemies, by the desertion of his followers; by the carnal counsel of Peter, perswading him to put by the death which he was to undergo. And he that made all Temptations serve to the triumph of his patience, and conquering power, will give the victory also to his Grace, in the weakest soul.

§. 12. 9. It would be the greatest attractive to us to draw near to God, and make the thoughts of him pleasant to us, if we could but believe that he dearly loveth us, that he is reconciled to us, and taketh us for his children, and that he taketh pleasure in us, and that he resolveth for ever to glorifie us with his Son; and that the dearest friend that we have in the world, doth not love us the thousandth part so much as he. And all this in Christ is clearly represented to the Eye of faith. All this is procured for believers by him: And all this is given to believers in him: In him God is reconciled to us: He is our Father, and dwelleth among us, and in us, and walketh in us, and is our God, 2 Cor. 6. 16, 17, 18. Light and Heat are not more abundant in the Sun, than Love is in Jesus Christ. To look on Christ and not perceive the Love of God, is as to look on the Sun, and not to see and acknowledge its light. Therefore when ever you find your hearts averse to God, and to have no pleasure in him, look then to Jesus, and observe in him the unmeasurable love of God: that you may be able to comprehend with all the Saints, what is the breadth and length and depth, and height, and to know the Love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that you may be filled with all the fulness of God, Eph. 3. 18, 19. Love and Goodness are that to the will, which delicious sweetness is to the sensitive appetite: Draw near then and taste the Feast of Love which God hath prepared and proposed by his Son. Dost thou not see or feel the Love of God? Come near, and look upon God incarnate; upon a crucified Christ; upon the Covenant sealed in his blood; upon all the benefits of his Redemption; upon all the Priviledges of the Saints; and upon the glory purchased, possessed and promised by him: Put thy hand into his wounded side, and be not faithless, but believing; and then thou wilt cry out, My Lord, and my God.

§. 13. 10. So also when the Soul would fain perceive in it self the flames of Love to God: it is the beholding of Christ by faith, which is the striking of fire, and the effectual means of kindling love: And this is the true approach to God, and the true Communion and converse with him: so far as we love him, so far we draw near him, and so far we have true communion with him. O what would the soul of a Believer give, that it could but burn in Love to God, as oft as in Prayer or Meditation, or conference, his Name and Attributes are mentioned or remembred! For this, there is no such powerful means, as believingly to look on Christ, in whom such glorious Love appeareth, as will draw forth the Love of all that by a lively faith discern it. Behold the Love that God hath manifested by his Son, and thou canst not but love him who is the spring of this transcendent Love. In the Law God sheweth his frowning wrath: and therefore it breedeth the Spirit of bondage unto fear: But in Christ God appeareth to us not only as loving us, but as love it self; and therefore as most lovely to us, giving us the Spirit of Adoption, or of filial Love, by which we fly and cry to him as our Father.

§. 14. 11. The actual undispositedness and disability of the soul, to prayer, meditation, and all holy converse with the blessed God, is the great impediment of our walking with him: And against this our relief is all in Christ: He is filled with the Spirit to communicate to his members: He can quicken us when we are dull: He can give us faith when we are unbelieving; he can give us boldness when we are discouraged: he can pour out upon us the Spirit of supplication; which shall help our Infirmities, when we know not what to pray for as we ought. Beg of him then the Spirit of Prayer: And look to his example who prayed with strong cries and tears, and continued all the night in prayer, and spake a Parable to this end, that we should always pray, and not wax faint, Luke 18. 1. Call to him, and he that is with the Father will reach the hand of his Spirit to you, and will quicken your desires, and lift you up.

§. 15. 12. Sometime the soul is hearkning to temptations of unbelief, and doubting whether God observe our prayers, or whether there is so much to be got by prayers as we are told: In such a case faith must look to Christ, who hath not only commanded it, and encouraged us by his example, but also made us such plentiful promises of acceptance with God, and the grant of our desires: Recourse to these promises will animate us to draw nigh to God.

§. 16. 13. Sometime the present sense of our vileness, who are but dust and despicable worms. doth discourage us, and weaken our expectations from God. Against this, what a wonderful relief is it to the soul, to think of our union with Christ, and of the dignity and glory of our Head? Can God despise the members of his Son? Can he trample upon them that are as his flesh and bone? Will he cut off, or forsake, or cast away the weakest parts of his body?

§. 17. 14. Sometime the guilt of renewed infirmities or decays, doth renew distrust, and make us shrink, and we are like the Child in the Mothers arms, that feareth when he looseth his holt, as if his safety were more in his holt of her, than in her holt of him: Weak duties have weak expectations of success. In this case, what an excellent remedy hath faith, in looking to the perpetual intercession of Christ; Is he praying for us in the Heavens, and shall we not be bold to pray, and expect an answer? O remember that he is not weak when we are weak; and that it concerneth us, that he prayeth for us: and that we have now an unchangeable Priest, who is able to save them to the uttermost, or to perpetuity, that come (sincerely) to God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them, Heb. 7. 24, 25. If you heard Christ pray for you, would it not encourage you to pray, and perswade you that God will not reject you? Undoubtedly it would.

§. 18. 15. Sometimes weak Christians that have not gifts of memory or utterance, are apt to think that Ministers indeed and able men are accepted of God, but that he little valueth such as them. It is here a great encouragement to the soul, to think that Jesus our great High Priest, doth make all his Children Priests to God. They are a chosen generation, a royal Priesthood, an Holy Nation, a peculiar people, that they should shew forth the praises of him that hath called them, out of darkness into his marvellous light: An holy Priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. Even their broken hearts and contrite Spirits, are a sacrifice which God will not despise, Psal. 51. 17. He knoweth the meaning of the Spirits groans, Rom. 8. 26, 27.

§. 19. 16. The strength of corruptions which molest the soul, and are too often strugling with it, and too much prevail, doth greatly discourage us in our approach to that God that hateth all the Workers of Iniquity. And here faith may find relief in Christ, not only as he pardoneth us, but as he hath conquered the Devil and the world himself, and bid us be of good cheer, because he hath conquered; and hath all power given him in Heaven and Earth, and can give us victorious grace in the season and measure which he seeth meetest for us. We can do all things thro' Christ that strengthneth us. Go to him then by faith and prayer, and you shall find that his grace is sufficient for you.

§. 20. 17. The thoughts of God are the less delightful to the soul, because that Death and the Grave do interpose, and we must pass thro' them before we can enjoy him: And it is unpleasing to nature to think of a separation of soul and body, and to think that our flesh must rot in darkness. But against this, faith hath wonderful relief in Jesus Christ. Forasmuch as we were partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part with us, that he might destroy through death him that had the power of death, even the Devil, and deliver them who thro' fear of death, were all their life time subject to bondage. Heb. 2. 14, 15. O what an Encouragement it is to faith, to observe that Christ once died himself, and that he rose from the dead, and reigneth with the Father: it being impossible that death should hold him: And having conquered that which seemed to conquer him, it no more hath dominion over him, but he hath the Keys of Death and Hell: we may now entertain death as a disarmed enemy, and say, O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? Yea, it is sanctified by him to be our friend, even an entrance into our Masters joy: it being best for us to depart and be with Christ, Phil. 1. 23. and therefore death is become our gain, v. 21. O what abundance of strength and sweetness may faith perceive from that promise of Christ, John 12. 26. [If any man serve me, let him follow me, and where I am, there shall also my Servant be.] As he was dead, but now liveth for evermore, so hath he promised, that because he liveth, therefore shall we live also: John 14. 19. But of this I have written two Treatises of Death already.

§. 21. 18. The terror of the day of Judgment, and of our particular doom at death, doth make the thoughts of God less pleasing and delectable to us: And here what a relief is it for faith to apprehend, that Jesus Christ must be our Judge? And will he condemn the members of his Body? Shall we be afraid to be judged by our dearest friend? by him that hath justified us himself already, even at the price of his own blood?

§. 22. 19. The very strangeness of the soul to the world unseen, and to the Inhabitants and employments there, doth greatly stop the soul in its desires, and in its delightful approaches unto God. Had we seen the world where God must be enjoyed, the thoughts of it would be more familiar and sweet. But faith can look to Christ and say, [My head is there: he seeth it for me: he knoweth what he possesseth, prepareth, and promiseth to me: and I will quietly rest in his acquaintance with it.]

§. 23. 20. Nay, the Godhead it self is so infinitely above us, that in it self it is inaccessible; and it is ready to amaze and overwhelm us to think of coming to the incomprehensible Majesty: But it emboldneth the soul to think of our Glorified Nature in Christ, and that even in Heaven God will everlastingly condescend to us in the Mediator: For the Mediation of Redemption and acquisition shall be ended (and thus he shall deliver up the Kingdom to the Father) yet it seems that a Mediation of fruition shall continue: For Christ said to his Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory, John 17. 24. We shall rejoyce when the marriage of the Lamb is come, Rev. 19. 7. They are blessed that are called to his Marriage Supper, v. 9. The Lord God Almigh- ty and the Lamb are the Temple and the Light of the New Jerusalem, Rev. 21. 22, 23. Heaven would not be so familiar, or so sweet to my thoughts, if it were not that our glorified Lord is there, in whose Love and Glory we must live for ever.

O Christian, as ever thou wouldst walk with God, in comfortable communion with him, study and exercise this Life of faith, in the daily use and improvement of Christ, who is our Life, and Hope, and All.

DIRECT. III.

Grand Dir. 3. To believe in the Holy Ghost, and live upon his Grace.

Understand well what it is to believe in the Holy Ghost: and see that he dwell and operate in thee, as the Life of thy soul, and that thou do not resist or quench the Spirit, but thankfully obey him.

§. 1. EAch person in the Trinity is so believed in by Christians, as that in Baptism, they enter distinctly into Covenant with them: which is, to accept the Mercies of, and perform the duties to each person distinctly. As to take God for Our God is more than to believe that there is a God, and to take Christ for Our Saviour, is more than barely to believe that he is the Messiah: so to Believe in the Holy Ghost, is to take him for Christs Agent or Advocate with our souls, and for our Guide, and Sanctifier, and Comforter, and not only to believe that he is the third person in the Trinity. This therefore is a most practical Article of our Belief.

Scrutari temeritas est, credere pietas, nosse vita: Bernard. de consid. ad Eugen. l. 5.

§. 2. If the Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost be the unpardonable sin, then all sin against the Holy Ghost must needs have a special aggravation by being such: And if the sin against the Holy Ghost be the greatest sin, then our duty towards the Holy Ghost is certainly none of our smallest duties Therefore the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit, and our duty towards him, and sin against him, deserve not the least, or last place in teaching, learning, and most serious consideration.

Duae est praecipuum effectivum in conversione reflexum in redemptione, perfectivum in sanctificatione. Joh. Combis comp. Theol. l. 4. c. 1.

§. 3. Two sorts do most dangerously sin against, or abuse the Holy Ghost. The first is the Prophane, who through custom and education can say [I believe in the Holy Ghost] and say, that [He sanctifieth them and all the Elect people of God:] but hate or resist all sanctifying works and motions of the Holy Ghost, and hate all those that are sanctified by him, and make them the objects of their scorn, and deride the very name of sanctification, or at least the thing.

Rejectis praetensis & apocryphis scriptis, Manichaei novum Evangelium scriptum: & ut antea omnium in omnem terram studio ita nunc dei viderentur, simulatunt Enthusiasmos seu a flatus, subito in turba se in terram abjecerunt, & velut attoniti diu tacentes; deinde tanquam redeuntes ex specu Trophonii & plangentes, multa vaticinati sunt; Prorsus ut Anabaptistae recens fecerunt in seditione Monasteriensi. Etsi autem in quibusdam manifesta simulatio fuit, tamen aliquibus reipsa à Diabolis furores immissos esse certum est. Carion. Chron. l. 3. p. 54.

The second sort is the Enthusiasts or true Fanaticks, who advance, extol, and plead for the Spirit, against the Spirit; covering their greatest sins against the Holy Ghost, by crying up, and pretending to the Holy Ghost: They plead the Spirit in them so selves against the Spirit in their Brethren, yea, and in almost all the Church: They plead the authority of the Spirit in them, against the authority of the Spirit in the holy Scriptures: and against particular truths of Scripture; and against several great and needful Duties, which the Spirit hath required in the Word; and against the Spirit in their most judicious, godly, faithful Teachers. But can it be the Spirit that speaks against the Spirit? Is the Spirit of God against it self? Are we not all baptized by One Spirit (and not divers or contrary) into one body? 1 Cor. 12. 12, 13. But it is no marvel, for Satan to be transformed into an Angel of light, or his Ministers into the Ministers of Christ, and of Righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works, 2 Cor. 11. 13, 14, 15. The Spirit himself therefore hath commanded us, that we believe not every Spirit, but try the Spirits whether they be of God; because many false Prophets are gone out into the world: 1 John 4. 1. Yea, the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing Spirits, and Doctrines of Devils: 1 Tim. 4. 1. Therefore take heed that you neither Mistake nor abuse the Holy Spirit.

§. 4. 1. The Doctrine concerning the Holy Ghost, to be believed, is briefly this. 1. That the Holy Ghost so given since the Ascension of Christ, is his Agent on earth, or his Advocate with men (called by him the Paraclete:) Instead of his bodily presence which for a little space he vouchsafed to them, being ascended, he sendeth the Holy Spirit as better for them, to be his Agent continually to the end, and unto all, and in all that do believe. John 16. 7, 8. 2. This Holy Spirit so sent, infallibly inspired the holy Apostles and Evangelists, first to preach, and then to write the Doctrine of Christ; contained (as indited by him) in the Holy Scriptures; perfectly imprinting therein the Holy Image of God. John 15. 26. John 16. 13. Gal. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4. Heb. 2. 3, 4. 3. The same Spirit in them, sealed this Holy Doctrine, and the Testimony of these holy men, by many Miracles and wonderful Gifts, by which they did actually convince the unbelieving world, and plant the Churches. 4. The same Spirit (having first by the Apostles given a Law or Canon to the Universal Church, constituting its Offices and the duty of the Officers, and the manner of their entrance) doth Qualifie and Dispose men for the stated ordinary Ministerial work (which is to Explain and Apply the foresaid Scriptures) and directeth those that are to Ordain and Choose them (they being not wanting on their part) and so he appointeth Pastors to the Church. Eph. 4. 7, 8, 11, 12. 5. The same Spirit assisteth the Ministers (thus sent in their faithful use of the means) to Teach and Apply the holy Scriptures according to the necessities of the people, the weight of the matter, and the Majesty of the Word of God. 6. The same Spirit doth by this Word (heard or read) renew and sanctifie the souls of the Elect; illuminating their minds, opening and quickning their hearts, prevailing with, changing, and resolving their wills, thus writing Gods Word, and imprinting his Image by his Word upon their hearts, making it powerful to conquer and cast out their strongest, sweetest, dearest sins, and bringing them to the saving knowledge, love and obedience of God in Jesus Christ. Acts 26. 18. John 14. 16, 26. 7. The same holy Spirit assisteth the sanctified in the exercise of this grace, to the increase of it, by blessing and concurring with the means appointed by him to that end: And helpeth them to use those means, perform those duties, conquer temptations, oppositions and difficulties, and so confirmeth and preserveth them to the end. 8. The same Spirit helpeth believers in the exercise of grace to feel it and discern the sincerity of it in themselves, in that measure as they are meet for, and in these seasons when it is fittest for them. 9. The same Spirit helpeth them hereupon to conclude that they are justified and reconciled to God, and have right to all the benefits of his Covenant. 10. Also he assisteth them actually to rejoyce in the discerning of this Conclusion. For though Reason of it self may do something in these acts, yet so averse is man to all that is holy, and so many are the difficulties and hinderances in the way, that to the effectual performance, the help of the Spirit of God is necessary.

§. 5. By this enumeration of the Spirits operations, you may ſee the errours of many detected, and many common Queſtions anſwered. 1. You may ſee their blindneſs that pretend the Spirit within them againſt Scripture, Miniſtry, or the uſe of Gods appointed means: when the ſame Spirit firſt indited the Scripture, and maketh it the Inſtrument to illuminate and ſanctifie our ſouls: Gods Image is, 1. Primarily in Jeſus Chriſt his Son: 2. Derivatively, by his Spirit imprinted perfectly in the holy Scriptures: 3. And by the Scripture, or the holy Doctrine of it, inſtrumentally impreſſed on the ſoul. So that the Image of God in Chriſt, is the Cauſe of his Image in his holy Word or Doctrine, and his Image in his Word, is the Cauſe of his Image on the heart. So a King may have his Image, 1. Naturally on his Son, who is like his Father: 2. Expreſſively in his Laws, which expreſs his Wiſdom, Clemency and Juſtice: 3. And effectively on his Subjects and Servants, who are by his Laws reduced to a Conformity to his mind. As a man may firſt cut his Arms or Image on his ſeal, and then by that ſeal imprint it on the wax; and though it be perfectly cut on the ſeal, it may be imperfectly printed on the wax; ſo Gods Image is naturally perfect in his Son, and Regularly or expreſſively perfect on the ſeal of his holy Doctrine and Laws; but imperfectly on his ſubjects according to their reception of it in their ſeveral degrees.

§. 6. Therefore it is eaſie to diſcern their errour, that tell men the Light or Spirit within them is their Rule, and a perfect Rule, yea, and that it is thus in all men in the world; when Gods Word and experience flatly contradict it, telling us that Infidels and enemies of God, and all the ungodly are in Darkneſs, and not in the Light; and that all that ſpeak not according to this Word (the Law and Teſtimony) have No light in them, and therefore no perfect Light to be their Rule, Iſa. 8. 20. The Miniſtry is ſent to bring them from darkneſs to Light: Therefore they had not a ſufficient Light in them before: Acts 26. 17, 18. Wo to them that put darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs: Iſa. 5. 20. telling the children of darkneſs and the haters of the Light, that they have a perfect Light and Rule within them, when God ſaith, They have no Light in them. See 1 John 1. 5. 4, 6, 7, 8. He that ſaith he is in the Light and hateth his brother is in darkneſs even till now, 1 John 2. 9, 10, 11. The Light within a wicked man, is darkneſs and blindneſs, and therefore not his Rule, Mat. 6. 23. Epheſ. 5. 8. Even the Light that is in godly men, is the knowledge of the Rule, and not the Rule it ſelf at all, nor ever called ſo by God: Our Rule is perfect; our knowledge is imperfect: for Paul himſelf ſaith, We know in part: But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part, ſhall be done away: Now we ſee through a glaſs darkly —— 1 Cor. 13. 9, 10, 12. The Goſpel is hid to them that are loſt, being blinded by Satan, 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4.

§. 7. There is an admirable unſearchable concurrence of the Spirit, and his appointed means, and the will of man, in the procreation of the new creature, and in all the exerciſes of grace, as there is of Male and Female in natural generation; and of the Earth, the Sun, the Rain, the induſtry of the Gardener; and the ſeminal virtue of Life and ſpecification, in the production of Plants with their flowers and fruits. And as wiſe as it would be, to ſay, It is not the Male, but the Female, or the Female but the Male that generateth; or to ſay, It is not the Earth, but the Sun, or not the Sun, but the Rain, or not the Rain, but the ſeminal Virtue, that cauſeth Plants with Flowers and Fruits: So wiſe is it to ſay, It is not the Spirit, but the Word and Means, or it is not the Word and Means, but the Spirit, or it is not the Reaſon, and Will and induſtry of man, but the Spirit: Or if we have not wiſdom enough to aſſign to each cauſe its proper intereſt in the effect, that therefore we ſhould ſeparate what God hath conjoyned, or deny the truth of the cauſation, becauſe we comprehend not the manner and influence, this is but to chooſe to be befooled by Pride, rather than confeſs that God is wiſer than we.

§. 8. 2. You may here diſcern alſo how the Spirit aſſureth and comforteth believers: and how palpably they err, that think the Spirit comforteth, or aſſureth us of our ſalvation without the uſe of its Evidencing grace. The ten things mentioned, §. 4. is all that the Spirit doth herein. But to expect his Comforts without any meaſure of diſcerning his graces, which can only rationally prove our right to the bleſſings of the Promiſe, this is to expect that he ſhould comfort a Rational Creature not as Rational, but darkly cauſe him to rejoyce he knoweth not why: and that he ſhould make no uſe of faith to our comfort: For faith reſteth underſtandingly upon the Promiſe, and expecteth the performance of it to thoſe that it is made to, and not to others. Indeed there is a common encouragement and comfort, which all men, even the worſt may take from the univerſal conditional Promiſe: and there is much abatement of our fears and troubles that may be fetcht from probabilities and uncertain hopes of our own ſincerity and intereſt in the Promiſe. But to expect any other aſſurance or comfort from the Spirit, without Evidence, is but to expect immediate revelations or inſpirations to do the work, which the Word of promiſe and faith ſhould do. The ſouls Conſent to the Covenant of Grace, and fiducial Acceptance of an offered Chriſt, is juſtifying ſaving faith: Every man hath an object in the Promiſe and offer of the Goſpel for this act, and therefore may rationally perform it. (Though all have not hearts to do it.) This may well be called, Faith of Adherence: and is it ſelf our evidence, from which we muſt conclude, that we are true Believers: The diſcerning of this Evidence called by ſome, the Reflex act of faith, is no act of faith at all, it being no believing of another, but the act of Conſcience knowing what is in our ſelves. The diſcerning and concluding that we are the children of God, participateth of faith and conſcientious knowledge, which gave us the premiſes of ſuch a concluſion.

§. 9. 3. You may hence perceive alſo how we are ſaid to be ſealed by the Spirit: Even as a mans ſeal doth ſignify the thing ſealed to be his own: So the Spirit of holineſs in us is Gods ſeal upon us, ſignifying that we are his, 2 Tim. 2. 19. Every one that hath the Spirit, is ſealed by having it: and that is his Evidence, which if he diſcern, he may know that he is thus ſealed. Eph. 1. 13. Rom. 8. 9. Eph. 4. 30.

§. 10. 4. Hereby alſo you may ſee what the earneſt and firſt fruits of the Spirit is: The Spirit is given to us by God, as the earneſt of the Glory which he will give us. To whomſoever he giveth the Spirit of Faith, and Love, and Holineſs, he giveth the ſeed of life eternal, and an inclination thereto, which is his earneſt of it. 2 Cor. 1. 22.

§. 11. 5. Hereby alſo you may ſee how the Spirit witneſſeth that we are the children of God: The word Witneſs is put here principally for Evidence: if any one queſtion our adoption, the Witneſs or Evidence which we muſt produce to prove it, is the Spirit of Jeſus ſanctifying us, and dwelling in us: This is the chief part (at leaſt) of the ſenſe of the Text, Rom. 8. 16. Though it is true, that the ſame Spirit witneſſeth by 1. Shewing us the grace which he hath given us; 2. And by ſhewing us the truth truth of the Promise made to all believers; 3. And by helping us from those Promises to conclude with boldness, that we are the children of God: 4. And by helping us to rejoyce therein.

§. 12. If I have been the longer (though too short) in acquainting you with the Office of the Holy Ghost (supposing your Belief that he is the third person in the Trinity) because it is an Article of grand importance, neglected by many that profess it, and because there are so many and dangerous errours in the world about it. Your great care now must be 1. To find this Spirit in you, as the Principle of your operations: and 2. To obey it, and follow its motions, as it leadeth you up to communion with God. Of the first I have spoken in the first Chapter. For the second observe these few Directions.

Dir. 1. §. 13. Direct. 1. Be sure you mistake not the Spirit of God and its motions, nor receive instead of them, the motions of Satan, or of your passions, pride or fleshly wisdom. It is easie to think you are obeying the Spirit, when you are obeying Satan and your own corruptions against the Spirit. By these fruits the Spirit of God is known. 1. The Spirit of God is for Heavenly Wisdom, and neither for Foolishness, or treacherous craftiness, Psal. 19. 7. & 9. 8. Jer. 4. 22. 1 Cor. 2. 4, 5, 6, 7. 2. The Spirit of God is a Spirit of Love, delighting to do good, its doctrine and motions are for Love, and tend to Good; abhorring both selfishness and hurtfulness to others, Gal. 5. 21, 22. 3. He is a Spirit of Concord, and is ever for the Unity of all believers, abhorring both Divisions among the Saints, and carnal compliances and confederacies with the wicked, 1 Cor. 12. Ephes. 4. 3, 4, 5, 6, 13. 1 Cor. 1. 10. & 3. 3. Rom. 16. 17, 18. 4. He is a Spirit of humility and self-denyal, making us and our knowledge, and gifts and worth, to be very little in our own eyes; Abhorring pride, ambition, self exalting, boasting, is also the actual debasing of our selves by earthliness or other sin, Matth. 18. 3. Ephes. 4. 2. 5. He is a Spirit of meekness, and patience, and forbearance; Abhorring stupidity, and inordinate passion, boisterousness, tumult, envy, contention, reviling and revenge. Matth. 11. 28, 29. Eph. 4. 2. James 3. 1 Pet. 2. 20, 21, 23. Gal. 5. 20. Rom. 12. 18, 19, 20. Ephes. 4. 31. Col. 3. 8. 6. He is a Spirit of zeal for God, resolving men against known sin, and for known truth and duty: Abhorring a furious destroying zeal, and also an indifferency in the cause of God, and a yielding complyance with that which is against it, Gal. 4. 18. Numb. 25. 11, 13. Titus 2. 14. James 3. 15, 17. Luke 9. 55. Rev. 3. 16. 7. He is a Spirit of Mortification, crucifying the flesh, and still contending against it, and causing men to live above all the Glory, and Riches, and Pleasures of the world; Abhorring both carnal licentiousness, and sensuality, and also the destroying and disabling of the Body, under pretence of true mortification, Rom. 8. 1. 13. Gal. 5. 17. Rom. 13. 13, 14. 1 Cor. 9. 27. 2 Pet. 2. 19. Col. 2. 18, 21, 23. 8. The Spirit of Christ contradicteth not the doctrine of Christ in the holy Scripture, but moveth us to an exact conformity thereto, Isa. 8. 20. This is the sure Rule to try pretences and motions of every Spirit by: For we are sure that the Spirit of Christ is the Author of that word; and we are sure he is not contrary to himself. 9. The motions of the Spirit do all tend to our Good, and are neither ludicrous, impertinent, or hurtful finally: They are all for the perfecting of sanctification, obedience, and for our salvation. Therefore unprofitable trifles, or despair and hurtful distractions and disturbances of mind, which drive from God, unfit for duty, and hinder salvation, are not the motions of the Spirit of God, 2 Tim. 1. 7. Rom. 8. 15. Isa. 11. 2. Gal. 5. 22. Zech. 12. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 14. 2 Cor. 3. 6. 10. Lastly, The Spirit of God subjecteth all to God, and raiseth the heart to him, and maketh us spiritual and divine, and is ever for Gods glory, 1 John 4. 5, 6. 1 Cor. 6. 11, 17, 20. Ephes. 2. 18, 22. Phil. 3. 3, 19, 20. 1 Pet. 1. 2. & 4, 6. Examine the Texts here cited, and you will find that by all these fruits the Spirit of God is known from all seducing Spirits, and from the fancies or passions of self-conceited men.

Nemo magnus sine aliquo afflatu Divino unquam fuit. Cicero 2. de Nat. Deor.

§. 14. Direct. 2. Quench not the Spirit, either by wilful sin, or by your neglecting of its offered help. It is as the spring to all your spiritual motions; as the Wind to your Sails: You can do nothing without it. Therefore reverence and regard its help, and pray for it, and obey it, and neglect it not. When you are sure it is the Spirit of God indeed, that is knocking at the door, behave not your selves as if you heard not. 1. Obey him speedily: Delay is a present unthankful refusal, and a kind of a denyal. 2. Obey him throughly: A half obedience is disobedience. Put him not off with Ananias and Saphira's gift; the half of that which he requireth of you. 3. Obey him constantly: not sometime hearkning to him and more frequently neglecting him; but attending him in a learning obediential course of life. Dir. 2.

§. 15. Direct. 3. Neglect not those means which the Spirit hath appointed you to use, for the receiving of its help, and which he useth in his holy operations. If you will meet with him, attend him in his own way, and expect him not in by-ways where he useth not to go. Pray, and meditate, and hear, and read, and do your best, and expect his blessing. Though your plowing and sowing will not give you a plentiful harvest without the Sun, and Rain, and the blessing of God, yet these will not do it neither, unless you plow and sow. God hath not appointed a course of means in Nature or Morality in vain, nor will he use to meet you in any other way. Dir. 3.

§. 16. Direct. 4. Do most when the Spirit helpeth you most. Neglect not the extraordinary measures of his assistance: If he extraordinarily help you in prayer, or meditation, improve that help, and break not off so soon as at other times (without necessity): Not that you should omit duty till you feel his help: For he useth to come in with help in the performance, and not in the neglect of duty: But tire not out your self with affected length, when you want the life. Dir. 4.

§. 17. Direct. 5. Be not unthankful for the assistance he hath given you. Deny not his grace: Ascribe it not to nature: Remember it to encourage your future expectations: Unthankfulness and neglect are the way to be denyed further help. Dir. 5.

§. 18. Quest. But how shall I know whether good effects be from the Means, or from my Reason and Endeavour, and when from the Spirit of God? Quest.

Answ. It is as if you should ask, How shall I know, whether my harvest be from the Earth, or Sun, or Rain, or God, or from my labour? I will tell you how. They are all con-causes: If the effect be there, they all concur: If the effect be wanting, some of them were wanting. It's foolish to ask, which is the cause, when the effect is not produced but by the concurrence of them all: If you had asked, which cause did fail, when the effect faileth? there were reason in that question: But there is none in this. The more to blame those foolish Atheists, that think God or the Spirit is not the cause, if they can but find that Reason and Means are in the effect. Your Reason, and Conscience, and Means would fall short of the effect, if the Spirit put not life into all Answ.

§. 19. Obj. But I am exceedingly troubled and confounded Object.

confounded with continual doubts about every motion that is in my mind, whether it be from the Spirit of God, or not.

Anſw. The more is your ignorance, or the malice of Satan cauſing your diſquiet. In one word, you have ſufficient Direction to reſolve thoſe doubts, and end thoſe troubles: Is it Good, or Evil, or Indifferent that you are moved to? This queſtion muſt be reſolved from the Word of God, which is the Rule of duty. If it be good, in matter, and manner, and circumſtances, it is from the Spirit of God, (either its common or ſpecial operation): If it be evil or indifferent, you cannot aſcribe it to the Spirit. Remember that the Spirit cometh not to you; to make you new duty which the Scripture never made your duty, and ſo to bring an additional Law: but to move and help you in that which was your duty before. (Only it may give the Matter, while Scripture giveth the Obligation by its general command.) If you know not what is your duty, and what not, it is your ignorance of Scripture that muſt be cured: Interpret Scripture well, and you may interpret the Spirits motions eaſily. If any new duty be motioned to you, which Scripture commandeth not, take ſuch motions as not from God: (Unleſs it were by extraordinary confirmed Revelation.)

DIRECT. IV.

Grand Dir. 4. For the true and orderly impreſſion of Gods Attributes on the heart.

Let it be your chiefeſt ſtudy to attain to a true, orderly, and practical knowledge of God, in his ſeveral Attributes and Relations; and to find a due impreſſion from each of them upon your hearts, and a diſtinct effectual improvement of them in your lives.

§. 1. BEecauſe I have written of this point more fully in another Treatiſe (Of the Knowledge of God, and Converſe with him) I ſhall but briefly touch upon it here, as not willing to repeat that which there is delivered: Only let me briefly mind you of theſe few things: 1. That the true knowledge of God is the ſum of Godlineſs, and the end of all our other knowledge, and of all that we have or do as Chriſtians. As Chriſt is a Teacher that came from God, ſo he came to call and lead us unto God: Or elſe he had not come as a Saviour: It is from God that we fell by ſin, and to God that we muſt be reſtored by grace: To ſave us, is to reſtore us to our perfection, and our happineſs: and that is to reſtore us unto God.

Laert. in Zeno. Dicunt Stoici Deum eſſe animal immortale, rationale, perfectum ac beatum, à malo omni remotiſſimum, providentia ſua mundum & quæ ſunt in mundo adminiſtrans omnia: Non tamen ineſſe illi humanæ formæ lineamenta. Cæterum eſſe opificem immenſi hujus operis, ſicut & patrem omnium. —— Eumque multis appellari nominibus juxta proprietates ſuas. Quoſdam item eſſe dæmones dicunt quibus inſit hominum miſeratio, inſpectores rerum humanarum; Heroas quoque ſolutas corporibus, ſapientum animas——Bonos aiunt eſſe Divinos, quod in ſeipſis quaſi habeant Deum. Malum vero impium & ſine Deo eſſe, quod duplici ratione accipitur, ſive quod Deo contrarius dicatur, ſive quod aſpernetur Deum: Id tamen malis omnibus non convenire. Pios autem & Religioſos eſſe ſapientes, peritos divini juris omnes. Pietatem eſſe ſcientiam divini cultus. Diis item eos ſacrificia facturos, caſtoſque futuros. Quippe ea quæ in Deos admittuntur peccata deteſtari, Diiſque charos ac gratos fore quo ſancti juſtique in rebus divinis ſint.

§. 2. 2. That the true knowledge of God is powerful and effectual upon the heart and life: And every Attribute and Relation of God, is ſo to be known, as to make its proper Impreſs on us: And the meaſure of this ſaving knowledge, is not to be judged of, by Extenſiveneſs or number of Truths concerning God which we know, ſo much as by the Clearneſs, and Intenſiveneſs, and the meaſure of its holy effects upon the heart.

§. 3. 3. This is it that denominateth both our ſelves and all our Duties HOLY: when Gods Image is thus imprinted on us; and we are like him by the new birth, as Children to their Father; and by his Knowledge both our Hearts and Lives are made Divine; being diſpoſed unto God, devoted to him, and employed for him; he being our Life, and Light and Love.

§. 4. 4. This is the ſumm of the Covenant of God with man [I will be thy God, and thou ſhalt be my people.] And the other parts of the Covenant, (that Chriſt be our Saviour, and the Holy Ghoſt our Sanctifier) are both ſubſervient unto this; there being now no coming unto God, but as Reconciled in Chriſt our Mediatour, and by the teaching and drawing of the Holy Ghoſt. To be our God, is to be to us an Abſolute Owner, a moſt Righteous Governour, and a moſt Bountiful Benefactor or Father, as having Created us, Redeemed and Regenerated us; and this according to his moſt Bleſſed Nature, properties and perfections.

§. 5. 5. It is not only a looſe and unconſtant effect of your particular thoughts of God, that is the neceſſary Impreſs of his Attributes (as to Fear him when you remember his Greatneſs and Juſtice:) But it muſt be an Habit or holy nature in you, every Attribute having made its ſtated Image upon you: and that Habit or Image being in you a conſtant Principle of holy ſpiritual operations. A Habit of Reverence, Belief, Truſt, Love, &c. ſhould be as it were your Nature.

§. 6. 6. Not that the knowledge of God in his perfections ſhould provoke us to deſire his properties and perfections: For to have ſuch an aſpiring deſire to be Gods, were the greateſt Pride and wickedneſs: But only we muſt deſire, 1. To be as like God in all his communicable excellencies, as is agreeable to our created ſtate and capacity. 2. And to have as near and full communion with him, as we can attain to and enjoy.

§. 7. 7. The Will of God, and his Goodneſs, and Holineſs, is more nearly propounded to us to be the Rule of our Conformity, than his Power and his Knowledge. Therefore his Law is moſt immediately the expreſſion of his Will; and our Duty and Goodneſs lyeth in our Conformity to his Law: being Holy as he is Holy.

Becauſe I may not ſtand on the particulars, I ſhall give you a brief imperfect Scheme of that of God which you muſt thus know.

GOD is to be Known by us

I. As in Himself

- I. In his BEING, Quod sit.
  - 1. One; and indivisible: In Three Persons.[a]
    - 1. The FATHER,
      - 1. Necessary,
      - 2. Independent,
      - 3. Immutable.
    - 2. The SON,
    - 3. The HOLY GHOST.
  - 2. Immense: and incomprehensible.
  - 3. Eternal.[b]
- II. In his NATURE: Quid sit.
  - A SPIRIT
    - 1. Simple: uncompounded.
    - 2. Impassionate, incorruptible, immortal.
    - 3. Invisible, intactible, &c.
  - and LIFE it self
    - 1. POWER,
    - 2. UNDERSTANDING,
    - 3. WILL.
- III. In his PERFECTIONS. Qualis sit.
  - 1. OMNIPOTENT,
    - 1. MOST GREAT,
      - 1. BEING HIMSELF.
    - 2. MOST WISE,
      - 2. KNOWING HIMSELF.
    - 3. MOST HOLY and HAPPY.[c]
      - 3. LOVING and ENJOYING HIMSELF.
  - 2. OMNICIENT,
  - 3. MOST GOOD.

II. As Related to his Creatures.

I. The EFFICIENT Cause of all things: Rom. 9. 36. [OF HIM].	1. CREATOR and Conserver.	1. Our OWNER or LORD: most Absolute, Free, and Irresistible.	1. Our Life, and Strength, and Safety.	1. Perfecting our Natures in Heavenly Life.
II. The DIRIGENT Cause: [THROUGH HIM;]	2. REDEEMER and Saviour.	2. Our RULER or KING: 1. By Legislation: 2. Judgment: 3. Execution: Absolute, Perfect, True, Holy, Just, Merciful, Patient, Terrible.	2. Our Light, and Wisdom.	2. Whom we shall behold in Glorious Light.
III. The FINAL Cause: [TO HIM] are all things: To him be Glory for ever: Amen.	3. REGENERATOR and Sanctifier.	3. Our BENEFACTOR or FATHER; 1. Most Loving: 2. Most Bountiful: 3. Most Amiable: (Patient, Merciful, Constant.)	3. Our Love and Joy: And so our End, and Rest, and Happiness	3. Whom we shall Please and Love; and be Pleased in him, and Loved by him; Rejoyce in him, Praise him, and so Enjoy him, Perfectly and Perpetually.

§ 8. For the right improvement of the Knowledge of all these Attributes of God, I must refer you to the fore-mentioned Treatise. The acts which you are to exercise upon God are these: 1. The clearest knowledge you can attain to: 2. The firmest Belief: 3. The highest Estimation: 4. The greatest Admiration: 5. The heartiest and sweetest Complacency or Love: 6. The strongest Desire: 7. A filial Awfulness, Reverence and Fear: 8. The boldest quieting Trust and confidence in him: 9. The most fixed Waiting, Dependance, Hope and Expectation: 10. The most absolute self-resignation to him: 11. The fullest and quietest submission to his disposals. 12. The humblest and most absolute subjection to his Governing Authority and Will, and the exactest obedience to his Laws. 13. The boldest courage and fortitude in his cause, and owning him before the world in the greatest sufferings. 14. The greatest Thankfulness for his Mercies. 15. The most faithful improvement of his Talents, and use of his Means, and performance of our trust. 16. A reverent and holy use of his Name, and Word: with a Reverence of his Secrets; forbearing to intrude or meddle with them. 17. A wise and cautelous observance of his Providences, publick and private; neither neglecting them, nor misinterpreting them: neither running before them, nor striving discontentedly against them. 18. A discerning, loving and honouring his Image in his children, notwithstanding their infirmities and faults; without any friendship to their faults, or over-magnifying, or imitating them in any evil. 19. A reverent, serious, spiritual adoration, and worshipping him, in publick and private, with soul and body, in the use of all his holy Ordinances: but especially in the joyful celebration of his Praise, for all his Perfections and his Mercies. 20. The highest Delight and fullest Content and Comfort in God that we can attain: Especially a Delight in Knowing him, and Obeying and Pleasing him, Worshipping and Praising him; Loving him, and being beloved of him, through Jesus Christ; and in the hopes of the Perfecting of all these in our Everlasting fruition of him in Heavenly Glory.

All these are the Acts of Piety towards God; which I lay together for your easier observation and memory: But some of them must be more fully opened, and insisted on.

DIRECT. V.

Grand Dir. 5. Of Self-resignation to God as our Owner.

Remember that God is your Lord or Owner: and see that you make an absolute Resignation of your selves, and all that you have to him as his Own: and use your selves and all accordingly; Trust him with his Own; and rest in his Disposals.

§. 1. OF this I have already spoken in my Sermon of Christs Dominion, and in my Directions for a sound Conversion: and therefore must but touch it here. It is easie notionally to know and say that God is our Owner, and we are not our Own: But if the Habitual Practical knowledge of it, were as easie, or as common, the happy effects of it would be the sanctification and reformation of the world. I shall first tell you, what this Duty is, and how it is to be performed; and then what fruits and benefits it will produce; and what should move us to it.

§. 2. I. The duty lyeth in these acts. 1. That you consider the Ground of Gods Propriety in you, 1. In making you of Nothing, and preserving you. 2. In Redeeming you by purchase. 3. In Regenerating you, and renewing you for himself. The first is the Ground of his Common Natural Propriety in you and all things: The second is the Ground of his Common Gracious Propriety in you and all men, as Purchased by Christ, Rom. 14. 9. John 13. 3. The third is the Ground of his special Gracious Propriety in you, and all his sanctified peculiar people. Understand and acknowledge what a Plenary Dominion God hath over you, and how absolutely and wholly you are His. 2. Let it exceedingly Please you to think that you are wholly his: it being much better for you, as to your Safety, Honour and Happiness than to be your Own, or any's else. 3. As God requireth it in his Covenant of Grace, that he have his Right by your Consent, and not by Constraint; so you must thankfully accept the motion, and with hearty and full Consent of Will, Resign your selves to him as his Own, even as his Creatures, his Ransomed ones, and his Regenerate Children, by a Covenant never to be violated. 4. You must carefully watch against the Claim and reserves of carnal selfishness; lest while you confess you are Gods, and not your Own, you should secretly still keep possession of your selves against him, or re-assume the possession which you surrendred. 5. You must Use your selves ever after as Gods, and not your Own.

Dominos esse omnium rerum ac moderatores Deos, eaque quæ gerantur eorum geri ditione atque numine —— Et qualis quisque sit, quid agat, quid in se admittat, qua mente, qua pietate colat religionem, intueri, piorumque & impiorum habere rationem. Cicero 2. de Leg.

§. 3. II. In this Using your selves as wholly Gods, consisteth both your further duty, and your benefits: 1. When Gods Propriety is discerned and consented to, it will make you sensible how you are obliged to employ all your powers of soul and body to his service, and to perceive that Nothing should be alienated from him, no creature having any co-ordinate title to a thought of your heart, or a glance of your affection, or a word of your mouths, or a minute of your time. The sense of Gods Propriety must cause you, to keep constant accounts between God and you, and to call your selves to a frequent reckoning, whether God have his Own, and you do not defraud him: whether it be his work that you are doing: and for him that you think, and speak, and live? And all that you have, will be Used as his, as well as your selves? For no man can have any good thing that is more his Own, than he is his Own himself.

§. 4. 2. Propriety discerned doth endear us in affection to our Owner. As we love our Own children, so they love their Own Fathers. Our very Dogs love their Own Masters better than another. When we can say with Thomas, My Lord and my God, it will certainly be the voice of Love. Gods Common Propriety in us as his Created and Ransomed ones, obligeth us to Love him with all our heart: But the knowledge of his peculiar propriety by Regeneration, will more effectually command our Love.

Deorum providentia Mundus administratur, iidemque consulunt rebus humanis neq; solum universis, verum etiam singulis. Cicero 1. de Divin.

§. 5. 3. Gods Propriety perceived, will help to satisfie us of his Love and Care of us; and will help us to Trust him in every danger; and so take off our inordinate fear and anxieties, and caring for our selves. The Apostle proveth Christs Love to his Church, from his Propriety, Ephes. 5. 29. No man ever yet hated his Own flesh. God is not regardless of his Own: As we take care of our Cattle to preserve them, and provide for them, more than they do for themselves; for they are more Ours than their Own: so God is more concerned in the welfare of his children, than they are themselves, they being more his than their Own. Why are we afraid of the wrath and cruelty of man? Will God be mindless and negligent of his Own? Why are we over-careful and distrustful of his providence? Will he not take care of his Own, and make provision for them? God, even our own God shall bless us, Psal. 67. 6. Gods interest in his Church, and Cause and Servants, is an argument which we may plead with him in prayer, (1 Chron. 17. 21, 22.) and with which we may greatly encourage our confidence,

Fer hanc hoc fit à principio hominibus.

dence, Isa. 48. 9, 11. For my Names sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off——For mine own sake, even for mine Own sake, will I do it: For how should my Name be polluted? And I will not give my Glory to another. Isa. 43. 1, 2. But now, thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel; Fear not, for I have Redeemed thee; I have called thee by name; thou art Mine: When thou passest thro' the Waters, I will be with thee, &c. If God should neglect Our Interest, he will not neglect his Own.

§. 6. 4. Gods propriety in us discerned, doth so much aggravate our sin against him, that it should greatly restrain us; and further our humiliation and recovery when we are fallen: Lev. 20. 26. Ye shall be Holy unto me, for I the Lord am Holy, and have severed you from other people, that you should be mine. Ezek. 16. 8. I sware unto thee, and entered into a Covenant with thee, and thou becamest mine, saith the Lord, when he is aggravating Jerusalems sin, 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20. Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price: therefore glorifie God in your Body, and in your Spirits, which are Gods. Justice requireth that every one have his own.

§. 7. 5. It should silence all murmurings and repinings against the Providence of God, to consider that we are his Own. Doth he afflict you? and are you not his own? Doth he kill you? Are you not his own? As a Ruler, he will shew you reason enough for it in your sins: But as your absolute Lord and Owner, he need not give you any other Reason, than that he may do with his own as he list. It is not possible that he can do any wrong to that which is absolutely his own. If he deny you health or wealth, or friends, or take them from you; he denyeth you, or taketh from you nothing but his own. Indeed as a Governour and a Father, he hath secured the faithful of eternal life: Otherwise as their Owner, he could not have wronged them, if he had made the most innocent as miserable as he is capable to be. Do you labour, and beat, and kill your Cattel, because they are your own (by an imperfect propriety?) and dare you grudge at God for afflicting his own, when their Consciences tell them, that they have deserved it and much more?

Sins against Gods Dominion.

§. 8. And that you may not think that you have resigned your selves to God entirely, when you do but hypocritically profess it, observe: 1. That man is not thus resigned to God, that thinketh any service too much for God, that he can do: 2. Nor he that thinketh any cost too great for God that he is called to undergo: 3. Nor he that thinketh that all is won (of his time, or wealth, or pleasure, or any thing) which he can save or steal from God: For all is lost that God hath not. 4. Nor he that must needs be the Disposer of himself, and his condition and affairs, and God must humour him, and accommodate his Providence to his carnal interest and will, or else he cannot bear it, or think well of it. 5. Remember that all that is bestowed in sin upon Gods enemies is used against him, and not as his own. 6. And that he that hideth his Talent, or useth it not at all, cannot be said to use it for God. Both idleness and alienating the gifts of God, are a robbing him of his own.

§. 9. III. To help you in this work of self-resignation, often consider: 1. That if you were your own, you were most miserable: You could not support, preserve or provide for your selves: who should save you in the hour of temptation or distress? Alas, if you are humbled Christians, you know so much of your own insufficiency, and feel your selves such a daily burden to your selves, that you have sure enough of your selves ere now: And beg of God, above all your enemies, to save you from your selves; and of all judgments to save you from being forsaken of God, and given up to your selves. 2. Remember that none in the world hath sufficient Power, wisdom, and goodness, to take the full care and charge of you but God: None else can save you, or sanctifie you, or keep you alive one hour: And therefore it is your happiness and honour, that you are his. 3. His Right is absolute, and none hath right to you but he. None else did Create you, Redeem you, or Regenerate you. 4. He will use you only in safe and honourable services, and to no worse an end, than your endless happiness. 5. What you deny him or steal from him, you give to the Devil, the World and the flesh: And do they better deserve it? 6. You are his own in Title, whether you will or not; and he will fulfil his will upon you. Your Consent and Resignation is necessary to your good, to ease you of your cares, and secure you from present and eternal misery.

DIRECT. VI.

Remember that God is your Soveraign King, to Rule and Judge you: And that it is Your Rectitude and Happiness to obey and please him: Labour therefore to bring your Souls and Bodies into the most absolute Subjection to him, and to make it your Delight and Business sincerely and exactly to obey his Will.

Grand Dir. 6. Of subjection to God as our Supream Governour.

§. 1. HAving Resigned your selves absolutely to God as your Owner, you are next to subject your selves absolutely to God as your Governour or King. How much of our Religion consisteth in this, you may see in the nature of the thing, in the design of the Law and Word of God, in the Doctrine and example of Jesus Christ, in the Description of the last judgment, and in the common consent of all the world. Tho' Love is the highest work of man, yet it is so far from discharging us from our subjection and obedience, that it constraineth us to it most powerfully and most sweetly, and must it self be judged of by these effects. John 14. 15. If ye love me, keep my commandments. 21. He that hath my Commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: 23. If any man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will Love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. 24. He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings. John 15. 10. If ye keep my Commandments, ye shall abide in my Love, even as I have kept my Fathers Commandments, and abide in his Love: 14. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. John 13. 17. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. 1 John 5. 3. For this is the Love of God, that ye keep his Commandments, and his Commandments are not grievous. 1 John 2. 4. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his Commandment, is a lyar, and the truth is not in him. 5. But who so keepeth his word, in him verily, is the Love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him. 6. He that saith he is in him, ought himself also to walk, even as he walked. 29. If ye know that he is Righteous, you know that every one that doth Righteousness is born of him, 1 John 3. 6. Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not: whosoever sinneth, hath not seen him, neither known him. 7. Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doth righteousness, is righteous even as he is righteous. 8. He that committeth sin, is of the Devil: for the Devil sinneth from the beginning: for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil. 9. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin;

Aristippus rogatus aliquando quid haberent eximium Philosophi? Si omnes, inquit, leges intereant, æquabiliter vivemus. Laertius.

for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. 10. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil: whosoever doth not righteousness, is not of God —— 22. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him: because we keep his Commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight, Rev. 22. 14. Blessed are they that do his Commandments, that they may have right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in by the gates into the City.

I set together these Testimonies of the Scripture, that the stream of Divine Authority may carry you to a lively sense of the necessity of Obedience.

§. 2. I shall here first tell you what this full subjection is, and then I shall Direct you how to attain it.

Subjection what.

I. As in God there is first his Relation of our King, and then his actual Government of us, by his Laws and Judgment: so in us there is first our Relation of Subjects to God, and then our actual obedience. We are Subjects by Divine obligation, before we consent (as Rebels are:) but our Consent or self obligation is necessary to our Voluntary obedience and acceptation with God. Subjection is our stated obligation to obedience. This subjection and habit of Obedience is then right and full. 1. When the sense of Gods authority over us, is Practical and not notional only. 2. And when it is deep-rooted and fixed, and become as a Nature to us: As a mans intention of his End is, that hath a long Journy to go which carrieth him on to the last step: or as a Childs subjection to his Parents, or a Servant to his Master, which is the Habit or principle of his daily course of life. 3. When it is Lively, and ready to put the soul upon obedience. 4. When it is constant, keeping the soul in a continual attendance upon the Will of God. 5. When it hath universal respect to all his Commandments. 6. When it is resolute, powerful and victorious against temptations to disobedience. 7. When it is superlative, respecting God as our supream King, and owning no authority against him, nor any but what is subordinate to him. 8. When it is Voluntary, Pleasant, Chearful and delectable to us to Obey him to the utmost of our Power.

How to bring the soul into subjection to God.

§. 3. II. To bring the soul to this full subjection and Obedience to God, is so Difficult, and yet so reasonable, so necessary, and so excellently good, that we should not think any diligence too great, by which it is to be attained. The Directions that I shall give you, are some of them to Habituate the mind to an Obediential frame, and some of them also practically to further the exercise of Obedience in particular acts.

Dir. 1.

§. 4. Direct. 1. Remember the unquestionable plenary Title, that God hath to the Government of you, and of all the world. The sense of this will awe the soul, and help to subject it to him, and to silence all rebellious motions. Should not God Rule the Creatures which he hath made? Should not Christ Rule the souls which he hath purchased? Should not the Holy Ghost Rule the souls which he hath Regenerated and quickned?

Dir. 2.

§. 5. Direct. 2. Remember that God is perfectly fit for the Government of you and all the world: You can desire nothing reasonably in a Governour, which is not in him. He hath perfect wisdom to know what is best: He hath perfect Goodness, and therefore will be most regardful of his subjects good, and will put no Evil into his Laws. He is Almighty, to protect his Subjects, and see to the execution of his Laws: He is most Just, and therefore can do no wrong, but all his Laws and Judgments are equal and impartial. He is infinitely perfect and self-sufficiently, and never needed a Lye, or a deceit, or unrighteous means to Rule the world; nor to oppress his subjects to attain his Ends. He is our very End, and Interest, and felicity, and therefore hath no Interest opposite to our good, which should cause him to destroy the innocent. He is our dearest friend and Father, and loveth us better than we love our selves, and therefore we have reason confidently to Trust him, and chearfully and gladly to obey him, as one that Ruleth us in order to our own felicity.

Dir. 3.

§. 6. Direct. 3. Remember how unable and unfit you are to be Governours of your selves. So blind and ignorant; so byassed by a corrupted will; so turbulent are your passions; so uncessant and powerful is the temptation of your sense and appetite; and so unable are you to protect or reward your selves, that methinks you should fear nothing in this world more, than to be given up to your own hearts lusts, to walk in your own seducing counsels, Psal. 81. 11, 12. The brutish appetite and sense, hath got such dominion over the Reason of carnal unrenewed men, that for such to be governed by themselves, is for a man to be governed by a Swine, or the Rider to be ruled by the Horse.

Dir. 4.

§. 7. Direct. 4. Remember how great a matter God maketh of his Kingly prerogatives, and of mans obedience. The whole tenour of the Scripture will tell you this: his precepts, his promises, his threatnings, his vehement exhortations, his sharp reproofs, the sending of his Son and Spirit; the example of Christ and all the Saints, the reward prepared for the obedient, and the punishment for the disobedient; all tell you aloud, that God is far from being indifferent, whether you obey his Laws or not. It will teach you to regard that, which you find is so regarded of God.

Dir. 5.

§. 8. Direct. 5. Consider well of the excellency of full obedience, and the present benefits which it bringeth to your selves and others. Our full subjection and obedience to God, is to the world and the soul, as Health is to the body: When all the humours keep their due temperament, proportions and place, and every part of the body is placed and used according to the intent of nature, then all is at ease within us. Our food is pleasant; our sleep is sweet; our labour is easie, and our vivacity maketh life a pleasure to us: we are useful in our places, and helpful to others that are sick and weak. So is it with the soul that is fully obedient. God giveth him a Reward, before the full reward: He findeth that obedience is a Reward to it self; and that it is very pleasant to do good: God owneth him, and Conscience speaketh peace and comfort to him: His mercies are sweet to him, his burdens and his work are easie: He hath easier access to God than others: Yea, the world shall find, that there is no way to its right order, unity, peace, and happiness, but by a full subjection and obedience to God.

Dir. 6.

§. 9. Direct. 6. Remember the sad effects of disobedience, even at present, both in the soul and in the world. When we rebel against God, it is the confusion, ruin, and death of the soul, and of the world: When we disobey him, it is the sickness or disordering of the soul, and will make us groan: Till our bones be set in joynt again, we shall have no ease: God will be displeased, and hide his face: Conscience will be unquiet: The soul will lose its peace and joy: Its former mercies will grow less sweet: Its former rest will turn to weariness: Its duty will be unpleasant: Its burden heavy, who would not fear such a state as this?

Dir. 7.

§. 10. Direct. 7. Consider that when God doth not Govern you, you are Ruled by the flesh, the world and the Devil. And what right or fitness they have to govern you, and what is their work, and final reward, methinks you should easily discern. If ye live after the flesh, ye shall dye, Rom. 8. 13. And if ye sow to the flesh, of the flesh ye shall reap corruption, Gal. 6. 8. It will strike you with horror, if in the the hour of temptation, you would but think: I am now going to disobey my God, and to obey the flesh, the world, or the Devil; and to prefer their Will before his Will.

Dir. 8. §. 11. Direct. 8. Turn your eye upon the rebellious Nations of the earth, and upon the state of the most malignant and ungodly men, and consider that such madness and misery as you discern in them, every wilful disobedience to God doth tend to, and partaketh of in its degree. To see a swinish Drunkard in his Vomit; to hear a raging Bedlam curse and swear; or a malignant Wretch blaspheme and scorn at a holy life; to hear how foolishly they talk against God; and see how maliciously they hate his servants, one would think should turn ones stomach against all sin for ever. To think what Beasts or incarnate Devils many of the ungodly are: to think what confusion and inhumanity possesseth most of those Nations that know not God, one would think should make the least degree of sin seem odious to us, when the dominion and ripeness of it is so odious.

Dir. 9. §. 12. Direct. 9. Mark what obedience is expected by men; and what influence Government hath upon the state and affairs of the world, and what the world would be without it; and sure this will make you think honourably and delightfully of the Government of God. What would a Nation be without Government, but like a company of Thieves and lawless Murderers? or like the Pikes in a Pond, that first eat up the other fish, and then devour one another, the greater living upon the less. Bears and Wolves would live quietlier together, than ungoverned men (except those few that are truly subject to the Government of God.) Government maintaineth every many in his propriety; and keepeth lust and madness from breaking out; and keepeth peace and order in the world. What would a family be without Government? Children and Servants are kept by it in their proper place and work. Think then how necessary and excellent is the Universal Government of God.

Dir. 10. §. 13. Direct. 10. Think well of the Endless Rewards and Punishments, by which God will procure obedience to his Laws, or vindicate the honour of his Government on the disobedient: That the world may see that he giveth sufficient motives for all that he requireth; he will reward the obedient with everlasting blessedness, and punish the Rebels with endless misery. You shall not say that he bids you work for nothing. Though you can give him nothing but his own, and therefore can merit nothing of him, in point of Commutative Justice; yet as he is a Governour and a Father he will put so wide a difference between the obedient and the rebellious, that one shall be judged to everlasting joy (with a Well done, good and faithful Servant) and the other to everlasting punishment, Matth. 25. Is there not enough in Heaven, in a life of endless joys with God, to make obedience lovely to you, and to make sin loathsome? Is there not enough in Hell to deter you from disobedience, and drive you unto God? God will Rule whether you will or not. Consent to be obedient, or he will punish you without asking your consent.

More special Directions for Obedience. §. 14. The Directions for the nearer exciting of your obedience, and confirming your full subjection, are these.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. Keep still the face of your souls upon God, and in the sense of his Greatness, and of his continual presence, and of his particular providence. And this will keep you in an obediential frame. You will easily then perceive that so great a God cannot be disobeyed without great iniquity and guilt: And that a God that is continually with you, must be continually regarded: And that a God that exactly observeth and mindeth the thoughts and words of every man, should by every man be exactly minded and observed. This will help you to understand the meaning of the Tempter, when you perceive that every Temptation is an urging of you to offend (for nothing) so great a God, that is just then observing what you do.

Dir. 2. §. 15. Direct. 2. Always remember whither you are going; that you are preparing for Everlasting Rest and Joy and must pass through the righteous judgment of the Lord; and that Christ is your Guide and Governour, but to bring you safely home, as the Captain of your salvation; and that sin is a rejecting of his help, and of your happiness. Think not that God doth Rule you as a Tyrant, to your hurt or ruin, to make his own advantage of you; or by needless Laws, that have no respect to your good and safety: But think of him, as one that is conducting you to eternal life; and would now guide you by his counsel, and afterwards take you to his glory. Think that he is leading you to the world of Light, and Life, and Love, and Joy, where there are Rivers of pleasure, and fulness of delight for evermore, that you may see his face, and feel his Love among a world of blessed Spirits; and not be weeping and gnashing the teeth with impious impenitent souls. And is not such a Government as this desirable? It is but like the Government of a Physician, to save his Patients life: Or like your Government of your children, which is necessary to their good, that cannot feed or rule themselves: Or like a Pilots governing the Ship, which is conveying you to possess a Kingdom: If the Marriners obey him, they may safely arrive at the desired Port; but if they disobey him, they are all cast away and perish. And should such a Government as this is, seem grievous to you? or should it not be most acceptable, and accurately obeyed?

Dir. 3. §. 16. Direct. 3. Still think what dangers, difficulties and enemies you must pass through to this Rest, and that all your safety dependeth upon the conduct and assistance of your Guide. And this will bring over self-love to command you strict obedience. You are to pass through the Army of your enemies? And will you here disobey the Captain of your salvation? or would you have him leave you to your selves? Your disease is mortal, and none but Jesus Christ can cure it; and if he cure it not, you are lost for ever: no pain of Gout or Stone is comparable to your everlasting pain! And yet will you not be obedient to your Physician? Think when a Temptation comes, If there were a narrow bridge over the deepest Gulf or River, and all my friends and happiness lay on the further side, and I must needs go over whether I will or not, if Christ would take me by the hand and lead me over, would I be tempted to refuse his help, or to lose his hand? or if he should offer to lose me, and leave me to my self, should I not tremble and cry out as Peter, Lord save me, Matth. 14. 30. Or as the disciples, Save Master we perish? And should I not then hold him fast, and most accurately obey him, when he is leading me to Life Eternal, that I may escape the Gulf of endless misery?

Dir. 4. §. 17. Direct. 4. Remember still how bad, and blind, and backward, and deceitful, and weak you are your selves, and therefore what need you have of the greatest watchfulness, least you should disobey your Pilot, and lose your Guide, before you are aware. O what a heart have we to watch? A lazy heart that will be loytering or sitting down, when we should be following our Lord. A foolish heart that will let him go while we play with every playfellow in our way: A cowardly heart that will steal away, or draw back in danger, when it should follow our General. A treacherous heart that will give us the slip, and deceive us, when we seemed surest reſt of it. A pur-blind heart, that even when it followeth Chriſt our Guide, is hardly kept from miſſing the Bridge, and falling into the Gulf of miſery. Think well of theſe, and you will obey your Governour.

Dir. 5. §. 18. Direct. 5. Forget not the Fruits of your former obedience and diſobedience; if you would be kept in an obedient frame. Remember that obedience hath been ſweeteſt afterward: and that you never yet found cauſe to repent or be aſhamed of it. Remember that the fruit of ſin was bitter, and that when your Eyes were opened, and you ſaw your ſhame, you would fain have fled from the face of God; and that then it appeared another thing to you, than it ſeemed in the committing. Remember what groans, and hearts grief it hath coſt you? and into what fears it brought you of the wrath of God: and how long it was before your broken bones were healed; and what it coſt both Chriſt and you? And this will make the very name and firſt approach of ſin, to caſt you into a preventing fear. A Beaſt that hath once fallen into a gulf or Quick-ſand, will hardly be driven into the ſame again: A Fiſh that was once ſtricken and ſcap'd the hook, will fear and fly from it the next time: A Bird that hath once eſcap'd the Snare or the Tallons of the Hawk, is afterwards afraid of the ſight or noiſe of ſuch a thing. Remember where you fell, and what it coſt you, and what you ſcaped which it might have coſt you, and you will obey more accurately hereafter.

Dir. 6. §. 19. Direct. 6. Remember that this is your day of tryal, and what depends upon your accurate obedience. God will not crown untryed Servants. Satan is purpoſely ſuffered to tempt you, to try whether you will be true to God or not. All the hope that his malice hath of undoing you for ever, conſiſteth in his hope to make you diſobedient to God. Methinks theſe Conſiderations ſhould awaken you to the moſt watchful and diligent obedience. If you were told beforehand, that a Thief or Cut-purſe had undertaken to rob you, and would uſe all his cunning and induſtry to do it, you would then watch more carefully than at another time. If you were in a Race to run for your lives, you would not go then in your ordinary pace. Doth God tell you before, that he will try your obedience by temptation, and as you ſtand or fall, you ſhall ſpeed for ever; and will not this keep you watchful and obedient?

Dir. 7. §. 20. Direct. 7. Avoid thoſe tempting and deluding objects, which are ſtill enticing your hearts from your obedience; and avoid that diverting crowd and noiſe of company or worldly buſineſs, which drowns the voice of Gods commands. If God call you into a life of great temptations, he can bring you ſafely through them all: But if you ruſh into it wilfully, you may ſoon find your own diſability to reſiſt. It is dangerous to be under ſtrong and importunate temptations, leſt the ſtream ſhould bear us down: But eſpecially to be long under them, leſt we be weary of reſiſting. They that are long ſolicited, do too often yield at laſt: It is hard to be always in a clear, and ready, and reſolute frame: Few men have their wits, much leſs their graces, always at hand, in a readineſs to uſe. And if the Thief come when you are dropt aſleep, you may be robbed before you can awake. The conſtant drawings of temptation, do oft-times abate the habit of obedience, and diminiſh our hatred of ſin, and holy reſolutions, by ſlow inſenſible degrees, before we yield to commit the act. And the mind that will be kept in full ſubjection, muſt not be ſo diverted in a crowd of diſtracting company or buſineſs, as to have no time to think on the motives of his obedience. This withdrawing of the fewel may put out the fire.

Dir. 8. §. 21. Direct. 8. If you are unavoidably caſt upon ſtrong Temptation, take the Alarm; and put on all the armour of God, and call up your ſouls to watchfulneſs, and reſolution, remembring that you are now among your Enemies, and muſt reſiſt as for your lives. Take every Temptation in its naked proper ſenſe, as coming from the Devil, and tending to your damnation by enticing your hearts from your ſubjection unto God: ſuppoſe you ſaw the Devil himſelf in his inſtruments offering you the bait of preferment, or honour, or riches, or fleſhly luſt, or ſports, or of delightful meats, or drinks, to tempt you to exceſs; and ſuppoſe you heard him ſay to you plainly, [Take this for thy ſalvation: Sell me for this thy God, and thy Soul, and thy everlaſting hopes: Commit this ſin, that thou maiſt fall under the judgment of God, and be tormented in Hell with me for ever. Do this to pleaſe thy fleſh, that thou maiſt diſpleaſe thy God, and grieve thy Saviour: I cannot draw thee to Hell, but by drawing thee to ſin: And I cannot make thee ſin againſt thy will; nor undo thee, but by thy own conſent and doing: Therefore I pray thee conſent and do it thy ſelf, and let me have thy company in torments.] This is the naked meaning of every temptation: Suppoſe therefore you ſaw and heard all this, with what deteſtation then would you reject it? With what horrour would you fly from the moſt enticing bait? If a Robber would entice you out of your way and company, with flattering words, that you might fall into the hands of his companions, if you knew all his meaning and deſign before hand, would you be enticed after him? Watch therefore, and Reſolve when you know before hand the Deſign of the Devil, and what he intendeth in every Temptation.

Dir. 9. §. 22. Direct. 9. Be moſt ſuſpicious, fearful and watchful about that, which your fleſh doth moſt deſire, or finds the greateſt pleaſure in. Not that you ſhould deny your bodies all delight in the mercies of God: If the body have none, the mind will have the leſs: Mercy muſt be differenced from puniſhment; and muſt be valued and reliſhed as mercy: Meer Natural pleaſing of the ſenſes is in it ſelf no moral good or evil. A holy improvement of lawful pleaſure, is a daily duty: Inordinate pleaſure is a ſin: All is inordinate which tendeth more to corrupt the ſoul, by enticing it to ſin, and turning it from God, than to fit and diſpoſe it for God and his ſervice, and preſerve it from ſinning. But ſtill remember, it is not ſorrow, but Delight that draweth away the ſoul from God, and is the fleſhes intereſt which it ſets up againſt him. Many have ſinned in ſorrows and diſcontents: but none ever ſinned for ſorrows and diſcontents: Their diſcontents and ſorrows are not taken up and loved for themſelves; but are the effects of their love to ſome pleaſure and content, which is denied them, or taken from them. Therefore though all your bodily pleaſures are not ſin; yet ſeeing nothing but the pleaſures of the fleſh and carnal mind is the End of ſinners, and the Devils great and chiefeſt bait, and this only cauſeth mens perdition, you have great reaſon to be moſt afraid of that which is moſt pleaſing to your fleſh, and to the mind as it is corrupt and carnal: eſcape the deluſions of fleſhly pleaſure, and you eſcape damnation: You have far more cauſe to be afraid of proſperity, than of adverſity; of riches, than of poverty; of honour, than of obſcurity and contempt; of mens praiſes and applauſe, than of their diſpraiſes, ſlanders, and reproach; of preferment and greatneſs, than of a low and mean condition; of a delicious, than of leſs tempting meats and drinks; of curious, coſtly, than of mean, and cheap, and plain attire. Let thoſe that have hired out their reaſon to the ſervice of their fleſhly luſts, and have delivered the Crown and Scepter to their appetites, think otherwiſe. No wonder if they that have ſold the birthright of their Intellects to their Senſes, for a meſs of Pottage, for a Whore, or a high place, or a domineering power over others, or a belly full of pleaſant Meats or Liquors, do deride all this, and think it but a melancholy conceit, more ſuitable to an Eremite or Anchorite, than to men of ſociety and buſineſs in the world. As Heaven is the portion of ſerious believers, and mortified Saints alone, ſo it ſhall be proper to them alone, to underſtand the doctrine and example of their Saviour, and practically to know what it is to deny themſelves, and forſake all they have, and take up their Croſs and follow Chriſt, and by the Spirit to mortifie the deeds of the body, Luke 14. 26, 27, 28, 29, 33. Rom. 8. 5, 6, 7, 13. Col. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4. Such know that millions part with God for Pleaſures, but none for Griefs: and that Hell will be ſtored with thoſe that preferred Wealth, and Honour, and Sports, and gluttony, drink and filthy luſts, before the Holineſs and happineſs of believers; but none will be damned for preferring poverty, and diſgrace, and abſtinence, hunger, and thirſt, and chaſtity before them. It muſt be ſomething that ſeemeth good, that muſt entice men from the chiefeſt Good: Apparent Evil is no fit bait for the Devils hook. Men will not diſpleaſe God, to be themſelves diſpleaſed; nor chooſe preſent ſorrows inſtead of everlaſting joys, but for the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon many will deſpiſe the endleſs pleaſures.

Dir. 10. §. 23. Direct. 10. Meet every motion to diſobedience with an Army of holy Graces, with wiſdom, and fear, and hatred, and reſolution, with Love to God, with Zeal and courage: and quench every ſpark that falls upon your hearts before it break out into a flame. When ſin is little and in its infancy, it is weak and eaſily reſiſted: It hath not then turned away the mind from God, nor quenched grace, and diſabled it to do its office. But when its grown ſtrong, then grace grows weak, and we want its help, and want the ſenſe of the preſence, and Attributes and truths of God, to rebuke it. O ſtay not till your hearts are gone out of hearing, and ſtragled from God beyond the obſervance of his Calls. The Habit of Obedience will be dangerouſly abated, if you reſiſt not quickly the acts of ſin.

Dir. 11. §. 24. Direct. 11. Labour for the cleareſt underſtanding of the Will of God, that doubtfulneſs about your duty do not make you flag in your obedience, and doubtfulneſs about ſin, do not weaken your deteſtation and reſiſtance, and draw you to venture on it. When a man is ſure what is his Duty, it is a great help againſt all temptations that would take him off: And when he is ſure that a thing is ſinful, it makes it the eaſier to reſiſt. And therefore it is the Devils Method to delude the underſtanding, and make men believe that duty is no duty, and ſin is no ſin, and then no wonder if duty be neglected, and ſin committed: And therefore he raiſeth up one falſe Prophet or other to ſay to Ahab, Go and proſper; or to ſay, There is no hurt in this: To diſpute for ſin, and to diſpute againſt Duty: And it is almoſt incredible how much the Devil hath got, when he hath once made it a matter of controverſie. Then every hypocrite hath a cloke for his ſin, and a doſe of Opium for his Conſcience: when he can but ſay, [It is a Controverſie; ſome are of one mind, and ſome of another, you are of that opinion, and I am of this:] Eſpecially if there be wiſe and learned on both ſides, and yet more, if there be Religious men on both ſides: And more yet, if he have an equal number on his ſide: And moſt of all if he have the major Vote (as error and ſin have commonly in the world:) If Ahab have but four hundred lying flattering Prophets to one Micaiah, he will think he may hate him, reproach him and perſecute him without any ſcruple of Conſcience. If it be made a Controverſie whether Bread be Bread, and Wine be Wine, when we ſee and taſte it; ſome will think they may venture to ſubſcribe or ſwear that they hold the Negative, if their credit, or livings, or lives lie upon it; much more if they can ſay, It is the judgment of the Church? If it be once made a Controverſie, whether perjury be a ſin, or whether a Vow materially lawful bind, or whether it be lawful to equivocate, or lye with a mental reſervation for the truth, or to do the greateſt evil, or ſpeak the falſeſt thing with a true and good intent and meaning, almoſt all the hypocrites in the Country will be for the ſinful part, if their fleſhly intereſt require it. And will think themſelves wronged, if they are accounted hypocrites, lyars, or perjured, as long as it is but a point of controverſie among learned men. If it be once made a controverſie, whether an Excommunicate King become a private man, and it be lawful to kill him, and whether the Pope may abſolve the ſubjects of Temporal Lords from their allegiance (notwithſtanding all their Oaths) and if ſuch learned men as Suarez, Bellarmine, Perron, &c. are for it (to ſay nothing of Santarellus, Mariana, &c.) you ſhall have a Clement, a Ravilliack, a Faux, yea, too great choice of inſtruments, that will be ſatisfied to ſtrike the blow: If many hold it may, or muſt be done, ſome will be found too ready to do it: eſpecially if an approved General Council (Lateran. ſub Innoc. 3. Can. 3.) be for ſuch Papal abſolution. We have ſeen at home, how many will be imboldned to pull down Government, to ſit in Judgment on their King, and condemn him, and to deſtroy their Brethren, if they can but ſay, that ſuch and ſuch men think it lawful. If it were but a Controverſie once whether drunkenneſs, whoredom, ſwearing, ſtealing, or any villany be a ſin or not, it would be committed more commonly, and with much leſs regret of conſcience. Yea, good men will be ready to think that modeſty requireth them to be leſs cenſorious of thoſe that commit it, becauſe in controverted caſes they muſt ſuſpect their own underſtandings, and allow ſomething to the judgment of Diſſenters: And ſo all the Rules of Love, and Peace, and Moderation, which are requiſite in Controverſies that are about ſmall and difficult points the Devil will make uſe of, and apply them all to the patronage of the moſt odious ſins, if he can but get them once to have ſome learned, wiſe, religious offenders. And from our tenderneſs of the perſons we eaſily ſlide to an indulgent tenderneſs in cenſuring the ſin it ſelf. And good men themſelves by theſe means are dangerouſly diſabled to reſiſt it, and prepared to commit it.

Dir. 12. §. 25. Direct. 12. Take heed leſt the Devil do either caſt you into the ſleep of carnal ſecurity, or into ſuch doubts, and fears, and perplexing ſcruples, as ſhall make holy obedience ſeem to you an impoſſible or a tireſome thing. When you are aſleep in careleſneſs, he can uſe you as he liſt: And if Obedience be made grievous and ungrateful to you, your heart will go againſt it, and you will go but like a tired horſe, no longer than you feel the ſpur: you are half conquered already, becauſe you have loſt the Love and pleaſure of obedience: and you are ſtill in danger leſt difficulties ſhould quite tire you, and wearineſs make you yield at laſt. The means by which the Tempter effecteth this, muſt afterward be ſpoken of, and therefore I ſhall omit it here.

§. 26. By the faithful practice of theſe Directions Obedience may become, as it were your Nature; a familiar, eaſie and delightful thing: and may be like a chearful ſervant or child, that waiteth for your commands, and is glad to be employed by you. Your full ſubjection of your wills to God, will be as the health, and eaſe, and quietneſs of your wills: You will feel that it is never well or eaſie with you, but when you are obedient and pleaſing to your Creators will. Your delight will be in the Law of the Lord, Pſal. 1. 2. It will be ſweeter than hony to you, and better than thouſands of gold and ſilver: And this not for any by reſpect, but as it is the Law of God;

God; a Light unto your feet, and an infallible guide in all your duty. You will say with David, Psal. 119. 16, 24, 35, 47, 70, 77, 174. I will delight my self in thy Statutes; I will not forget thy word. Thy Testimonies are my delight and my Counsellers. Make me to go in the path of thy Commandments: for therein do I delight. And as Psal. 40. 8. I delight to do thy will O my God, yea, thy Law is within my heart. And O Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord; that delighteth greatly in his Commandments, Psal. 112. 1.

Grand Dir. 7. Learning as Disciples of Christ our Teacher.

DIRECT. VII.

Continue as the Covenanted Scholars of Christ, the Prophet and Teacher of his Church, to learn of him by his Spirit, word and Ministers, the farther knowledge of God, and the things that tend to your Salvation; and this with an honest willing mind, in faith, humility and diligence; in obedience, patience and peace.

§. 1. THough I spake before of our Coming to God by Jesus Christ, as he is the way to the Father; It is meet that we distinctly speak of our Relation and Duty to him, as he is our Teacher, our Captain and our Master, as well as of our improving him as Mediator immediately unto God. The necessity of Believers, and the office and work of Christ himself, doth tell us how much of our Religion doth consist in Learning of him as his Disciples, Acts 7. 37. A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me, him shall you hear: This was the voice that came out of the cloud in the holy mount, Matth. 17. 5. This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, Hear ye Him. Therefore is the title of Disciples commonly given to Believers. And there is a twofold Teaching which Christ hath sent his Ministers to perform; both mentioned in their Commission, Matth. 28. 19, 20. The one is to teach the Nations, as to make Disciples of them, by perswading them into the School of Christ, which containeth the Teaching of faith and Repentance and whatever is necessary to their first admission, and to their subjecting themselves to Christ himself as their stated and infallible Guide: The other is the Teaching them further to know more of God, and to observe all things whatsoever he commandeth them. And this last is it we are now to speak of, and I shall add some sub directions for your help.

How to Learn of Christ.

Sect. 2. Directions for Learning of Christ as our Teacher.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. Remember who it is that is your Teacher: that he is the Son of God, that knoweth his Fathers will, and is the most faithful infallible Pastor of the Church. There is neither ignorance, nor negligence, nor ambition, nor deceit in him, to cause him to conceal the mind of God: There is nothing which we need to know, which he is not both able and willing to acquaint us with.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. Remember what it is that he Teacheth you, and to what End: That it is not how to sin and be Damned, as the Devil, the world and the flesh would teach you: nor how to satisfie your lusts, or to know, or do, or attain the trifles of the world: But it is how to be renewed to the Image of God, and how to do his will and please him, and how to be justified at his barr, and how to escape everlasting fire, and how to attain everlasting joys: Consider this well, and you will gladly learn of such a Teacher.

§. 4. Direct. 3. Let the Book which he himself hath indited by his Spirit, be the Rule and principal matter of your learning. The Holy Scriptures are of Divine inspiration: It is them that we must be judged by, and them that we must be ruled by, and therefore them that we must principally learn. Mens Books and Teachings are but the means for our Learning this infallible word. Dir. 3.

§. 5. Direct. 4. Remember that as it is Christs work to Teach, it is yours to hear, and read, and study, and pray, and practice what you hear. Do your part then if you expect the benefit. You come not to the School of Christ to be idle. Knowledge droppeth not into the sleepy dreamers mouth: Dig for it as for Silver, and search for it in the Scriptures as for a hidden treasure: Meditate in them day and night. Leave it to miserable fools, to contemn the wisdom of the most high. Dir. 4.

§. 6. Direct. 5. Fix your eye upon himself as your pattern and study with earnest desire to follow his holy example, and to be made conformable to him. Not to imitate him in the works which were proper to him as God, or as Mediator; but in his Holiness which he hath proposed to his disciples for their imitation. He knew how effectual a perfect example would be, where a perfect doctrine alone would be less regarded. Example bringeth doctrine nearer to our eye and heart: It maketh it more observable, and telleth us with more powerful application, [such you must be, and thus you must do.] The eye maketh an easier and deeper impression on the imagination and mind, than the ear doth: Therefore Christs example should be much preached and studied: It will be a very great help to us, to have still upon our minds the Image of the Holy Life of Christ; that we be affected as if we always saw him doing the holy actions which once he did. Paul calls the Galatians foolish and bewitched, that obeyed not the truth, when Christ had been set forth as crucified among them evidently before their eyes, Gal. 3. 1. Papists think that Images serve well for this turn: But the Records of Scripture, and the living Images of Christ whom they persecute and kill, are far more useful. How much example is more operative than doctrine alone, you may perceive by the enemies of Christ, who can bear his holy doctrine when they cannot bear his holy Servants that practise that doctrine before their eyes. And that which most stirs up their enmity hath the advantage for exciting the believers piety. Dir. 5.

Let the Image of Christ in all his holy examples, be always lively written upon your minds. 1. Let the great ones of the world remember that their Lord was not born of such as bore rule, or were in worldly pomp and dignity, but of persons that lived but meanly in the world, (however they were of the royal line): How he was not born in a palace, but a stable, and laid in a manger, without the attendance or accommodations of the rich.

2. Remember how he subjected himself unto his reputed Father and his Mother, to teach all Children subjection and obedience. Luke 2. 51

3. And how he condescended to labour at a Trade and mean imployment in the world; to teach us that our Bodies as well as our Minds must express their obedience, and have their ordinary imployment; and to teach men to labour and live in a calling; and to comfort poor labourers with assurance that God accepteth them in the meanest work, and that Christ himself lived so before them, and chose their kind of life, and not the life of Princes and Nobles that live in Pomp, and Ease, and Pleasure.

4. Remember how he refused not to submit to all the ordinances of God, and to fulfill all righteousness, and and to be initiated into the solemn administration of his office by the Baptism of John, which God approved by sending down upon him the Holy Ghost: To Teach us all to expect his Spirit in the use of his ordinances. Mat. 3. 15, 16, 17.

5. Remember how he voluntarily begun his work with an encounter with the Tempter in the Wilderness, upon his fasting: and suffered the Tempter to proceed till he moved him to the most odious sin, even to worship the Devil himself: To teach us that God loveth tryed Servants, and expecteth that we be not turned from him by temptations; especially those that enter upon a publick ministry, must be tried men that have overcome the Tempter: and to comfort tempted Christians, who may remember, that their Saviour himself was most blasphemously tempted to as odious sins as ever they were; and that to be greatly tempted without consenting or yielding to the sin, is so far from being a sin in it self, that it is the greatest honour of our obedience; and that the Devil who molesteth and haunteth us with his temptations, is a conquered enemy, whom our Lord in person hath overcome.

6. Remember how earnestly and constantly he preached, not stories, or jingles, or subtle controversies, but Repentance, and faith, and self-denial and obedience: So great was his Love to souls that when he had auditors he preached not only in the Temple and Synagogues, but on mountains, and in a ship, and any other convenient place, and no fury of the Rulers or Pharisees could silence him till his hour was come, having his Fathers Commission: And even to particular persons he vouchsafed by conference to open the mysteries of Salvation. To teach us, to love and attend to the plain and powerful preaching of the Gospel, and not to forbear any necessary means for the honour of God and the saving of souls, because of the enmity, or opposition of malicious men, but to work while it is day, seeing the night is coming when none can work. John 3. & 4. John 9. 4.

7. Remember how compassionate he was to mens bodies as well as to their souls! going up and down with unwearied diligence doing good; healing the blind, and lame, and deaf, and sick, and possessed! and how all his miracles were done in charity to do good; and none of them to do hurt: So that he was but living, walking LOVE and MERCY. To teach us to know God in his Love and Mercy, and to abound in Love and Mercy to our brethren, and to hate the spirit of hurtfulness, persecution, and uncharitableness, and to lay out our selves in doing good, and to exercise our compassion to the bodies of men as well as to their souls, according to our power.

8. Remember how his Zeal and Love endured the reproach, and resisted the opposition of his friends, who went to lay hold on him as if he had been besides himself: And how he bid Peter [Get behind me Satan; thou art an offence unto me: for thou savourest not the things of God, but those of men] when in carnal Love and wisdom he rebuked him for resolving to lay down his life, saying [Be it far from thee, this shall not be unto thee.] To teach us to expect that carnal Love, and Wisdom in our nearest friends, will rise up against us in the work of God, to discourage us both from duty and from sufferings: and that all are to be shaken off; and counted as the instruments of Satan, that would tempt us to be unfaithful to our trust and duty, and to favour our selves by a sinful avoiding of the sufferings which God doth call us to undergo. Mar. 3. 20, 21. Mat. 16. 22, 23.

9. Remember how through all his life, he despised the Riches of the world, and chose a life of poverty, and was a companion of the meanest, neither possessing nor seeking sumptuous houses, or great attendance, or spacious lands, or a large estate. He lived in a visible contempt of all the wealth and splendor, and greatness of the world: To teach us how little these little things are to be esteemed; and that they are none of the treasure and portion of a Saint; and what a folly it is to be found of such snares, and diversions, and temptations which make the way to Heaven to be to us, as a needles eye.

10. Observe how little he regardeth the honour and applause of men, how he made himself of no reputation, but took upon him the form of a Servant, refusing to be made a King, or to have a Kingdom of this world: Though he told malignant Blasphemers how greatly they sinned in dishonouring him, yet did he not seek the honour of the world: To teach us how little the Thoughts or Words of ignorant men do contribute to our happiness, or are to be accounted of: And to turn our eyes from the impertinent censures of flesh and blood, to the judgement of our Almighty Soveraign, to whom it is that we stand or fall. Phil. 2. 7, 8, 9. Joh. 5. 15.

11. Remember also how little he made provision for the flesh, and never once tasted of any immoderate sinful pleasure. How far was he from a life of voluptuousness and sensuality? Though his avoiding the formal fastings of the Pharisees, made them slander him a gluttonous person, and a wine-bibber, as the sober Christians were called Carnivori by those that thought it unlawful to eat flesh; yet so far was he from the guilt of any such sin, that never a desire of it was in his heart. You shall never find in the Gospel that Christ spent half the morning in dressing him, choosing rather to shorten his time for prayer, than not to appear sufficiently neatified, as our empty worthless painted Gallants do: Nor shall you ever read that he wasted his time in idle visitations, or Cards, or Dice, or in reading Romances, or hearing Stage-playes. It was another kind of example that our Lord did leave for his disciples. Mat. 11. 19.

12. Mark also how far Christ was from being guilty of any idle, or lascivious, or foolish kind of talk: And how holy and profitable all his speeches were: To teach us also to speak as the oracles of God, such words as tend to edification, and to administer grace unto the hearers, and to keep our tongues from all prophane, lascivious, empty, idle speeches.

13. Remember, that Pride, and Passion are condemned by your pattern: Christ bids you [Learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest unto your souls, Mat. 11. 28, 29. Therefore he resolveth that except men be converted and become as little children, they shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Mat. 18. 3. Behold therefore the Lamb of God, and be ashamed of your fierce and ravenous natures.

14. Remember that Christ your Lord and pattern did humble himself to the meanest office of love, even to wash the feet of his disciples: Not to teach you to wash a few poor mens feet as a Ceremony once a year, and persecute and murder the servants of Christ the rest of the year, as the Roman Vice-Christ doth; but to teach us, that if he their Lord and Master washed his disciples feet, we also should stoop as low in any office of love, for one another. John 13. 14.

15. Remember also that Christ your pattern spent whole nights in prayer to God; so much was he for this holy attendance upon God: To teach us to pray always and not wax faint, Luke 18.1. And not to be like the impious God-haters, that Love not any near or serious addresses unto God, nor those that use them, but make them the object of their cruelty or scorn. If προσευχὴ in Luk. 6. 12. do signifie an Oratory, it yet importeth that he continued for Prayer in it.

16. Remember also that Christ was against the Pharisees out-side hypocritical ceremonious worship, consisting in lip-labour, affected repetitions, and much babling; their Touch not, Taste not, Handle nor not, and worshipping God in vain, according to their Traditions, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men: He taught us a serious spiritual worship: not to draw nigh to God with our mouth, and honour him with our lips, while our hearts are far from him; but to worship God who is a spirit, in Spirit and Truth.

Mat. 15. 6, 7, 8, 9. Joh. 4. 23, 24. Mat. 23.

17. Christ was a sharp reprover of Hypocritical, blind, ceremonious, malitious Pharisees; and warneth his disciples to take heed of their leven. When they are offended with him, he saith, every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up: Let them alone, they be blind leaders of the blind, &c. Mat. 15. 12, 13, 14. To teach us to take heed of Autonomous, Supercilious, domineering, formal Hypocrites, and false Teachers, and to difference between the Shepherds and the wolves.

18. Though Christ seems cautelously to avoid the owning of the Romans Usurpation over the Jews, yet rather than offend them he payeth Tribute himself, Mat. 17. 25, 26, 27. and biddeth them Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsars, and to God the things that are Gods: Mat. 22. 21. The Pharisees bring their controversie to him hypocritically, Whether it be lawful to give Tribute to Cæsar, or not? (For that Cæsar was an Usurper over them, they took to be past controversie.) And Christ would give them no answer that should either ensnare himself, or encourage Usurpation, or countenance their sedition: Teaching us much more to pay Tribute chearfully to our lawful Governours, and to avoid all sedition and offence.

19. Yet is he accused, condemned, and executed among Malefactors, as aspiring to be King of the Jews, and the Judge called, None of Cæsars friend, if he let him go: Teaching us to expect that the most innocent Christians should be accused, as enemies to the Rulers of the world, and mistaken Governours be provoked and engaged against them, by the malicious calumnies of their adversaries; and that we should in this unrighteous world, be condemned of those crimes of which we are most innocent; and which we most abhor, and have born the fullest testimonies against.

20. The furious rout of the enraged people, deride him by their words and deeds, with a purple Robe, a Scepter of Reed, a Crown of Thorns, and the scornful name of King of the Jews; they spit in his face, and buffet him, and then break jests upon him: And in all this, being reviled he reviled not again, but committed all to him that judgeth righteously, 1 Pet. 2. 21, 22, 23. Teaching us to expect the rage of the ignorant Rabble, as well as of deluded Governours; and to be made the scorn of the worst of men; and all this without impatience, reviling or threatning words; but quieting our selves in the sure expectation of the righteous judgment, which we and they must shortly find.

21. When Christ is urged at Pilate's Bar to speak for himself, he holds his peace: Teaching us to expect to be questioned at the Judgment Seat of Man; and not to be over-careful for the vindicating of our Names, from their most odious calumnies, because the Judgment that will fully justifie us, is sure and near.

22. When Christ is in his Agony, his Disciples fail him: when he is judged and crucified, they forsook him and fled: To teach us not to be too confident in the best of Men, nor to expect much from them in a time of tryal, but to take up our comfort in God alone, when all our nearest friends shall fail us.

Matth. 26. 56.

23. Upon the Cross he suffereth the torments and ignominy of death for us, praying for his Murderers: Leaving us an example that we should follow his steps; 1 Pet. 2. 21. and that we think not life it self too dear, to part with, in obedience to God, and for the love of Christ and one another, and that we forgive and pray for them that persecute us.

1 John 3. 16.

24. In all this suffering from men, he feels also so much of the fruit of our sin upon his soul, that he cryeth out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? To teach us, if we fall into such calamity of soul, as to think that God himself forsaketh us, to remember for our support, that the Son of God himself before us, cryed out, My God, why hast thou forsaken me? And that in this also we may expect a tryal, to seem of our selves Forsaken of God, when our Saviour underwent the like before us.

I will instance in no more of his example, because I would not be tedious. Hither now let believers cast their eyes: If you love your Lord, you should love to imitate him, and be glad to find your selves in the way that he hath gone before you. If He lived a worldly or a sensual life, do you do so: If He was an Enemy to preaching, and praying, and holy living, be you so: But if he lived in the greatest contempt of all the wealth, and honours, and pleasures of the world, in a life of holy obedience to his Father, wholly preferring the Kingdom of Heaven, and seeking the salvation of the souls of others, and patiently bearing persecution, derision, calumnies and death, then take up your Cross, and follow him in joyfully to the expected Crown.

§. 7. Direct. 6. If you will Learn of Christ, you must learn of his Ministers, whom he hath appointed under him to be the Teachers of his Church. He purposely enableth them, encline th them, and sendeth them to instruct you: Not to have dominion over your Faith, but to be your spiritual Fathers, and the Ministers by whom you believe, as God shall give (ability and success, to every one as he pleases, to plant and water, while God giveth the increase, to open mens eyes, and turn them from darkness to light, and to be labourers together with God, whose husbandry and building you are, and to be helpers of your joy. See 2 Cor. 2. 4. Acts 26. 17, 18. 1 Cor. 3. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. & 4. 15. Seeing therefore Christ hath appointed them under him, to be the ordinary Teachers of his Church he that heareth them (speaking his message) heareth him, and he that despiseth them, despiseth him, Luke 10. 16. And he that saith, I will hear Christ, but not you, doth say in effect to Christ himself, I will not hear thee, nor learn of thee, unless thou wilt dismiss thy Ushers, and teach me immediately thy self.

Dir. 7.

§. 8. Direct. 7. Hearken also to the secret Teachings of his Spirit, and your Consciences, not as making you any new Law or Duty, or being to you instead of Scriptures or Ministers; but as bringing that truth into your Hearts and practices which Scriptures and Ministers have first brought to your eyes and ears. If you understand not this, how the office of Scripture and Ministers differ from the office of the Spirit and your Consciences, you will be confounded as the Sectaries of these times have been, that separate what God hath joyned together, and plead against Scripture or Ministers under pretence of extolling the Spirit, or the Light within them. As your meat must be taken into the Stomach, and pass the first concoction, before the second can be performed, and chilification must be before sanguification; so the Scripture and Ministers must bring truth to your eyes and ears, before the Spirit or Conscience bring them to your Hearts and Practice. But they lye dead and uneffectual in your brain or imagination, if you hearken not to the secret teachings of the Spirit and Conscience, which would bring them further. As Christ is the principal Teacher without, and Ministers are but under him; so the Spirit is the principal

Dir. 8.

Teacher

Teacher within us, and Conscience is but under the Spirit, being excited and informed by it. Those that learn only of Scriptures and Ministers, (by hearing or reading) may become men of Learning and great ability, though they hearken not to the sanctifying teachings of the Spirit, or to their Consciences: But it is only those that hearken first to the Scriptures and Ministers, and next to the Spirit of God, and to their Consciences, that have an inward, sanctifying, saving knowledge, and are they that are said to be Taught of God. Therefore hearken first with your Ears, what Christ hath to say to you from without; and then hearken daily and diligently with your hearts, what the Spirit and Conscience say within. For it is their office to preach over all that again to your Hearts, which you have received.

Dir. 8. §. 9. Direct. 8. It being the Office of the present ordinary Ministry, only to expound and apply the doctrine of Christ already recorded in the Scriptures, believe not any man, that contradicteth this recorded doctrine, what Reason, Authority or Revelation soever he pretend. Isa. 8. 20. To the Law and to the Testimony: if they speak not according to these, it is because there is no Light in them. No Reason can be Reason indeed that is pretended against the Reason of the Creator and God of Reason. Authority pretended against the Highest Authority of God, is no Authority: God never gave Authority to any against himself; nor to deceive mens souls; nor to dispense with the Law of Christ; nor to warrant men to sin against him; nor to make any supplements to his Law or Doctrine. The Apostles had their
1 Cor. 10. 8. Power only to Edification, but not to destruction.
2 Cor. 13. 10. There is no Revelation from God, that is contrary to his own Revelation already delivered as his perfect Law and Rule unto the Church; and therefore none supplemental to it. If an Apostle or an Angel from Heaven (per possibile vel impossibile) shall Evangelize to us besides what is Evangelized, and we have received, he must be held accursed. Gal. 1. 6, 7, 8.

Dir. 9. §. 10. Direct. 9. Come not to learn of Christ with self-conceitedness, pride, or confidence in your prejudice and errors: but as little Children, with humble, teachable, tractable minds. Christ is no Teacher for those that in their own eyes are wise enough already: unless it be first to teach them to become fools (in their own esteem, because they are so indeed) that they may be wise. 1 Cor. 3. 18. They that are possessed with false opinions, and resolve that they will never be perswaded of the contrary, are unmeet to be Scholars in the School of Christ. He resisteth the 1 Pet. 5. 5. proud, but giveth more grace unto the humble. Men that have a high conceit of their own understandings, and think they can easily know truth from falshood as soon as they hear it, and come not to learn, but to censure what they hear or read, as being able presently to judge of all, these are fitter for the School of the Prince of Pride, and Father of lyes and error, than for the School of Christ. Except conversion make men as little children, that come not to carp and cavil, but to learn, they are not meet for the Kingdom of Christ. Matth. 18. 3. John 3. 3, 5. Know how blind and ignorant you are, and how dull of learning, and humbly beg of the heavenly Teacher, that he will accept you, and illuminate you; and give up your understandings absolutely to be informed by him, and your Hearts to be the Tables in which his Spirit shall write his Law, Believing his doctrine upon the bare account of his infallible Veracity, and resolving to obey it; and this is to be the Disciples of Christ indeed, and such as shall be taught of God.

Dir. 10. §. 11. Direct. 10. Come to the School of Christ with honest willing hearts, that Love the truth, and fain would know it, that they may obey it; and not with false and byassed hearts, which secretly hinder the understanding from entertaining the truth, because they love it not, as being contrary to their carnal inclinations and interest. The word that was received into Honest hearts, was it that was as the seed that brought forth plentifully. Matth. 13. 23. When the Heart saith unfeignedly, Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth; Teach me to know and do thy will; God will not leave such a Learner in the dark. Most of the damnable ignorance and error of the world, is from a wicked heart, that perceiveth that the Truth of God is against their fleshly interest and lusts, and therefore is unwilling to obey it, and unwilling to believe it, lest it torment them, because they disobey it. A will that's secretly poysoned with the Love of the world, or of any sinful lusts and pleasures, is the most potent impediment to the believing of the truth.

Dir. 11. §. 12. Direct. 11. Learn with quietness and peace in the School of Christ, and make not divisions, and meddle not with others lessons and matters, but with your own. Silence, and quietness, and minding your own business, is the way to profit. The turbulent wranglers that are quarrelling with others, and are religious contentiously, in envy and strife, are liker to be corrected or ejected, than to be edified. Read James 3.

Dir. 12. §. 13. Direct. 12. Remember that the School of Christ hath a rod; and therefore learn with fear and reverence. Heb. 12. 28, 29. Phil. 2. 12. Christ will sharply rebuke his own, if they grow negligent and offend: And if he should cast thee out and forsake thee, thou art undone for ever. See therefore that ye refuse not him that speaketh: for if they scaped not, that refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we, if we refuse him that is from Heaven, Heb. 12. 25. For how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation, which at first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed to us by them that heard him: God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will. Heb. 2. 3, 4. Serve the Lord therefore with fear, and rejoyce with trembling: Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and you perish, in the kindling of his wrath. Psal. 2. 11, 12.

DIRECT. VIII.

Grand Dir. 8. To obey Christ as Physician in his healing work, and his Spirit in its cleansing mortifying work.

Remember that you are Related to Christ as the Physician of your souls, and to the Holy Ghost as your Sanctifier: Make it therefore your serious study, to be cured by Christ, and cleansed by his Spirit, of all the sinful Diseases and Defilements of your Hearts and Lives.

§. 1. THough I did before speak of our Believing in the Holy Ghost, and using his help for our access to God, and converse with him; yet I deferred to speak fully of the Cleansing and Mortifying part of his work of Sanctification till now; and shall treat of it here as it is the same with the Curing work of Christ, related to us as the Physician of our souls: it being part of our Subjection and Obedience to him, to be ruled by him in order to our cure. And what I shall here write against sin in general will be of a twofold use. The one is to help us against the inward corruptions of our hearts, and for the outward obedience of our lives, and so to further the work of Sanctification, and prevent our sinning. The other is to help us to Repentance and Humiliation habitual and actual, for the sins which are in us, and which we have already at any time committed.

§. 2. The General Directions for this curing and cleansing of the soul from sin, are contained for the most part in what is said already; and many of the particular Directions also may be fetcht from the sixth Direction before going. I shall now add but two General Directions, and many more Particular ones.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. I. The two General Directions are these: 1. Know what corruptions the soul of man is naturally defiled with: And this containeth the knowledge of those faculties that are the seat of these corruptions, and the knowledge of the corruptions that have tainted and perverted the several faculties.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. 2. Know what sin is, in its nature or intrinsick evil, as well as in the effects.

How the several faculties of the soul are corrupted and diseased.

§. 3. 1. The Parts or faculties to be cleansed and cured, are both the Superiour and Inferiour: 1. The Understanding (though not the first in the sin) must be first in the cure: For all that is done upon the Lower faculties must be by the Governing power of the will: And all that is done upon the will (according to the order of humane nature) must be done by the Understanding: But the Understanding hath its own diseases which must be known and cured. Its malady in general is Ignorance: which is not only a privation of actual knowledge, but an indispositedness also of the understanding to know the truth. A man may be deprived of some actual knowledge that hath no disease in his mind that causeth it: as in case that either the object be absent and out of reach, or that there may be no sufficient Revelation of it, or that the mind be taken up wholly upon some other thing, or in case a man shut out the thoughts of such an object, or refuse the evidence (which is the act of the will) even as a man that is not blind, may yet not see a particular object, 1. In case it be out of his natural reach: 2. Or if it be night, and he want extrinsick light; 3. Or in case he be wholly taken up with the observation of other things, 4. Or in case he wilfully either shut or turn away his eyes.

In what cases a sound understanding may be ignorant.

How the understanding can be the subject of sin?

It is a very hard question to resolve how far and wherein the diseases of the Understanding may be called sin? Because the Understanding is not a Free, but a Necessitated faculty: And there can be no sin, where there is no Liberty. But to clear this, it must be considered, 1. That it is not this or that faculty that is the full and proper subject of sin, but the Man: the fulness of sin being made up of the vice of both faculties (understanding and will) conjunct: It's properer to say, The man sinned, than, the Intellect or Will sinned, speaking exclusively as to the other. 2. Liberium arbitrium, Free choice is belonging to the Man, and not to his Will only; though principally to the Will. 3. Though the Will only be Free in it self originally; yet the Intellect is Free by participation so far as it is commanded by the Will, or dependeth on it for the Exercise of its acts. 4. Accordingly though the Understanding primitively and of it self, be not the subject of morality; of moral Virtues, or of moral Vices (which are immediately and primarily in the Will) yet participatively its Virtues and Vices are moralized, and become graces or sins, laudable and rewardable, or vituperable and punishable, as they are imperate by the will, or depend upon it.

Consider then the Acts, and Habits, and disposition of the Understanding. And you will find. 1. That some acts, and the privation of them, are Necessary, Naturally, Originally, and unalterably: and these are not virtues or sinful at all, as having no morality. As to know unwillingly as the Devils do, and to Believe, when it cannot be resisted, though they would; this is no moral Virtue at all, but a natural perfection only. So 1. To be ignorant of that which is no object of knowledge, or which is naturally beyond our knowledge (as of the Essence of God) is no sin at all: 2. Nor to be ignorant of that which was never revealed, when no fault of ours hindred the revelation, is no sin. 3. Nor to be without the present actual knowledge or consideration of one point, at that moment when our thoughts are lawfully diverted (as in greater business) or suspended (as in sleep.) 4. But to be ignorant wilfully is a sin, participatively in the intellect, and originally in the will. 5. And to be ignorant for want of Revelation, when our selves are the hinderers of that revelation, or the meritorious cause that we want it, is our sin: Because though that ignorance be immediately necessary, and hypothetically, yet originally and remotely it is Free and Voluntary.

So as to the Habits and disposition of the intellect, it is no sin to want those which mans Understanding in its entire and primitive Nature was without. (As not to be able to know without an object, or to know an unrevealed or too distant object, or actually to know all things knowable at once.) But there are defects or ill dispositions that are sinfully contracted; and though these are now immediately natural and necessary, yet being originally and remotely voluntary or free, they are participatively sinful: Such is the natural mans disability or undispositedness to know the things of the Spirit, when the Word revealeth them. This lyeth not in the want of a Natural faculty to know them, but, 1. Radically in the will. 2. And thence in contrary false apprehensions which the Intellect is prepossessed with, which resisting the truth, may be called, its blindness or impotency to know them. And 3. In a strangeness of the mind to those spiritual things which it is utterly unacquainted with.

Maxima pars hominum morbo jactatur eodem.

Note here, 1. That the will may be guilty of the understandings ignorance two ways, either by Positive averseness prohibiting or diverting it from beholding the evidence of truth: Or by a Privation and forbearance of that command, or excitation which is necessary to the exercise of the acts of the understanding. This last is the commonest way of the sin in the understanding; and that may be truly called Voluntary which is from the wills neglect of its office, or suspension of its act, though there be no actual Volition or Nolition.

2. That the will may do more in causing a disease in the understanding, than it can do in curing it. I can put out a mans eyes, but I cannot restore them.

3. That yet for all that, God hath so ordered it in his gracious dispensation of the grace of the Redeemer, that certain means are appointed by him, for man to use in order to the obtaining of his grace for his own recovery: And so though grace cure not the understanding of its primitive natural weakness, yet it cureth it of its contracted weakness, which was voluntary in its Original, but necessary being contracted. And as the will had a hand in the causing of it, so must it have (in the Voluntary use of the foresaid means) in the Cure of it. So much to shew you how the Understanding is guilty of sin.

The operations and maladies of the intellect.

§. 4. Though no actual knowledge be so immediate as to be without the Meditation of the sense and fantasie, yet supposing these, Knowledge is distinguished into Immediate and Mediate. The Immediate is when the Being, Quality, &c. of a thing, or the Truth of a proposition is known immediately in its self by its proper evidence. Mediate knowledge is when the Being of a thing, or the truth of a proposition is known by the means of some other intervenient thing or proposition, whose evidence affordeth us a light to discern it.

The understanding is much more satisfied when it can see Things and Truths immediately in their proper proper evidence. But when it cannot, it is glad of any means to help it.

The further we go in the series of Means (knowing one thing by another, and that by another, and so on the more unsatisfied the understanding is, as apprehending a possibility of mistake, and a difficulty in escaping mistake in the use of so many media's.

When the evidence of one thing in its proper nature sheweth us another, this is to know by meer discourse or argument.

When the Medium of our knowing one thing, is the Credibility of another mans report that knoweth it, this is (though a discourse or argument too, yet) in special called, Belief: which is strong or weak, certain or uncertain, as the evidence of the reporters Credibility is certain or uncertain, and our apprehension of it strong or weak.

In both cases the understandings fault is either an utter privation of the act (or disposition to it) or else a privation of the rectitude of the act. When it should know by the proper evidence of the Thing, the privation of its act is called Ignorance or Nescience, and the privation of its rectitude is called Error (which differ as not-seeing and seeing falsly): When it should know by Testimony, the privation of its act is simple unbelief, or not-believing, and the privation of its rectitude is either Disbelief, (when they think the reporter erreth) or Mis-belief, when it believeth a Testimony that is not to be believed.

So that you see by what is said, that the diseases of the Mind to be cured, are 1. Meer ignorance, 2. Error, thinking truth to be falshood, and falshood truth. 3. Unbelief. 4 Disbelief, and 5. Misbelief.

Rom. 8. 5, 6, 7. But as the Goodness is of chief regard in the object, so the discerning of the Truth about Good and Evil, is the chiefest office of the understanding. And therefore Disesteem of God, and Glory, and Grace, and its Misesteem of the fleshly pleasure, and worldly prosperity, wealth and honour, is the principal malady of the mind.

§. 5. 2. The diseases of the Will are in its Inclination and its Acts: 1. An inordinate Inclination to the pleasing of the fleshly appetite and fantasie, and to all Carnal baits and Temporal things, that tend to please it, and inordinate acts of desire accordingly. 2. An irrational backwardness to God, and grace, and spiritual good, and a Refusal or Nolition in act accordingly. These are in the will, 1. Because it is become much subject to the sensitive appetite, and hath debased it self, and contracted by its sinful acts, a sensual inclination, the flesh having the dominion in a corrupted soul. 2. Because the Intellect being also corrupted, oft times mis-leadeth it, by over-valuing transient things. 3. Because the Will is become destitute (in its corrupted state) of the power of Divine Love, or an inclination to God and holy things, which should countermand the seduction of carnal objects. 4. And the understanding is much destitute of the Light that should lead them higher. 5. Because the rage of the corrupted appetite is still seducing it. Mark therefore for the right understanding of this our greatest malady.

§. 6. 1. That the will never desireth evil, as evil, but as a carnal or a seeming good 2. Nor doth it hate good as good, but as a seeming evil, because God and grace do seem to be his enemies and to hurt him, by hindring him of the good of carnal pleasure which he now preferreth. 3. Nay, at the same time that he loveth evil as it pleaseth the flesh, he hath naturally as a man some aversness to it, so far as he apprehendeth it to be Evil: And when he hateth God and Holiness as Evil, for hindring him of his carnal pleasure, he naturally loveth them so far as he apprehendeth them to be good. So that there is some love to God and good, and some hatred to evil in the ungodly: For while Man is Man, he will have Naturally an Inclination to good as good, and against evil as evil. 4. But the apprehension of sensitive good is the strongest in him, and the apprehension of spiritual good is weakest; and therefore the will receiving a greater impress from the Carnal Appetite and Mind, than from the weak apprehensions of spiritual good, is more inclined to that which indeed is worst; and so things carnal have got the dominion or chief commanding interest in the soul. 5. Note also, that sin receiveth its formality or moral evil first in the will, and not in the Intellect or sensitive appetite: (For it is not sin, till it be positively or privately, immediately or mediately voluntary.) But the first motions to sin are not in the will, but in the sensitive appetite; Though there at first it be not formally sin. 6. Note, that neither Intellect, Object, Appetite, or Sense, necessitate naturally the will to sin, but it remaineth the first in the sin and guilt.

§. 7. It is a matter of great difficulty to understand how sin first entered into the innocent soul: And it is of great importance, because an error here is of dangerous consequence. Two sorts seem to me to make God so much the necessitating cause of Adams first sin (and so of all sin) is that it was as naturally impossible for Adam to have forborn it according to their doctrine, as to have conquered God. 1. Those that assert the Dominican immediate Physical predetermining pre-motion: (which no created power can resist.) 2. And those that say the Will acts as Necessitated by the Intellect in all its Acts (and so is necessitated in all its Omissions;) and that the Intellect is necessitated by Objects (as, no doubt it is, unless as its acts are sub imperio voluntatis;) and all those objects are caused and disposed of by God. But it is certain that God is not the cause of sin; and therefore this certainty over-ruleth the case against these Tenets.

§. 8. At present it seemeth to me, that sin entred in this method. 1. Sense perceiveth the forbidden thing. 2. The appetite desireth it. 3. The imagination thinketh on its desirableness yet further. 4. The intellect conceiveth of it (truly) as good, by a simple apprehension. 5. The Will accordingly willeth it by a simple complacency or volition. Thus far there was no sin. But 6. The Will here adhered to it too much, and took it in an excess of Complacency, when it had power to do otherwise: And here sin begun. 7. And so when the Cogitations should have been called off: 8 And the Intellect should have minded God, and his Command, and proceeded from a simple apprehension to the comparing Act, and said [The favour of God is better, and his will should rule,] it omitted all these acts, because the will omitted to command them; (yea, and hindred them.) 9. And so the intellect was next guilty of a [non renuo] [I will not forbid or hinder it] (and the will accordingly.) 10. And next of a positive deception, and the will of consent unto the sin, and so it being finished, brought forth death.

If you say, The wills first sinful adhesion in the sixth instance, could not be, unless the Intellect first directed it so to do; I deny that, because the will is the first principle in mens actions quoad exercitium, though the Intellect be the first as to specification. And therefore the will could suspend its exercise and its excitation of the mind. In all this I go upon common principles: But I leave it to further enquiry: 1. How far the sensitive appetite may move the Locomotive faculty without the Wills command while the will doth not forbid? And whether Reason be not given man, as the Rider to the Horse, not to enable him to move, but to Rule his motion: so that as the Horse can go if the Rider hinder not, so the sensitive appetite can cause the actions of eating, drinking, thinking, speaking sensually, if Reason do but drop asleep, or not hinder. 2. And so whether in the first sin (and ordinarily) the sensitive appetite, fantasie and passion be not the active mover, and the Rational powers first guilty only by omitting their restraining Government, which they were able to have exercised? 3. And so, whether sin be not (ordinarily) a brutish motion, or a voluntary unmanning of our selves, the Rational powers in the beginning being guilty only of omission or privation of restraint; but afterwards brought over to subserve the sensitive appetite actively? 4. And so whether the will which is the principium actus quoad exercitium were not the first in the omission? The intellect having before said, [This must be further considered] the will commanded not that further consideration, when it could and should?

However if it be too hard for us to trace our own souls in all their motions, it is certain that the will of Man is the first subject of Moral good and evil: And uncertainties must not make us deny that which is certain.

The Reader who understandeth the importance and consequence of these points, I am sure will pardon me for this interposition of these difficult controverted points (which I purposely avoid where I judge them not very needful in order to the defence or clearing of the plainer common truths:) And as for others I must bear their censure.

Animi labes nec diuturnitate evanescit, nec manibus ullis elui potest —— Non incestum vel asperso ne aquæ, vel dierum numero tollitur. Cicero 2. de legib.

§. 9. The Degree of sinfulness in the will lyeth in a stiffness, and obstinacy, a tenaciousness, of deceitful temporal Good, and an Eagerness after it; and stubborn aversness to spiritual good as it is against that temporal fleshly good. This is the wills disease.

§. 10. 3. The sinfulness of the memory is in its Retentiveness of Evil, or things hurtful and prohibited: and its Looseness and Neglect of better, spiritual necessary things. If this were only as things present have the natural advantage to make a deeper impress upon the fantasie, and things unseen, and absent have the disadvantage, it were then but a natural innocent infirmity: or if in sickness, age, or weakness, all kind of memory equally decay. But it is plain that if the Bible be open before our eyes, and preaching be in our ears, and things unseen have the advantage of their infinite greatness, and excellency, and concernment to us, yet our Memories are like walls of stone to any thing that is spiritual, and like walls of wax, on which you may write any thing, of that which is secular or evil. Note here also, that the faultiness of the memory is only so far sinful as it is Voluntary: It is the will where the sin is as in its Throne or chiefest subject: Because men Love carnal things, and Love not spiritual things, therefore it is that they mind, and understand, and remember the one, and not the other. So that it is but as Imperate, and Participatively that the memory is capable of sin

§. 11. 4. The sinfulness of the Imagination consisteth in its readiness to Think of Evil, and of common earthly things, and its unaptness to Think of any thing that is Holy and Good: And when we do force our selves to holy Thoughts, they are disorderly, confused, unskilfully managed, with great averseness: Here also voluntariness is the Life of the sin.

§. 12. 5. The sin of the Affections, or Passions, consisteth in this: That they are too easily, and violently moved by the sensitive interest and appetite; and are Habitually prone to such carnal inordinate motions, running before the understanding and will (some of them) and soliciting and urging them to evil; and resisting and disobeying the commands of Reason and the Will: but dull and backward to things spiritually good, and to execute the right dictates of the Mind and Will.

§. 13. 6. The sin of the sensitive appetite consisteth in the inordinate rage or immoderateness to its object, which causeth it to disobey the Commands of Reason, and to become the Great inciter of Rebellion in the soul; violently urging the Mind and Will to consent to its desires. Materially this dependeth much on the temper of the body: but formally this also is so far sinful as (positively or privatively, mediately or immediately) it is voluntary. To have an Appetite simply to the object of Appetite is no sin: But to have a diseased, inordinate, unruly appetite, is a sin, not primarily in it self considered; but as it is voluntary; as it is the Appetite of a Rational free Agent, that hath thus disordered the frame of its own Nature.

§. 14. 7. The sin of the exteriour parts, tongue, hand, eyes, feet, &c. is only in Act, and not in Habit, or at least, the Habits are weak and subject to the will. And it is in the execution of the sinful desires of the flesh, and commands of the will that the same consisteth. These parts also are not the primary subject of the guilt, but the will that either Positively puts them upon evil, or doth not restrain them when it ought: And so they are guilty but participatively and secondarily as the other imperate faculties are: It is not Good or Evil meerly as it is the act of tongue, or hand, but as it is the act of the tongue, or hand of a Rational free agent (agreeable, or disagreeable to the Law.) If a mad-man should speak blasphemy, or should kill, or steal, it were no further sin, than as he had Voluntarily contracted the ill disposition which caused it, while he had the use of Reason. If a mans hand were held and forced by another to do mischief utterly against his will, it is the sin of the chief agent, and not of the involuntary instrument. But no force totally excuseth us from Guilt, which leaveth the act to our Rational Choice. He that saith, Take this Oath, or I will kill thee, or torment thee, doth use force as a Temptation which may be resisted, but doth not constrain a man to swear: For he leaveth it to his Choice whether he will swear, or die, or be tormented: And he may and ought to choose death rather than the smallest sin. The will may be tempted but not constrained.

§. 15. Direct. 2. Labour clearly to understand the evil of sin, both intrinsecal in it self, and in its aggravations and effects. When you have found out where it is, and wherein it doth consist, find out the malignity, and odiousness of it. I have heard some Christians complain, that they read much to shew them the evil of sin in its Effects, but meet with few that shew them its evil in it self sufficiently: But if you see not the evil of sin in it self, as well as in the effects, it will but tempt you to think God unjust in over-punishing it; and it will keep you from the principal part of true Repentance and Mortification, which lyeth in hating sin, as sin. I shall therefore shew you wherein the intrinsecal malignity of sin consisteth. Dir. 2.

§. 16. 1. Sin is (formally) the violation of the perfect, holy, righteous Law of God.

2. It is a denyal or contempt of the Authority, or Governing power of God: As if we said, Thou shalt not be our Governour in this.

3. It is an usurping the Soveraign Power to our selves of governing our selves, in that act: For when we refuse Gods Government, we set up our selves in his stead; and so make Gods of our selves as to our selves; as if we were self-sufficient, independent, and had Right hereto.

4. It is a denying or contempt of the Wisdom of God, as if he had unwisely made us a Law, which is unmeet to Rule us.

5. It is a setting up of our folly in the place of Gods Wisdom, and preferring it before him; as if we we were wiser to know how to Govern our selves, and to know what is fittest and best for us now to do, than God is.

See Plutarchs Tract, entituled, That vice is sufficient to make a man wretched.

6. It is a contempt of the Goodness of God as he is the maker of the Law: As if he had not done that which is Best, but that which may be corrected or contradicted; and there were some Evil in it to be avoided.

Si non ipso honesto movemur ut viri boni simus, sed utilitate aliqua, atque fructu, callidi sumus, non boni; si emolumentis, non suapte natura, virtus expetitur, vana erit virtus, quæ malitia rectè dicitur. P. Scal. p. 744.

7. It is a preferring our Naughtiness before his Goodness, as if we would do it Better, or choose better what to do.

8. It is a contempt or denial of the Holiness and Purity of God, which sets him against sin, as Light is against Darkness.

9. It is a violation of Gods Propriety or Dominion, robbing him of the use and service of that which is absolutely and totally his Own.

10. It is a claiming of Propriety in our selves, as if we were our own, and might do with our selves as we list.

11. It is a contempt of the gracious Promises of God by which he allured and bound us to obedience.

12. It is a contempt of the dreadful Threatnings of God, by which he would have restrained us from evil.

13. It is a contempt or denial of the dreadful day of Judgment, in which an account must be given of that sin.

14. It is a denying of Gods Veracity and giving him the lye; as if he were not to be believed in all his Predictions, Promises and Threats.

15. It is a contempt of all the present Mercies, (which are innumerable and great) by which God obligeth and encourageth us to obey.

16. It is a contempt of our own afflictions, and his Chastisements of us, by which he would drive us from our sins.

17. It is a contempt of all the Examples of his Mercies on the obedient, and his terrible judgments on the disobedient (men and Devils) by which he warned us not to sin.

18. It is a contempt of the person, office, sufferings, and grace of Jesus Christ, who came to save us from our sins, and to destroy the works of the Devil, being contrary to his bloodshed, authority and healing work.

19. It is a contradicting, fighting against, and, in that act prevailing against, the sanctifying office and work of the Holy Ghost, that moveth us against sin, and to obedience.

20. It is a contempt of Holiness, and a defacing (in that measure) the Image of God upon the soul, or a rejecting it: A vilifying of all those Graces which are contrary to the sin.

21. It is a pleasing of the Devil, the enemy of God and us, and an obeying him before God.

22. It is the fault of a Rational Creature, that had Reason given him, to do better.

Voluntarium est omne peccatum.

23. It is all Willingly done and Chosen, by a free-agent that could not be constrained to it.

Tolle excusationem: Nemo peccat invitus. Martin. Dunilens. de Morib. Nihil interest quo animo facais, quod fecisse vitiosum est, quia acta cernuntur, animus non videtur. Id. ibid.

24. It is a robbing God of the Honour and Pleasure which he should have had in our Obedience; and the Glory which we should bring him before the world.

25. It is a contempt of the omnipresence and omniscience of God; when we will sin against him before his face, when he stands over us, and seeth all that we do.

26. It is a contempt of the Greatness and Almightiness of God, that we dare sin against him, who is so Great and able to be avenged on us.

27. It is a wrong to the Mercifulness of God, when we go out of the way of mercy, and put him to use the way of Justice and severity, who delighteth not in the death of sinners, but rather that they obey, repent and live.

28. It is a contempt of the attractive Love of God, who should be the End, and Felicity, and Pleasure of the soul. As if all that Love and Goodness of God, were not enough to draw or keep the heart to him, and to satisfie us and make us happy, or he were not fit to be our full delight. And it sheweth the want of Love to God: For if he Loved him rightly we should willingly obey him.

29. It is a setting up the sordid creature, before the Creator, and dung before Heaven, as if it were more worthy of our Love and Choice, and fitter to be our Delight, and the Pleasure of sin were better for us than the Glory of Heaven.

30. In all which it appeareth, that it is a practical Atheism, in its degree; a taking down God, or denying him to be God: and a practical Idolatry, setting up our selves and other creatures in his stead.

31. It is a contempt of all the means of Grace, which are all to bring us to obedience, and keep us or call us from our sins: Prayer, Sacraments, &c.

32. It is a contempt of the Love and Labours of the Ministers of Christ, a disobeying them, grieving them, and frustrating their hopes and the labours of their lives.

33. It is a debasing of Reason, the superiour faculty of the soul, and a setting up of the flesh or inferiour faculties, like setting-dogs to Govern men, or the horse to rule the rider.

34. It is a blinding of reason, and a misusing the noblest faculties of the soul, and frustrating them of the use and ends which they were made for: And so it is the disorder, monstrosity, sickness, or death of the soul.

Sick bodies only suffer ill, but sick souls both suffer ill, and do ill. Plutarchs Mor. p. 314

35. It is (in its measure) the Image of the Devil upon the soul, who is the Father of sin: and therefore the most odious deformity of the soul: And this where the Holy Ghost should dwell, and the Image and delight of God should be.

36. It is the moral destruction not only of the soul, but of the whole Creation, so far as the Creatures are appointed as the Means to bring or keep us unto God: For the Means, as a Means, is destroyed when it is not used to its End: A ship is useless if no one be carried in it: A watch as such is useless, when not used to shew the hour of the day. All the world as it is the Book that should teach us the will of God, is cast by, when that use is cast by. Nay, sin useth the Creature against God which should have been used for him.

37. It is a contradicting of our own Confessions and Professions: a wronging of our Consciences: a violation of our Covenants and self obligations to God.

38. It is a preferring of Time before Eternity, and regarding things of a transitory nature, and a moments pleasure, before that which never shall have end.

39. It is a making a breach in the harmony and order of the world: As the dislocation or deformity of a particular member, is the trouble and deformity of all the Body, because the comeliness and welfare of the whole, containeth the comeliness, proportion and welfare of all the parts: And as the dislocation or breaking of one part in a Watch or Clock, is against the use of all the engine, so every man being

The perverting and confusion of societies

a part of the kingdom of God, doth by sin make a breach in the order of the whole: and also giveth an ill example to other parts, and makes himself unserviceable to the body: and dishonoureth the whole body with the blot of Rebellion; and lets in judgment on the world; and kindleth a consuming fire in the place where he liveth; and is cruel and injurious to others.

40. Sin is not only a preferring the Body before the Soul, but it is also an unmercifulness, or cruelty against our selves, both soul and body, and so is contrary to the true use of the indelible principle of self-love: For it is a wounding and abusing the Soul, and defiling the body in this life, and casting both on the wrath of God, and into the flames of Hell hereafter, or a dangerous ventering them into the way of endless damnation and despair; and a contempt of those insufferable torments. All these parts of malignity and poyson are intrinsecal to sin and found in the very Nature of it.

§. 17. The common Aggravations of sin being written of by many, and easily gathered from what is said of the nature of it, I shall briefly name only a few.

1. The Infinite Perfection of God in all those blessed Attributes and Relations, which sin is against, is the greatest Aggravation of sin.

2. The unconceivable glory of Heaven which is despised, is a great aggravation of sin.

3. So is the greatness of the Torments of Hell, which sinners despise and venter on.

4. So is the great Opposition that God hath made against sin, having said and done so much against it, and declared himself to hate nothing else immediately in the world.

5. The clearness of evidence against it, the nothingness of all that can be said for it, is also a great aggravation of it.

6. So is the fulness, and fitness, and power of all the Means in Creatures, Providences, and Scriptures that is vouchsafed the world against it.

7. So is the experience and warning of all ages, the repentings of the converted, and the disowning it by almost all when they come to dye. Wonderful! that the experience of the world for above five thousand years, will teach them no more effectually to avoid so mortal pernicious a thing.

8. The nearness to us also is an Aggravation: It is not a distant evil, but in our bowels; in our very hearts: we are bound so strictly to love our selves, that it is a great aggravation, to do our selves so great a mischief.

9. The constant inhæsion of sin is a great aggravation: that it is ever with us, lying down and rising up, at home and abroad; we are never free from it.

10. That it should poyson all our common mercies, and corrupt all our duties, is an aggravation. But we shall take up some of these anon.

See the Assemblies larger Catechism about aggravations of sin.

§. 18. The special Aggravations of the sins of Gods own Children are these. 1. They sin against a nearer Relation than others do; even against that God that is their Father by the new birth, which is more heinous than if a stranger did it.

2. They are Christs own members: and it is most unnatural for his Members to rebel against him, or do him wrong.

3. They sin against more excellent operations of the Spirit, than others do, and against a principle of Life within them.

4. They sin against the differencing grace, which appeared in their conversion. God took them out of a world of sinners, whom he past by when he could as well have sanctified them: And should they so quickly thus requite him?

5. They sin against the Pardon and Justification which they have already received. Did God so lately forgive them all their former debts; so many so great and heinous sins, and that so freely to them, when the procurement was so dear to Christ? and should they so soon forget, or so ill requite so great a mercy?

6. They sin against a more serious Covenant which at their conversion they entred into with God, than other men do.

7. They sin against all the heart-breaking or humbling sorrows, which they have tasted of at their conversion and since. They have known more of the evil of sin than others, in their sad experience of its sting.

8. They sin against more Knowledge than other men: They have known more what sin is, and what Christ is, and what the will of God is, than others: and therefore deserve to be beaten with many stripes.

9. They have oftner confessed sin than others, and spoke odiously of it, as the vilest thing, and aggravated it to God and Man.

10. Their many Prayers against it, and all their labour in hearing, and reading, and Sacraments, and other means, do aggravate it.

11. They make a greater Profession of strict Obedience, and therefore sin against their own profession.

12. They have renewed their Promises of obedience to God, in prayer, at Sacraments, and at other times, much more than others.

13. They have had more experience than others of the goodness of obedience, and of the comforts and benefits that attend it, in the favour of God, and communion with him therein.

14. Their sins are aggravated by all the reproofs and exhortations which they have used to others, to tell them how unreasonable and bad it is to provoke the Lord.

15. They sin under greater hopes of glory, than others do: and provoke that God with whom they hope to live for ever.

16. The high Titles of Love and Praise which God doth give them in his Word, do aggravate their sin: That he should call them his treasure, his peculiar people, his jewels, and the Apple of his eye, his sons and daughters, and a holy people, and Priests to God, and boast of them as a people more excellent than their neighbours; and after this they should sin against him.

17. They have had audience with God, the answer of prayers, and many a deliverance and mercy in this life, which others have not, which aggravate their sins, as being thus contemned, and as obliging them more to God than others.

18. They dishonour God more than any others by their sins: His Honour lyeth not so much upon the actions of the ungodly, as on those that are neerest to him.

19. They harden the wicked more than such sins in other men would do: They cause them to Blaspheme, and reproach the Godly for their sakes; and say [These are your Religious men! You see now what their strictness is.] And they hinder the conversion and salvation of others: They grieve the godly, and wrong the Church and Cause of God, much more than the sins of others do.

20. Lastly, They please the Devil more than the sins of other men: How busie is he to have drawn a Job to sin? and how would he have boasted against God, and his grace, and his servants, if he had prevailed? when he boasted so much before, in the false presumption of his success? As if he could make the godly forsake God, and be as bad as others, if he have leave to tempt them.

§. 19. II. I shall next give you some particular Directions, besides those fore-going, to help you to think of sin as it is, that you may hate it: For your cleansing and cure consisteth in this: so far as you hate sin, it is mortified, and you are cured of it. And therefore as I have anatomized it, that you may see the hatefulness of it, I shall direct you to improve this for your cure.

Dir. 1. How to hate sin. §. 20. Direct. 1. Labour to know God, and to be affected with his Attributes, and always to live as in his sight. No man can know sin perfectly; because no man can know God perfectly. You can no further know what sin is, than you know what God is, whom you sin against. For the formal malignity of sin is Relative, as it is against the Will and Attributes of God. The godly have some knowledge of the malignity of sin, because they have some knowledge of God that is wronged by it. The wicked have no practical prevalent knowledge of the malignity of sin, because they have no such knowledge of God. They that fear God, will fear sinning: They that in their hearts are bold unreverently with God, will in heart and life be bold with sin: The Atheist that thinketh there is no God, thinks there is no sin against him. Nothing in the world will tell us so plainly and powerfully of the evil of sin, as the knowledge of the Greatness, Wisdom, Goodness, Holiness, Authority, Justice, Truth, &c. of God. The sense of his presence therefore, will revive our sense of sins malignity.

Dir. 2. §. 21. Direct. 2. Consider well of the office, the bloodshed and the holy life of Christ: His office is to expiate sin, and to destroy it: His blood was shed for it. His Life condemned it. Love Christ, and thou wilt hate that which caused his death. Love him, and thou wilt love to be made like him, and hate that which is so contrary to Christ. These two great Lights will shew the odiousness of darkness.

Dir. 3. §. 22. Direct. 3. Think well both how Holy the office and work of the Holy Ghost is, and how great a mercy it is to us: Shall God himself the Heavenly light come down into a sinful heart, to illuminate and purifie it? and yet shall I keep my darkness and defilement, in opposition to such wonderful mercy? Though all sin against the Holy Ghost be not the unpardonable blasphemy, yet all is aggravated hereby.

Dir. 4. §. 23. Direct. 4. Know and consider the wonderful Love and Mercy of God, and think what he hath done for you; and you will hate sin, and be ashamed of it. It is an aggravation which makes sin odious even to common reason and ingenuity; that we should offend a God of infinite Goodness; who hath filled up our lives with Mercy. It will greive you if you have wronged an extraordinary friend: His Love and kindness will come into your thoughts, and make you angry with your own unkindness. Here look over the Catalogue of Gods mercies to you, for soul and body. And here observe that Satan in hiding the Love of God from you, and tempting you under the pretence of humility, to deny his greatest special mercy, doth seek to destroy your repentance and humiliation also, by hiding the greatest aggravation of your sin.

Dir. 5. §. 24. Direct. 5. Think what the soul of man is made for, and should be used to, even to Love, obey and glorifie our Maker: and then you will see what sin is which disableth and perverteth it. How excellent, and high, and holy a work are we created for and called to? and should we defile the Temple of God? and serve the Devil in filthiness and folly, where we should entertain, and serve and magnifie our Creatour?

Dir. 6. §. 25. Direct. 6. Think well what pure and sweet delights a holy soul may enjoy from God, in his holy service: and then you will see what sin is, which robbeth him of these delights, and preferreth fleshly lusts before them. O how happily might we perform every duty? and how fruitfully might we serve our Lord? and what delight should we find in his Love and acceptation, and the foresight of everlasting blessedness, if it were not for sin? which bringeth down the soul from the doors of Heaven, to wallow with Swine, in a beloved Dunghil.

Dir. 7. §. 26. Direct. 7. Bethink you what a life it is which you must live for ever, if you live in Heaven, and what a life the Holy ones there now live: and then think whether sin, which is so contrary to it, be not a vile and hateful thing? Either you would live in Heaven, or not. If not, you are not those I speak to. If you would, you know that there's no sinning! No worldly mind; no pride, no passion, no fleshly lust or pleasures there. O did you but see and hear one hour, how those blessed Spirits are taken up in loving and magnifying the glorious God, in purity and holiness; and how far they are from sin: it would make you loath sin ever after, and look on sinners, as on men in Bedlam wallowing naked in their dung. Especially to think, that you hope your selves to live for ever like those holy Spirits, and therefore sin doth ill beseem you.

Dir. 8. §. 27. Direct. 8. Look but to the state and torment of the damned, and think well of the difference betwixt Angels and Devils, and you may know what sin is. Angels are pure; Devils are pollured: Holiness and sin do make the difference. Sin dwells in Hell, and holiness in Heaven: Remember that every temptation is from the Devil, to make you like himself; as every holy motion is from Christ to make you like himself. Remember when you sin, that you are learning and imitating of the Devil, and are so far like him. John 8. 44. And the end of all is, that you may feel his pains. If Hell fire be not good, then sin is not good.

Dir. 9. §. 28. Direct. 9. Look always on sin as one that is ready to dye, and consider how all men judge of it at the last. What do men in Heaven say of it? And what do men in Hell say of it? And what do men at death say of it? And what do converted souls, or awakened consciences say of it? Is it then followed with delight and fearlessness as it is now? Is it then applauded? Will any of them speak well of it? Nay all the world speaks evil of sin in the general now, even when they love and commit the several acts. Will you sin, when you are dying?

Dir. 10. §. 29. Direct. 10. Look always on sin and judgement together. Remember that you must answer for it before God, and Angels, and all the world; and you will the better know it.

Dir. 11. §. 30. Direct. 11. Look now but upon sickness, poverty, shame, despair, death, and rottenness in the grave, and it may a little help you to know what sin is. These are things within your sight or feeling: You need not faith to tell you of them. And by such effects you might have some little knowledge of the cause.

Dir. 12. §. 31. Direct. 12. Look but upon some eminent holy persons upon earth, and upon the mad, prophane, malignant world; and the difference may tell you in part what sin is. Is there not an aimableness in a holy blameless person, that liveth in love to God and man, and in the joyful hopes of life eternal? Is not a beastly Drunkard, or Whoremonger, and a raging Swearer, and a malicious persecutor, a very deformed loathsome creature? Is not the mad, confused, ignorant, ungodly state of the world a very pitiful sight? What then is the sin that all this doth consist in?

Though the principal part of the Cure is in turning the Will to the hatred of sin, and is done by this discovery of its malignity, yet I shall add a few more Directions for the executive part, suppossupposing that what is said already have had its effect.

Dir. 1. §. 32. Direct. 1. When you have found out your disease and danger, give up your selves to Christ as the Saviour and Physician of souls, and to the Holy Ghost as your Sanctifier, remembring that he is sufficient and willing to do the work which he hath undertaken. It is not you that are to be Saviours and Sanctifiers of your selves (unless as you work under Christ.) But he that hath undertaken it, doth take it for his glory to perform it.

Dir. 2. §. 33. Direct. 2. Yet must you be willing and obedient in applying the Remedies prescribed you by Christ, and observing his Directions in order to your Cure. And you must not be tender, and coy, and finish, and say, This is too bitter, and that is too sharp; but trust his Love, and skill and care, and take it as he prescribeth it, or giveth it you, without any more ado. Say not, It is grievous, and I cannot take it: For he commands you nothing but what is safe, and wholesome, and necessary, and if you cannot take it, you must try whether you can bear your sickness, and death, and the fire of Hell! Is humiliation, confession, restitution, mortification and holy diligence, worse than Hell?

Dir. 3. §. 34. Direct. 3. See that you take not part with sin, and wrangle not, or strive not against your Physician, or any that would do you good. Excusing sin, and pleading for it, and extenuating it, and striving against the Spirit and Conscience, and wrangling against Ministers and godly Friends, and hating reproof, are not the means to be cured and sanctified.

Dir. 4. §. 35. Direct. 4. See that malignity in every one of your particular sins, which you can see and say is in sin in general. It's a gross deceit of your selves, if you will speak a great deal of the evil of sin, and see none of this malignity, in your Pride, and your worldlinesse and your passion, and peevishnesse, and your malice, and uncharitableness, and your lying, backbiting, slandering, or sinning against conscience for worldly commodity or safety. What self-contradiction is it for a man in prayer to aggravate sin, and when he is reproved for it, to justifie or excuse it? For a Popish Priest to enter sinfully upon his place, by subscribing or swearing the Trent Confession, and then to preach zealously against sin in the general, as if he had never committed so horrid a crime? This is like him that will speak against Treason, and the Enemies of the King, but because the Traytors are his friends and kindred, will protect, or hide them, and take their parts.

Dir. 5. §. 36. Direct. 5. Keep as far as you can from those temptations which feed and strengthen the sins which you would overcome. Lay siege to your sins, and starve them out, by keeping away the food and fewel which is their maintenance and life.

Dir. 6. §. 37. Direct. 6. Live in the exercise of those graces and duties which are contrary to the sins which you are most in danger of. For grace and duty is contrary to sin, and killeth it, and cureth us of it, as the fire cureth us of cold, or health of sickness.

Dir. 7. §. 38. Direct. 7. Hearken not to weakning unbelief and distrust, and cast not away the comforts of God, which are your cordials and strength. It is not a frightful dejected despairing frame of mind, that is fittest to resist sin; but it is the encouraging sense of the love of God, and thankful sense of grace received (with a cautelous fear.)

Dir. 8. §. 39. Direct. 8. Be always suspicious of carnal self-love, and watch against it. For that is the burrow or fortress of sin; and the common Patron of it; ready to draw you to it, and ready to justifie it. We are very prone to be partial in our own cause; as the case of Judah with Thamar, and David when Nathan reproved him in a Parable, shew. Our own passions, our own pride, our own censures, or back-bitings, or injurious dealings, our own neglects of duty, seem small excusable, if not justifiable things to us: whereas we could easily see the faultiness of all these in another, especially in an enemy: when yet we should be best acquainted with our selves and we should most love our selves, and therefore hate our own sins most.

§. 40. Direct. 9. Bestow your first and chiefest labour to kill sin at the Root: To cleanse the Heart, which is the fountain: For out of the heart cometh the evils of the life. Know which are the Master-Roots; and bend your greatest care and industry to mortifie those: And that is especially these that follow; 1. Ignorance. 2. Unbelief. 3. Inconsiderateness. 4. Selfishness and Pride. 5. Fleshliness, in pleasing a bruitish appetite, lust or fantasie. 6. Senseless hard-heartedness and sleepiness, in sin. Dir. 9.

§. 41. Direct. 10. Account the world and all its pleasures, wealth and honours no better than indeed they are, and then Satan will find no bait to catch you. Esteem all as dung with Paul, Phil. 3. 8. And no man will sin, and sell his soul, for that which he accounteth but as dung. Dir. 10.

§. 42. Direct. 11. Keep up above in a Heavenly conversation, and then your souls will be alwayes in the light, and as in the sight of God, and taken up with those businesses and delights, which put them out of relish with the baits of sin. Dir. 11.

§. 43. Direct. 12. Let Christian watchfulness be your daily work; And cherish a preserving, though not a distracting and discouraging fear. Dir. 12.

§. 44. Direct. 13. Take heed of the first approaches and beginnings of sin: Oh how great a matter doth a little of this fire kindle? And if you fall, rise quickly by sound repentance, whatever it may cost you. Dir. 13.

§. 45. Direct. 14. Make Gods Word your only Rule: and labour diligently to understand it. Dir. 14.

§. 46. Direct. 15. And in doubtful Cases, do not easily depart from the unanimous judgement of the generality of the most wise and godly of all ages. Dir. 15.

§. 47. Direct. 16. In doubtful Cases be not passionate or rash, but proceed deliberately, and prove things well, before you fasten on them. Dir. 16.

§. 48. Direct. 17. Be acquainted with your bodily temperature, and what sin it most enclineth you to, and what sin also your Calling or converse doth lay you most open to, that there your watch may be the stricter: (Of all which I shall speak more fully under the next Grand Direction.) Dir. 17.

§. 49. Direct. 18. Keep in a life of holy Order, such as God hath appointed you to walk in. For there is no preservation for straglers that keep not Rank and File, but forsake the order which God commandeth them. And this order lyeth principally in these points: 1. That you keep in Union with the Universal Church. Separate not from Christs body upon any pretence whatever. With the Church as Regenerate, hold spiritual communion, in faith, love and holiness: with the Church as Congregate and Visible, hold outward Communion in Profession, and Worship. 2. If you are not Teachers, live under your particular faithful pastors, as obedient Disciples of Christ. 3. Let the most godly, if possible, be your familiars. 4. Be laborious in an outward Calling. Dir. 18.

§. 50. Direct. 19. Turn all Gods Providences whether of prosperity or adversity against your sins. If he give you health and wealth, remember he thereby obligeth you to obedience, and calls for special service from you. If he afflict you, remember that it is sin that he is offended at, and searcheth after; and therefore take it as his Physick, and see that you Dir. 19.

you hinder not, but help on its work, that it may purge away your sin.

Dir. 20. §. 51. Direct. 20 Wait patiently on Christ till he have finished the cure, which will not be till this trying life be finished: Persevere in attendance on his Spirit and Means; for he will come in season, and will not tarry: Hos. 6. 3. Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord: His going forth is prepared as the morning, and he shall come unto us as the rain: as the later and former rain upon the Earth. Though you have oft said, There is no healing, Jer. 14. 19. He will heal your back-slidings, and love you freely, Hos. 14. 4. Unto you that fear his name, shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings. Mal. 4. 2. And blessed are all they that wait for him. Isa. 30 18.

Thus I have given such Directions as may help for Humiliation under sin, or hatred of it, and deliverance from it.

Grand Dir. 9. Our Warfare under Christ against the Tempter.

DIRECT. IX.

Spend all your days in a skilful, vigilant, resolute and valiant War against the Flesh, the World and the Devil, as those that have covenanted to follow Christ the Captain of your Salvation.

See my Treatise of Crucifying the world, and of Self-denyal.

§. 1. THe Flesh is the End of Temptation, for all is to please it, Rom. 13. 14. and therefore is the greatest enemy: The world is the Matter of Temptation: And the Devil is the first mover, or efficient of it; and this is the Trinity of enemies to Christ and us, which we renounce in Baptisin, and must constantly resist. Of the world and flesh I shall speak Chap. 4. Here I shall open the Methods of the Devil. And first I shall prepare your understanding, by opening some presupposed truths.

§. 2. 1. It is presupposed, that there is a Devil. He that believeth not this, doth prove it to others, by shewing how grosly the Devil can befool him: Apparitions, Witchcrafts and Temptations are full proofs of it to sense; besides what Scripture saith.

Of the Temptations to hinder Conversion, see before Chap. 1.

§. 3. 2. It is supposed that he is the deadly enemy of Christ and us: He was once an Angel, and fell from his first estate by sin, and a world of evil Spirits with him; and it is probable his envy against mankind might be the greater, as knowing that we were made to succeed him and his followers, in their state of glory: For Christ saith, that we shall be equal with the Angels, Luke 20. 36. He shewed his enmity to man in our innocency, and by his temptation caused our fall and misery. But after the Fall, God put an enmity into the nature of man against Devils, as a merciful preservative against temptation: so that as the whole nature of man abhorreth the nature of Serpents, so doth the soul abhor and dread the diabolical nature. And therefore so far as the Devil is seen in a temptation now, so far it is frustrated; till the enmity in nature be overcome by his deceits: And this help nature hath against temptation, which it seems our nature had not before the fall, as not knowing the malice of the Devil against us.

§. 3. There is a natural enmity to the Devil himself put into all the womans natural seed: But the moral enmity against his sinful temptations and works, is put only into the spiritual seed by the Holy Ghost (except what Remnants are in the light of Nature.) I will be brief of all this and the next, having spoken of them more largely in my Treatise against Infidelity, Part 3. page 190. § 13, &c.

§. 4. The Devils names do tell us what he is. In the Old Testament he is called, 1. The Serpent, Gen. 3. 2. The Hebrew word translated [Devils] in Levit. 17. 7. and Isa. 13. 21. signifieth [hairy] as Satyrs are described, and sometime [Hee-goats:] Because in such shapes he oft appeareth. 3. He is called [Satan,] Zech. 3. 1. 4. [An evil Spirit] 1 Sam. 18. 10. 5. [A lying Spirit] 1 Kings 22. 22. For he is a lyar, and the Father of it, John 8. 44. 6. His Off-spring is called [A Spirit of Uncleanness] Zach. 13. 2. 7. And he (or his Spawn) is called [A Spirit of Fornication] Hos. 4. 12. that is, Idolatry. 8. [A perverse Spirit causing staggering and giddiness as a drunken man] Isa. 19. 14.

Vid. Pools Synopsis Critic. in Levit. 1. 77. In these later the Word [Spirit] signifieth the ill disposition, which Satan as a Tempter causeth, and so he is known by it as his Off-spring

§. 5. In the New Testament, 1. He is sometimes called simply [a Spirit] Mar. 9. 20, 26. Luke 9. 39. & 10. 20. 2. Sometimes [πνεύματα ἀκάθαρτα, unclean Spirits] Luke 6. 18. as contrary to the Holy Spirit: and that from their Nature and Effects: 3. And after [δαιμόνιον, Dæmons] a word taken in a good sense in Heathen Writers, but not in Scripture, because they worshipped Devils under that name, (unless perhaps Acts 17. 18. 1 Tim. 4. 1.) And [δαίμων] with respect to their Knowledge, and as some think to the knowledge promised to Adam in the Temptation. 4. [πειράζων: the Tempter] Mat. 4. 5. [Satan] Mat. 4. 1 Pet. 5. 8. 6. [ἐχθρός: an enemy] Mat. 13. 28. 39. 7. The strong man armed, Mat. 12. 8. [Angels] 1 Cor. 6. 3. 2 Pet. 2. 4. Angels which kept not their first state, Jude 6. 9. A Spirit of Divination Acts 16. 16. 10. A roaring Lyon, 1 Pet. 5. 8. 11. A Murderer, John 8. 44. 12. Belial, 2 Cor. 6. 15. 13. Beelzebub, Mat. 12. the God of flies. 14. The Prince of this World, John 12. 21. from his power over wicked men. 15. The God of this world, 2 Cor. 4. 5. because the world obey him. 16. The Prince of the power of the Air, Eph. 2. 2. 17. The Ruler of the darkness of this world, Eph. 6. 12. Principalities and Powers. 18. The Father of the wicked, John 8. 44. 19. The Dragon and the old Serpent, Rev. 12. 20. [διάβολος] the Calumniator or false accuser, often 21. [ὁ πονηρός] The evil one, Mat. 23. 19. 22. An Evil Spirit, Acts 19. 15. 23. [Ἀπολλύων] the destroyer, and Abaddon, the King of the Locusts, and Angel of the bottomless pit, Rev. 9. 11. (unless that speak of Antichrist.)

§. 6. 3. He is too strong an enemy for lapsed sinful man to deal with of himself. If he conquered us in innocency, what may he do now? He is dangerous, 1. By the greatness of his subtilty. 2. By the greatness of his Power. 3. By the greatness of his Malice. And hence 4. By his constant diligence, watching when we sleep, Mat. 13. 25. and seeking night and day to devour, 1 Pet. 5. 8. Rev. 12. 4.

§. 7. 4. Therefore Christ hath engaged himself in our Cause, and is become the Captain of our Salvation, Heb. 2. 10. And the world is formed into two Armies, that live in continual War: The Devil is the Prince and General of one, and his Angels and wicked men are his Armies: Christ is the King and General of the other, and his Angels, (Heb. 2. 14.) and Saints are his Army. Between these two Armies are the greatest conflict in the world.

See my Treatise against Infidelity as before cited.

§. 7. 5. It is supposed also that this War is carried on on both sides within us, and without us; by inward solicitations and outward means, which are fitted thereunto.

§. 8. 6. Both Christ and Satan work by Officers, instruments and means. Christ hath his Ministers to preach his Gospel, and pull down the Kingdom of Satan: And Satan hath his Ministers to preach licentiousness and lies, and to resist the Gospel and Kingdom of Christ. Christ hath his Church, and the Devil hath his Synagogue. Chriſts Souldiers do every one in their places fight for him againſt the Devil: And the Devils Souldiers do every one in their places fight againſt Chriſt. The Generals are both unſeen to mortals, and the unſeen Power is theirs, but their Agents are viſible: The Souldiers fight not only againſt the Generals, but againſt one another; but it is all or chiefly for the Generals ſakes: It is Chriſt that the wicked perſecute in his Servants, Acts 9. 4. And it is the Devil whom the godly hate and reſiſt in the wicked.

1 Cor. 3. 5. & 4. 1. 2 Cor. 11. 15. Acts 13. 8, 9, 10.

But yet here are divers notable differences. 1. The Devils Servants do not what they do in love to him, but to their own fleſh, but Chriſts Servants do what they do in Love to him, as well as to themſelves. 2. The Devils Army are cheated into Arms and War; not knowing what they do: But Chriſt doth all in the open light, and will have no ſervants, but thoſe that deliberately adhere to him, when they know the worſt. 3. The Devils ſervants do not know that he is their General, but Chriſts followers do all know their Lord. 4. The Devils followers diſown their Maſter and their work; they will not own that they fight againſt Chriſt and his Kingdom while they do it: But Chriſts followers own their Captain, and his cauſe, and work: for he is not a maſter to be aſhamed of.

§. 9. 7. Both Chriſt and Satan work perſwaſively, by moral means, and neither of them by conſtraint and force. Chriſt forceth not men againſt their wills to good, and Satan cannot force them to be bad, but all the endeavour is to make men willing; and he is the Conqueror that getteth and keepeth our own conſent.

§. 10. 8. Their Ends are contrary, and therefore their ways are alſo contrary. The Devils end is to draw man to ſin and damnation, and to diſhonour God: And Chriſts end is to draw men from ſin to Holineſs and ſalvation, and to honour God. But Chriſt maketh known his end, and Satan concealeth his End from his followers.

§. 11. 9. There is ſomewhat within the good and bad for the contrary part to work upon, and we are, as it were divided in our ſelves, and have ſomewhat in us that is on both ſides. The wicked have an honourable acknowledgment of God, and of their greateſt obligation to him; a hatred to the Devil; a love of themſelves; a willingneſs to be happy, and an unwillingneſs to be miſerable; and a conſcience which approveth of more good than they do, and condemneth much of their tranſgreſſion. This is ſome advantage to the perſwaſions of the Miniſters of Chriſt to work upon: And they have Reaſon capable of knowing more.

The Souldiers of Chriſt have a fleſhly appetite, and the remnants of ignorance and error in their minds, and of earthlineſs, and carnality, and averſneſs to God in their wills, with a nearneſs to this world, and much ſtrangeneſs to the world to come. And here is too much advantage for Satan to work on by his temptations.

§. 12. 10. But it is the predominant part within us, and the ſcope of our lives which ſheweth which of the Armies we belong to. And thus we muſt give up our names and hearts to Chriſt, and engage under his Conduct againſt the Devil, and conquer to the death, if we will be ſaved. Not to fight againſt the bare Name of the Devil; for ſo will his own Souldiers, and ſpit at his name, and hang a Witch that makes a contract with him: But it is to fight againſt his cauſe and work which is by fighting againſt the World and the Fleſh, and for the glory of God.

§. 13. In opening to you this holy War, I ſhall ſhew you, I. What it is that the Tempter aimeth at as his End. II. What matter or ground he worketh upon. III. What are his Succours and Aſſiſtance. IV. What kind of Officers and Inſtruments he uſeth. V. What are his Methods and actual Temptations, 1. To actual ſin, 2. Againſt our duty to God.

The Method.

§. 14. 1. Our offenſive arms are to be uſed, 1. Againſt the power of ſin within us: and all its advantages and helps: For while Satan ruleth and poſſeſſeth us within, we ſhall never well oppoſe him without. 2. Againſt ſin in others as far as we have opportunity. 3. Againſt the credit and honour of ſin in the world: As the Devils Servants would bring Light and Holineſs into diſgrace, ſo Chriſts Servants muſt caſt diſgrace and ſhame upon ſin and darkneſs. 4. Againſt all the Reaſonings of ſinners, and their ſubtile fallacies whereby they would deceive. 5. Againſt the paſſions and violent luſts which are the cauſes of mens other ſins. 6. Againſt the holds and helps of ſin, as falſe Teachers, prophane Revilers, ignorance and deceit. Only take heed that on this pretence we ſtep not out of our ranks and places, to pull down the powers of the world by rebellions: For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, 2 Cor. 10. 4.

§. 15. 2. As to our Defence, I. The ends of the Tempter which muſt be perceived, are theſe. 1. In general, his aim is at our utter ruine and damnation, and to draw us here to diſhonour God as much as he can. But eſpecially his aim is to ſtrengthen the great heart-ſins, which are moſt mortal, and are the root and life, and ſpawners of the reſt: Eſpecially theſe: 1. Ignorance, which is the friend and cloke to all the reſt. 2. Error, which will juſtifie them. 3. Unbelief, which keeps off all that ſhould oppoſe them. 4. Atheiſm, prophaneneſs, unholineſs, which are the defiance of God and all his Armies. 5. Preſumption, which emboldneth them, and hides the danger. 6. Hardneſs of heart, which fortifieth them againſt all the batteries of Grace. 7. Hypocriſie, which maketh them ſerve him as Spies and Intelligencers in the Army of Chriſt. 8. Diſaffection to God and his ways and ſervants, which is the Devils colours. 9. Unthankfulneſs, which tends to make them unreconcileable and unrecoverable. 10. Pride which commandeth many Regiments of leſſer ſins. 11. Worldlineſs, or love of mony and wealth, which keepeth his Armies in pay. 12. Senſuality, Voluptuouſneſs, or fleſh-pleaſing, which is the great Commander of all the reſt. For ſelfiſhneſs is the Devils Lieutenant General, which conſiſteth chiefly in the three laſt named; but eſpecially in Pride and Senſuality. Some think that it is outward ſins that bring all the danger; but theſe twelve heart ſins, which I have named to you, are the twelve Gates of the infernal City, which Satan loveth above all the reſt.

Animi molles & a te fluxi dolis haud difficulter capiuntur.

§. 16. II. The Matter and Grounds of his Temptations are theſe. 1. The Devil firſt worketh upon the outward ſenſe, and ſo upon the ſenſitive appetite: He ſheweth the Cup to the Drunkards eye, and the bait of filthy luſt to the fornicator, and the riches and pomp of the world to the covetous and proud. The Glutton taſteth the ſweetneſs of the diſh which he loveth: Stage-plays, and tempting ſports, and proud attire, and ſumptuous buildings, and all ſuch ſenſual things are the baits by which the Devil angleth for ſouls. Thus Eve firſt ſaw the fruit, and then taſted, and then did eat: Thus Noah, and Lot, and David ſinned. Thus Achan ſaith, Joſh. 7. 21. I ſaw (the Garments, Silver and Gold) I coveted them, and I took them. The ſenſe is the door of ſin.

§. 17.

§. 17. 2. The Tempter next worketh on the Fantasie or Imagination; and prints upon the loveliest image of his bait that possibly he can, and engageth the sinner to Think on it, and to rowl it over and over in his mind, even as God commandeth us to Meditate on his Precepts.

§. 18. 3. Next he worketh by these upon the Passions or affections, which fantasie having enflamed they violently urge the Will and Reason; and this according to the nature of the passion, whether fear or hope, sorrow or joy, love or hatred, desire, or aversation, but by none doth he work so dangerously as by Delight, and Love, and Desire of things sensual.

§. 19. 4. Hence he proceedeth to infect the Will (upon the simple apprehension of the understanding) to make it inordinately cleave to the temporal good, and to neglect its duty in commanding the understanding to meditate on preserving objects, and to call off the Thoughts from the forbidden thing: It neglecteth to rule the Thoughts and Passions according to its office and natural power.

§. 20. 5. And so he corrupteth the understanding it self first to omit its duty, and then to entertain deceit, and to approve of evil: And so the servant is put into the Government, and the commanding powers do but serve it. Reason is blinded by sensuality and passion, and becomes their servant, and pleads their cause.

§. 21. By all this it appeareth, 1. That Satans first bait is ordinarily some sensible or imaginary good, set up against true spiritual good. 2. That his first assault of the Reason and Will, is to tempt them into a sluggish neglect and neutrality, to omit that restraint of Sense, Thought and Passion, which was their duty. 3. And that lastly, he tempteth them into actual complyance and committing of the sin: And herein 1. The bait which he useth with the understanding is still [some seeming Truth] And therefore his art and work is to colour falshood, and make it seem Truth: For this is the deceiving of the mind: And therefore for a sinner to plead his mistake for his excuse, and say, I thought it had been so or so; I thought it had been no sin, or no duty, this is but to confess, and not to excuse: It is but as much as to say, my Understanding sinned with my Will, and was deceived by the Tempter, and overcome. 2. And the bait which he useth with the Will, is always some appearing good: And self-love and love of good is the principle which he abuseth, and maketh his ground to work upon; as God also useth it in drawing us to good.

§. 22. III. The Succours and Auxiliaries of the Devil, and his principal means are these: 1. He doth what he can to get an ill tempered Body on his side: For as sin did let in bodily distempers, so do they much befriend the sin that caused them. A cholerick temper will much help him to draw men to passion, malice, murder, cruelty and revenge. A sanguine and bilious temper mixt, will help him to draw men to lust and filthiness, and levity, and wantonness, and time-wasting pleasures: A sanguine temper mixt with a pituitous, much helpeth him to make men blockish, and regardless, and insensible of the great concernments of the soul: A flegmatick temper helpeth him to draw people to drowzy sluggishness, and to an idle slothful life, and so to ill means to maintain it, and to a backwardness to every work that is good. A healthful temper much helpeth him to draw people to gluttony, drunkenness, lust, ambition, covetousness, and neglect of life eternal: A sickly temper helpeth him to tempt us to peevishness and impatience: And a Melancholy temper helpeth him in all the temptations mentioned but even now:

§. 23. 2. He useth his greatest Skill to get the greatest fleshly interest on his side: So that it may be a matter of Great pleasure, Great advancement, and honour and applause, or Great commodity to a man, if he will sin: Or a matter of Great suffering, and Great disgrace, and Great loss to him that will not sin, or that will be holy and obedient to God For Fleshly Interest being the common matter of all his Temptations, his main business is to greaten this as much as may be.

§. 24. 3. He maketh very great advantage of the Common Customs of the Country that men live in: This carrieth away thousands and millions at once. When the common vote and custom is for sin, and against Christ and holiness, particular persons think themselves excused, that they are no wiser, or better than all the Country about them. And they think they are much the safer for sinning in so great a crowd, and doing but as most men do, and he that contradicteth them, cometh on great disadvantage in their eye, when he is to oppose an Army of adversaries, and seemeth to think himself wiser than so many.

§. 25. 4. Also he is exceeding industrious to get Education on his side: He knoweth how apt men are to retain the form which they were molded or cast into at first: If he get the first possession, by actual as well as Original sin, he is not easily cast out. Especially when Education doth conspire with Common Custom, it delivereth most of the people and Kingdoms of the Earth into his hands.

§. 26. 5. Also he is industrious to get the approved Doctrine of the Teachers of the people on his side. If he can get it to pass once for a Revelation or Command of God, he will quickly conquer Conscience by it, and take down all resistance: He never doth war more successfully against God, than when he beareth the name of God in his colours, and fighteth against him in his own name. Mahometans, Jews, Papists, and all Hereticks are the Trophies and Monuments of his victories by this way. Mischief is never so much reverenced, nor proceedeth so successfully, as when it is made a Religion! When the Devil can charge men to do his business in the Name of God, and upon pain of damnation, he hath got the strongest weapons that ever he can make use of. His ordinary bait is some fleshly pleasure, but he goeth high indeed when he presumeth to offer the everlasting pleasures: He tempted Christ with all the Kingdoms and glory of the world: But he tempteth many millions of souls, with the offers of the Kingdom of Heaven it self. For he will offer it to them that he is endeavouring to keep from it; and make it the bait to draw men from it into the way to Hell.

§. 27. 6. He is exceeding diligent to get the wealth and prosperity of the world on his side: That he may not seem to flatter his servants with empty promises, but to reward them with real felicity and wealth. And then he would make the sinner believe, that Christ is the deceiver, and promiseth a Kingdom which none of them ever saw, and which he will not give them, but that he himself will not deceive them, but make good his promises even in this life without delay: For they see with their eyes the things which he promiseth, and they shall have them presently in possession, to secure them from deceit.

§ 28. 7. He is exceeding industrious to get common fame and reputation on his side: That he may be able to keep his cause in credit; and to keep the cause of Christ, and holiness in disgrace: For he knoweth how exceeding prone men are, to fall into the way of honour and esteem, and which most men praise, and how loth they are to go in the way which is hated and evil spoken of by the most of men.

8. He is very diligent to get the Sword and Government of Kingdoms, and States, and Countreys, and Cities, and Corporations into his hands, or on his side: For he knoweth the multitude of the ignorant and vulgar people, are exceeding prone to be of the Religion of those that are able to help or hurt them; and to follow the stronger side: And that the Will and Example of the Ruler is as the first sheet or stamp, which all the rest are printed after. Therefore he will do his worst, to give the greatest power to the most ungodly: If the Turk be the Emperour, the most of the vulgar are like quickly to be Turks: If a Papist be their King, the most of them are likely to be Papists. Look into the present state of the Heathen, Infidel, Mahometan, Papal, and prophane parts of the world, and into the History of all ages past, and you will see with grief and admiration, how much the Devil hath got by this.

§. 29. 9. Also he is very desirous to get our Society and Companions on his side: who are near us, and have frequent Opportunities to do us good or hurt. For he knoweth by long and great experience how powerfully they draw, and how frequently they speed.

§. 30. 10. And he is very industrious to get our friends that have power over us, and greatest interest in us on his side. For then he hath won our outworks already.

§. 31. 11. Lastly, he is desirous sometimes to get the name, and appearance of vertue, and piety on his side: That those that are to do his work, may have a winning carriage, and so a venerable name, and the cloak of Vertue may serve his turn for the promoting of the Destruction of Piety it self.

§. 32. IV. By what hath been said, you may understand what kind of Officers and Instruments the Tempter useth. 1. He commonly useth men that are themselves first deceived and corrupted, as fit instruments to deceive and corrupt others: These will carry it on with confidence and violence: The employment seemeth Natural to them, they are so fit for it: They will be willing to make other men of their mind, and to have the Company of others in their way. A drunkard is fit to make a drunkard: and a filthy Fornicator to entice another into the sin: and a gamester to make a gamester: and a wanton time waster to draw another to waste his time in wantonness and foolish sports: An ambitious or proud person is fit to kindle that fire in others: A swearer is fittest to make a swearer; and so of many other sins.

§. 33. 2. The Devil usually chooseth for his Instruments, men that have no great tenderness of conscience, or fear of sinning or of hurting souls. He would have no such Cowards in his Army, as men fearing God are as to his Ends: It must be men that will venter upon hell themselves, and fear not much the loss of their own souls; and therefore must not be too tender or fearful of destroying others. Butchers and Souldiers must not be chosen out of too tender or loving a sort of people: such are not fit to go thro' his work.

§. 34. 3. He usually chooseth Instruments that are most deeply engaged in his cause: whose preferment, and honour, and gain, and carnal interest shall be to them, as Nature is to a dog, or wolf, or fox, or other ravenous creature: who think it a loss, or danger, or suffering to them, if others be not hindered in good, or made as bad as they. Thus Demetrius and the other crafts-men that lived upon the trade, are the fittest to plead Diana's cause, and stir up the people against the Apostles. And the Jews were the fittest Instruments to persecute Christ, who thought that if they let him alone, all men would believe on him, and the Romans would come and take away both their place and Nation: and that it was expedient for them that one man die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not. John 11. 48, 49. And Pilate was the fittest Instrument to condemn him, who feared that he should else be taken to be none of Cæsars friend. And Pharoah was the fittest Instrument to persecute the Israelites, who was like to lose by their departure.

Act. 19. 24, 38, 39.

§. 35. 4. When he can he chooseth such Instruments as are much about us and neerest to us, who have opportunity to be oft speaking to us, when others have no opportunity to help us: The fire that is nearest to the wood or thatch is liker to burn it than that which is far off: Nearness and Opportunity are very great advantages.

§. 36. 5. If it be possible he will choose such Instruments as have the greatest abilities to do him service: One man of great wit, and learning, and elocution that is nimble in disputing, and can make almost any cause seem good which he defendeth, or bad which he opposeth, is able to do more service for the Devil, than an hundred Ideots.

§. 37. 6. If possible he will choose the Rulers of the world to be his Instruments; that shall command men, and threaten them with imprisonment, banishment, confiscation, or death, if they will not sin: as the King of Babylon did by the three witnesses and Daniel; Dan. 3. & 6. and all Persecutors have done in all Ages against the Holy Seed. For he knoweth that (though not with a Job, yet with a carnal person) skin for skin, and all that a man hath will he give for his life: And therefore they that have the power of Life, and Liberty, and estate, have carnal men by the handle that will rule them.

§. 38. 7. He maketh the rich his Instruments that having the wealth of the world, are able to reward and hire evil doers: and are able to oppress those that will not please them. Landlords and Rich men can do the Devil more service than many of the poor: They are the Judas's that bear the Bag. As the Ox will follow him that carrieth the hay, and the Horse will follow him that carrieth the provender, and the Dog will follow him that feedeth him, and the Crow will be where the carrion is; so carnal persons will follow and obey him that bears the purse.

§. 39. 8. The Devil if he can will make those his Instruments whom he seeth we most Esteem and Reverence: Persons whom we think most wise and fit to be our Counsellors: we will take that from these, which we would suspect from others.

§. 40. 9. He will get our Relations and those that have our Hearts most to be his Instruments: A Husband, or a Wife, or a Dalilah, can do more than any others: and so can a bosom friend, whom we dearly love: when all their Interest in our Affections is made over for the Devils Service, it may do much. Therefore we see that Husbands, and Wives if they love entirely, do usually close in the same Religion, opinion or way, though when they were first married they differed from each other.

§. 41. 10. As oft as he can the Devil maketh the Multitude his Instrument: that the crowd and noise may carry us on and make men valiant, and put away their fear of Punishment.

§. 42. 11. He is very desirous to make the Embassadours of Christ his Prisoners, and to hire them to speak against their matters cause: that in Christs name they may deceive the silly flock, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them, Acts 20. 30. Sometimes by pretence of his Authority and Commission; making poor people believe that that not to hear them, and obey them in their Errours is to be disobedient rejecters of Christ: (and thus the Romish party carry it.) Sometime by their parts and plausible perswasive speeches: And sometime by their fervency, frightning people into errour: And by these two ways most Hereticks prevail. None so successfully serveth Satan, as a false or bribed Minister of Christ.

§. 43. 12. He is exceeding desirous to make Parents themselves his Instruments for their childrens sin and ruin: And alas how commonly doth he succeed! He knoweth that Parents have them under their hands, in the most ductile malleable age: and that they have a concurrence of almost all advantages: They have the Purse, and the Portion of their children in their Power: They have the Interest of Love, and Reverence, and Estimation: They are still with them, and can be often in their Sollicitings: They have the rod, and can compel them: Many thousands are in Hell, through the means of their own Parents; such cruel Monsters will they be to the Souls of any others, that are first so to their own. If the Devil can get the Parents to be Cursers, Swearers, Gamesters, Drunkards, Worldlings, Proud, Deriders or Railers at a Holy Life, what a Snare is here for the poor Children!

§. 44. V. In the Method of Satan, the next thing is to shew you how he labours to keep off all the Forces of Christ which should resist him and destroy his work, and to frustrate their Endeavours, and fortifie himself: And among many others, these means are notable.

§. 45. 1. He would do what he can to weaken even natural Reason, that men may be blockish and uncapable of good! And it is lamentable to observe how hard it is to make some people either understand or regard! And a beastly kind of Education doth much to this: and so doth custom in sensual Courses; even turn men into Bruits.

§. 46. 2. He doth what he can to hinder Parents and Masters from doing their part, in the instructing and admonishing of Children and Servants, and dealing wisely and zealously with them for their salvation: Either he will keep Parents and Masters ignorant and unable; or he will make them wicked and unwilling; and perhaps engage them to oppose their children in all that's good: or he will make them like Eli, remiss and negligent, indifferent, formal, cold and dull; and so keep them from saving their Childrens or Servants souls.

§. 47. 3. He doth all that possibly he can to keep the sinner in security, presumption and senselesness, even asleep in sin; and to that end to keep him quiet and in the dark, without any light or noise which may awake him; that he may live asleep as without a God, a Christ, a Heaven, a Soul, or any such thing to mind. His great care is to keep him from Considering: and therefore he keeps him still in company, or sport, or business, and will not let him be oft alone, nor retire into a sober conference with his conscience; or serious Thoughts of the Life to come.

§. 48. 4. He doth his best to keep soul-searching lively Ministers out of the Country, or out of that Place; and to silence them, if there be any such: and to keep the sinner under some ignorant or dead-hearted Minister, that hath not himself that faith or repentance, or life, or love, or holiness, or zeal, which he should be a means to work in others: and he will do his utmost to draw him to be a leader of men to sin.

§. 49. 5. He doth his worst, to make Ministers [illegible], to disgrace the cause of Christ, and hinder his work by their bungling, and unskilful management, that there may be none to stand up against him, but some unlearned or half-witted men, that can scarce speak sense, or will provoke contempt or laughter in the hearers.

§. 50. 6. He doth his worst to make Ministers scandalous, that when they tell men of their sin and duty, they may think such mean not as they speak, and believe not themselves, or make no great matter of it; but speak for custom, credit, or for their hire: And that the people by the wicked lives of the Preachers, may be emboldned to disobey their Doctrine, and to imitate them, and live without Repentance.

§. 51. 7. He will labour to load the ablest Ministers with Reproaches and Slanders; which thousands shall hear, who never hear the truth in their Defence: And so making them odious, the people will receive no more good by their preaching, than from a Turk, or Jew, till the very Truth it self, for it self prevail. And to this end especially he doth all that he can to foment continual Divisions in the Church; that while every party is engaged against the other, the interest of their several Causes may make them think it necessary to make the chief that are against them seem odious or contemptible to the people, that so they may be able to do their cause, and them no harm: And so they disable them from serving Christ and saving Souls, that they may disable them to hurt themselves, or their faction, or their impotent cause.

§. 52. 8. He doth what he can to keep the most Holy Ministers under Persecution; that they may be as the wounded Deer whom all the rest of the herd will shun; or like a worried Dog whom the rest will fall upon; or that the people may be afraid to hear them lest they suffer with them; or may come to them only as Nicodemus did to Christ, by night.

§. 53. 9. Or if any Ministers, or Godly persons warn the sinner, the Devil will do what he can that they may be so small a number in comparison of those of the contrary mind; that he may tell the sinner, Dost thou think these few self-conceited fellows are wiser than such, and such, and all the Country? Shall none be saved but such a few precise ones? Do any of the Rulers or of the Pharisees believe in him? But this People that knoweth not the Law are cursed, John 7. 48, 49. That is (as Dr. Hammond noteth) This illiterate multitude are apt to be seduced, but the Teachers are wiser.

§. 54. 10. The Devil doth his worst to cause some falling out, or difference of interest or opinion, between the Preacher or Monitor, and the sinner; that so he may take him for his Enemy: And how unapt men are to receive any advice from an Enemy or Adversary, experience will easily convince you.

§. 55. 11. He endeavoureth that powerful preaching may be so rare, and the contradiction of wicked cavillers so frequent, that the Sermon may be forgotten or the impressions of it blotted out, before they can hear another to confirm them, and strike the nail home to the head: and that the fire may go out before the next opportunity come.

§. 56. 12. He laboureth to keep good Books out of the sinners hands, or keep him from reading them, lest he speed as the Eunuch, Acts 8. that was reading the Scripture as he rode in his Chariot on the way. And instead of such Books he putteth Romances and Play-Books, and trifling, or scorning, contradicting writings into his Hands.

§. 57. 13. He doth what he can to keep the sinner from intimate acquaintance with any that are truly Godly; that he may know them no otherwise than by the image which ignorant or malicious slanderers or scorners, do give of such: And that he may may know Religion it ſelf, but by hearſay, and never ſee it exemplifie in any holy diligent Believers. A holy Chriſtian is a living image of God, a powerful Convincer and Teacher of the ungodly: And the nearer men come to them, the greater excellency they will ſee, and the greater efficacy they will feel. Whereas in the Devils army, the moſt muſt not be ſeen in the open light, and the Hypocrite himſelf muſt be ſeen, like a picture, but by a ſide light and not by a direct.

§. 58. 14. Thoſe means which are uſed, the Devil labours to fruſtrate, 1. By ſluggiſh heedleſneſs and diſregard. 2. By prejudice, and falſe opinions which prepoſſeſs the mind. 3. By Diverſions of many ſorts. 4. By pre-ingagements to the contrary intereſt and way; ſo that Chriſt comes too late for them. 5. By worldly Proſperity and Delights. 6. By ill company. 7. And by moleſting, and frighting the ſinner when he doth but take up any purpoſe to be converted: Giving him all content and quietneſs in ſin, and raiſing ſtorms and terrours in his ſoul, when he is about to turn.

The Methods of Chriſt againſt the Tempter.

§. 59. Before I proceed to Satans particular Temptations, I will ſhew you the contrary Methods of Chriſt in the conduct of his Army and oppoſing Satan.

I. Chriſts Ends are ultimately, the Glory and Pleaſing of his Father, and himſelf, and the ſaving of his Church; and the deſtroying the Kingdom of the Devil; and next the purifying his peculiar people, and calling home all that are ordained to eternal life.

§. 60. But more particularly he looketh principally at the Heart to plant three 1. Holy Knowledge. 2. Faith. 3. Godlineſs or holy devotedneſs to God and Love to him above all. 4. Thankfulneſs. 5. Obedience. 6. Humility. 7. Heavenly-mindedneſs. 8. Love to others. 9. Self-denial and Mortification, and contentment. 10. Patience. And in all theſe, 1. ſincerity, 2. tenderneſs of heart, 3. zeal, and holy ſtrength and reſolution. And withal to make us actually ſerviceable, and diligent in our Maſters work, for our own and others ſalvation.

§. 61. II. Chriſts order in working is direct, and not backward as the Devil is: He firſt revealeth ſaving truth to the underſtanding, and affecteth the will by ſhewing the Goodneſs of the things revealed: And theſe employ the Thoughts, and Paſſions, and Senſes, and the whole body, reducing the inferiour faculties to obedience, and caſting out by degrees thoſe Images which had deceived and prepoſſeſſed them.

§. 62. The matter which Chriſt preſenteth to the Soul, is, 1. Certain Truth from the Father of Lights, ſet up againſt the Prince and Kingdom of darkneſs, ignorance, errour, and deceit. 2. Spiritual and everlaſting Good, even God himſelf to be ſeen, and Loved, and Enjoyed for ever, againſt the Tempters temporal, corporal, and ſeeming Good. Chriſts Kingdom and work are advanced by Light: He is for the promoting of all uſeful knowledge: and therefore for clear and convincing Preaching, for reading the Scriptures in a known tongue, and meditating in them day and night, and for exhorting one another daily; which Satan is againſt.

§. 63. III. The Means by which he worketh againſt Satan, are ſuch as theſe. 1. Sometime he maketh uſe of the very temper of the body as a preparative; and (being Lord of all) he giveth ſuch a temperature as will be moſt ſerviceable to the ſoul: As a ſober, deliberate, meek, quiet and patient diſpoſition. But ſometime he honoureth his Grace by the conqueſt of ſuch ſins; as even bodily diſpoſition doth entertain and cheriſh.

§. 64. 2. Sometimes by his providence he withdraweth the matter of temptations, that they ſhall not be too ſtrong for feeble ſouls: but ſometimes his Grace doth make advantage of them all, and leave them for the magnifying of its frequent victories.

§. 65. 3. Sometimes he giveth his cauſe the major vote among the people, ſo that it ſhall be a matter of diſhonourable ſingularity not to be a profeſſed Chriſtian: and ſometime, but exceeding rarely, it is ſo with the life of Godlineſs and practice of Chriſtianity alſo. But ordinarily in the moſt places of the world, Cuſtom and the Multitude are againſt him, and his grace is honoured by prevailing againſt theſe Bands of Satan.

§. 66. 4. He maketh his Miniſters his principal Inſtruments, qualifying, diſpoſing, and calling them to his work, and helping them in it, and proſpering it in their Hands.

§. 67. 5. He maketh it the duty of every Chriſtian to do his part to carry on the work; and furniſheth them with Love, and Compaſſion, and Knowledge, and Zeal in their ſeveral meaſures.

§. 68. 6. He giveth a very ſtrict charge to Parents, to devote their Children with themſelves to God; encouraging them with the promiſe of his accepting and bleſſing them; and commandeth them to teach them the word of God with greateſt diligence, and to bring them up in the nurture and fear of God.

§. 69. 7. He giveth Princes and Magiſtrates their power, to promote his Kingdom, and protect his Servants, and encourage the good, and ſuppreſs iniquity, and further the obedience of his Laws: Tho' in moſt of the world they turn his enemies, and he carrieth on his work without them, and againſt their cruel perſecuting oppoſition.

§. 70. 8. His Light detecteth the nakedneſs of the Devils cauſe, and among the Sons of Light, it is odious, and a common ſhame: And as wiſdom is juſtified of her children, ſo the judgment of holy men condemning ſin, doth much to keep it under in the world.

§. 71. 9. His providence uſually caſteth the ſinner that he will do good to, into the boſome and communion of his Holy Church, and the familiar company and acquaintance of the Godly, who may help him by inſtruction, affection and example.

§. 72. 10. His Providence fitteth all conditions to their good: but eſpecially helpeth them by ſeaſonable quickning afflictions. Theſe are the means which ordinarily he uſeth. But the Powerful inward operations of his Spirit, give efficacy to them all.

Tit. 2. Temptations to particular Sins; with Directions for Preſervation and Remedy.

IN Chapter 1. Part 2. I have opened the Temptations which hinder ſinners from Converſion to God: I ſhall now proceed to thoſe which draw men to particular ſins. Here Satans Art is exerciſed, 1. In fitting his baits to his particular uſe: 2. In applying them thereto.

§. 1. Tempt. 1. The Devil fitteth his Temptations to the ſinners age: The ſame bait is not ſuitable to all. Children he tempteth to exceſs of playfulneſs, lying, diſobedience, unwillingneſs to learn the things that belong to their ſalvation, and a ſenſeleſneſs of the great concernment of their Souls. He tempteth Youth to Wantonneſs, rudeneſs, guloſity, Tem-ſity, unrulineſs, and fooliſh inconſiderateneſs. In the beginning of manhood he tempteth to luſt, voluptuouſneſs and luxury; or if theſe take not, to deſigns of worldlineſs and ambition: The aged he tempteth to covetouſneſs, and unmoveableneſs in their error, and unteachableneſs and obſtinacy in their ignorance and ſin: Thus every age hath its peculiar ſnare.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. The Remedy againſt this is, 1. To be diſtinctly acquainted with the Temptations of your own age: and watch againſt them with a ſpecial heedfulneſs and fear. 2. To know the ſpecial duties and advantages of your own age, and turn your thoughts wholly unto thoſe. Scripture hath various precepts for the various ages: ſtudy your own part. The young have more time to learn their duty, and leſs care and buſineſs to divert them: Let them therefore be taken up in obedient learning. The middle age hath moſt vigour of body and mind, and therefore ſhould do their maſters work, with the greateſt vigour, activity and zeal. The Aged ſhould have moſt judgement, and experience, and acquaintedneſs with Death and Heaven: and therefore ſhould teach the younger both by word and holy life.

Temp. 2. §. 3. Tempt. 2. The Tempter alſo fitteth his Temptations to mens ſeveral bodily tempers, (as I ſhewed §. 22.) The hot and ſtrong he tempteth to luſt: The ſad and fearful to diſcouragement and continual ſelf-vexations; and to the Fear of Men and Devils: Thoſe that have ſtrong appetites, to Gluttony and Drunkenneſs: Children, and Women, and weak-headed people, to Pride of Apparel and trifling Complement: And maſculine wicked unbelievers, to Pride of Honour, Parts and Grandeur, and to an ambitious ſeeking of Rule and Greatneſs. The meek and gentle he tempteth to a yieldingneſs unto the perſwaſions and will of erroneous and tempting perſons: And thoſe that are more ſtiff, to a ſtubborn reſiſtance of all that ſhould do them good. He found it moſt ſuitable to tempt a Saul to malice, David by a ſurprize to luſt, Abſolom to ambition, Peter to fearfulneſs, and after to compliance and diſſimulation to avoid the offence and diſpleaſure of the weak: Luther to raſhneſs, Melanthon to fearfulneſs; Caroloſtadius to unſetledneſs: Illiricus to inordinate zeal, Oſiander to ſelf-eſteem; (if Hiſtorians have given them their due:) One Shooe fitteth not every foot.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Let your ſtricteſt watch be upon the ſins of your temperature: Far greater diligence and reſolution is here neceſſary, than againſt other ſins. And withdraw the fewel, and ſtrive againſt the bodily diſtempers themſelves. Faſting and labour will do much againſt luſt, which Idleneſs, and fulneſs continually feed. And ſo the reſt have their ſeveral cures. Know alſo what good your temper doth give you ſpecial advantage for: and let it be turned unto that, and ſtill employed in it.

Temp. 3. §. 5. Tempt. 3. The Tempter ſuiteth his Temptations to your Eſtates, of poverty or Riches: The poor he tempteth to murmur and be impatient under their wants and diſtreſs themſelves more with griefs and cares: and to think that their ſufferings may ſave them without holineſs, and that neceſſary labour for their bodies, may excuſe them from much minding the concernments of their ſouls: And either to cenſure and hate the Rich through envy, or to flatter them for gain. The Rich he tempteth to an idle, time-waſting, voluptuous, fleſhly, bruitiſh life. To exceſs in ſleep, and meat, and drink, and ſport, and apparel, and coſtly wayes of pride, and idle diſcourſe, and viſits, and complements; to love the wealth and honours of the world, and live in continual pleaſing of the fleſh, to fare deliciouſly every day, and to waſte their time in unprofitableneſs without a conſtant Calling; and to be unmerciful to the poor, and to tyrannize over their inferiours. Prov. 30. 8, 9. Luke 16.

§. 6. Direct. 3. Here alſo obſerve regardfully where your danger lyeth, and there keep a continual watch. Let the poor Remember, that if they be not Rich in grace, it is long of themſelves; and if they be, they have the chiefeſt Riches, and have learnt in all eſtates to be content: And have great cauſe to be thankful to God that thus helpeth them againſt the love and pleaſures of the world. Let the Rich remember, that they have not leſs to do than the poor, becauſe they have more committed to their truſt; nor may they ever the more ſatisfie the inordinate deſires of the fleſh: But they have more to do, and more dangers to fear and watch againſt, as they have more of their Maſters Talents to employ, and give account for at the laſt. Dir. 3. 1 Tim. 6. 9.

§. 7. Tempt. 4. The Devil ſuiteth his Temptations to mens daily work and buſineſs. If it be low, to be aſhamed of it through Pride; If it be high, to be Proud of it: If it be hard, to be weary and unfaithful in it; or to make it take up all their minds and time: If it be about worldly things, he tempteth them to be tainted by it with a worldly mind: If they labour for themſelves, he tempteth them to over-do: If for others, he tempteth them to deceitful unfaithful negligence and ſloth. If they are Miniſters, he tempteth them to be idle, and unfaithful, and ſenſeleſs of the weight of truth, the worth of ſouls, the brevity of time, that ſo their ſin may be the ruine or the loſs of many. If Rulers, the Devil uſeth his utmoſt skill, to cauſe them to eſpouſe an intereſt contrary to the intereſt of truth and holineſs; and to caſt ſome quarrel againſt Chriſt into their minds, and to perſwade them that his intereſt is againſt theirs, and that his ſervants are their enemies. Temp. 4.

§. 8. Direct. 4. See that your work be lawful, and that God have called you to it, and then take it as the ſervice which he himſelf aſſigneth to you, and do it as in his ſight, and as paſſing to his judgement, in obedience to his will: And mind not ſo much whether it be hard or eaſie, low or high, as whether you are faithful in it. And if it be ſanctified to you, by your intending all to the pleaſing of God, remember that he loveth and rewardeth that ſervant that ſtoopeth to the loweſt work at his command, as much as him that is employed in the higheſt: Do all for God, and walk in Holineſs with him, and keep out ſelfiſhneſs (the poyſon of your Callings) and obſerve the proper danger of your places, and keep a conſtant watch againſt them. Dir. 4.

§. 9. Tempt. 5. The Devil ſuiteth his Temptations to our ſeveral Relations: Parents he tempteth to be cold and regardleſs of the great work of a wiſe and holy education of their Children: Children he tempteth to be diſobedient, unthankful, void of natural affection, unreverent diſhonourers of their Parents: Husbands he tempteth to be unloving, unkind, impatient with the weakneſſes of their Wives, and Wives to be peeviſh, ſelf-willed, proud, clamorous, paſſionate and diſobedient: Maſters he tempteth to uſe their ſervants only as their Beaſts, for their own commodity, without any care of their ſalvation and Gods ſervice: And ſervants he tempteth to be carnal, untruſty, falſe, ſlothful, eye-ſervants, that take more care to hide a fault, than not to commit it. Miniſters and Magiſtrates he tempteth to ſeek themſelves, and neglect their charge, and ſet up their own Ends, inſtead of the common good; or to miſtake the common good, or the means that tendeth to it. Subjects and People he tempteth to diſhonour and murmur againſt their Governours, and to cenſure them unjuſtly, and to diſobey them, Temp. 5.

and rebel; or else to honour, and fear, and serve them more than God and against God.

Dir. 5. §. 10. Direct. 5. Here learn well the Duties and Dangers of your own Relations; and remember that it is much of your work to be faithful and excellent in your Relations. And mind not so much what other men owe to you, as what you owe to God and them. Let Masters, and Ministers, and Magistrates first study and carefully practice their own Duties, and yet they must next see that their Inferiours do their Duties, because that is their office: But they must be more desirous that God be first served, and more careful to procure obedience to him, than that they be honoured, or obeyed themselves. Children, Servants and Subjects must be taken up in the well doing of their proper work: remembring that their good or hurt lyeth far more upon that, than upon their Superiours dealings with them, or usage of them. As it is your own Body, and not your superiours which your soul doth animate, nourish and use, and which you have the continual sense and charge of; so it is your own duty, and not your superiours, which you have to do, and to answer for, and therefore most to mind and talk of.

Temp. 6. §. 11. Tempt. 6. The Tempter also suiteth his Temptations, to our advantages and hopes of rising or thriving in the world: He seeth which is our rising or thriving way; and there he layeth his Snares, accommodate to our Designs and Ends: making some sinful Omission or Commission seem necessary thereto: Either Balaam must prophesy against the People of God, or else God must keep him from Honour, by keeping him from sin: Numb. 24. 11. If once Judas be set on, What will you give me? The Devil will teach him the way to gain: His way is necessary to such sinful ends.

Dir. 6. §. 12. Direct. 6. Take heed therefore of overvaluing the world, and being taken with its honour, pleasure or prosperity: Take heed lest the Love of earthly things, engage you in eager desires and designs, to grow great or rich. For if once your heart have such a Design, you are gone from God: The heart is gone, and then all will follow as occasion calls for it. Understand these Scriptures, Prov. 23. 4. Labour not to be rich: Prov. 28. 20, 22. He that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent: He that hasteth to be rich, hath an evil eye: 1 Tim. 6. 9. But they that will be rich, fall into Temptations and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition: For the love of money, is the root of all evil. But godliness with contentment, is great gain: Seek not great matters for your selves: Jer. 45. 5. Be dead to the world: Fear more the Rising, than the falling way. Love that condition best, which fitteth thee for communion with God, or maketh thee the most profitable servant to him: and hate that most, which is thy greatest hinderance from these, and would most enslave thee to the world.

Temp. 7. § 13. Temp. 7. The Tempter suiteth his Temptations to our Company: If they have any Errour, or Sin, or are engaged in any carnal Enterprise, he will make them Snares to us, and restless till they have ensnared us: If they love us not, he will make them continual Provocations, and set before us all their Wrongs, and provoke us to Uncharitableness and Revenge. If they love us, he will endeavour to make their Love to us, to be the Shooing-horn or Harbinger of their Errours and Evil Ways, to draw us to their Imitation. He findeth something in all our Company to make the Matter of some Temptation.

Dir. 7. §. 14. Direct. 7. Converse most with God: Let Faith make Christ and Angels your most regarded and observed Company; that their mind, and presence may more affect you, than the mind and presence of mortal Men. Look not at any Mans Mind, or Will, or Actions without respect to God who governeth, and to the rule by which they should all be suited, and to the Judgment which will open and reward them as they are. Never see man without seeing God: see man only as a creature dependant on his Makers will. And then you will lament and not imitate him, when he sinneth; and you will oppose (and Christ saith Hate, Luke 14. 26.) and not be seduced by him, when he would draw you with him to sin and Hell: Had Adam more observed God, than Eve, he had not been seduced by his helper. Then you will look on the proud, and worldly, and sensual, as Solomon on the slothful Mans Vineyard, Prov. 24. 30, 31, 32. I saw, and considered it well, I looked on it, and received instruction. You would not long for the Plague or Leprosie, because it is your Friends Disease.

§. 15. Tempt. 8. The Tempter maketh Advantage of other mens Opinions or Speeches of you, or dealings by you; and by every one of them would ensnare you in some sin: If they have mean thoughts of you, or speak despising or dishonouring words of you, he tempteth you by it to hate them, or love them less, or to speak contemptuously of them. If they applaud you, he tempteth you by it to be proud: If they wrong you, he tempteth you to revenge: If they enrich you, or are your Benefactors, he would make their Benefits a Price to hire you to some sin, and make you pay as dear for them, as your Salvation cometh to. If they scorn you for Religion, he would make you ashamed of Christ and his Cause: If they admire you, he would draw you by it to Hypocrisie. If they threaten you, he would draw you to sin by fear, as he did Peter: If they deal rudely with you, he tempteth you to passion, and to requite them with the like: And even to distaste Religion it self, if Men professing Religion be against you, or seem to do you any wrong. Thus is every man a danger to his Brother. Temp 8

§. 16. Direct. 8. Discern in all men what there is of God, to be your help, and that make use of; and what there is of Satan, sin, and self, and that take heed of. Look upon every man as a Helper and a Tempter; and he be prepared still, to draw forth his Help, and resist his Temptation. And remember, that Man is but the Instrument: It is Satan that Tempteth you, and God that tryeth you by that man! Saith David of Shimei. The Lord hath bidden him: That is, He is but Gods Rod to scourge me for my sin, as my Son himself is: As Satan was his instrument in trying Job, not by Gods effecting but permitting the sin: Observe God and Satan in it, more than Men. Dir. 8.

§. 17. Tempt. 9. His Temptations also are suited, to our fore-received Opinions and Thoughts: If you have but let in one lustful thought, or one malicious thought, he can make great advantage of that Nest-Egg, to gather in more: as a little Leaven to leaven the whole lump: He can rowl it up and down, and do much to hatch it into a multitude. If you are but tainted with any false opinion, or Prejudice against your Teacher, your Ruler, or your Brother, he can improve it to such increase, and raise such Conclusions from it, and more from them, and reduce them all to practice, as shall make Observers with Astonishment say, Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth. Temp. 9.

§. 18. Direct. 9. Take heed what Thoughts you first admit into your mind: And especially cherish and approve none but upon very good tryal and examination. And if they prove corrupt, sweep clean your Fantasie and Memory of them, that they prove not Inhabitants, and take not up their Lodgings in you, or have not time to spawn and breed. And fill Dir. 9.

up the room with contrary thoughts, and useful Truth, and cherish them daily, that they may encrease and multiply: and then your Hearts will be like a well peopled Kingdom, able to keep their Possession against all enemies.

Tem. 10. §. 19. Tempt. 10. Also he fitteth his Temptations to your natural and acquired parts: That if you are weak, he may either discourage you; or (which is more usual and dangerous) make you think better of them than they are, and to think your know much, when it's next to nothing; and to make you wise in your own eyes, and easily to receive an Errour, and then to be confident in it: not to discern between things that differ; but to be deceived into false zeal, and false ways by the specious Pretences and Shews of truth; and then to be zealous for the deceiving of others: Also that you may be a Dishonour to Truth and Godliness, by your weakness and ill management of good Causes; and may give them away through your unskilfulness to the Adversary. If you are of stronger Wits and Parts, the Tempter will draw you to despise the weak, to take common Gifts for special Grace; or to undervalue Holiness and Humility, and overvalue Learning and Acuteness: He will tempt you (dangerously) to loath the Simplicity of Christianity and of the Scriptures, as to style and method; and to be offended at the Cross of Christ. So that such persons are usually in greater danger of Infidelity, Heresie, Pride, and insolent domineering over the Flock of Christ, than vulgar Christians that have lower parts.

Dir. 10. §. 20 Direct. 10. Labour to be well acquainted with your selves: If you are weak, know your weakness, that you may be humble, and fearful, and seek for strength and help: If you are comparatively strong, remember how weak the strongest are: and how little it is that the wisest know! and study well the Ends and Use of Knowledge; that all that you know may be concocted into Love and Holiness; and use it as remembring that you have much to give account of.

Tem. 11. §. 21. Temp. 11. Moreover the Tempter will fetch advantage against you from your former life and actions. If you have gone out of the way to Heaven, he would harden you by Custom, and make you think it such a Disgrace or Trouble to return, as that it's as good go on, and put it to the venture: If you have done any work materially good, while your heart and course of life is carnal and worldly, he would quiet you in your sinful miserable state, by applauding the little good that you have done. If a good Man have erred or done ill, he will engage his honour in it, and make him study to defend it, or excuse it, lest it prove his shame; and tempt men as he did David, to hide one sin with another: If he get hold of one link, he will draw on all the chain of sin.

Dir. 11. §. 22. Direct. 11. Take heed therefore what you do; and foresee the end: Let not the Devil get in one foot: Try your way, before you enter it. But if you have erred, come off, and that throughly and betime, whatever it cost; for be sure it will cost more to go on. And if he would make a snare of the good that you have done, remember that this is to turn it into the greatest evil: and that there must be a concurrence and integrity of good to make you acceptable, and to save you: Heart and Life must be good to the End.

Tem. 12. §. 23. Tempt. 12. Lastly, He fitteth his Temptations to the season. He will take the Season just when an evil Thought is likest to take with you; and when the Winds and Tyde do serve him: that will take at one time, (when a Man hath his Wits and Heart to seek) which would be abhorred at another: In afflicting Times he will draw you to deny Christ with Peter, or shift for your selves by sinful means: In prosperous times he will tempt you to security, worldliness and forgetfulness of the Night and Winter which approacheth: The Timing his Temptations is his great advantage.

§. 24. Direct. 12. Dwell as with God, and you dwell as in Eternity, and will see still that as time, so all the pleasure, and advantages, and dangers, and sufferings of Time, are things of themselves of little moment: Keep your eye upon Judgment and Eternity, where all the Errours of Time will be rectified, and all the Inequalities of Time will be levelled, and the Sorrows and Joys that are transitory will be no more: And then no reasons from the frowns or flatteries of the Times will seem of any force to you. And be still employed for God, and still armed and on your watch, that Satan may never find you disposed to take the bait. Dir. 12.

The Tempters Method in applying his prepared Baits.

§. 25. Temp. 1. The Devils first work, is to present the Tempting bait in all its alluring deceiving properties: To make it seem as true as may be to the understanding; and as good and amiable as may be to the Will. To say as much as can be said for an evil cause; He maketh his Image of Truth and Goodness as beautiful as he can: Sin shall be sugared, and its pleasure shall be its strength, Heb. 11. 25. Sin shall have its wages paid down in hand, 2 Pet. 2. 15. He will set it out with full-mouthed praises: O what a fine thing it is to be rich, and please the flesh continually! to have command, and honour, and lusts, and sports, and what you desire! Who would refuse such a condition that may have it? All this will I give thee, was the Temptation which he thought fit to assault Christ himself with. And he will corrupt the History of Time past, and tell you that it went well with those that took his way, Jer. 44. 17. And for the future, he will promise them, that they shall be gainers by it (as he did Eve) and shall have peace, though they please their flesh in sinning: See Deut. 29. 19. Temp. 1.

§. 26. Direct. 1. In this case, first enquire what God saith of that which Satan so commendeth. The Commendations and Motions of an Enemy are to be suspected, God is most to be believed. 2. Then consider not only whether it be good, but how long it will be good; and what it will prove at the end; and how we shall judge of it at the parting: And withal consider what it tendeth to; whether it tend to good or evil: and whether it be the greatest good that we are capable of: and then you will see, that if there were no good, or appearance of good in it, it could do a voluntary agent no hurt, and were not fit to be the matter of a Temptation: and you'll see that it is temporal good set up to deceive you of the Eternal Good, and to entice you into the greatest evil, and misery. Doth the Devil shew thee the world, and say, All this will I give thee? Look to Christ who sheweth thee the glory of the world to come, with all things good for thee in this world, and saith more truly, All this will I give thee: The World and Hell are in one end of the ballance, and Pardon, Holiness, and Heaven are in the other. Which now wilt thou prefer? If the Devil have more to give thee and bid for thee than Christ, let him take thee. Dir. 1.

§. 27. Tempt. 2. The Tempter laboureth to keep God, and Christ, and Heaven out of sight, that they darken not the splendour of his bait; and to hide those potent reasons from them, by which they might easily repel the Temptation: so that though they are well known and sure, and Scripture be full of them, they shall none of them be ready at hand to use, when the temptation cometh; so that to them they shall be all Temp. 2.

as nothing: and this he doth by unbelief and inconsiderateneſs.

Dir. 2. §. 28. Direct. 2. Live by faith, ſee that God the Father, the Redeemer, and the Holy Spirit, dwell within you, and take up your hearts, and your hopes be placed all on Heaven, and that theſe be your very Life and buſineſs; and then you will always have that at hand, which may refel the Tempter. A heart taken up with God and Chriſt, converſing in Heaven, is always fortified, and prepared to meet every Temptation with abhorrence. Let your ſouls be ſtill poſſeſſed with as conſtant apprehenſions of the evil of ſin, the danger of ſinning, the preſence, authority and holineſs of God, the wrong that ſin doth him, the hurt it doth our ſelves and others, and what it did to Jeſus Chriſt, as you have of the danger of fire, and water, and poyſon; and then the Tempter will not ſpeed.

Temp. 3. §. 29. Tempt. 3. It is the great care of the Devil to keep out of ſight, that he be not ſeen himſelf in the Temptation: As the Angler keepeth himſelf behind the buſh, and the Fowler hideth himſelf from the birds, or elſe they would fear, and fly, and eſcape: ſo doth the Devil uſe all his art, to hide himſelf from the ſinners obſervation; that the deluded ſoul ſhall little think that the Devil is ſo near him, and hath ſo great a hand in the buſineſs. If the ambitious or Covetous worldling ſaw the Devil offer him the bait, and heard him ſay, All this will I give thee; he would have the ſmaller liſt to take the bait. If the Devil appeared to the Whoremonger, and brought him his Whore, and encouraged him to his filthineſs, it would cool his luſt: Or if he appeared to the drunkard, and preſented him the cup, he would have but little liſt to drink: If the proud and the malicious ſaw the Devil at their backs, rejoycing in their ſin, and putting them on, it might affright them half into their wits. Therefore the great endeavour of the Devil is, to perſwade men that it is not he that makes the motion to them: It is ſuch a friend, or ſuch a neighbour, or gentleman, or miniſter, or wiſe man; it is not the Devil! Till the Fiſh is catcht, and the bird is in the net, and then the author of all appeareth, to kill them, and carry them away, without any concealment.

Dir. 3. §. 30. Direct. 3. Mark but the tendency and the manner of the Temptations, and you may perceive the Author: Who elſe is it that is ſo much againſt God, and againſt your everlaſting happineſs? Who elſe is it that would ſo abuſe your Reaſon, to prefer things temporal, before things eternal, and the bruitiſh pleaſures of a corruptible fleſh, before the intereſt of immortal ſouls? Who elſe ſo contradicteth all the word of God? Read Gods warnings, and he will tell you who it is. Take every Temptation then (whoever be the meſſenger) as if thou ſaweſt the Devil ſtanding by, and making the motion to thee, and heardeſt himſelf exhort thee to the ſin. Suppoſe you ſaw him conducting you to the Whore-houſe, the Play-houſe, the Ale-houſe, and making you entertainment as the Maſter of the game! How then would you take it? And what would you do? Would you go, and be angry at the preciſe Preacher that would hinder you? And would you take the Devils part? No, nature hath poſſeſſed you with a fear of him, and an enmity to him: uſe it for your ſafety: It cannot be good for you that comes from him! He hath a fouler face to appear to you in, than ever yet you ſaw, when you have done his work, and are where he would have you. O know with whom you have to do.

Temp 4. §. 13. Tempt. 4. The Tempter is moſt careful alſo to hide from men the nature and tendency of the Temptation it ſelf; that they ſhall not know that it is a Temptation when they are tempted, but ſhall have nothing in ſight but the bait which they deſire. The Angler doth not only hide himſelf from the fiſh, but alſo his rod, and line, and hook as much as he can: The Fowler covereth his nets; ſo that either the fiſh and bird ſhall not ſee the ſnare, or ſhall not know what it is, and what it is there laid for: ſo when the bait of pleaſure, and honour, and wealth is preſented by the Devil, to the fornicator, gameſter, proud or covetous, they ſhall not ſee what the Devil is doing now, and what a game he is playing for their ſouls! They ſhall not perceive the connexion that there is between the pleaſure and the ſin, and the ſin and the threatning, and the threatning and the judgment, and the judgment and the everlaſting puniſhment; when Judas was bargaining with the Phariſees, he knew not that the Devil was in him driving on the match.

§. 32. Direct. 4. Be wiſe and ſuſpicious: Blind-neſs or fool-hardineſs will lead you into the ſnare. Be wiſe that you may know the tendency of every thing that is preſented to your thoughts, and may be able to perceive a danger: Be ſuſpicious and cautelous, that you make a ſufficient trial, and go upon ſure grounds, and avoid the very appearance of evil: when it is Hell that you fear, come not too near. Play not as the fly about the Candle; ſalvation is neceſſary; but preferment, or wealth, or liberty, or credit, or life it ſelf are not neceſſary to you! Prove all things: Flatter not your ſelves into the ſnares by fooliſh hopes, and judging of things as the fleſh would have them to be, rather than as they are. If no danger appear, turn up all coverings, and ſearch and ſee that none be hidden. The Devil hath his gun-powder plots, and mines, which may blow you up before you are aware. Not only Lawfulneſs and Indifferency, but great Good is the pretence for greateſt evil. Dir. 4.

§. 33. Tempt. 5. It is the Tempters care to bring the tempting object near enough, or draw the ſinner near enough to it: The net muſt come to the fiſh, or the fiſh to the net: The diſtant fire will not burn the wood. The Devils chief confidence is in the ſenſitive appetite, which worketh ſtrongliеſt at hand. If he get the drunkard into the Ale-houſe, and ſhew him the cup, he hath half conquered him already: But if he be ſcrupulous and modeſt, ſome one ſhall drink a health or importune him, and put the cup into his hand. The thief with Achan ſhall ſee the bait, and the ſight will work a Covetous deſire. The glutton ſhall have the Tempting diſhes before him, and be at a Table which by variety of delicious food, is fitted to become his ſnare; whereas if he had nothing ſet before him, but the poor mans ſimple food which hath nothing in it fit to tempt him, he might eaſily have eſcaped. The fornicator ſhall have his beautiful dirt brought near him, and preſented to him in a tempting dreſs; for at a ſufficient diſtance there had been little danger. The ambitious perſon ſhall have preferment offered him, or brought ſo fair to his hand, that with a little ſeeking it may be attained. The fearful coward ſhall be threatned with the loſs of eſtate or life, and hear the report of the Cannons, Guns and Drums of Satan. Peter is half conquered when he is got among queſtioning company in the High-Prieſts Hall. Thus David, thus Lot, thus ordinarily ſinners are drawn into the ſnare. Temp. 5.

§. 34. Direct. 5. As ever you would preſerve your innocency and your ſouls, fly as far from tempting objects as you can: I ſay as you can without diſtruſting God in the neglect of a certain duty: A Wife, or a ſervant, that are bound cannot fly: nor muſt we leave undone our certain duty upon an uncertain danger, which may otherwiſe be Dir. 5.

be avoided: But keep off from the Temptation at as great a distance as you can: The safest course is the best when your souls lie at the stake: If it be not Necessary, plead not the Lawfulness of what you do, when it is a Temptation to that which is unlawful. You say, It is lawful to wear such curious ornaments, and set out your selves in the neatest dress: But it is lawful to be Proud or Lustful, or to consume your time unprofitably? If not, tempt not your selves or others to it. Keep away from the place where the snare is laid. Look first to the end before thou meddle with the beginning. Why should I eat that which I know I cannot digest, but must cast it up again? And why should I taste that which I must not eat? And why should I desire to have that set before me, and to look upon that which I must not taste? Come not near it thou wouldst not be taken. What dost thou at the Ale-house with a cup before thee, if thou wouldst not be drawn to excess of drink? If thou be subject to excess in eating, make not thy own table thy Temptation. Fly from the Temptation as thou wouldst do from Hell, or from the Devil himself. See not the bait of lust, or come not near, if thou be inclinable to lust, saith Solomon, Remove thy way far from her, and come not near the door of her house, Prov. 5. 8. For her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two-edged sword: Her feet go down to death, her steps take hold on Hell, ver. 4, 5. Her house inclineth to death and her paths unto the dead: None that go to her return again, neither take they hold of the paths of Life, Prov. 2. 18, 19. Her house is the way to Hell, going down to the chambers of Death, Prov. 7. 27. Whoso is simple let him turn hither, and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him, Stoln waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant: But he knoweth not that the dead are there, and that her guests are in the depths of Hell: Prov. 9. 16, 17, 18. Lust not after her beauty in thy heart, neither let her take thee with her eye-lids:—Can a man take fire in his bosom and his cloaths not be burnt? Can one go upon hot coals and his feet not be burnt? Prov. 6. 25, 27, 28. Remember that you pray daily Lead us not into Temptation: And if you will run into it your selves, are not your prayers hypocritical and an abuse of God? If you would be saved from sin, you must be saved in Gods way: and that is by flying from Temptations; and not drawing near, and gazing on forbidden objects, and tempting your selves: Even as Gods holy means must be used by all that would come to holiness and Heaven; so the Devils must be avoided by him that would scape sin and Hell. 2. But if you cannot remove far enough from the snare, then double your fear, and watchfulness, and resolution: Fly with Joseph from the sin, if you cannot go out of the house. How carefully should every foot be placed, when we know that every step we tread is among snares? Rule your senses if you cannot remove the bait: Make Jobs covenant with your eyes, that you look not on that which would allure? Job 31. 1. Let every sense have a constant watch.

Gen. 39. 12.

Temp. 6. §. 35. Tempt. 6. The next great work of the Tempter is, to give us the fairest opportunities to sin, and to remove all impediments, and shew men encouraging hopes and invitations. He will shew the thief which way he may steal; and shew the covetous man which way he may thrive, and deceive, and over-reach: and the ambitious man which way he may rise; and the fornicator how he may obtain his desire, and sin unknown: and then he tells them how easie it is; now no one seeth you; you may do it without fear or shame. It is the Devils great care to take all things out of the way that would affright, or hinder sinners: That they may have full opportunity to invite them. Therefore he is very desirous that publick impediments should be all removed; especially in a godly Magistrate and Minister, and that the common disgrace of sinning may be taken off, and if it may be, turned against Religion, or fall on them that are the greatest adversaries to sin.

§. 36. Direct. 6. It is therefore a principal part of your wisdom and watchfulness, to avoid the opportunities of sinning, and keep out as many impediments as may be in your own way. It is a most foolish and sinful thing in some men, who think it a brave thing to have power to do hurt, though they pretend that they abhor the doing of it: He that saith he hateth oppression, yet would have a Power, to oppress: To have all men at his will and mercy he thinks is brave: so they that would not be gluttonous would have a tempting Table still before them, presuming that their own will is a sufficient preservative against the sin: so they that would not be insnared with lust, have yet a desire to appear as comely, and lovely, and desirable as may be, and to be as much beloved, that they may have other affections at command; and also to have opportunity offered them, that they may sin if they will. And is thy will so well established, mortified and unchangeable, as to be so far trusted? O foolish sinner that no better knowest thy self; nor observest thy danger? Nor perceivest that this very desire to have the Power to do evil sheweth a degree of the evil in thy heart, and that thou art not yet so far from it as thou must be, if thou wouldst be safe. Contrive thy self (if thou be wise and love thy self) into the greatest difficulty of sinning that thou canst. Make it Impossible if it may be done. The Power is for the act. Desire not to be able to sin, if thou wouldst not sin, not that Natural power to do good should be destroyed because it is also a power to do evil, but cast as many blocks in the way of thy sinning as thou canst, till it amount to a moral impossibility. Desire the strictest Laws and Governors, and to be still in the eye of others, and contrive it that thou maist have no hope of secrecie: Contrive it so that it may be utter shame and loss to thee if thou sin. If thou be tempted to fornication, never be private with her or him that is thy snare. If thou be tempted to deceive and rob those that trust thee, avoid the trust, or if ever thou have done it, restore and confess that shame may preserve thee.

Dir. 6.

Psal. 101. 3.

§ 37. Tempt. 7. Next the Tempter importunately solicite th our thoughts or fantasies to feed upon the tempting thing: That the lustful person may be thinking on the objects of his lusts, and the ambitious man thinking on his desired honour, and the covetous man of his desired wealth, his house, or lands, or gainful bargains, and the malicious man be thinking of all the real or imaginary wrongs, which kindle malice.

Temp. 7.

§ 38. Direct. 7. Keep a continual watch upon your thoughts. Remember that this is the common entrance of the greatest sins. And if they go no further, the searcher of hearts will judge thee for the adultery, murder, and other sins of thy heart. But especially see that your thoughts be so employed on better things, that sin may never find them vacant.

Dir. 7.

§. 39. Tempt. 8. The Tempter also is diligent to keep the end from the sinners eye, and to perswade him that there is no danger in it, and that it will be as good at last as at first. He cannot endure a thought, a word of death or judgment, unless he can first fortifie the sinner by some presumptuous hope, that his sins are pardoned, and his case is good: either he will make them believe him that there is no such danger to the soul as should deter them; or else he keepeth them from thinking of that danger. He is loth a sinner should so much as look into a grave, or go to the house of mourning, and see the end of all the living, living, leſt he ſhould lay it to heart, and thence perceive what worldly pleaſure, wealth and greatneſs is, by ſeeing where it leaveth ſinners. If one do but talk of death or judgment, and the life to come, the Devil will ſtir up ſome ſcorn, or wearineſs, or oppoſition againſt ſuch diſcourſe: If a ſinner do but bethink himſelf in ſecret, what will become of him after death, the Devil will either allure him, or trouble him, and never let him reſt, till he have caſt away all ſuch thoughts as tend to his ſalvation. He cannot endure when you ſee the pomp and pleaſure of the world, that you ſhould think or ask, How long will this endure? And what will it prove in the latter end?

Temp. 8.

Dir. 8. Pſal. 1. & 15. Mat. 25. §. 40. Direct. 8. Go to the holy Scriptures, and ſee what they foretel concerning the end of Godlineſs and ſin: God knoweth better than the Devil, and is more to be believed. You may ſee in the word of God, what will become of Saints and ſinners, Godly and ungodly at the laſt, and what they will think and ſay when they review their preſent life; and what Chriſt will ſay to them, and how he will judge them, and what will be their reward for ever. This is the infallible Prognoſtication, where you may foreſee your endleſs ſtate. In this glaſs continually foreſee the end. Never judge of any thing by the preſent guſt alone. Ask not only how it taſteth, but how it worketh, and what will be the effects: Remember that Gods Law hath inſeparably conjoyned Holineſs, and Heaven, and ſin unrepented of, and Hell; and ſeeing theſe cannot be ſeparated indeed, let them never be ſeparated from each other in your thoughts. Otherwiſe you will never underſtand Chriſt or Satan: When Chriſt ſaith, wilt thou deny thy ſelf and take up the Croſs and follow me; his meaning is, ſhall I heal thy carnal worldly heart and life, and bring thee by grace to the ſight of God in endleſs Glory! You will never underſtand what prayer, and obedience, and holy living mean, if you ſee not the End, even Heaven conjoyned to them. When the Devil ſaith to the Glutton, eat alſo of this pleaſant diſh; and to the drunkard, take the other cup; and to the Fornicator, take thy pleaſure in the dark; and to the Voluptuous, go to the Play-houſe, or the Gaming-houſe; come play at Cards or Dice, his meaning is, Come, venture upon ſin, and fear not Gods threatnings, and refuſe his word, and ſpirit, and grace, that I may have thy company among the Damned, in the fire which never ſhall be quenched. This is the true Engliſh of every temptation. Open thy ears then, and when ever the Devil or any ſinner tempteth thee to ſin, hear him as if he ſaid, I pray thee leap into the flames of Hell.

Temp. 9. §. 41. Tempt. 9. If the Tempter cannot quickly draw men to the ſin, he will move them at leaſt to abate their reſolution againſt it, and to deliberate about it, and hear what can be ſaid, and enter into a diſpute with Satan or ſome of his inſtruments; telling them that it is a ſign of falſhood which will not endure the trial, and that we muſt prove all things. And while the ſinner is deliberating and diſputing, the venom is working it ſelf into his veins, and ſenſe is ſecretly undermining and betraying him, and deceiving his mind, bribing his reaſon, and ſeducing his will: Juſt as an enemy will treat with thoſe that keep a Garriſon, that during the treaty, he may ſend in ſpies, and find out their weakneſs, and corrupt the ſouldiers: So doth the Devil with the ſinner.

Dir. 9. §. 42. Direct. 9. Remember that it is Chriſt and not Satan that you are to hear. Truth is ſtrong and can bear the tryal, before any competent judge: but you are weak, and not ſo able to judge as you may imagine: Ignorant, unskilful and unſetled perſons are eaſily deceived, be the cauſe never ſo clear. If it be a cauſe untryed by you, it is not untryed by all the godly, nor unknown to him that gave you the holy Scriptures: If it be fit to be called in queſtion and diſputed, take the help of able godly Teachers or friends, and hear what they can ſay: Matters of endleſs life or death, are not raſhly to be ventured on: But if it be a thing paſt diſpute, in which you have been already convinced and reſolved, reject the Tempter, and tell him, that you owe him not ſo much ſervice, as to diſpute with him whether you ſhould care for your ſalvation? Elſe there will be no end, till you are betrayed and undone: Innocent Eve is deceived when once it comes to a diſpute. Be not like Balaam that tempted God, and would not be ſatisfied with his anſwer. Gal. 1. 16.

§. 43. Tempt. 10. Alſo the Tempter overcometh very many, by making them preſumptuouſly confident of their own ſtrength: ſaying, Thou art not ſo weak as not to be able to bear a greater temptation than this? Canſt thou not gaze on beauty, or go among vain and tempting company, and yet chooſe whether thou wilt ſin: It's a child indeed that hath no more government of themſelves! Cannot thy Table, thy Cup, thy Houſe, thy Lands, be pleaſing and delectable, but thou muſt needs over-love them, and turn them to ſin? Tem. 10.

§. 44. Direct. 10. O know thy own weakneſs! the treacherous enemy which thou ſtill carrieſt about thee, who is ready to open the back-door to the Devil, Remember that fleſh is on the Tempters ſide, and how much it can do with thee before thou art aware. Remember what an unſetled wretch thou art, and how many a good purpoſe formerly hath come to nothing, and how oft thou haſt ſinned by as ſmall a temptation: Remember that without the Spirit of Chriſt, thou canſt do nothing, nor ſtand againſt any aſſault of Satan: And that Chriſt giveth his Spirit and help in his own way, and not to thoſe that tempt him to forſake them, by thruſting themſelves into temptations. Shall ever mortal man preſume upon his own ſtrength, after the falls of an Adam, a Noah, a Lot, a David, a Solomon, a Hezekiah, a Joſiah, a Peter? and after ſuch ruins of multitudes of profeſſors, as our eyes have ſeen? All theſe things hapned unto them for enſamples, and they are written for our admonition on whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall, 1 Cor. 10, 11, 12. Dir. 10.

§. 45. Tempt. 11. It is a great project of the Devil, and ſucceſsful with many, to draw them to venture on the ſin, by ſhewing them firſt the effectual Remedy, the abundant Mercy of God, the ſufficient ſatisfaction made by Chriſt, the full, and free, and univerſal promiſe; that theſe are ſufficient to cleanſe the ſoul of any ſin: therefore you need not fear. Tem. 11.

§. 46. Direct. 11. But God is juſt, as well as merciful; and there are veſſels of wrath, as well as veſſels of mercy: Judge how God will uſe his mercy, and who ſhall have it, by his own word: For he knoweth better than you, to whom, and how far to ſhew mercy. Is the Tempter himſelf ſaved, for all God is merciful? And the Goſpel hath far ſorer puniſhment than the Law, to the abuſers of grace: Chriſt is the moſt dreadful Judge to the wicked, as well as the tendereſt Saviour to his own. There is enough in his grace to ſave the penitent, but if you will ſin upon preſumption that grace will ſave you, you have ſmall reaſon to think that you are penitent, or ever will be, without a very merciful change: How many can you name that ever were converted and forgiven, that lived wilfully in ſin, becauſe the Remedy was ſufficient? I doubt not but many ſuch have been recalled, but this is not the way to hope: It's a terrible thing to ſin deliberately and wilfully, becauſe of the greatneſs of mercy, or the ſufficiency of the death of Chriſt! Dir. 11. Rom. 9. Heb. 10. 26, 27, 28, 29. 2 Theſ. 1. 10.

Christ! No man but the Penitent Convert is saved by Christ, and this is clean contrary to penitence and conversion. Christ doth not as Mountebanks, that wound a man to shew people how quickly their balsoms can cure him, or make a man drink a Toad, to shew the power of their Antidotes: But he cureth the Diseases which he findeth (in believers) but causeth none.

Tem. 12. §. 47. Tempt. 12. Also the Tempter telleth the sinner, how certain, and easie, and speedy a remedy he hath in his own power: It is but Repenting, and all sin is pardoned.

Dir. 12. §. 48. Direct. 12. 1. Is it in thy power? If so, the greater is thy sin that sinnest more when thou shouldest repent: If it be easie, what an unexcusable wretch art thou that wilt not do it, but go on? 2. But Repentance is the gift of God, 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26. And is he like to give it to them that wilfully abuse him in expectation of it? 3. As easie as it is, it is but a few that truly repent and are forgiven, in comparison of those that go on and perish. 4. The easiest Repentance is so bitter, that it's far easier to forbear the sin: It's better not wound your selves, than have the best salve if you were sure of it. 5. The Repentance which is caused by meer fears of death and Hell, without the power of Heavenly Love to God and holiness, is but the Repentance of the damned, and never procureth pardon of sin: The Devil hath such a Repentance, as well as such a faith, which will not save him.

James 2. 19.

Tem. 13 §. 49. Tempt. 13. Satan also emboldneth the sinner, by telling him how many have repented and sped well, that sinned as bad or worse than this: He tells him of Noah, and Lot, and David, and Peter, and the Thief on the Cross, and Paul a Persecutor, yea, and Manasseh, &c.

Dir. 13. §. 53. Direct. 13. But consider whether any of those did thus sin, because that others had scap't that sinned before them. And think of the millions that never repented, and are condemned, as well as of the few that have repented. Is Repentance better than sin? Why then will you sin? Is sin better than Repentance? Why then do you purpose to repent? Is it not base ingratitude, to offend God wilfully, because he hath pardoned many offenders, and is ready to forgive the penitent? And should a man of reason wilfully make work for his own Repentance, and do that which he knoweth he shall wish with grief that he had never done? If some have been saved that fell into the Sea, or that fell from the top of Steeples, or that drunk poyson, or were dangerously wounded, will you therefore cast your self into the same case, in hope of being saved?

Tem. 14. §. 51. Tempt. 14. The Tempter perswadeth the sinner, that it cannot be that God should make so great a matter of sin, because the thoughts of a mans heart, or his words or deeds are matter of no great moment, when man himself is so poor a worm; and whatever he doth, it is no hurt to God: Therefore you need not make such a matter of it.

Dir. 14. §. 52. Direct. 14. If God so much regard us as to make us, and preserve us continually, and to become our Governour, and make a Law for us, and judge us, and Reward his servants with no less than Heaven, then you may easily see that he so much regardeth us, as to observe whether we obey or break his Laws. He that so far careth for a Clock or Watch, as to make it and wind it up, doth care whether it go true or false. What do these men make of God, who think he cares not what men do? Then he cares not if men beat you, or rob you, or kill you, for none of this hurteth God? And the King may say, if any murder your friends, or children, why should I punish him? he hurt not me. But Justice is to keep order in the world, and not only to preserve the Governour from hurt: God may be wronged, though he be not hurt. And he will make you pay for it, if you hurt others; and smart for it, if you hurt your self.

§. 53. Tempt. 15. The Tempter laboureth to extenuate the sin, and make it seem a little one; and if every little sin must be made such a matter of, you'll never be quiet. Tem. 15.

§. 54. Direct. 15. But still remember, 1. There is deadly poyson in the very nature of sin, as there is in a Serpent, be he never so small. The least sin is worse than the greatest pain that ever man felt, and would you choose and say, it's little? The least sin is odious to God, and had a hand in the death of Christ, and will damn you if it be not pardoned, and should such a thing be made light of? And many sins counted small, may have great aggravations, such as the knowing, deliberate, wilful committing of them is. To love a small sin, is a great sin, especially to love it so well, that the remembrance of Gods Will and Love, of Christ, and Heaven, and Hell, will not suffice to resolve you against it. Besides, a small sin is the common way to greater, James 1. 14, 15. When lust hath conceived, it brings forth sin, and sin when it is finished, brings forth death, James 3. 5. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth? The horrid sins of David and Peter had small beginnings? Mortal sicknesses seem little matters at the first: Many a thousand have sinned themselves to Hell, that began with that which is accounted small. Dir. 15

§. 55. Tempt. 16. Also the Devil draweth on the sinner, by promising him that he shall sin but once, or but a very few times, and then do so no more: He tells the Thief, and the Fornicator, that if they will do it but this once, they shall be quiet. Tem. 16

§. 56. Direct. 16. But O consider, 1. That one stab at the heart may prove uncurable. God may deny thee time or grace to repent. 2. That it is easier to forbear the first time than the second: For one sin disposeth the heart unto another: If you cannot deny the first temptation, how will you deny the next? When you have lost your strength, and grieved your helper, and strengthned your enemy and your snare, will you then resist better wounded, than now when you are whole? Dir. 16.

§. 57. Temp. 17. But when the Devil hath prevailed for once with the sinner, he makes that an argument for a second: He saith to the Thief, and Drunkard, and Fornicator, It is but the same thing that thou hast done once already: and if once may be pardoned, twice may be pardoned; and if twice, why not thrice, and so on? Tem. 17.

§. 58. Direct. 17. This it is, to let the Devil get in a foot: A spark is easier quenched than a flame, but yet remember that the longer, the worse, the oftner you sin, the greater is the abuse of the Spirit of God, and the contempt of grace, and the wrong to Christ, and the harder is repentance, and the sharper if you do repent, because the deeper is your wound: Repent therefore speedily, and go no further, unless you would have the Devil tell you next, It's now too late. Dir. 17.

§. 59. Tempt. 18. The Tempter maketh use of the greater sins of others to perswade men to venture upon less: Thou hearest other men curse, and swear, and rail, and dost thou stick at idle talk? How many in the world are enemies to Christ, and persecute his Ministers and Servants, and dost thou make so great a matter of omitting a Sermon, or a prayer, or other holy duty? Tem. 18.

§. 60. Direct. 18. As there are degrees of sin, so there are degrees of punishment: And wilt thou rather choose the easiest place in Hell, than Heaven? How small soever the matter of sin be, thy wilfulness and sinning against conscience, and mercies, and warnings may make it great to thee. Are great sinners Dir. 18.

ners ſo happy in thy eyes, that thou wouldſt be as like them as thou dareſt?

Tem. 19. §. 61. Tempt. 19. Alſo he would embolden the ſinner, becauſe of the Commonneſs of the ſin, and the multitude that commit either that or worſe, as if it were not therefore ſo bad or dangerous.

Dir. 19. §. 62. Direct. 19. But remember, that the more examples you have to take warning by, the more unexcuſable is your fall. It was not the number of Angels that fell, that could keep them from being Devils and damned for their ſin: God will do Juſtice on many, as well as on one. The ſin is the greater, and therefore the puniſhment ſhall not be the leſs. Make the caſe your own: Will you think it a good reaſon for any one to abuſe you, beat you, rob you, becauſe that many have done ſo before? He ſhould rather think, that you are abuſed too much already, and therefore he ſhould not add to your wrongs. If when many had ſpit in Chriſts face or buffetted him, ſome one ſhould have given him another ſpit or blow, as if he had not enough before, would you not have taken him to be the worſt and cruelleſt of them all? If you do as the moſt, you'll ſpeed as the moſt.

Tem. 20. §. 63. Tempt. 20. It is a dangerous Temptation when the Devil propoſeth ſome very good end, and maketh ſin ſeem the fitteſt, or the neceſſary means to accompliſh it: when he blindeth men ſo far as to think that it is neceſſary to their ſalvation, or to other mens, or to the welfare of the Church, or progreſs of the Goſpel, or the pleaſing of God, then ſin will be committed without regret, and continued in without repentance; on this account it is that hereſie, and will-worſhip, and ſuperſtition are kept up, Col. 2. 18, 21, 22, 23. Having a ſhew of wiſdom in will-worſhip, and humility, and neglecting the Body. It is for God, that much of the wickedneſs of the world is done againſt God: It's for the Church and Truth, that Papiſts have murdered and perſecuted ſo many.

Dir. 20. §. 64. Direct. 20. Remember that God needeth no ſinful means to attain his ends: He will not be beholden to the Devil to do his work: He would not have forbad it, if he would have had you done it. He is never at ſuch a loſs, but he can find right means enough to perform his work by: It is a great part of our wiſdom which our ſalvation lieth on, to chooſe and uſe right means, when we are reſolved on a right end. It's a horrible injury againſt God, to intitle him to ſin, and make it ſeem neceſſary to his ends and honour. Good ends will not juſtifie evil actions. What ſin ſo odious that hath not had good ends pretended for it? Even Chriſt was murthered as a malefactor for good ends, at leaſt pretended; even to vindicate Gods honour from blaſphemy, and Cæſar from Injury, and the nation from calumny: And his diſciples were killed that God might be ſerved by it, and peſtilent Troublers of the world taken away.

John 16. 2. Act. 24. 5. Act. 17. 6.

Tem. 21. §. 65. Temp. 21. He would make us preſume becauſe we are Gods Children, and ſpecial Grace cannot be wholly loſt, and we have found that once we had grace; therefore we may venter as being ſafe.

Dir. 21. §. 66. Direct. 21. But many a thouſand ſhall be damned, that once thought they had the Truth of Grace: It is a hard Controverſie among learned and godly Men, whether ſome in a ſtate of Saving Grace do not fall from it and periſh: But it is paſt controverſie that they ſhall periſh that live and die impenitently in wilful ſin. To plead truth of grace, for encouragement in ſin, is ſo much againſt the nature and uſe of grace, as may make you queſtion the truth of it. You can be no ſurer that you have true grace, than you are ſure that you hate all known ſin, and deſire to be free from it. Chriſt teacheth you how to anſwer ſuch a horrid Temptation, Mat. 4 6, 7. If thou be the Son of God, caſt thy ſelf down: For it is written, he ſhall give his Angels charge over thee.——Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God: Sonſhip, and promiſes, and truth of grace, are incongruous Arguments to draw you to ſin: and heynous aggravations of ſin ſo committed.

§. 67. Tempt. 22. The Devil oft moſt dangerouſly imitateth the Holy Ghoſt, and comes in the ſhape of an Angel of Light: He will be for Knowledge in the Gnoſticks; for Unity and Government in the Papiſts; for Mortification in the Fryars; for Free-grace and Tenderneſs of our Brethrens Conſciences in the Libertines; for Peace and Mutual forbearance in the Socinians; for Zeal, Self-denyal, and fearfulneſs of men, and pretended revelations and ſpirituality in the Quakers; He will be againſt Hereſy, Schiſm, Error, Diſobedience, Hypocriſie, pretendedly, in Haters and Perſecutors of Holineſs and Reformation. And when he will ſeem religious, he will be ſuperſtitious, and ſeem to out-go Chriſt himſelf. Tem. 22.

§. 68. Direct. 22. Keep cloſe to Chriſt, that you may know his voice from the voice of Strangers: And get holy wiſdom to try the ſpirits, and to diſcern between the things that differ: Let the whole frame of Truth and Godlineſs be in your Head and Heart, that you may perceive when any would make a breach in any part of it. The Devil ſetteth up no good but in order to ſome evil. Therefore examin whither it tendeth; and not only what it is, but what uſe he would have you make of it. And love no Evil, becauſe of any Good that is pretended for it: and diſlike or reject no good becauſe of any evil uſe that is by others made of it. And whatever doctrine is brought you, try it thus. 1. Receive none that is againſt the certain Nature, Attributes and Honour of God. 2. Nor any that is againſt the Light or Law of Nature. 3. Nor any that is againſt the Scripture. 4. Nor any that is againſt Holineſs of heart and life. 5. Nor any againſt Charity and Juſtice to men. 6. Nor any (about matters to be ordered by men) that is againſt order; nor any againſt Government and the peace of Church and State. 7. Nor any that is againſt the true Unity, Peace and Communion of Saints. 8. Nor any that is certainly inconſiſtent with great and certain truths. Thus try the Spirits whether they be of God. Dir. 22.

§. 69. Tempt. 23. The Tempter uſually draweth men to one extream, under pretence of avoiding another: cauſing men to be ſo fearful of the danger on one ſide, as to take no heed of that on the other ſide. Tem. 23.

§. 70. Direct. 23. Underſtand all your danger; and mark the latitude or extent of Gods commands: and watch on every ſide: And you muſt know in what duties you are in danger of extreams and in what not: In thoſe acts of the ſoul that are purely rational about your ultimate end, you cannot do too much: as in knowing God, and Loving him, and being willing and reſolved to pleaſe him: But paſſions may poſſibly go too far, even about God; eſpecially fear and grief; for they may be ſuch as nature cannot bear without diſtraction, death or hindrance of duty: But few are guilty of this: But towards the creature paſſions may eaſily exceed: And in external actions towards God or man there may be exceſs. But eſpecially in point of Judgment, it's eaſie to ſlide from extream into extream. 2. And you muſt know in every duty you do, and every ſin which you avoid, and every truth you receive, what is the contrary or extream to that particular truth, or ſin, or duty: and keep it in your eye. If you do not thus watch, you will reel like a drunken man from ſide to ſide, and never walk uprightly with God. Dir. 23.

God. You will turn from Prodigality to Covetouſneſs; from cruel perſecution to Libertiniſm, or from Libertiniſm to perſecuting cruelty, from hypocritical formality to hypocritical pretended ſpirituality; or from enthuſiaſms, and faction to dead formality: But of this I have ſpoken at large Cap. 5. Part. 2. Dir. to Students.

Tem. 24. §. 71. Tempt. 24. On the contrary, the Tempter uſually pleadeth Moderation and Prudence againſt a holy life, and accurate zealous obedience to God: and would make you believe that to be ſo diligent in duty and ſcrupulouſly afraid of ſin, is to run into an extream, and to be righteous over much, and to make Religion a vexatious or diſtracting thing, and that it's more ado than needs.

Dir. 24. §. 72. Direct. 24. This I have anſwered ſo oft, that I ſhall here ſay but this: that God cannot be too much loved: nor Heaven too much valued, nor too diligently ſought or obeyed: nor ſin and Hell be too much avoided: nor doth any man need to fear doing too much, where he is ſure when he hath done his beſt to do too little. Hearken what men ſay of this at death.

Tem. 25. §. 73. Tempt. 25. The Tempter would perſwade us that one ſin is neceſſary to avoid another; and that of two evils you muſt chooſe the leſs: as if there were no other way: Thus James and John did by ſinful uncharitable zeal deſire to puniſh ſin, Luke 9. 54. Peter would ſinfully fight againſt the ſinful Jews, Mat. 26. 52. Thus he bids men lie to avoid ſome diſhonour to God and Religion, and perſecute to preſerve the unity of the Church, and keep out ſin; and commit a leſſer ſin themſelves to eſcape a greater.

Dir. 25. §. 74. Direct. 25. This is to abuſe God, as if he had made that neceſſary which he forbids, and had not provided you lawful means enough to uſe againſt every ſin! This is wilfully to do that which you pretend you are unwilling to do, even to ſin: Of two evils avoid both, but be ſure you conſent to neither.

Tem. 26. §. 75. Tempt. 25. He pleadeth Chriſtian Liberty to entice to ſin: eſpecially to ſenſuality: Hath not Chriſt purchaſed you Liberty to uſe the Creatures? all things are yours. No men but the godly have juſt title to them.

Dir. 26. §. 76. Direct. 26. He never purchaſed us Liberty to abuſe the Creature, as poyſon to hurt our ſelves; to hinder Mortification, and ſtrengthen our enemy, and our ſnare, and to ſteal away our hearts from God: It's a Liberty from ſin, and not a Liberty to ſin that Chriſt hath purchaſed us.

Tem. 27. §. 77. Tempt. 27. He pleadeth the Neceſſity of Wife, Children, Eſtate, Life, &c. Neceſſity makes it Lawful.

Dir. 27. §. 78. Direct. 27. There is no Neceſſity of ſinning. He cannot be Chriſts Diſciple, that thinks it more neceſſary to ſave his life, or provide for Wife, and Children than to obey his Lord, Luke 14. 26, 33. God muſt be Truſted with theſe.

Tem. 28. §. 79. Tempt. 28. But, ſaith the Tempter, it's Natural to Luſt, to love Honour, Eaſe, Pleaſure, &c. Therefore it's no ſin.

Dir. 28. §. 80. Direct. 28. Nature is corrupted and ſinful: And it's Natural to you to be Rational, and to rule your ſenſe and appetite by Reaſon, and not to do what luſt or appetite deſireth. Elſe man is but a beaſt.

Tem. 29. §. 81. Tempt. 29. But, ſaith the Tempter, Authority commandeth it: It is your Parents or Maſters will, and you muſt obey.

Dir. 29. §. 82. Direct. 29. There is no power but from God: Therefore none againſt him or above him: They muſt be obeyed in all things lawful, but not in ſin: They cannot ſave you nor themſelves from the wrath of God.

§. 83. Tempt. 30. But, ſaith the Tempter, you have promiſed or vowed that you will do it, and are not at liberty. Tem. 30.

§. 84. Direct. 30. The vow of a lawful thing muſt be kept: but if you vow to ſin, it's another ſin to perform it, and to wrong God or man becauſe you have vowed to wrong him. Dir. 30.

§. 85. Tempt. 31. But, ſaith the Tempter, it is a controverſie, and many learned and good men think it is no ſin. Tem. 31.

§. 86. Direct. 31. You have the more reaſon to be fearful and cautelous, when you ſee that the caſe is ſo obſcure, and the ſnare ſo ſubtle, and are ſure that many learned and good men on one ſide or other are deceived before you: Remember God is your King and Judge; who will not take it for an excuſe for ſin, that learned or good men did it, or defended it. Conſult not with fleſh and blood, but with God. Dir. 31.

§. 87. Tempt 32. But, ſaith the Tempter, will you be ſingular, and be pointed or hooted at by all? Tem. 32.

§. 88. Direct. 32. In doctrine I will not be ſingular from the Holy Catholick Church of God: In worſhip I will not in ſingularity or ſchiſm ſeparate from the Communion of Saints: But in doctrine I will be ſingular from Infidels and Hereticks: and in a holy life I will be ſingular from the ungodly, and prophane, and ſenſual; leſt if I do as they, to avoid their ſcorns, I ſpeed as they. Dir. 32.

§. 89. Tempt. 33. But you are weak, and you cannot help it, till God will give you grace to do it? Tem. 33.

§. 90. Direct. 33. Therefore I muſt not be wilful, and negligent, and raſh, and do that evil which I may forbear, nor reſiſt and refuſe that Grace, and help, and mercy without which I can do nothing. Dir. 33.

§. 91. Tempt. 34. But you repent and ask God forgiveneſs through Chriſt, every night for the ſins of the day. Tem. 34.

§. 92. Direct. 34. Repenting is a Sorrowful turning of the heart from ſin to God. You Repent not if you turn not. To mock God with ſuch Hypocritical praying and repenting is it ſelf a heinous ſin. Will you take it for Repenting if a man that ſpits in your face and beateth you, ſhall do it every day, and ask you forgiveneſs at night, and purpoſe to do it ſtill, becauſe he asked forgiveneſs. Dir. 34.

§. 93. Tempt. 35. But every man ſinneth daily: You do but as the beſt men in the world do. Tem. 35.

§. 94. Direct. 35. No true Chriſtian that is juſtified hath any ſin but what he hateth more than loveth, and would fain be rid of, and ſtriveth againſt in the uſe of holy means. He hath no beloved ſin which he would not part with, but had rather keep than leave. Dir. 35.

§. 95. Tempt. 36. But thoſe that ſeem ſtrict and godly are hypocrites and ſecretly as bad as you. Tem. 36.

§. 96. Direct. 36. This is juſt like the Devil, the accuſer of thoſe that are ſanctified and juſtified by Chriſt; the father of malice and lies; to charge that on them, which he confeſſeth is ſecret and he cannot prove. So he ſaid of Job that if he were touched in his eſtate or body he would forſake his godlineſs; but he was found a lyar. But be it how it will, I am ſure I muſt be Holy or I ſhall not ſee God, Heb. 12. 14. and if I live after the fleſh I ſhall die, and other mens miſery will be no eaſe to me. Rom. 8. 9, 13. Dir. 36.

§. 97. Tempt. 37. But, ſaith the Tempter, if you will not ſin, come but near it, and do that which is lawful. Tem. 37.

§. 98. Direct. 37. Indeed we muſt not run into a contrary extream, under pretence of flying far enough from ſin: But if you keep out of other ſin, you cannot go too far from any. To be near ſin, is to be near Gods wrath; and near that which tendeth to Dir. 37.

Hell fire. And to come near it is the common way of coming to it. He that could wish he might do it, is infected at the heart already. Keep a tender conscience, and a constant sense of the danger of sinning.

Tem 38. §. 99. Tempt. 38. It's a great snare, when sin is got into credit, 1. By putting fair names upon it, calling Luxury and Gluttony keeping a good house, and a good table; tipling is called, drinking a cup with a friend: Lust and filthiness is called Love: worldliness is called thriftiness and good husbandry: Idleness and loss of Time, is called the leisure of a Gentleman: slothfulness is called, a not being too worldly: Time wasting sports are called, Recreations: Pride is called, Decency and Handsomness: Proud revenge is called Honour and Gallantry Romish cruelty, and persecution, and wasting the Church, is called, keeping up order, obedience and unity. Disobedience to superiors is called, not fearing man: Church-divisions are called strictness and zeal. 2. Specially if a sin be not in disgrace among the stricter sort, it greatly prepareth men to commit it, As breaking the Lords day beyond sea in many reformed Churches: And at home, spiritual pride, censoriousness, backbiting, disobedience and Church-divisions, are not in half that disgrace among many professors of strictness, as they deserve, and as swearing, &c. is.

Dir. 38. §. 100. Direct. 38. Remember that what ever be the Name or Cloak, God judgeth righteously, according to the truth, Names may deceive us, but not our Judge. And sin is still in disgrace with God, however it be with men. Remember the comlier the paint and cover is, the greater is the danger, and the more watchful and cautelous we should be. It is not imperfect man, but the perfect Law of God, which must be our Rule. The great success of this Temptation should deter us from entertaining it! What abundance of mischief hath it done in the world?

Tem. 39. §. 101. Tempt. 39. Sometime the Devil tempteth men to some heinous sin, that if he prevail not, at least: he may draw them into a less: As cheating chafferers will ask twice the price of their commodity, that by abating much they may make you willing to give too much: He that would get a little must ask a great deal. He will tempt you to drunkenness, and if he draw you but to tipling or time-wasting he hath got something. If he tempt you to fornication, and he get you but to some filthy thoughts or immodest lascivious talk or actions, he hath done much of that which he intended: If he tempt you to some horrid cruelty, and you yeild but to some less degree, or to some unjust or uncharitable censures, you think you have conquered, when it's he that conquereth.

Dir. 39. §. 102. Direct. 39. Remember that the least degree of sin is sin, and death the wages of it, Romans 6. 23. Think not that you have scapt well, if your hearts have taken any of the infection, or if you have been wounded any where, though it might have been worse. If the Tempter had tempted you no further but to a lustful malicious or proud thought or word, you would perceive that if he prevail, he conquereth: so may you when he getteth this much by a shameless asking more.

Tem. 40. §. 103. Tempt. 40. He tempteth us sometime to be so fearful and careful against one sin, or about some one danger, as to be mindless of some other, and lie open to his temptation: Like a Fencer that will seem to aim all at one place that he may strike you in another while you are guarding that: Or like an enemy that giveth all the alarm at one end of the City, that he may draw the people thither, while he stormeth in another place: So Satan makes some so afraid of worldliness that they watch not against idleness; or so fearful of hard-heartedness, and deadness, and hypocrisie, that they watch not against Passion, neglect of their callings, or dejectedness; or so fearful of sinning or being deceived about their salvation, that they fear not the want of Love, and Joy, and Thankfulness for all the mercy they have received, nor the neglect of holy Praise to God.

§. 104. Direct. 40. Remember that as obedience must be entire and universal, so is Satans temptation against all parts of our obedience; and our care must extend to all if we will escape. It would cure your inordinate fear in some one point, if you extended it to all the rest. Dir. 40.

§. 105. Tempt. 41. Sometime by the suddenness of a temptation he surprizeth men before they are aware. Tem 41.

§. 106. Direct. 41. Be never unarmed nor from your watch: especially as to Thoughts or sudden Passions, or rash words, which are used to be committed for want of deliberation. Dir. 41.

§. 107. Tempt. 42. Sometime he useth a violent earnestness, especially when he getteth Passion on his side: So that Reason is born down; and the sinner saith, I could not forbear. Tem. 42.

§. 108. Direct. 42. But remembet that the very eager unruliness of your passion is a sin it self: and that none can compel you to sin: and that Reason must deliberate and rule; or else any murder or wickedness may have the excuse of urgent passions. Dir. 42.

§. 109. Tempt. 43. Sometime he useth the violence of men: They threaten men to frighten them into sin. Tem. 43.

§. 110. Direct. 43. But is not God and his threatnings more to be feared? Do men threaten imprisonment or death or ruine; And doth not God threaten everlasting misery? And can he not defend you from all that man shall threaten if it be best for you? See the portion of the fearful, Rev. 21. 8. Dir. 43.

§. 111. Tempt. 44. Sometime variety of temptations distracteth men, that they do not look to all at once. Tem. 44.

§. 112. Direct. 44. Remember that one part of the City unguarded may lose the whole in a general assault. Dir. 44.

§. 113. Tempt. 45. Sometime he ceaseth, to make us secure, and lay by our armes, and then surpriseth us. Tem. 45.

§. 114. Direct. 45. Take heed of security, and Satans ambushments. Distinguish between cessation and conquest. You conquer not every time that you have rest and quietness from temptation: Till the sin be hated, and the contrary grace or duty in practice, you have not at all overcome: And when that's done, yet trust not the Devil or the flesh; nor think the war will be shorter than your lives: For one assault will begin where the former ended. Make use of every cessation but to prepare for the next encounter. Dir. 45.

§. 115. Tempt. 46. He will tempt you to take striving for overcoming: and to think because you pray and make some resistance that sin is conquered: And because your Desires are good, all is well. Tem. 46.

§. 116. Direct. 46. But all that fight do not overcome: If a man strive for Masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully, 1 Tim. 2. 5. Many will seek to enter and shall not be able, Luke 13. 24. Dir. 46.

§. 117. Tempt. 47. He followeth the sinner with frequency and importunity, till he weary him and make him yield. Tem. 47.

§. 118. Direct. 47. Remember that Christ is as importunate with thee to save thee, as the Devil can be to damn thee; and which then should prevail? 2. Be you as constant in resistance: Be as oft in prayer and other confirming means: Do as Paul, 2 Cor. 12. 7, 8. who prayed thrice (as Christ did in his Dir. 47.

his agony), when the prick in the flesh was not removed. 3. Tempt not the Tempter, by giving him encouragement. A faint Denial is an Invitation to ask again. Give him quickly a flat Denial, and put him out of hope, if you would shorten the temptation.

Tem. 48. §. 119. Tempt. 48. Lastly, the Devil would sink the sinner in despair, and perswade him now it is too late.

Dir. 48. §. 120. Direct. 48. Observe his design, that it is but to take off that Hope which is the weight to set the wheels of the soul a going. In all he is against God and you: In other sins he is against Gods Authority: In this he is against his Love and Mercy. Read the Gospel and you will find, that Christs death is sufficient: the promise is universal, full and free; and that the day of Grace is so far continued till the day of death, and no man shall be denied it that truly desireth it: And that the same God that forbiddeth thy Presumption, forbiddeth also thy despair.

Tit. 3. Temptations to draw us off from Duty.

Tem. 9. §. 1. Tempt. 1. THE greatest Temptation against duty, is by perswading men that it is no duty: Thus in our days we have seen almost all duty cast off by this erroneous fancy. One saith, that the holy Observation of the Lords day is not commanded of God in Scripture: Another saith, What Scripture have you for family prayer, or singing Psalms, or baptizing Infants, or praying before and after Sermon, or for your Office, Ordination, Tythes, Churches, &c. Another saith, that Church-Government and Discipline are not of Divine Institution: Another saith, that Baptism and the Lords Supper were but for that age: And thus all duty is taken down instead of doing it.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. Read and fear, Matth. 5. 19. Whosoever shall break one of these least Commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the Kingdom of Heaven: But whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the Kingdom of Heaven. Denying duty, is too easie a way of evading obedience to serve turn. Denying the Laws that bind you to publick payments will not save you from them; but for all that if you deny, you must be distrained on. And God will make it dearer to you, if you put him to distrain on you for duty: Must he go to Law with you for it? He'll quickly shew you Law for it, and prove that it was your duty. Open your doubts to able men, and you will hear more evidence than you know: But if pride and false-heartedness blind you, must bear your Punishment.

Temp. 2. §. 3. Tempt. 2. Saith the Tempter, It is a duty to weak ones, but not for you: You must not be still under Ordinances, in the lower form: every day must be a Sabbath to you, and every bit a Sacrament, and every place as a Church: you must live above Ordinances in Christ.

Dir. 2. See my two Sheets for the Ministry. § 4. Direct. 2. We must live above Mosaical Ordinances, Col. 2. 18, 21. but not above Christs Ordinances: unless you will live above obedience, and above the Government of Christ: Hath not Christ appointed the Ministry and Church-helps, till we all come to a perfect man? Ephes. 4. 13. and promised to be with them to the end of the world? Matth. 28. 20. It is befooling Pride that can make you think you have no need of Christs instituted means.

Temp. 3. §. 5. Temp. 3. But thou art unworthy to pray or receive the Sacrament: It's not for Dogs.

Dir. 3. §. 6. Direct. 3. The wilful impenitent Refusers of Grace are unworthy: The willing soul that fain would be what God would have him, hath an accepted worthiness in Christ.

§. 7. Tempt. 4. But while you doubt, you do it not in faith; and therefore to you it is sin. Temp. 4.

§. 8. Direct. 4. But is it not a greater sin to leave it undone? Will doubting of all duty, excuse you from it? Then you have an easie way to be free from all! Do but doubt whether you should believe in God, or Christ, or love him, or live a godly life, and it seems you think it will excuse you. But if you doubt whether you should feed your child, you deserve to be hanged for murthering it, if you famish it: If you doubt of duty, it is duty still, and you are first bound to lay by your Doubts: But things indifferent left to your choice, must not be done with a doubting conscience: It was of such things that Paul spake. Dir. 4.

§. 9. Temp. 5. The Devil puts somewhat still in the way, that seemeth necessary, to thrust out duty. Temp. 5.

§. 10. Direct. 5. God hath not set you work, which he alloweth you no Time for: Is all your time spent in better things? Is it not your carnal mind that makes you think carnal things most needful? Christ saith, One thing is needful, Luke 10. 42. Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you. Had you that love and delight in holiness as you should, you would find time for it. An unwelcome Guest is put off with any excuse. Others as poor as you, can find time for duty, because they are willing. Set your business in order, and let every thing keep its proper place, and you may have time for every duty. Dir. 5. Mat. 6. 33.

§. 11. Tempt. 6. But you are so unable and unskilful to pray, to learn, that it's as good never meddle with it. Tem. 6.

§. 12. Direct. 6. Set your selves to learn, and mark those that have skill: and do what you can: You must learn by practice: The unskilfullest duty is better than none. Unworded groans come oft from the Spirit of God, and God understandeth and accepteth them, Rom. 8. 26, 27. Dir. 6.

§. 13. Tempt. 7. It will be so hard and long to learn, that you will never overcome it. Tem. 7.

§. 14. Direct. 7. Willingness and Diligence have the Promise of Gods help. Remember, it is a thing that must be done. When your own disuse and sin hath made it hard, will you put God and your souls off with that as an excuse? If you had neglected to teach your child to speak or go when it is young, should he therefore never learn? Will you despair, and let go all your hope on this Pretence? or will you hope to be saved without prayer and other holy duty? How foolish are both these? Sick men must eat, though their stomachs be against it; they cannot live else. Dir. 7.

§. 15. Tempt. 8. But thou findest thou art but the worse for duty, and never the better for it. Temp. 8.

§. 16. Direct. 8. Satan will do what he can to make it go worse with you after, than before. He will discourage you if he can, by hindring your success that he may make you think it is to no purpose: so many Preachers, because they have fished long and catcht nothing, grow cold and heartless, and ready to sit down, and say as Jer. 20. 9. I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his Name. So in Prayer, Sacrament, Reproof, &c. the Devil makes great use of this, What good hath it done thee? But Patience and perseverance win the Crown. The beginning is seldom a time to perceive success: The Carpenter is long at work before he rear a house: Nature brings not forth the Plant or birth the first day. Your life-time is your working-time. Do your part, and God will not fail on his part. It is his part to give success; and dare you accuse him, or suspect him? There is more of the Success of Prayer to be believed, than to be felt. If God have Dir. 8.

promiſed to hear, he doth hear, and we muſt believe it, whether we feel it or not. Prayers are oft heard long before the thing is ſent us that we prayed for: We pray for Heaven, but ſhall not be there till death. If Moſes his meſſage to Pharoah ten times ſeem loſt, it is not loſt for all that. What work would ever have been done, if on the firſt conceit of unſucceſsfulneſs it had been given off? Be glad that thou haſt time to plow and ſow, to do thy part, and if God will give thee fruit at laſt.

Temp. 9. §. 17. Tempt. 9. But, ſaith the Tempter, it goeth worſe with thee in the world, ſince thou ſetteſt thy ſelf to read, and pray, and live obediently: Thou haſt been poorer, and ſicker, and more deſpiſed ſince, than ever before, Jer. 20. 8. Thou art a deriſion daily, every one mocketh thee: This thou getteſt by it.

Dir. 9. §. 18. Direct. 9. He began not well, that counted not that it might coſt him more than this, to be a holy Chriſtian: If God in Heaven be not enough to be thy portion, never ſerve him, but find ſomething better if thou canſt. He that cannot loſe the world, cannot uſe it as he ought. If thou hadſt rather be at the Devils finding and uſage, than at Gods, thou art worthy to ſpeed accordingly. Nay, if thou think thy ſoul it ſelf worſe, remember that we are not worſt, when we are troubled moſt. Phyſick makes ſick, when it works aright.

Tem. 10. §. 19. Tempt. 10. Satan filleth many with abundance of ſcruples about every duty, that they come to it as ſick perſons to their meat, with a peeviſh quarrelling diſpoſition: This aileth and that aileth it, ſomething is ſtill amiſs, that they cannot get it down. This fault the Miniſter hath in praying or preaching; or the other circumſtance is amiſs; or the other fault is in the company that joyn with them: and all is to turn them off from all.

Dir. 10. §. 20. Direct. 10. But do you mend the matter by caſting off all, or by running into greater inconveniencies: Is not their imperfect prayer and communion, better than your idle neglect of all, or unwarrantable diviſion? It is a ſign of an upright heart to be moſt about heart-obſervation, and quarrelſome with themſelves, and the mark of hypocrites to be moſt quarrelſome againſt the manner of other mens performances, and to be eaſily driven by any pretences from the Worſhip of God, and communion of Saints.

Tem. 11. §. 21. Tempt. 11. The Devil will ſet one duty againſt another: Reading againſt hearing, praying againſt preaching, private againſt publick, outward and inward worſhip againſt each other, mercy and juſtice, piety and charity, againſt each other; and ſtill labour to eject the greater.

Dir. 11. §. 22. Direct. 11. The work of God is an harmonious and well compoſed frame: If you leave out a part, you ſpoil the whole, and diſadvantage your ſelves in all the reſt: Place them aright, and each part helpeth and not hindreth another: Plead one for another; but caſt by none.

Tem. 12. §. 23. Tempt. 12. The commoneſt and foreſt temptation is, by taking away our appetite to holy duties, by abating our feeling of our own neceſſity: when the ſoul is ſleepy, and feeleth no need of prayer, or reading, or hearing, or meditating, but thinks it ſelf tolerably well without it; or elſe grows ſick and is againſt it, and troubled to uſe it; ſo that every duty is like eating to a ſick ſtomach, then it is eaſie to tempt it to neglect or omit many a duty: A little thing will ſerve to put it by, when men feel no need of it.

Dir. 12. §. 24. Direct. 12. O keep up a lively ſenſe of your neceſſities: Remember ſtill that Time is ſhort, and death is near, and you are too unready. Keep acquaintance with your hearts and lives, and every day will tell you of your neceſſities: which are greateſt when they are leaſt perceived.

§. 25. Tempt. 13. The Tempter gets much by aſcribing the ſucceſs of holy means to our own endeavour, or to chance or ſomething elſe, and making us overlook that preſent benefit, which would greatly encourage us: As when we are delivered from ſickneſs or danger upon prayer, he tells you, ſo you might have been delivered if you had never prayed? Was it not by the Phyſicians care and skill, and by ſuch an excellent medicine? If you proſper in any buſineſs, was it not by your own contrivance and diligence? Tem. 13.

§. 26. Direct. 13. This ſeparating God and means, when God worketh by means, is the folly of Atheiſts. When God heareth thy prayer in ſickneſs, or other danger, he ſheweth it by directing the Phyſician or thy ſelf to the fitteſt means, and bleſſing that means, and he is as really the cauſe, and prayer the firſt means, as if he wrought thy deliverance by a Miracle. Do not many uſe the ſame Phyſician and Medicine, and labour, and diligence, who yet miſcarry? Juſt obſervation of the anſwers of prayer might do much to cure this. All our induſtry may ſay as Peter and John, Acts 3. 12. Why look ye ſo earneſtly on us, as if by our own power or holineſs we had done this? When God is glorifying his grace, and owning his appointed means. Dir. 13.

§. 27. Tempt. 14. Laſtly, the Devil ſetteth up ſomething elſe in oppoſition to holy duty, to make it ſeem unneceſſary: In ſome he ſets up their good deſires, and ſaith God knoweth thy heart without expreſſing it, and thou maiſt have as good a heart at home, as at Church. In ſome he ſets up ſuperſtitious fopperies of mans deviſing, inſtead of Gods Inſtitution: In ſome he pretendeth the Spirit againſt external duty, and ſaith, The Spirit is all; the fleſh profiteth nothing: yea, in ſome he ſets up Chriſt himſelf againſt Chriſts Ordinances, and ſaith, It is not theſe, but Chriſt, that profits you. Tem. 14.

§. 28. Direct. 14. This is diſtracted contradiction: To ſet Chriſt againſt Chriſt, and the Spirit againſt the Ordinances of the Spirit: Is it not Chriſt and the Spirit that appointed them? Doth he not beſt know in what way he will give his grace? Can you not preſerve the ſoul and life, without killing the Body: Cannot you have the Water, and value the Ciſtern, or Spring, without cutting off the pipes that muſt convey it. O wonderful! that Satan could make men ſo mad, as this reaſoning hath ſhewed us that many are in our days? And to ſet up ſuperſtition or pretend a good heart againſt Gods worſhip, is to accuſe him that appointed it of doing he knew not what, and to think that we are wiſer than he? and to ſhew a good heart by diſobedience, pride, contempt of God and of his mercies. Dir. 14.

Tit. 4. Temptations to fruſtrate holy duties, and make them uneffectual.

§. 1. THe Devil is exceeding diligent in this: 1. That he may make the ſoul deſpair, and ſay, Now I have uſed all means in vain, there is no hope. 2. To double the ſinners miſery by turning the very remedy into a diſeaſe. 3. To ſhew his malice againſt Chriſt, and ſay, I have turned thy own means to thy diſhonour.

§. 2. Conſider therefore how greatly we are concerned to do the work of God effectually. Means well uſed are the way to more grace, to communion with God, and to ſalvation: But ill uſed, they diſhonour and provoke him, and deſtroy our ſelves, like children that cut their fingers with the knife, when they ſhould cut their meat with it.

§. 3. Tempt. 1. Duty is fruſtrated by falſe ends: As 1. To procure God to bear with them in their ſin: Temp. 1.

sin: (whereas it is the use of duty to destroy sin:) 2. To make God satisfaction for sin (which is the work of Christ:) 3. To merit grace (when the imperfection merits wrath:) 4. To prosper in the world and escape affliction, Jam. 4. 3. (and so they are but serving their flesh, and desiring God to serve it.) 5. To quiet conscience in a course of sin (by sinning more in offering the sacrifice of fools, Eccles. 5. 1, 2.) 6. To be approved of men (and verily they have their reward, Matth. 6. 5.) 7. To be saved when they can keep the world and sin no longer (that is, to obtain that the Gospel may all be false and God unjust.)

Dir. 1. §. 4. Direct. 1. First see that the Heart be honest, and God, and Heaven, and Holiness most desired, else all that you do will want right ends.

Temp. 2. §. 5. Tempt. 2. When ignorance or error make men take God for what he is not, thinking blasphemously of him, as if he were like them, and liked their sins, or were no lover of Holiness, they frustrate all their worship of him.

Dir. 2. §. 6. Direct. 2. Study God in his Son, in his Word, in his Saints, in his Works: Know him as described before, Chap. 3. Direct. 4. And see that your wicked corrupted hearts, or wilful forgetting him, blind not your understandings.

Temp. 3. §. 7. Tempt. 3. To come to God in our selves and out of Christ, and use his name but customarily, and not in faith and confidence.

Dir. 3. §. 8. Direct. 3. Know well your sin, and vileness, and desert, and the Justice and Holiness of God, and then you will see that if Christ reconcile you not, and Justifie you not by his blood, and do not sanctifie and help you by his Spirit, and make you sons of God, and intercede not for you, there is no access to God, nor standing in his sight.

Temp. 4. §. 9. Tempt. 4. The Tempter would have you pray hypocritically, with the tongue only without the heart: To put off God in a few customary words with seeming to pray (as they do the poor, Jam. 2. with a few empty words) either in a form of words not understood, or not considered, or not felt and much regarded; or in more gross hypocrisie, praying for the Holiness which they will not have, and against the sin which they will not part with.

Dir. 4. §. 10. Direct. 4. O fear the holy, jealous, heart-searching God that hateth hypocrisie, and will be worshipped seriously in Spirit and Truth, and will be sanctified of all that draw near him, Lev. 10. 3. and saith they worship him in vain, that draw nigh him with the lips, when the heart is far from him, Mat. 15. 8, 9. See God by faith, as present with thee, and know thy self, and it will waken thee to seriousness. See Heb. 4. 13. Hos. 8. 12, 13.

Temp. 5. §. 11. Tempt. 5. He would destroy Faith and Hope, and make you doubt whether you shall get any thing by duty.

Dir. 5. §. 12. Direct. 5. But, 1. Why should God command it, and promise us his blessing if he meant not to perform it? 2. Remember Gods Infiniteness, and Omnipresence, and All-sufficiency: He is as verily with thee, as thou art there, he upholdeth thee, he sheweth by his mercies, that he regardeth thee; and by his regarding lower things: And if he regard thee, he doth regard thy duties. It is all one with him to hear thy prayers, as if he had never another creature to regard and hear. Believe then and hope and wait upon him.

Temp. 6. §. 13. Tempt. 6. Sometime the Tempter will promise you more by holy duty, than God doth, and make you expect deliverance from every enemy, want and sickness, and speedier deliverance of soul, than ever God promised; and all this is, to make you cast away all as vain, and think God faileth you, when you miss your expectations.

Dir. 6. §. 14. Direct. 6. But God will do all that He promiseth, but not all that the Devil or your selves promise. See what God promiseth in his Word. That's enough for you. Make that and no more the end of duties.

§. 15. Tempt. 7. The Tempter usually would draw you from the heart and life of duty, by too much ascribing to the out-side: Laying too much on the bare doing of the work, the giving of the alms, the hearing of the Sermons, the saying the words, the handsome expression, order, manner, which in their places are all good, if animated with spirit, life and seriousness. Temp. 7.

§. 16. Direct. 7. Look most and first to the soul in duty, and the soul of duty: The picture of meat feedeth not; the picture of fire warmeth not: Fire and shadows will not nourish us: God loveth not dead carcasses instead of spiritual worship, we regard not words our selves, further than they express the Heart. Let the outer part have but its due. Dir. 7.

§. 17. Tempt. 8. He tempteth you to rest in a forced affected counterfeit fervency, stirred up by a desire to take with others. Temp. 8.

§. 18. Direct. 8. Look principally at God and holy motives, and less at men, that all your fire be holy, fetcht from Heaven. Dir. 8.

§. 19. Tempt. 9. He would keep you in a lazy sluggish coldness, to read, and hear, and pray as asleep, as if you did it not. Temp. 9.

§. 20. Direct. 9. Awake your selves with the presence of God, and the great concernment of what you are about, and yield not to your sloth. Dir. 9.

§. 21. Tempt. 10. He would make you bring a divided distracted heart to duty, that is half about your worldly business. Tem. 10.

§. 22. Direct. 10. Remember God is jealous, your business with him is great, much lyeth on it, call off your hearts, and let them not stay behind, all the powers of your souls are little enough in such a work, Ezek, 33. 31. Dir. 10.

§. 23. Tempt. 11. Ignorance, unskilfulness and unacquaintedness with duty, is a great impediment to most. Tem. 11.

§. 24. Direct. 11. Learn by study joyned with practice. Be not weary, and difficulties will be overcome. Dir. 11.

§. 25. Tempt. 12. Putting duty out of its place, and neglecting the season that is fittest, makes it oft done slightly.

§. 26. Direct. 12. Redeem time, and dispatch other business, that idleness deprive you not of leisure, and do all in order. Dir. 12.

§. 27. Tempt. 13. Neglecting one duty is the Tempters snare to spoil another: If he can keep you from reading, you will not understand well what you hear: If he keep you from meditating, you will not digest what you hear or read: If he keep you from hearing, you will want both matter and life for prayer, and meditation, and conference: If he keep you from godly company, you will be hindred in all, and in the practice: No one is omitted, but you are disadvantaged by it in all the rest. Tem. 13.

§. 28. Direct. 13. Observe how one duty helpeth another, and take all together each one in its place. Dir. 13.

§. 29. Tempt. 14. Sometime the Tempter doth call you off to other duty, and puts in unseasonable motions to that which in its time is good: he interrupts prayer by meditation, he sets seeming truth against Love, and Peace, and Concord. Tem. 14.

§. 30. Direct. 14. Still know which duties are greatest, and which is the due season for each, and do all in order. Dir. 14.

§. 31. Tempt. 15. He spoileth duty, by causing you to do it only as a duty, and not as a means for the good of your own souls, or only as a Means, and not as a Duty: If you do it only as a Duty, then you will not be quickned to it by the ends and benefits, nor carryed by Hope, nor fit all to the end, nor be so fervent or vigorous in it as the sense Tem. 15.

of your own good would make you be. And if you do it only as a Means, and not as a Duty, then you will give over or faint, when you want or question the ſucceſs: Whereas the ſenſe of both would make you vigorous and conſtant.

Dir. 15. §. 32. Direct. 15. Keep under the ſenſe of Gods Authority, that you may feel your ſelves bound to obey him, whatever be the ſucceſs; and may reſolve to wait in an obedient way: And withal admire his wiſdom in fitting all Duties to your Benefit, and commanding you nothing but what is for your own or others good, or to his honour: And mark the Reaſon and tendency of all; and your own Neceſſity.

Tem. 16. §. 33. Tempt. 16. The Tempter hindreth you in duty, as well as from duty, by ſetting you a quarrelling with the Miniſter, the words, the company, the manner, the circumſtances, that theſe things may divert your thoughts from the matter, or diſtract your mind with cauſeleſs ſcruples.

Dir. 16. §. 34. Direct. 16. Pray and labour for a clear judgment, and an upright, ſelf-judging, humble heart, which dwelleth moſt at home, and looketh moſt at the ſpiritual part, and affecteth not ſingularity.

Tem 17. §. 35. Tempt. 17. The Tempter ſpoileth duty by your unconſtancy: While you read or pray ſo ſeldom that you have loſt the benefit of one duty, before you come to another, and cool by intermiſſions.

Dir. 17. §. 36. Direct. 17. Remember that it is not your divertiſement, but your Calling, and is to your ſoul, as eating to your Bodies.

Tem. 18. §. 37. Tempt. 18. Sometime Satan corrupteth Duty by mens private paſſions, intereſt, and opinions, making men in preaching and praying to vent their own conceits and ſpleen, and inveigh againſt thoſe that differ from them, or offend them, and prophane the name and work of God: or proudly to ſeek the praiſe of men.

Dir. 18. §. 38. Direct. 18. Remember that God is moſt jealous in his Worſhip, and hateth hypocritical prophaneneſs above all prophaneneſs: Search your hearts, and mortifie your paſſions, and ſpecially ſelfiſhneſs; Remembring that it is a poyſonous and inſinuating ſin, and will eaſily hide it ſelf with a Cloke of zeal.

Tem. 19. §. 39. Tempt. 19. Falſe hearted Reſervedneſs is a moſt accurſed corrupter of holy duty, when the ſoul is not wholly given up to God, but ſets upon duty from ſome common motive, as becauſe it is in credit, or to pleaſe ſome friend, purpoſing to try it a while, and leave it if they like it not.

Dir. 19. §. 40. Direct. 19. Fear God thou Hypocrite, and halt not between two opinions. If the Lord be God, obey and ſerve him with all thy heart: But if the Devil, and the fleſh be better Maſters, follow them, and let him go.

Tem. 20. §. 41. Tempt. 20. Laſtly, The Tempter hindereth holy duty much by wandring thoughts, and melancholy perplexities, and a hurry of Temptations, which torment and diſtract ſome Chriſtians, ſo that they cry out, I cannot pray, I cannot meditate; and are weary of duty, and even of their lives.

Dir. 20. §. 42. Direct. 20. This ſheweth the malice of the Tempter, and thy weakneſs, but if thou hadſt rather be delivered from it, it hindereth not thy acceptance with God. Read for this what I have ſaid Chap. 5. Part 2. at large, ſpecially in my Directions to the Melancholy.

§. 43. I have been forced to put off many things briefly here, which deſerved a larger handling, and I muſt now omit the diſcovery of thoſe Temptations, by which Satan keepeth men in ſin, when he hath drawn them into it. 2. And thoſe by which he cauſeth declining in grace, and Apoſtaſie. 3. And thoſe by which he diſcomforteth true Believers; becauſe elſe this Direction would ſwell to a Treatiſe, and moſt will think it too long and tedious already, though the Brevity which I uſe to avoid prolixity, doth wrong the matter through the whole. Acquaintance with Temptations is needful to our overcoming them.

DIRECT. III.

Your lives muſt be laid out in doing God ſervice, and doing all the good you can, in works of piety, juſtice and charity, with prudence, fidelity, induſtry, zeal and delight, remembring that you are engaged to God as ſervants to their Lord and Maſter, and are entruſted with his talents, of the improvement whereof you muſt give an account.

Grand Dir. 10. For ſerving Chriſt our Maſter in good works.

§. 1. THe next Relation between Chriſt and us, which we are to ſpeak of (ſubordinate to that of King and Subjects) is this of MASTER and SERVANTS. Though Chriſt ſaith to the Apoſtles, John 15. 5. Henceforth I call you not ſervants, but friends: the meaning is not that he calleth them not ſervants at all, but not meer ſervants, they being more than ſervants having ſuch acquaintance with his counſels as his friends. For he preſently, verſe 20. bids them Remember that the ſervant is not greater than the Lord. And John 13. 13. Ye call me Maſter and Lord, and ye ſay well, for ſo I am. And Matth. 23. 8. One is your Maſter, Chriſt; and all ye are brethren: So ver. 10. And the Apoſtles called themſelves the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 1. 1. & 1 Cor. 4. 1. Phil. 1. 1. and of God, Tit. 1. 1, &c.

§. 2. He is called our Maſter, and we his ſervants, becauſe he is our Rector, ex pleno domino with abſolute propriety, and doth not give us Laws to Obey, while we do our own work, but giveth us his work to do, and Laws for the right doing of it: And it is a ſervice under his eye, and in dependance on him for our daily proviſions, as ſervants on their Lord. God hath WORK for us to do in the world; and the performance of it he will require. God biddeth his Sons, Go work to day in my Vineyard, Matth. 21. 28. and expecteth that they do it, ver. 31. His Servants are as Husbandmen to whom he entruſteth his Vineyard, that he may receive the fruit, ver. 33, 34, 41, 43. Faithful ſervants ſhall be made Rulers over his houſhold, Matth. 24. 45, 46. Chriſt delivereth to his ſervants his talents to improve, and will require an account of the improvement at his coming, Mat. 25. 14. GOOD WORKS in the proper comprehenſive ſenſe, are all actions internal and external, that are morally good: But in the narrower acception, they are Works not only formerly good, as acts of Obedience in general, but alſo materially good, ſuch as a ſervant doth for his Maſter, that tend to his advantage, or the profit of ſome other, whoſe welfare he regardeth. Becauſe the doctrine of GOOD WORKS is controverted in theſe times, I ſhall firſt open it briefly, and then give you the Directions.

What it is to be Chriſts Servants.

§. 3. 1. Nothing is more certain, than that God doth not need the ſervice of any creature, and that he receiveth no addition to his perfection or felicity from it; and conſequently that on terms of commutative Juſtice (which giveth one thing for another, as in ſelling and buying) no creature is capable of meriting at his hands.

2. It is certain, that on the terms of the Law of Works (which required perfect obedience as the condition of life) no ſinner can do any work ſo good, as in point of diſtributive governing Juſtice, ſhall merit at his hands.

3. It

3. It is certain that Chriſt hath ſo fulfilled the Law of Works, as to Merit for us.

4. The Redeemed are not Maſterleſs, but have ſtill a Lord who hath now a double Right to govern them: And this Governour giveth them a Law: And this Law requireth us to do good works, as much as we are able (though not ſo terribly yet) as obligingly as the Law of Works: And by this (of Chriſt) we muſt be Judged: And thus we muſt be judged according to our works, and to be judged is nothing elſe but to be Juſtified or Condemned: Such works therefore are Rewardable according to the Diſtributive Juſtice of the Law of Grace, by which we muſt be Judged: And the Antient Fathers who (without any oppoſition) ſpoke of Good works as Meritorious with God, meant no more, but that they were ſuch as the Righteous Judge of the world will Reward according to the Law of Grace, by which he judgeth us. And this doctrine being agreed on as certain truth, there is no controverſie left with them, but whether the word Merit was properly or improperly uſed: And that both Scripture and our common ſpeech alloweth the Fathers uſe of the word, I have ſhewed at large in my Confeſſion.

5. Chriſt is ſo far from Redeeming us from a neceſſity of good works, that he dyed to reſtore us to a capacity and ability to perform them, and hath new made us for that end, Tit. 2. 14. He gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie to himſelf a peculiar people zealous of good works, Epheſ. 2. 10. For we are his workmanſhip created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works, which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them.

6. Good works oppoſed to Chriſt, or his ſatisfaction, merit, righteouſneſs, mercy, or free-grace in the matter of Juſtification or Salvation, are not good works, but proud ſelf confidence and ſin: But good works in their due ſubordination to Gods mercy, and Chriſts merits and grace, are neceſſary and Rewardable.

7. Though God need none of our works, yet that which is good materially pleaſeth him, as it tendeth to his glory, and to our own and others benefit, which he delighteth in.

8. It is the communicating of his goodneſs and excellencies to the creature, by which God doth glorifie himſelf in the world: and in Heaven where is the fulleſt Communication, he is moſt glorified: Therefore the praiſe which is given to the creature, who receiveth all from him, is his own praiſe: And it is no diſhonour to God, that his creature be honoured, by being good, and being eſteemed good: Otherwiſe God would never have created any thing, leſt it ſhould derogate from himſelf: Or he would have made them bad, leſt their goodneſs were his diſhonour; and he would be moſt pleaſed with the wicked, and leaſt pleaſed with the beſt, as moſt diſhonouring him: But madneſs it ſelf abhorreth theſe conceits.

9. Therefore as an act of Mercy to us, and for his own Glory (as at firſt he made all things very good, ſo) he will make the new creature according to his Image, which is Holy, and Juſt, and Good, and will uſe us in good works; and it is our honour, and gain, and happineſs to be ſo uſed by him: As he will not communicate Light to the world without the Sun (whoſe glory derogateth not from his honour:) So will he not do good works in the world immediately by himſelf only, but by his ſervants, whoſe calling and daily buſineſs it muſt be, as that which they are made for, as the Sun is made to give light and heat to inferiour things: Epheſ. 2. 10. Matth. 5. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven. Chriſt was far from their opinion that think all good works that are attributed to good men are diſhonourable to God.

10. He is moſt beholden to God, that is moſt exerciſed in good works: The more we do, the more we receive from him: And our very doing it ſelf is our Receiving: For it is he that giveth us both to will and to do by his operation in us, Phil. 2. 13. Even he without whom we can do nothing, John 15. 5.

11. The obligation to good works, that is, to works of Piety, Juſtice and Charity, is eſſential to us as ſervants of the Lord: We are practical Atheiſts, if we do not works of piety to God: we are rebels againſt God, and enemies to our ſelves, and unmeet for humane ſociety, if we do not the works which are good for our ſelves, and for others, if we have ability and opportunity. This is our fruit which God expecteth, and if we bear it not, he will hew us down, and caſt us into the fire.

12. Though doing no hurt will not ſerve turn, without doing good, yet it is not the ſame works, that are required of all, nor in the ſame degree, but according to every mans talent and opportunities, Matth. 25. 14, 15, &c.

13. God looketh not only nor principally at the external part of the work, but much more to the Heart of him that doth it: nor at the length of time, but at the ſincerity and diligence of his ſervants. And therefore though he is ſo juſt, as not to deny the Reward which was promiſed them, to thoſe that have born the burden and heat of the day, yet is he ſo gracious and bountiful, that he will give as much, to thoſe that he findeth as willing and diligent, and would have done more if they had had opportunity, Matth. 20. 12, 13, 14, 15. You ſee in all this, what our doctrine is about good works, and how far thoſe Papiſts are to be believed, who perſwade their ignorant Diſciples, that we account them vain and needleſs things.

Directions for faithful ſerving Chriſt, and doing Good.

§. 4. Direct. 1. Be ſure that you have that Holineſs, Juſtice and Charity within, which are the neceſſary Principles of good works. For a good Tree will bring forth good fruit, and an evil Tree evil fruit: Make the Tree good, and the fruit good: A good man out of the good treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth good things, and an evil man out of the evil treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth evil things: As out of the heart proceed evil works, Matth. 15. 19, 20. So out of the heart muſt good works come, Matth. 7. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Can the dead do the works of the living? Or the unholy do the works of holineſs? or the unrighteous do the works of juſtice? or the uncharitable do the works of charity? Will he do good to Chriſt in his members on earth, who hateth them? Or will he not rather impriſon them, than viſit them in priſon, and rather ſtrip them of all they have, than feed and cloth them? Or if a man ſhould do that which materially is good, from pride, or other ſinful principles, God doth not accept it, but taketh all ſacrifice but as Carrion, that is offered to him without the Heart. Dir. 1.

§. 5. Direct. 2. Content not your ſelves to do ſome good extraordinarily on the by, or when you are urged Dir. 2.

urged to it; but ſtudy to do good, and make it the trade or buſineſs of your lives. Having ſo many obligations, and ſo great Encouragements, do what you do with all your might: If you would know whether you are Servants to Chriſt, or to the Fleſh, the queſtion muſt be, which of theſe have the main care and diligence of our lives: For as every carnal act will not prove you ſervants to the fleſh, ſo every good action will not prove you the ſervants of Chriſt.

Dir. 3. §. 6. Direct. 3. Before you do any work, conſider, whether you can truly ſay, it is a ſervice of God; and will be accepted by him: See therefore that it be done, 1. To his glory, or to pleaſe him: 2. And in obedience to his command. Meer natural actions, that have no moral good or evil in them, and ſo belong not to morality, theſe belong not to our preſent ſubject; as being not the matter of rational (or at leaſt of obedientiall) choice. Such as the winking of the eye, the ſetting of this Foot forward firſt, the taking of this or that, meat or drink, or inſtrument, or company or action, when they are equall, and it is no matter of rational (or obedientiall) choice, &c. But every act that is to be done deliberately and rationally as matter of choice, muſt be moralized, or made good, by doing it, 1. To a right end, and 2. According to the rule. Whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do (that is matter of rational choice) muſt be done by us to the glory of God; 1 Cor. 10. 31. All works tend not alike to his glory: but ſome more immediately and directly, and others remotely: But all muſt ultimately have this end: Even Servants that labour in their painful work, muſt do it as to the Lord, and not (only or ultimately) to men, not with eye-ſervice as men-pleaſers, but as the Servants of Chriſt, from whom they muſt have their greateſt reward or Puniſhment, Epheſ. 6. 5, 6, 7, 8. Col. 3. 22, 23. 24, 25. All the comforts of Food, or Reſt, or Recreation, or pleaſure which we take, ſhould be intended to fit us for our Maſters work, or ſtrengthen, cheer, and help us in it. Do nothing (deliberately, that belongs to the government of Reaſon) but Gods ſervice in the world; which you can ſay, he let you on.

Dir. 4. §. 7. Direct. 4. Set not duties of Piety, Juſtice or Charity againſt each other, as if they had an enmity to each other; but take them as inſeparable, as God hath made them. Think not to offer God a Sacrifice of Injury, Bribery, Fraud, Oppreſſion, or any Uncharitable Work. And pretend not the benefit of men, or the ſafety of Societies or Kingdoms, for impiety againſt the Lord.

Some think they merit by curing the hurts which they have cauſed themſelves: Sed nequitia eſt, ut extrahas mergere, evertere ut ſuſcites, includere ut emittas: Non enim beneficium injuriæ finis; nec unquam id detraxiſſe meritum eſt, quod ipſe qui detraxit intulerat. Senec. de Benef.

Dir. 5. §. 8. Direct. 5. Acquaint your ſelves with all the talents which you receive from God, and what is the uſe to which they ſhould be improved. Keep thus a juſt account of your Receivings, and what Goods of your Maſters is put into your hands: And make it a principal part of your ſtudy, to know what every thing in your hand is good for to your Maſters uſe; and how it is that he would have you uſe it.

Dir. 6. §. 9. Direct. 6. Keep an account of your Expences; at leaſt, of all your moſt conſiderable talents; and bring your ſelves daily or frequently to a reckoning what good you have done, or endeavoured to do. Every day is given you for ſome good work. Keep therefore accounts of every day: (I mean, in your [illegible] not in Papers.) Every mercy muſt be uſed to ſome good: Call your ſelves therefore to account for every mercy, what you have done with it for your Maſters uſe. And think not Hours and minutes, and little mercies may be paſt without coming into the account: The Servant that thinks he may do what he liſt with Shillings and Pence, and that he is only to lay out greater Sums for his Maſters uſe, and leſſer for his own, will prove unfaithful, and come ſhort in his accounts: Leſs ſums than Pounds muſt be in our Reckonings.

§. 10. Direct. 7. Take ſpecial heed that the common Thief your carnal-ſelf either Perſonal or in your Relations, do not rob God of his expected due, and devour that which he requireth. It is not for nothing that God calleth for the firſt fruits: Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance, and with the firſt fruits of all thine increaſe: ſo ſhall thy Barns be filled with plenty, and thy Preſſes ſhall burſt forth with new wine, Prov. 3. 9, 10. So Exod. 23. 16, 19. & 34. 22, 26. Lev. 2. 12, 14. Nehem. 10. 35. Ezek. 20. 40. & 44. 30. & 48. 14. For if carnal ſelf might firſt be ſerved, its devouring greedineſs would leave God nothing: tho' he that hath Godlineſs with contentment hath enough, if he have but food and rayment, yet there will be but enough for themſelves and children where men have many hundreds or thouſands a year, if once it fall into this Gulf. And indeed as he that begins with God, hath the Promiſe of his bountiful Supplies, ſo he whoſe fleſh muſt firſt be ſerved; doth catch ſuch an hydropick thirſt for more, that all will but ſerve it: And the Devil contriveth ſuch Neceſſities to theſe men, and ſuch uſes for all they have, that they have no more to ſpare, than poorer Men: (and they can allow God no more but the leavings of the fleſh, and what it can ſpare, which commonly is next to nothing.) Indeed tho' Holy uſes in particular were ſatisfied with firſt fruits and limited parts, yet God muſt have all, and the fleſh (inordinately or finally) have none. Every penny which is laid out upon your ſelves, and children, and friends, muſt be done as by Gods own appointment, and to ſerve and pleaſe him. Watch narrowly, or elſe this thieviſh carnal ſelf will leave God nothing.

Dir. 7.

Dir. 8. §. 11. Direct. 8. Prefer greater Duties (cæteris paribus) before leſſer: and labour to underſtand which is the greater, and to be preferred. Not that any real duty is to be neglected: But we call that by the name of Duty which is materially good, and a duty in its ſeaſon: But formally indeed it is no duty at all, when it cannot be done without the omiſſion of a greater. As for a Miniſter to be praying with his family, or comforting one afflicted ſoul, when he ſhould be preaching publickly, is to do that which is a duty in its ſeaſon; but at that time, is his ſin. It is an unfaithful Servant that is doing ſome little chare, when he ſhould be ſaving a Beaſt from drowning, or the houſe from burning, or doing the greater part of his work.

Dir. 9. §. 12. Direct. 9. Prudence is exceeding neceſſary in doing good, that you may diſcern good from evil, diſcerning the ſeaſon, and meaſure, and manner, and among divers duties, which muſt be preferred. Therefore labour much for Wiſdom, and if you want it your ſelf, be ſure to make uſe of theirs that have it, and ask their counſel in every great and difficult caſe. Zeal without Judgment hath not only entangled ſouls into many heinous ſins, but hath ruined Churches and Kingdoms, and under pretence of exceeding others in doing good, it makes men the greateſt inſtruments of evil. There is ſcarce a ſin ſo great and odious, but ignorant Zeal will make men do it as a good work: Chriſt told his Apoſtles, that thoſe that killed them, ſhould think they did God Service. And Paul bare record to the murderous perſecuting Jews, that they had a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge, Rom. 10. 2. The Papiſts murderers of Chriſtians under the name of Hereticks, hath recorded it to the world, in the blood of many hundred thouſands, how ignorant carnal zeal will do good, and what Sacrifice it will offer up to God.

[Sell all and give to the poor, and follow me:] But ſell not all, except thou follow me: that is, Except thou have a Vocation, in which thou maiſt do as much good with little means, as with great. Lord Bacons Eſſay 13.

Dir. 10. §. 13. Direct. 10. In doing good prefer the ſouls of men before the body, cæteris paribus. To convert a ſinner, from the erroar of his way, is to ſave a ſoul from death, and to cover a multitude of ſins. Jam. 5, 20. And this is greater than to give a man an almes. As cruelty to ſouls is the moſt heinous cruelty (as perſecutors and ſoul-betraying Paſtors will one day know to their remedileſs woe;) ſo mercy to ſouls is the greateſt mercy. Yet ſometime Mercy to the Body is in that ſeaſon to be preferred: (For every thing is excellent in its ſeaſon.) As if a man be drowning or famiſhing, you muſt not delay the relief of his body, while you are preaching to him for his converſion; but firſt relieve him, and then you may in ſeaſon afterwards inſtruct him. The greateſt duty is not always to go firſt in time: Sometimes ſome leſſer work is a neceſſary preparatory to a greater. And ſometimes a corporal benefit may tend more to the good of ſouls, than ſome ſpiritual work may: Therefore I ſay ſtill, that PRUDENCE and an HONEST HEART are inſtead of many Directions: They will not only look at the immediate benefit of a work, but to its utmoſt tendency and remote effects.

Dir. 11. §. 14. Direct. 11. In doing good prefer the good of many, eſpecially of Church or Common wealth before the good of one or few. For many are more worth than one: And many will honour God and ſerve him more than one: And therefore both piety and charity requireth it. Yet this alſo muſt be underſtood with a cæteris paribus: For it's poſſible, ſome caſes of exception may be found. Pauls is a high inſtance that could have wiſhed himſelf accurſed from Chriſt, for the ſake of the Jews, as judging Gods honour more concerned in all them, than in him alone.

Abſurdum eſt unum laute vivere, cum multi eſuriunt. Quanto enim gloriоſius eſt multis benefacere, quam magnifice habitare? Quanto prudentius in homines quam in lapides, & in aurum impenſas facere. Clem. Alexand. 2. Pædag. 12.

Dir. 12. §. 15. Direct. 12. Prefer a durable good that will extend to poſterity, before a ſhort and tranſitory good. As to build an Almes-houſe is a greater work than to give an Almes, and to erect a School, than to teach a Scholar; ſo to promote the ſettlement of the Goſpel and a faithful Miniſtry, is the greateſt of all, as tending to the good of many, even to their everlaſting good: This is the preheminence of Good Books before a tranſient ſpeech, that they may be a more durable help and benefit. Look before you with a judicious foreſight: and as you muſt not do that preſent Good to a particular perſon, which bringeth greater hurt to many, ſo you muſt not do that preſent good to one or many which is like to produce a greater and more laſting hurt. Such blind reformers have uſed the Church, as ignorant Phyſicians uſe their patients, who give them a little preſent eaſe, and caſt them into a greater miſery, and ſeem to cure them with a doſe of opium or the Jeſuits powder, when they are bringing them into a worſe diſeaſe than that which they pretend to cure: O when ſhall the poor Church have wiſer and foreſeeing helpers?

Dir. 13. §. 16. Direct. 13. Let all that you do for the Churches good be ſure to tend to HOLINESS and PEACE; and do nothing under the name of a good work which hath an enmity to either of theſe. For theſe are to the Church as Life and Health are to the body; and the increaſe of its welfare is nothing elſe but the increaſe of theſe. Whatever they pretend, believe none that ſay, they ſeek the good and welfare of the Church, if they ſeek not the promoting of Holineſs and Peace: If they hinder the powerful preaching of the Goſpel, and the means that tendeth to the ſaving of Souls, and the ſerious ſpiritual worſhipping of God, and the unity and peace of all the faithful, and if they either divide the faithful into ſects and parties, or worry all that differ from them, and humour them not in their conceits, take all theſe for ſuch benefactors to the Church, as the wolf is to the flock, and as the plague is to the City, or the feavour to the body, or the fire in the thatch is to the houſe. The wiſdom from above is firſt PURE, then PEACEABLE, gentle, &c. But if ye have bitter envying, and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, and lye not againſt the truth: this wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh: For where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work. Jam. 3. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

§. 17. Direct. 14. If you will do the good which God accepteth, do that which he requireth; and put not the name of good works upon your ſins, nor upon unneceſſary things of your own invention; nor think not that any Good muſt be accompliſhed by forbidden means. None know what pleaſeth God ſo well as himſelf. Our wayes may be right in our own eyes, and carnal wiſdom may think it hath deviſed the fitteſt means to honour God, when he may abominate it, and ſay, who required this at your hand? And if we will do good by ſinning, we muſt do it in deſpite of God, who is engaged againſt our ſins and us. Rom. 3. 8. God needeth not our lye to his glory: If Papiſts think to find at the laſt day, their foppiſh ceremonies, and ſuperſtition, and will worſhip, their, touch not, taſte not, handle not, to be reckoned to them as Good works; or if Jeſuites or Enthuſiaſts think to find their Perjury, Treaſons, Rebellions, or Conſpiracies numbred with good works; or the perſecuting of the Preachers and faithful profeſſors of Godlineſs to be good works, how lamentably will they find their expectations diſappointed? Dir. 14.

§. 18. Direct. 15. Keep in the way of your Place and calling, and take not other mens works upon you, without a call, under any pretence of doing good. Magiſtrates muſt do good in the place and work of Magiſtrates: and Miniſters in the place and work of Miniſters: and private men in their private place and work: and not one man ſtep into anothers place, and take his work out of his hand, and ſay, I can do it better: For if you ſhould do it better, the diſorder will do more harm than you did good by bettering his work. One Judge muſt not ſtep into anothers Court and Seat, and ſay, I will paſs more righteous judgement. You muſt not go into another mans School, and ſay I can teach your Scholars better: nor into anothers charge or Pulpit, and ſay, I can preach better. The ſervant may not rule the Maſter, becauſe he can do it beſt: no more than you may take another mans Wife, or Houſe, or Lands, or Goods, becauſe you can uſe them better than he. Do the Good that you are called to. Dir. 15.

§. 19. Direct. 16. Where God hath preſcribed you ſome particular Good work or way of ſervice, you muſt prefer that before another, which is greater in its ſelf. This is explicatory or limiting of Dir. 8. The reaſon is becauſe God knoweth beſt what is pleaſing to him, and Obedience is better than Sacrifice. You muſt not neglect the neceſſary maintenance of Wife and Children, under pretence of doing a work of piety or greater good: becauſe God hath preſcribed you this order of your duty, that you begin at home (though not to ſtop there.) And Dir. 16.

ther Minister may have a greater or more needy flock; but yet you must first do good in your own, and not step without a call into his charge. If God have called you to serve him in a low and mean imployment, he will better accept you in that work, than if you undertook the work of another mans place, to do him greater service.

Dir. 17. §. 20. Direct. 17. Lose not your Resolutions or Opportunities of doing good by unnecessary Delays. Prov. 3. 27, 28. With-hold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the Power of thine hand to do it: Say not to thy neighbour, Go, and come again, and to morrow I will give, when thou hast it by thee. Prov. 27. 1. Boast not thy self of to morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth. It's two to one, but delay will take away thine opportunity, and raise such unexpected Diversions or difficulties as will frustrate thine intent, and destroy the work? Take thy Time, if thou wilt do thy service. It is beautiful in its Season.

Dir. 18. §. 21. Direct. 18. Yet present necessity may make a lesser work to be thy duty, when the greater may better bear delay. As to save a mans life in sickness or danger, when you may after have time to seek the saving of his Soul. Not only works of mercy may be thus preferred, before Sacrifice, but the ordinary Conveniences of our lives; as to rise, and dress us, and do other business, may go before Prayer, when Prayer may afterwards be done as well or better, and would be hindered, if these did not go before.

Dir. 19. §. 22. Direct. 19. Though Cæteris paribus the duties of the first table are to be preferred before those of the second, yet the Greater Duties of the second table must be preferred before the lesser Duties of the first. The Love of God is a greater Duty than the Love of Man: (and they must never be separated:) But yet we must prefer the saving a Mans life, or the quenching of a fire in the Town before a Prayer, or Sacrament, or observation of a Sabbath: David eat the shew bread, and the Disciples rubbed out the corn on the Sabbath day, because the preserving of Life was a greater duty than the observing of a Sabbath or a positive ceremonial Law. And Christ bids the Pharisees, Go learn what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice: The blood of our Brethren is an unacceptable means of pleasing God, and maintaining Piety, or promoting mens several opinions in religion.

Dir. 20. §. 23. Direct. 20. Choose that Employment or Calling, (so far as you have your choice) in which you may be most serviceable to God. Choose not that in which you may be most Rich or Honourable in the world; but that in which you may do most good, and best escape sinning.

Quest. Is doing good or avoiding sin to be most looked at in our choice of callings.

§. 24. Quest. But what if in one calling I am most serviceable to the Church, but yet have most temptations to sin? And in another I have least temptations to sin, but am least serviceable to the Church (which is the ordinary difference between Men in Publick places and men in solitude) which of these should I choose?

Answ. 1. Either you are already engaged in your Calling, or not: If you are, you must have greater reasons to desert it, than such as might require you at first not to choose it. 2. Either the Temptations to sin are such as good men ordinarily overcome, or they are extraordinarily great. You may more warrantably avoid such great ones as you are not like to overcome, than small or ordinary ones. 3. Either you are well furnished against these temptations, or not: If not, you must be more cautelous in approaching them: But if you are, you may trust God the boldlier to help you out. 4. Either they are Temptations to ordinary human frailties in the manner of Duty, or Temptations to more dangerous sin: The first will not so much warrant you to avoid doing good for to escape them, as the latter will. 5. The service that you are called to (being supposed great and necessary to be done by somebody) is either such as others will do better or as well if you avoid it, or not. If the Church or common good receive no detriment by your refusal, you may the more insist on your own preservation: But if the Necessities of the Church or State, and the want of fitter instruments, or any apparent call of God, do single you out for that service, you must obey God whatever the Difficulties and Temptations are: For no Temptation can necessitate you to sin; and God that calleth you, can easily preserve you: But take heed what you thrust your selves upon.

Quest. A Calling may be changed.

§. 25. Quest. But may I change my Calling for the service of the Church, when the Apostle bids every Man abide in the calling in which he was called? 1 Cor. 7. 20.

Answ. The Apostle only requireth men to make no unlawful change (such as is the forsaking of a Wife or Husband) nor no unnecessary change, as if it were necessary (as in the case of Circumcision): But in the next words he saith [Art thou called being a Servant? Care not for it: But if thou maist be made free, use it rather.] He bids every man abide with God in the place he is called to, but forbids them not to change their State when they are called to change it. vers. 24. He speaks more of Relations (of single Persons and Married, Servants and Free, &c.) than of Trades or Offices: And yet no doubt but a single person may be married, and the married must be separated; and Servants may be Free. No Man must take up or change any Calling without sufficient cause to call him to it: But when he hath such cause, he sinneth if he change it not. The Apostles changed their Callings, when they became Apostles; and so did multitudes of the Pastors of the Church in every age. God no where forbids men to change their Employment for the better, upon a sufficient cause or call.

Dir. 21. §. 26. Direct. 21. Especially be sure that you live not out of a calling, that is, such a stated course of Employment, in which you may best be serviceable to God. Disability indeed is an unresistible impediment. Otherwise no man must either live idlely, or content himself with doing some little Chares as a Recreation or on the by: but ever one that is able, must be statedly, and ordinarily imployed in such work, as is serviceable to God, and the common Good. Quest. But will not Wealth excuse us? Answ. It may excuse you from some sordid sort of work, by making you more serviceable in other: but you are no more excused from service and work of one kind or other, than the poorest man: Unless you think that God requireth least, where he giveth most. Quest. Will not Age excuse us? Answ. Yes, so far as it disableth you; but no further. Object. But I am turned out of my Calling. Answ. You are not turned out of the Service of God: He calleth you to that, or to another. Quest. But may I not cast off the world, that I may only think of my Salvation? Answ. You may cast off all such excess of worldly cares or business as unnecessarily hinder you in spiritual things: But you may not cast off all bodily employment and mental labour in which you may serve the common Good. Every one that is a member of Church or Common-wealth must employ their parts to the utmost for the good of the Church and Common-wealth: Publick Service is Gods greatest Service. To neglect this, and say, I will pray and meditate, is as if your Servant should refuse your greatest work, and tye himself to some leſſer eaſie part: And God hath commanded you ſome way or other to labour for your daily bread, and not to live as drones on the ſweat of others only. Innocent Adam was put into the Garden of Eden to dreſs it: And falling Man muſt eat his bread in the ſweat of his brows: Gen. 3. 19. And he that will not work, muſt be forbidden to eat, 2 Theſ. 3. 6, 10, 12. And indeed it is neceſſary to our ſelves, for the health of our bodies, which will grow diſeaſed with idleneſs, and for the help of our ſouls, which will fail if the body fail: And man in fleſh muſt have work for his body as well as for his ſoul: And he that will do nothing but pray and Meditate, it's like will (by ſickneſs or Melancholly) be diſabled e're long either to pray or meditate: Unleſs he have a body extraordinary ſtrong.

Dir. 22. §. 26. Direct. 22. Be very watchful Redeemers of your Time, and make Conſcience of every Hour and Minute, that you looſe it not, but ſpend it in the beſt and moſt ſerviceable manner that you can. Of this I intend to ſpeak more particularly anon; and therefore ſhall here add no more.

Dir. 23. §. 27. Direct. 23. Watchfully and reſolutely avoid the Entanglements and diverting Occaſions, by which the Tempter will be ſtill endeavouring to waſte your time and hinder you from your work. Know what is the principal ſervice that you are called to, and avoid avocations: eſpecially Magiſtrates and Miniſters, and thoſe that have great and publick work, muſt here take heed. For if you be not very wiſe and watchful, the Tempter will draw you before you are aware, into ſuch a multitude of diverting care or buſineſſes, that ſhall ſeem to be your duties, as ſhall make you almoſt unprofitable in the world: you ſhall have this or that little thing that muſt be done, and this or that friend that muſt be viſited or ſpoken to, and this or that civility that muſt be performed; ſo that trifles ſhall detain you from all conſiderable works. I confeſs Friends muſt not be neglected, nor civilities be denied: but our Greateſt duties having the Greateſt neceſſity, all things muſt give place to them in their proper ſeaſon. And therefore that you may avoid the offence of friends, avoid the place or occaſions of ſuch impediments: And where that cannot be done, whatever they judge of you, neglect not your moſt neceſſary work. Elſe it will be at the will of men and Satan, whether you ſhall be ſerviceable to God or not.

Dir. 24. §. 28. Direct. 24. Ask your ſelves ſeriouſly how you would wiſh at death and judgment that you had uſed all your wits, and time, and wealth; and reſolve accordingly to uſe them now. This is an excellent Direction and Motive to you, for doing good and preventing the condemnation which will paſs upon unprofitable Servants. Ask your ſelves, will it comfort me more at death or judgment, to think or hear, that I ſpent this hour in plays or idleneſs, or in doing good to my ſelf or others? How ſhall I wiſh then I had laid out my eſtate, and every part of it? Reaſon it ſelf condemneth him that will not now chooſe the courſe which then he ſhall wiſh that he had choſen, when we foreſee the conſequence of that day.

Dir. 25. §. 29. Direct. 25. Underſtand how much you are beholden to God (and not he to you) in that he will employ you in doing any Good: and how it is the way of your own receiving; and know the excellency of your work and end, that you may do it all with Love and Pleaſure. Unacquaintedneſs with our Maſter, and with the Nature and Tendency of our work, is it that maketh it ſeem tedious and unpleaſant to us: And we ſhall never do it well, when we do it with an ill will, as meerly forced. God loveth a cheerful Servant; that Loveth his Maſter and his work. It is the main policy of the Devil to make our duty ſeem grievous, unprofitable, undeſirable and wearieſome to us: For a little thing will ſtop him that goeth unwillingly and in continual pain.

§. 30. Direct. 26. Expect your Reward from God alone, and look for unthankfulneſs and abuſe from men, or wonder not if it befall you: If you are not the Servants of Men, but of God, expect your recompence from him you ſerve. You ſerve not God indeed, if his reward alone will not content you, unleſs you have alſo mans reward. Verily you have your reward, if with the Hypocrite you work for Mans Approbation. Mat. 6. 2, 5. Expect eſpecially if you are Miniſters or others, that labour directly for the good of ſouls, that many prove your Enemies for your telling them the truth, and that if you were as good as Paul, and as unwearied in ſeeking mens Salvation, yet the more you love, the leſs you will (by many) be loved: and thoſe that he could have wiſht himſelf accurſed from Chriſt to ſave, did hate him and perſecute him, as if he had been the moſt accurſed Wretch: A peſtilent Fellow, and a Mover of Sedition among the People, and one that turned the world upſide down, were the Names they gave him; and where ever he came, Bonds and Impriſonment did attend him; and ſlandering, and reviling, and whipping, and ſtocks, and vowing his death, are the Thanks and Requital which he hath from thoſe, for whoſe ſalvation he ſpared no pains, but did ſpend and was ſpent. If you cannot do good upon ſuch terms as theſe, and for thoſe that will thus requite you, and be contented to expect a reward in Heaven, you are not fit to follow Chriſt, who was worſe uſed than all this, by thoſe to whom he ſhewed more love, than any of his Servants have to ſhew. Take up your croſs, and do good to the unthankful, and bleſs them that curſe you, and love them that hate you, and pray for them that deſpightfully uſe you and perſecute you, if you will be the Children of God. Mat. 5. Dir. 26.

§. 31. Direct. 27. Make not your own Judgments or Conſciences your Law or the Maker of your Duty; which is but the Diſcerner of the Law of God, and of the Duty which he maketh you, and of your own Obedience or Diſobedience to him. There is a dangerous Errour grown too common in the world, that a man is bound to do every thing which his Conſcience telleth him is the will of God; and that every man muſt obey his Conſcience, as if it were the Law-giver of the world: whereas indeed it is not our ſelves but God that is our Law-giver. And Conſcience is not appointed or authoriſed, to make us any duty, which God hath not made us; but only to diſcern the Law of God, and call upon us to obſerve it, And an Erring Conſcience is not to be obeyed, but to be better informed, and brought to a righter Performance of its office. Dir. 25.

§. 32. In proſecution of this Direction, I ſhall here anſwer ſeveral caſes about doubting.

Queſt. 1. What if I doubt whether a thing be a Duty and good Work or not? Muſt I do it while I doubt? Nay, what if I am uncertain whether it be Duty or Sin? Queſt.

Anſw. 1. In all theſe caſes about an Erring or Doubting Conſcience, forget not to diſtinguiſh between the Being of a Duty, and the Knowledge of a duty: and remember that the firſt Queſtion is, Whether this be my Duty? and the next, How I may diſcern it to be my Duty? And that God giveth it the Being by his Law, and Conſcience is but to know and uſe it: And that God changeth not his Law and our Duty, as oft as our Opinions change about it. The Obligation of the Law is ſtill the ſame, though our Conſciences err in apprehending it otherwiſe. Therefore if God command you Anſw.

a Duty, and your opinion be that he doth not command it, or that he forbids it, and so that it is no Duty, or that it is a sin, it doth not follow that indeed God commands it not because you think so: Else it were no Errour in you, nor could it be possible to err, if the thing become true, because you think it to be true. God commandeth you to Love him, and to worship him, and to nourish your children, and to obey the higher powers, &c. And do you think you shall be discharged from all these duties, and allowed to be prophane, or sensual, or to resist authority, or to famish your children, if you can but be blind enough to think that God would have it so? 2. Your errour is a sin it self: And do you think that one sin must warrant another? or that sin can discharge you from your duty, and disanul the Law? 3. You are a Subject to God and not a King to your self: and therefore you must obey his Laws, and not make new ones.

Quest. §. 33 Quest. 2. But is it not every Mans Duty to obey his Conscience?

Answ. Answ. No: It is no mans duty to obey his Conscience in an errour, when it contradicteth the command of God: Conscience is but a Discerner of Gods command, and not at all to be obeyed strictly as a Commander, but it is to be obeyed in a larger sense, that is, to be followed where ever it truly discerneth the command of God. It is our duty to lay by our errour and seek the cure of it till we attain it, and not to obey it.

Quest. §. 34. Quest. 3. But is it not a sin for a man to go against his Conscience?

Answ. Answ. Yes: Not because Conscience hath any authority to make Laws for you; but because interpretatively you go against God. For you are bound to obey God in all things: and when you think that God commandeth you a thing, and yet you will not do it, you disobey formally though not materially: The matter of obedience is the thing commanded: The form of obedience is our doing the thing, because it is commanded; when the Authority of the Commander causeth us to do it. Now you reject the Authority of God when you reject that which you think he commandeth, though he did not.

Quest. §. 35. Quest. 4. Seeing the Form of Obedience is the Being of it, and denominateth, which the Matter doth not without the form, and there can be no sin which is not against the authority of God, which is the formal cause of obedience, is it not then my Duty to follow my Conscience?

Answ. Answ. 1. There must be an Integrity of Causes, or Concurrence of all Necessaries to make up Obedience, though the want of any one will make a sin: If you will be called obedient, you must have the Matter and Form, because the true form is found in no other matter: You must do the thing commanded, because of his Authority that commandeth it. If it may be called really and formally Obedience, when you err, yet it is not that Obedience which is acceptable: For it is not any kind of Obedience, but Obedience in the thing commanded that God requireth. 2. But indeed as long as you err sinfully, you are also wanting in the Form as well as the matter of your obedience, though you intend Obedience in the particular act. It is not only a wilful opposing, and positive rejecting the Authority of the Commander, which is formal disobedience: but it is any Privation of due Subjection to it; when his Authority is not so regarded as it ought to be; and doth not so powerfully and effectually move us to our Duty as it ought. Now this formal Disobedience is found in your erroneous Conscience: For if Gods Authority had moved you as it should have done, to diligent enquiry and use of all appointed means, and to the avoiding of all the causes of errour, you had never erred about your duty. For if the Errour had been perfectly involuntary and Blameless, the thing could not have been your particular duty, which you could not possibly come to know.

§. 36. Quest. 5. But if it be a sin to go against my Conscience, must I not avoid that sin by obeying it? Would you have me sin? Quest.

Answ. You must avoid the sin, by changing your Judgment, and not by obeying it: For that is but to avoid one sin by committing another. An erring judgment is neither obeyed nor disobeyed without sin: It can make you sin, though it cannot make you duty: It doth ensnare, though not oblige. If you follow it you break the Law of God in doing that which he forbids you: If you forsake it and go against it, you reject the authority of God, in doing that which you think he forbids you. So that there is no attaining to innocence any other way, but by coming first to know your duty, and then to do it. If you command your Servant to weed your Corn, and he mistake you and verily think, that you bid him pull up the corn, and not the weeds; what now should he do? Shall he follow his judgment, or go against it? Neither, but change it, and then follow it; and to that end enquire further of your mind till he be better informed; and no way else will serve the turn. Answ.

§. 37. Quest. 6. Seeing no man that erreth doth know or think that he erreth (for that's a contradiction) how can I lay by that opinion, or strive against it, which I take to be the truth? Quest.

Answ. It is your sin, that you take a falshood to be a truth: God hath appointed means for the cure of blindness and errour as well as other sins; or else the world were in a miserable case. Come into the light, with due self-suspicion, and impartiality, and diligently use all Gods means, and avoid the Causes of Deceit and Errour, and the Light of Truth will at once shew you the Truth, and shew you that before you erred. In the mean time sin will be sin though you take it to be duty, or no sin. Answ.

§. 38. Quest. 7. But seeing he that knoweth his Masters will and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes; and he that knoweth it not, with few; is it not my duty chiefly to avoid the many stripes, by avoiding sinning against my Conscience or Knowledge? Quest.

Answ. 1. Your Duty is to avoid both: and if both were not sinful, they would not both be punished with Stripes: 2. Your Conscience is not your Knowledge when you err, but your Ignorance. Conscience as it signifieth the Faculty of Knowing, may be said to be Conscience when it erreth; as Reason is Reason in the Faculty when we err. And Conscience as to an erring act, may be called Conscience so far as there is any true Knowledge in the act; (as a man is said to see when he mis-judgeth of colours, or to reason when he argueth amiss.) But so far as it erreth it is no Conscience in act at all: For Conscience is science, and not nescience. You sin against your knowledge, when you sin against a well informed Conscience, but you sin in ignorance when you sin against an erring Conscience. 3. And if the Question be not, what is your duty, but which is the smaller sin, then it is true, that Cæteris paribus it is a greater sin to go against your judgement, than to follow it. But yet other imparities in matter and circumstances, may be an exception against this rule. Answ.

§. 39. Quest. 8. But it is not possible for every Man presently to know all his Duty, and to avoid all Errour about his Duty: Knowledge must be got in time: All Men are ignorant in many things: Quest.

(I will

ſhould I not then in the mean time follow my Conſcience?

Anſw. Anſw. 1. Your ignorance is culpable or not culpable. If it be not culpable, the thing which you are ignorant of is not your duty. If culpable (which is the caſe ſuppoſed) as you brought your ſelf to that difficulty of knowing, ſo it will remain your ſin till it be cured; and one ſin will not warrant another. And all that time you are under a double command, the one is to Know (and uſe the means of Knowledge) and the other is to do the thing commanded. So that how long ſoever you remain in errour you remain in ſin, and are not under an obligation to follow your errour, but firſt to Know and then to Do the contrary Duty. 2. And as long as you keep your ſelf in a neceſſity, or way of ſinning, you muſt call it ſin as it is, and not call it duty: It is not your duty to chooſe a leſſer ſin before a greater, but to refuſe and avoid both the leſſer and the greater: And if you ſay, [you cannot;] yet remember that it is only your ſin that is your impotency, or your impotency is ſinful: But it is true that you are moſt obliged to avoid the greateſt ſin: Therefore all that remaineth in the reſolving of all ſuch caſes is but to know of two ſins which is the greateſt.

Queſt. § 40 Queſt. 9. What if there be a Great Duty which I cannot perform without committing a little ſin? Or a very great Good which I cannot do, but by an unlawful means? As to ſave the Lives of many by a lie?

Anſw. Anſw. 1. It is no Duty to you, when you cannot do it without wilful ſin, be it never ſo little. Deliberately to chooſe a ſin, that I may perform ſome Service to God, or do ſome Good to others, is to run before we are called, and to make work for our ſelves which God never made for us; and to offer ſin for a ſacrifice to God; and to do evil that good may come of it; and abuſe God and reject his Government, under pretence of ſerving him: The ſacrifice of the Wicked is an abomination to the Lord: how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind? Prov. 21. 27. & 15. 8. He that turneth away his Ear from hearing the Law, even his prayer ſhall be abomination. Prov. 28. 9. Be more ready to hear, than to offer the Sacrifice of fools: for they conſider not that they do evil. Eccleſ. 5. 1. 2. If you will do good by ſinning, you muſt do Good in oppoſition to God: and how eaſily can he diſappoint you, and turn it into Evil? It is not Good indeed, which muſt be accompliſhed by ſin. The final Good is never promoted by it: And all other Good is to be eſtimated by its tendency to the End: You think that Good which is not ſo, becauſe you judge by the preſent feeling of your fleſh, and do not foreſee how it ſtands related to the everlaſting Good.

Queſt. §. 41. Queſt. 10. Seeing then that I am ſure before hand that I cannot Preach, or Hear, or Pray, or do any good Action without ſin, muſt I not, by this rule, forbear them all?

Anſw. Anſw. No: becauſe your Infirmities in the performance of your duty, which you would avoid and cannot, are not made the condition of your action, but are the diſeaſes of it; They are not choſen and approved of: The duty is your duty notwithſtanding your infirmities; and may be accepted of: for you cannot ſerve God in Perfection till you are perfect: and to caſt away his ſervice is a far greater ſin, than to do it imperfectly. But you may ſerve him without ſuch wilful choſen ſin; if not in one way, yet in another. The Imperfection of your ſervice is repented of while it is committed: but ſo is not your approved choſen ſin. For a Man to make a Bargain againſt God, that he will commit a ſin againſt him, though the Action be the ſame which he hath often done before in pardonable weakneſs, this is turn it to a preſumptious heinous ſin. If he doth it for worldly gain or ſafety, he ſelleth his obedience to God for trifles. If he do it to ſerve God by, he blaſphemeth God, declaring him to be Evil and a Lover of ſin, or ſo impotent as not to be able to do good, or attain his ends by lawful means. It is moſt dangerous to give it under our hands to the Devil that we will ſin, on what pretence ſoever.

§. 42. Queſt. 11. What if I am certain that the duty is great, and uncertain whether the thing annexed to it be a ſin or not? Muſt I forbear a certain duty for an uncertain ſin? Or forbear doing a great and certain good, for fear of a ſmall uncertain evil? Queſt.

Anſw. 1. The Queſtion de eſſe muſt go before the Queſtion de apparere. Either that which you ſay you are uncertain of, is indeed a ſin, or it is none. If it be no ſin, then you are bound both to ſearch till you know that it is no ſin, and not to forbear your duty for it. But if really it be a ſin, then your uncertainty of it is another ſin: And that which God bindeth you to, is to forſake them both. 2. Your Queſtion containeth a contradiction: you cannot be certain that it is a Duty at all to you, any further than you are certain whether the Condition or Means be lawful or a ſin. What if an Auditor in Spain or Italy ſay, I am certain that it's a duty to obey my Teachers; but I am uncertain whether their Doctrines of the Maſs, Purgatory, and the reſt have any untruth or ſin in them; therefore I muſt not forbear certain Obedience for uncertain ſin: Or if a Prieſt among them ſay, I am certain that it is a duty to preach Gods word, but I am not certain that the Trent-Articles which I muſt ſwear, or ſubſcribe, are ſinful or falſe; therefore I muſt not leave a great and certain duty for an uncertain ſin. The anſwer to them both is eaſie: 1. It is your ſin that you are uncertain of the ſinfulneſs of thoſe things which God hath forbidden: And God biddeth you firſt to ſearch the Scriptures, and cure that Errour: He made his Law before your doubts aroſe, and will not change it, becauſe you doubt. 2. You contradict your ſelves by a miſtake: you have no more certainty that you ſhould obey your Teachers in theſe Particulars, than you have that the things which they teach or command you are not againſt that Law of God. You are certain that you muſt obey them in all things not forbidden by God, (and within the reach of their office to require.) And you are as certain that it is unlawful to obey them againſt the Law of God, and that God muſt be obeyed before man: But whether you muſt obey them in this particular caſe, you cannot be certain while you are uncertain whether it be forbidden of God. And the Prieſt muſt be as uncertain whether it be any Duty of his at all, to preach Gods word, as he is uncertain of the lawfulneſs of the Trent Oath or ſubſcription, unleſs he can do it without. If a Subject ſay, I am certain that to Govern the Kingdom well is a great good Work and Duty, but I am uncertain whether to depoſe the King if he Govern not well, and ſet up my ſelf, be a ſin: Therefore the Certain good muſt overrule the uncertain evil. I give him the ſame anſwer, It is your ſin to be uncertain whether Rebellion be a ſin: and God bindeth you to lay by the ſin of your Judgment, and not to make it a ſhooing horn to more. 2. You are ſure that Governing well is a Good work; but you ſhould be as ſure that it is no duty of yours, nor no Good Work for you to do, as you are ſure that you are but a private man and a ſubject, and never called to do the Good of anothers office. A private man may ſay, I am ſure Preaching is a good work, but I am not sure that a private unordained man may not statedly separate himself to do it. But he can be no surer that it is a duty to him, than he is that he is called to it.

Quest. §. 43. Quest. 12. Well; suppose my ignorance be my sin, and suppose that I am equally uncertain of the duty and of the sin annexed, yet if I have done all that I am able, and remain still unresolved, and after my most diligent enquiry am as much in doubt as ever, what should I then do?

Answ. Answ. 1. If you had by any former sin so forfeited Gods assistance, as that he will leave you to your blindness, this altereth not his Law and your obligations which are still the same (to Learn, understand and practice.) 2. But if you are truly willing to understand, and practice, and use his means, you have no cause to imagine that he will thus forsake you: undoubtedly he appointeth you no means in vain: If you attain not sufficient resolution to guide you in your duty, it is either because your hearts are false in the enquiry, and byassed, or unwilling to know the truth, or do it: or because you use not the true appointed means for resolution, but in partiality or laziness neglect it.

Quest. §. 44. Quest. 13. Suppose still my ignorance be my sin, which is the Greater sin, to neglect the good work or to venture on the feared evil that is annexed? I am not conscious of any unfaithfulness but humane frailty, that keepeth me from certainty. And no man is so perfect as to have no culpable ignorance, and to be certain in every point of duty: Therefore I must with greatest caution avoid the greatest sin, when I am out of hope of avoiding all. On one side it is a common Rule that I must do nothing against Conscience (no not a doubting Conscience) though I must not always do what it biddeth me: For he that doubteth is condemned if he eat: for whatsoever is not of faith is sin, Rom. 14. 23. On the other side, if all duty be omitted which conscience doubteth of, I may be kept from almost every duty.

Answ. Answ. The heart is so deceitful that you have great cause to watch, lest humane felicity be pretended for that error which a corrupted byassed partial mind, or wilful laziness is the cause of. Diligent study, and enquiry, and prayer, with a sincere desire to know the truth, may succeed at least to so much satisfaction, as may keep your minds in quietness and peace, and give you comfort in your way, and preserve you from all such sin as is inconsistent with this your safety and acceptance with God. But yet it is true that humane frailty will occasion in the best uncertainties in some particular cases, and though God make it not our duty of two sins to choose the less (but to refuse both) yet he maketh it our duty more diligently to avoid the greater than the less. And oft-times the case is so sudden that no enquiry can be made: And therefore I confess a Christian should know which sins are greatest and to be most avoided. At present I shall lay down these following Rules, premising this, that where accidents and circumstances which makes sins Great or Small are to be compared, they are oft-times so numerous and various, that no Rules can be laid down before hand that will serve all turns, no more than in Law and Physick any Law-books or Physick books will serve all cases without a present experienced judicious Counsellor: Present PRUDENCE and SINCERITY must do most.

Rule §. 45. Rule 1. In things altogether indifferent nothing must be done that Conscience doubteth of, because there is a possibility or fear of sinning on the one side, but none on the other: And in that case it is a certain sin to venture on a feared sin. But then it is supposed that the thing be indifferent as cloathed with all its circumstances, and that there be no accident that taketh away its indifferency.

§. 46. Rule 2. In case the thing be really unlawful, and I think it to be lawful, but with some doubting, but am clear that the forbearing it is no sin; there the sin is only in the doing it; because all is clear and safe on the other side. Rule

§. 47. Rule 3. There are many sins which are always and to all persons in all cases sins, and not doubted of by any without gross unfaithfulness or negligence, and here there is no room for any doubting whether we must do that Good which cannot be done without that sin, it being certain that no such Good can be a duty. As to commit Idolatry; to blaspheme God, to deny Christ, to deny the Scriptures, to hate, or reproach, or oppose a holy life, to be perjured, to approve or justify the sin of others, &c. It can be no duty which cannot be done without the wilful yielding to or committing these or any known sin. Rule

§. 48. Rule 4. There are some duties so great, and clear, and constant to all, that none but a profligate or graceless Conscience (or one that is fearfully poysoned with sin) can make a doubt of it deliberately: These therefore come not within the case before us. Rule

§. 49. Rule 5. If Moral evil be compared only with Natural Good, or Moral Good with Natural Evil, there is no doubt to be made of the case: the least sin having more evil in it than the Prosperity or Lives of millions of men have Good (considered in themselves as Natural good:) and the least duty to God having more good in it, than the death of millions of men (as such) hath evil: for the Good of duty and the evil of sin are greatned by their respect to God, and the other lessened as being Good or Evil only unto men, and with respect to them. Rule

§. 50. Rule 6. Where I am in an equal degree uncertain, of the Duty to be omitted, and of the sin to be committed, it is a Greater sin to venture doubtfully upon the committing of a positive sin that is Great (in case it prove a sin) than upon the omitting a duty which (in case it prove a duty) is less; And on the contrary it is worse to venture on the omitting of a Great duty, than on the committing of a small positive sin. As suppose my own or my neighbours house be on fire, and I am in doubt whether I may take another mans water to quench it against his will. Or if my own, or my childs, or neighbours life be in danger by famine, and I doubt whether I may take another mans apples, or pears, or ears of corn, or his bread against his will to save my own life or anothers. Really the thing is already made Lawful or Unlawful (which I now determine not) by the Law of God: But in my unavoidable uncertainty (if I be equally doubtful on both sides) it is a far greater sin (if it prove a sin) to omit the saving of the House or Life, than to take another mans water, or fruit, or bread that hath plenty (if this prove the sin:) So if King and Nobles were in a ship which would be taken and all destroyed by Pirates, unless I told a lie, and said, They are other persons: If I were equally in doubt which course to take, to lie or not, (though sin have more evil than all our Lives have good) yet a sinful omitting to save all their lives is a greater sin, than a sinful telling of such a lie. Suppose I am in doubt whether I may lawfully save an Ox, or Asse, or a Mans life, by labour on the Sabbath day: Or David had doubted whether he might eat the consecrated shew-bread in his necessity? It's clear that the sinful neglect of a mans life is worse than the sinful violation of a Sabbath, or the sinful use of the consecrated bread. If I equally doubt whether I may use a ceremony or disorderly defective form of prayer, and whether I should preach the the Goſpel to ſave mens ſouls, where there are not others enough to do it; it's clear that ſinfully to uſe a ceremony or diſorderly form of prayer is (cæteris paribus) a leſſer ſin, than ſinfully to neglect to preach the Goſpel and to ſave mens ſouls. On the other ſide, ſuppoſe I dwelt in Italy, and could not have leave to preach the Goſpel there, unleſs I would ſubſcribe to the Trent confeſſion, or the Canon third of Concil. Lateran. Sub Innocent 3. One of which requireth men to ſwear for Tranſubſtantiation, and to interpret the Scriptures only according to the unanimous conſent of the Fathers (who never unanimouſly conſented in any expoſition of the greateſt part of the Scriptures at all) The other decreeth the Popes depoſing Temporal Lords, and diſobliging their ſubjects from their allegiance: On one ſide I doubt whether by ſubſcribing I become not guilty of juſtifying Idolatry, Perjury and Rebellion, and making my ſelf guilty of the perjury of many thouſand others: On the other ſide I doubt whether I may diſobey my Superiors who command me this ſubſcription, and may forbear preaching the Goſpel; when yet I apprehend that there are others to preach it, and that my worth is not ſo conſiderable as that there ſhould be any great loſs in putting me out and putting in another, and God needeth not me to do him ſervice, but hath inſtruments at command, and that I know not how ſoon he may reſtore my liberty, or that I may ſerve him in another Country, or elſe in ſufferings at home, in ſuch a caſe the ſinful juſtifying of Perjury or Rebellion in whole Countries is a far greater ſin, than the ſinful omiſſion of my preaching: For he that juſtifieth Perjury, deſtroyeth the bonds of all ſocieties, and turneth looſe the ſubjects againſt their Soveraigns. Or if I being a Miniſter were forbidden to preach the Goſpel where there is neceſſity, unleſs I will commit ſome ſin; if I doubt on one ſide whether I ſhould diſobey my Superiors, and on the other whether I ſhould forbear my calling, and neglect the ſouls of ſinners; it is a leſſer ſin (cæteris paribus) to diſobey a man ſinfully, than to diſobey God and to be cruel to the ſouls of men to their perdition ſinfully. Or if I have made a vow and ſworn that I will caſt away a penny or a ſhilling, and I am in doubt on one ſide whether I be not bound to keep it as a Vow, and on the other whether it be not a ſin to keep it, becauſe to caſt away any of my talents is a ſin, in this caſe, the ſinful caſting away of a penny or a ſhilling, is not ſo great a ſin, as ſinful Perjury. If Daniel and the three witneſſes had been in equal doubt whether they ſhould obey the King, or Pray to God (as Dan. 6.) and renounce the bowing to his Idol (Daniel 3.) The ſinful forbearance of prayer as then commanded, and the ſinful bowing to the Idol, had been a greater ſin, than a ſinful diſobeying the Kings command in ſuch a caſe, if they had miſtaken.

Rule §. 51. Rule 7. If I cannot diſcern whether the Duty to be omitted, or the ſin to be committed be materially and in other reſpects the greater, then that will be to me the greater of the ſins which my doubting Conſcience doth moſt ſtrongly ſuſpect to be ſin in its moſt impartial deliberation. For if other things be equal, certainly the ſinning againſt more or leſs conviction or doubting muſt make an inequality. As if I could not diſcern whether my ſubſcription to the Trent confeſſion, or my forbearing to preach, or my preaching though prohibited, were the greater ſin, in caſe they were all ſinful; but yet I am moſt ſtrongly ſuſpicious of ſinfulneſs in the ſubſcription, and leſs ſuſpicious of ſinfulneſs in my forbearing in ſuch a caſe to preach, and leaſt of all ſuſpicious of ſinfulneſs in my preaching though prohibited: In this caſe to ſubſcribe ſinfully is the greateſt ſin, and to forbear ſinfully to exerciſe my office is the next, and to preach unwarrantably is the leaſt.

§ 52. Rule 8. If I could perceive no difference Rule in the degrees of evil in the Omiſſion and the Commiſſion, nor yet in the degrees of my ſuſpicion or doubting, then that is the greater ſin which I had greater helps and evidence to have known, and did not.

§. 53. Rule 9. If both greater material evil be on Rule one ſide than on the other, and greater ſuſpicion or evidence of the ſinfulneſs alſo, then that muſt needs be the greater ſin.

§. 54. Rule 10. If the Greatneſs of the Materi- Rule al Evil be on one ſide, and the greatneſs of the ſuſpicion and evidence be on the other, then the former (if ſin) will be materially and in it ſelf conſidered the worſt; but the latter will be formally the greater diſobedience to God. But the compariſon will be very difficult. As ſuppoſe that I ſwear to God that I will caſt away a ſhilling, or that I will forbear to pray for a week together: Here I take perjury to be a greater ſin, than my caſting away a ſhilling, or forbearing to pray a week: But when I queſtion whether the Oath ſhould be kept or not, I have greater ſuſpicion that it ſhould not, than that it ſhould, becauſe no oath muſt be the bond of the leaſt iniquity. Here if the not keeping it prove a ſin, I ſhall do that which is the Greater ſin in it ſelf if I keep it not; but I ſhall ſhew more diſobedience in keeping it, if it be not to be kept.

§. 55. Rule 11. If it be a double ſin that I ſuſpect Rule on one ſide, and but a ſingle one on the other, it maketh an inequality in the caſe. As ſuppoſe that in my Fathers family there are Hereticks, and Drunkards, and I ſwear that in my place and calling I will endeavour to caſt them out. My Mother approveth my Vow: My Father is againſt it and diſchargeth me of it, becauſe I did it not by his advice. On one ſide I doubt whether I am bound, or may act againſt my Fathers will: On the other ſide, I as much doubt whether I am not perjured, and diſobedient to my Mother if I do it not, and whether I diſobey not God, that made it my duty to endeavour the thing in my place and calling before I vowed it.

§. 56. Rule 12. There is a great deal of diffe- Rule rence between omitting the ſubſtance of a duty for ever, and the delaying it, or altering the time, and place and manner. For inſtance, that which will juſtifie or excuſe me for ſhortning my prayer, or for praying but once a day, or at noon rather than in the morning, or for defect in method, or fervency, or Expreſſions, may not juſtifie or excuſe me for denying, renouncing or long forbearing prayer. And that which may excuſe an Apoſtle for not preaching in the Temple or Synagogues, or not having the Emperors, or the High-Prieſts allowance or conſent, or for not continuing in one City or Country; would not excuſe them if they had renounced their callings, or totally as to all times, and places, and manner of performance have ceaſed their work for fear of men.

§. 57. Rule 13. If the duty to be omitted, and Rule the ſin to be committed ſeem equal in greatneſs, and our doubt be equal as to both, it is commonly held ſafer to avoid the Commiſſion more ſtudiouſly than the omiſſion. For which there are many reaſons given.

§. 58. Rule 14. There is uſually much more mat- Rule ter for fear and ſuſpicion cæteris paribus of ſins to be committed, than of Duties to be omitted, when the Commiſſion is made neceſſary to the doing of the duty. Both becauſe it is there that the fear beginneth: For I am certain that the Good work is no Duty to me, if the act be a ſin which is its neceſſary Condition. Therefore ſo far as I ſuſpect the act to be ſinful, I muſt needs ſuſpect the duty to be no duty to me at that time: It is not poſſible I ſhould be rationally more perſwaded that the Duty is my duty, than that the Condition is no ſin: If it were the ſaving of the lives of all men in the Country, I could no further take it to be my duty, than I take that to be no ſin by which it muſt be done, it being a thing paſt controverſie that we muſt not ſin for the accompliſhment of any good whatſoever. And alſo becauſe the ſin is ſuppoſed to be always ſin, but few duties are at all times duties: And the ſin is a ſin to every man, but the duty may be another mans duty and not mine. For inſtance: Charles the fifth impoſeth the Interim upon Germany: Some Paſtors yielded to it: Others refuſed it and were caſt out: Thoſe that yielded pleaded the Good of the Churches, and the prevention of their utter deſolation, but yet confeſſed that if the thing impoſed were ſinful, it was not their duty to do it for any Good whatſoever, but to ſeek the Good of the Church as well as they could without it: The other that were caſt out argued, that ſo far as they were confident the Interim was ſinful, they muſt be confident that nothing was their duty that could not be done without it, and that God knew beſt what is Good for his Church, and there is no accompliſhing its good by ſin and Gods diſpleaſure; and that they did not therefore forſake their Miniſtry, but only loſe the Rulers Licence; for they reſolved to preach in one place or other till they were impriſoned, and God can ſerve himſelf by their impriſonment or death as well as by their preaching: And while others took their places that thought the Interim lawful, the Churches were not wholly deſtitute, and if God ſaw it meet, he could reſtore their fuller liberties again: In the mean time to ſerve him as all Paſtors did for three hundred years after Chriſt (without the Licence of the Civil Magiſtrate) was not to caſt away their office. Another inſtance: The zealous Papiſts in the Reign of Hen. 3. in France thought that there was a Neceſſity of entring the League and warring againſt the King, becauſe Religion was in danger, the preſervation whereof is an unqueſtionable duty. The Learned and moderate Lawyers that were againſt them ſaid, that there being no queſtion but the King had the total ſoveraignty over them, they were ſure it was a ſin to reſiſt the Higher powers, and therefore no preſervation of Religion could be a duty or lawful to them which muſt be done by ſuch a certain ſin: Sin is not the means to ſave Religion or the Commonwealth.

Rule §. 59. Rule 15. When a thing is not prohibited and ſinful ſimply in it ſelf, but becauſe of ſome accidental or conſequential evil that it tendeth to, there a Greater accidental or conſequential Good, may preponderate the evil, and make the thing become no ſin, but a Duty. It is a matter of exceeding difficulty to diſcern oft times whether a thing be ſimply and abſolutely forbidden, or only by accident and alterably, and to diſcern which Accident doth preponderate. There are ſo many Obſervations that ſhould here be taken in, and ſo much of a mans life and peace is concerned in it, that it deſerveth a Treatiſe by it ſelf. And therefore I ſhall not meddle with it any further here, leſt an inſufficient tractate be worſe than none, in a caſe where error is ſo eaſie and perillous.

Rule §. 60. Rule 16. As to the danger of the ſinner himſelf, there is a great deal of difference between an error and ſin of humane frailty, when the ſervice of God, and true obedience, and the common good is ſincerely intended, and an error and ſin of falſe-heartedneſs and ſloth, when ſelfiſhneſs is the ſecret ſpring of the error, and carnal intereſt the real end, though God and his ſervice be pretended. And uſually the concomitants will ſhew ſomething of this to others. For inſtance; Two Magiſtrates and two Miniſters ſubmit to ſome queſtioned impoſition, all pretend that the Glory of God, and his ſervice is it that prevaileth with them to ſubmit: The one of the Magiſtrates faithfully ſerveth God afterward with his authority, and ſheweth thereby that he meant ſincerely: The other doth no good in his place, and ſheweth his hypocriſie: One of the Miniſters preacheth zealouſly and privately, laboureth as one that thirſteth for the ſaving of ſouls: The other preacheth formally and coldly and heartleſly, and never converteth a ſoul, and neglecteth the work which he pretended was his end.

DIRECT. XI.

Grand Dir. 11. For Loving God as our Father, our Benefactor and our End.

Let it be moſt deeply engraven on thy heart, that God is infinitely good and amiable: thy grand Benefactor and Father in Chriſt; the end of all that thou art and haſt; and the Everlaſting Reſt and Happineſs of thy ſoul: See therefore that thy enflamed Heart be entirely and abſolutely offered up unto Him by the Mediation of his Son, to Love him, to Truſt him, to Delight in him, to be Thankful to him, to Glorifie him, and through faith to long for the Heavenly Glory, where all this will be perfectly done for ever. And firſt let us ſpeak of LOVE.

§. 1. I Did in the firſt Direction perſwade you to lay a good Foundation in Faith and Knowledge: In the ſecond I directed you how to live upon Chriſt: In the third how to Believe practically in the Holy Ghoſt: In the fourth I directed you to the orderly and practical Knowledge of all the Attributes of God; In the fifth, how to know God Practically in his firſt grand Relation, as he is your Owner: In the ſixth, how to know him practically in his ſecond grand Relation, as he is your King or Governour: And in ſubordination to his Governing Relation: In the ſeventh I directed you, in your Relation of Diſciples to Chriſt your Teacher. And in the eighth I directed you in your Relation of Patients to Chriſt your Phyſician, and the Holy Ghoſt as your Sanctifier. In the ninth I directed you in your Relation of Souldiers to Chriſt the Captain of your Salvation: In the tenth I directed you in the Relation of Servants to Chriſt your Maſter: And now being paſt thoſe ſubordinate Relations (to the ſecond) I proceed to direct you in your third Grand Relation to God as your Benefactor, Father and Felicity: And becauſe there are divers great Duties in this General, I ſhall firſt begin with this of LOVE: and afterwards ſpeak diſtinctly of the reſt.

Directions for Loving God as our Father and Felicity.

§. 2. Here I ſhall firſt give you theſe General Preparatives (and then give you Directions for the exerciſe of holy Love.) 1. You muſt underſtand the Nature of Love to God: 2. You muſt underſtand the differences of this Love. 3. You muſt underſtand the Reaſons of it: 4. And the Contraries of it: 5. And the Counterfeits of it.

§. 3. I. For the underſtanding of its Nature obſerve theſe things: 1. It is not the Love of a particular good, but of the infinite Univerſal Good. The creature is a particular good, and our Love to it is a particular limited Love, confined as to a point. God is the Univerſal Good, and our Love to him is not limited by the object, but by the narrowneſs and imperfection of our faculties themſelves. As ſuppoſe you had variety of Candles in your Room, and you had Diamonds and other refulgent things: You love each of theſe with a particular love, for their ſplendor and uſefulneſs: and you more eaſily obſerve

God is not Loved as a Particular Good, but as the Univerſal Good observe and feel the motion of this confined Love: But Light it self as Light, you love with a more Universal Love; which is greater, but not so sensibly observed. (Not as we speak of notional Universals in Logick, which have no existence but in particulars; but of the Natural, transcendent, infinite good, eternally existent, and arbitrarily appearing in some created particles) As the love of an infinite Light would differ from the Love of a Candle, and the love of an infinite Heat, from the love of a fire, and the love of infinite Wisdom it self, from the love of a wise man; and the love of infinite Goodness it self from the love of a Good man: So doth the love of God from the Love of a particular created good.

§. 4. 2. Our Love to God is not ordinarily so passionate, as our Love to Creatures: Because the nearness and sensibleness of the creature, promoteth such sensible operations: But God is not seen, or felt, or heard, but believed in by faith, and known by Reason: And the narrowness of the creature making resistances, stops and difficulties, occasioneth a turbulent passionateness of love: when the infiniteness of God hath no such occasion: Our love to creatures is like the running of a stream in a chanel that is too narrow for it, where stops and banks do make it go on with a roaring violence: But our love to God, is like the Brook that slideth into the Ocean, where it is insensibly devoured. Therefore our Love to God must principally be perceived, not in violent passions, but in 1. A high estimation of him: 2. In the Wills adhering to him. 3. And in the effects (to be mentioned anon.) Yet when a Passionate Love is added to these, it may be the most excellent significatively and effectively. Some Philosophers think that God cannot at all be loved with a Passionate Love, because he is a pure immaterial being, and therefore cannot be the object of a material act or motion, such as our passions are; and therefore that it is some Idol of the imagination that is so loved: But 1. If they mean that his pure Essence in it self is not the immediate object of a passion, they may say the same of the Will it self: For man (at least in flesh) can have no other Volition of God, but as he is apprehended by the Intellect: And if by an Idol they mean the Image of God in the mind, gathered from the appearances of God in creatures, man in flesh hath no other knowledge of him: For here we know him but darkly, ænigmatically, and as in a glass, and have no formal proper conception of him in his essence. So that the Rational powers themselves do no otherwise know and will Gods essence, but as represented to us in a glass. 2. And thus we may also love him passionately; it being God in his objective being as apprehended by the Intellect that we both Will and passionately Love. The Motion of the soul in flesh, may raise passions by the instrumentality of the corporeal Spirits, towards an immaterial object: which is called the object of those passions, not meerly as Passions, but as the Passions of a Rational Agent; it being more nearly or primarily the object of the intellect and Will, and then of the passions, as first apprehended by these superiour powers. A man may Delight in God; or else how is he our felicity: and yet we know of no Delight which is not Passion: A man may love his own soul with a passionate Love, and yet it is immaterial, when I passionately love my friend, it is his immaterial soul, and his wisdom, and holiness which I chiefly love.

Whether God may be the object of Passionate Love.

What of God is the object of our Love.

§. 5. 3. It is not only for his Excellencies and Perfections in himself, nor only for his Love and benefit to us, that Grace doth cause a sinner to Love God; But it is for both conjunctly: as he is good, and doth good, especially to us, in the greatest things. . .

§. 6. 4. Our first special Love to God, is orderly and rationally to be raised, by the belief of his Goodness in himself, and his common Love and Mercy to sinners, manifested in his giving of his Son for the world, and giving us on the Conditional grant of pardon and salvation, and offering them Christ and life eternal, and all this to us as well as others: not to be caused by the belief or perswasion of his special peculiar electing, redeeming, or saving love to us above others, that have the same invitations and offers. It is the knowledge of Common Love and Mercy, and not of special Love and Mercy to us as already possessed, that is appointed to be the motive of our first special Love to God: (Yet there is in it an an apprehension that he is our only possible felicity, and that he will give us a special interest in his favour, if we return by faith in Christ unto him.) For 1. Every man is bound to Love God with a special Love: but every man is not specially beloved by him: And no man is bound to Love God as one that specially Loveth him, but those that indeed are so beloved by him: For else they were bound to believe a falshood, and to Love that which is not; and grace should be an error and deceit. The object is before the act. Gods special Love must in it self be before its Revelations: and as Revealed it must go before our belief of it; and as believed, it must go before our Loving it, or Loving him as such, or for it. 2. The first saving faith is inseparably conjunct with special Love: For Christ is believed in and willed, as the Way or Means to God as the End: (otherwise it is no true faith.) And the Volition of the End (which is Love) is in order of nature before the choice or Use of the Means as such: And if we must Love God as one that specially Loveth us, in our first Love, then we must Believe in him as such by our first faith: And if so, it must be to us a Revealed Truth. But (as it is false to most that are bound to believe, so) it is not Revealed to the Elect themselves: For if it be, it is either by ordinary or extraordinary revelation: If by ordinary, either by Scripture directly, or by Evidences in our selves which Scripture maketh the Characters of his Love. But neither of these: For Scripture promiseth not salvation to named, but described persons: And evidence of special Love there is none, before Faith and Repentance and the first Love to God. And extraordinary Revelation from Heaven by inspiration or Angel, is not the ordinary begetter of faith: For faith is the Belief of God speaking to us (now) by his written Word. So that where there is no Object of Love, there can be no Love: And where there is no Revelation of it to the understanding, there is no object for the will: And till a man first believe and Love God, he hath no Revelation that God doth specially Love him. Search as long as you will, you will find no other. 3. If the wicked were condemned for not Loving a false or feigned object, it would quiet their consciences in Hell when they had detected the deceit, and seen the natural impossibility and contradiction. 4. The first Love to God is more a Love of Desire, than of Possession: And therefore it may suffice to raise it, that we see a possibility of being for ever happy in God, and enjoying him in special Love, though yet we know not that we possess any such Love. The Nature of the thing proclaimeth it most Rational and due, that we Love the Infinite Good, that hath done so much by the death of his Son to remove the impediments of our salvation, and is so far Reconciled to the world in his death, as by a message of Reconciliation, to intreat them to accept of Christ, and pardon, and salvation freely offered them, 2 Cor. 5. 19, 20. and is himself the offered Happiness of the soul. He that dare say that this Object hath not so

What is the Motive of our first Love to God.

Objective ſufficiency to engage the ſoul in ſpecial Love, is a blind under-valuer of wonderful mercy. 5. The firſt ſpecial Grace bringeth no new Object for Faith or Love, but cauſeth a new act upon the formerly revealed object.

§. 7. 5. But our Love to God is greatly increaſed and advantaged afterwards by the aſſurance or perſwaſion of his peculiar ſpecial Love to us. And therefore all Chriſtians ſhould greatly value ſuch aſſurance, as the appointed means of advancing them to greater Love to God.

§. 8. 6. As we know God here in the glaſs of his Son, and Word, and Creatures, ſo we moſt ſenſibly Love him here, as his Goodneſs appeareth in his Works, and Graces, and his Word, and Son.

§. 9. 7. The nearer we come to perfection, the more we ſhall Love God for himſelf and his infinite Natural Goodneſs and perfections, not caſting away the reſpects of his Goodneſs and Love as to our ſelves, but highlieſt regarding himſelf for himſelf, as carried to him above our ſelves.

§. 10. II. Though Love in its own Nature be ſtill the ſame, and is nothing but the Rational appetite of Good; or the Wills Volition of Good apprehended by the underſtanding; the firſt motion of the Will to Good, ariſing from that Natural inclination to Good which is the Nature of the Will, and the pondus animæ, the poiſe of the ſoul; or from healing Grace which repaireth the breach that is made in nature; Yet Love in regard of the ſtate of the Lover, and the way of its imperate acting is thus differenced. 1. Either the Lover is in the Hopeful purſuit of the thing beloved, and then it is DESIRING SEEKING LOVE: 2. Or he is or ſeemeth to be denyed, deſtitute, and deprived of his beloved (in whole or in part): and then it is a MOURNING LAMENTING LOVE. 3. Or he enjoyeth his beloved, and then it is ENJOYING DELIGHTING LOVE.

1. The ordinary Love which Grace cauſeth on Earth is a predominancy of ſeeking deſiring Love, encouraged by ſome little fore-taſtes of enjoying delighting Love, and in a great meaſure attended with Mourning Lamenting Love. 2. The ſtate of deſerted dark, declining, relapſing, and melancholy tempted Chriſtians, is a predominance of Mourning Lamenting Love, aſſiſted with ſome help of ſeeking deſiring Love; but deſtitute of enjoying delighting Love. 3. The ſtate of the Glorified is Perfection of enjoying delighting Love alone. And all the reſt are to bring us unto this.

Nobilius & præſtantius eſt Charitatem exercere in Deo, quam virtutes propter Deum. Charitas compendioſiſſima ad Deum via eſt per quam celerime in Deum pervenitur; nec ſine Charitate aliqua virtus ſupernaturaliter homini ſapit: Charitas enim forma omnium virtutum eſt. Per hoc Charitatis exercitium, homo ad tantam ſui abominationem venit, ut non ſolum ſeipſum contemnat, verum etiam ſe ab aliis contemni æquo animo ferat; imo etiam ab aliis contemptus gaudeat —— Thaulerus ſer. c. 7. p. 114.

III. The Reaſons why Love to God is ſo great, and high, and neceſſary a thing, and ſo much eſteemed above other Graces, are: 1. It is the motion of the ſoul that tendeth to the End: And the End is more excellent than all the Means as ſuch. 2. The Love, or Will, or Heart is the Man: where the Heart or Love is, there the Man is: It is the fulleſt reſignation of the whole man to God to Love him as God, or offer him the Heart. God never hath his own fully till we Love him. Love is the grand ſignificant vital motion of the ſoul, ſuch as the Heart, or Will, or Love is, ſuch you may boldly call the man. 3. The Love of God is the perfection and higheſt improvement of all the faculties of the ſoul, and the End of all other Graces, to which they tend, and to which they grow up, and in which they terminate their operations. 4. The Love of God is that Spirit or life of moral excellency in all other Graces in which (though not their form, yet) their acceptableneſs doth conſiſt, without which they are to God as a lifeleſs Carrion is to us. And to prove any action ſincere and acceptable to God, is to prove that it comes from a Willing Loving mind, without which you can never prove it. 5. Love is the commander of the ſoul, and therefore God knoweth that if he have our Hearts he hath all: For all the reſt are at its command: For it is as it were, the nature of the Will, which is the commanding faculty; and its Object is the Ultimate End which is the Commanding Object. Love ſetteth the mind on Thinking, the tongue on ſpeaking, the hands on working, the feet on going, and every faculty obeyeth its command. 6. The obedience which Love commandeth participateth of its nature, and is a ready, chearful, ſweet obedience, acceptable to God, and pleaſant to our ſelves. 7. Love is a pure, chaſte and cleanſing grace; and moſt powerfully caſteth out all creature pollution from the ſoul: The Love of God doth quench all carnal ſinful Love; and moſt effectually carryeth up the ſoul to ſuch high delights, as cauſeth it to contemn and forget the toys which it before admired. 8. The Love of God is the true acknowledging and honouring him as good. That bleſſed Attribute, his GOODNESS is denyed, or deſpiſed by thoſe that Love him not. The Light of the Sun would not be valued, honoured or uſed by the world, if there were no eyes in the world to ſee it. And the Goodneſs of God is to them that Love him not, as the Light to them that have no eyes. If God would have had his Goodneſs to be thus unknown or neglected, he would never have made the Intellectual creatures. Thoſe only give him the glory of his Goodneſs, that truly Love him. 9. Love (in its attainment) is the Enjoying and delighting Grace: It is the very content and felicity of the ſoul: Both as it maketh us capable to receive the moſt delightful communications of Gods Love to us; and as it is the ſouls delightful cloſure with its moſt amiable felicitating object. 10. Love is the Everlaſting Grace, and the work which we muſt be doing in Heaven for ever. Theſe are the Reaſons of Loves preheminence.

Auſtin. (Tract. 9. in John) having ſhewed that among men it maketh no one beautiful to Love one that is beautiful, faith [Anima noſtra fœda eſt per iniquitatem: amando Deum pulchra efficitur: Qualis amor qui reddat pulchrum amantem? Deus ſemper Pater eſt: amavit nos fœdos, ut ex fœdis faceret pulchros: Pulchri erimus amando eum qui pulcher eſt. Quantum in te creſcit Amor, tantum creſcit pulchritudo; Quia ipſa Charitas animæ pulchritudo eſt.

§. 12. IV. The Love of Creatures hath its Contraries on both extreams, in the exceſs and in the Defect: But the Love of God hath no contrary in exceſs: For infinite Goodneſs cannot poſſibly be Loved too much (unleſs as the paſſion may poſſibly be raiſed to a degree diſtracting or diſturbing the brain.) The odious Vices contrary to the Love of God, are 1. Privative: Not loving him: 2. Poſitive: Hating him: 3. Oppoſite: Loving his creatures in his ſtead. All theſe concur in every unſanctified ſoul. That they are all void of the true Love of God, and taken up with creature Love, is paſt all doubt: But whether they are all Haters of God, may ſeem more queſtionable. But it is as certain as the other: Only the hatred of God in moſt, doth not break out into that open oppoſition, perſecution or blaſphemy, as it doth with ſome that are given up to deſperate wickedneſs: Nor do they think that they hate him. But the Averſation of the Will, is the Hatred of God: And if men had not a great averſation to him, they would not forſake him, and refuſe to be converted to him, notwithſtanding all the arguments of Love that can be uſed to allure them. Diſplicency, Nolition and Averſation are Hatred.

§. 13. If you think it impoſſible that men can hate God, whom they confeſs to be infinitely good: Conſider for the true underſtanding of this Hatred: 1. That it is not as good that they hate him. 2. And it is it is not God ſimply in himſelf conſidered. 3. And therefore it is not all in God. 4. And it is not the name of God. 5. But it is 1. God as he ſeemeth unſuitable to them, and unfit for their delight and Love, which ſeeming is cauſed by their carnal inclination to things of another nature, and the ſinful perverting of their appetites, and the blindneſs and error of their minds. 2. And it is God as he is an enemy to their carnal concupiſcence; whoſe Holy nature is againſt their unholineſs, and hateth their ſin, and his Laws forbid them the things which they moſt love and take delight in: And ſo they hate God, as a mad man hateth his Keeper and Phyſician, and takes them for his enemies; and as a hungry Dog doth hate him that keepeth him from the meat which he loveth, or would take it out of his mouth: 3. And they hate God, as one that by his Holineſs, Juſtice and Truth, is engaged to condemn them for their ſin, and ſo (conſequently to their ſin) is their enemy that will deſtroy them (unleſs they forſake it): when their Wills are enſlaved to their ſins, and they cannot endure to be forbidden them, and yet ſee that God will damn them in Hell fire, if they caſt them not away, this filleth them with diſciplency againſt God, as Holy and Juſt. 4. And then conſequently they hate him in the reſt of his Attributes: As his Omniſcience, that he alway ſeeth them: His Omnipreſence, that he is always with them: His Omnipotency, that he is unreſiſtable, and able to puniſh them. His very mercy as expreſſed to others, when they muſt have no part in it: yea, his very immutability, eternity and being, as he is to continue an avenger of their iniquity; ſo that the wicked in deſpair do wiſh that there were no God, and in proſperity they wiſh he were not their Governour and Judge, or were unholy and unjuſt, allowing them to do what they liſt without account or puniſhment. Thus God is hated by the wicked according to the meaſure of their wickedneſs and carnal intereſt and concupiſcence which he is againſt. Where you may note, 1. That the Hatred of God beginneth at the ſenſual Love of things temporal which he forbiddeth. 2. That the wicked great ones of the world, and thoſe that have the ſtrongeſt concupiſcence, are uſually the greateſt haters of God, as having the greateſt adverſe intereſt, and being moſt in love with the things which he prohibiteth and will condemn.

§. 14. V. The Counterfeit of Love to God is ſomething that ſeemeth like it, and yet is conſiſtent with prevalent hatred, or privation of true Love, and maketh ſelf-deceiving Hypocrites. 1. One is when ſo much of God is Loved as men think hath no oppoſition to their luſts and carnal intereſt: (as his mercy and readineſs to forgive); and then they think that they truly Love God, though they hate his Holineſs and other attributes. 2. Another Counterfeit is, to Love God upon miſtakes, imagining that he is of the ſinners mind, and will bear with him, and not condemn him, though he continue ſenſual and ungodly: This is not indeed to Love God, but ſomething contrary to God: If mens fantaſies will take God to be like the Devil, a friend to ſin, and no friend to holineſs, and falſe in his threatnings, &c. and thus will Love him, this is ſo far from being indeed the Love of God, that it is an odious blaſpheming of him. 3. Another counterfeit is to Love God only for his temporal mercies, as becauſe he preſerveth and maintaineth them, when yet he is reſiſted when he would give them things ſpiritual. 4. Another is, when the opinionative approbation of the mind, and honouring God with the lips and knee, is miſtaken for true Love. In a word, whatever Love of God, reſpecteth him not as God indeed, and is not ſuperlative, but is ſubſervient to creature Love, is but a counterfeit.

§. 15. VI. The Directions for the exerciſe of the Love of God are theſe.

Direct. 1. Conſider well that the Love of our Creator, Redeemer and Regenerator, is the very end for which we are Created, Redeemed and Regenerate, and how juſt it is that God ſhould have the end of ſuch excellent works, and that by neglecting or oppoſing the Love of God which is the end, we neglect or oppoſe the works of Creation, Redemption and Regeneration themſelves. Let us plead theſe Works of God with our hearts, and ſay, ‘1. O ſluggiſh ſoul! doſt thou forget the vſe for which thou waſt created? and for which thou waſt indued with Rational faculties? Doſt thou repent that thou art a man? and refuſe the employment of a man? What is the means or inſtrument good for, but its proper End and Uſe, and action? God made the Sun to ſhine, and it ſhineth: He made the Earth to ſupport us and bear fruit, and it doth accordingly. And he made thee to Love him, and wilt thou refuſe and diſobey? How noble and excellent is thy employment in compariſon of theirs? Is the fruit of the earth, or the labour of thy Beaſt, or the ſervice of any inferiour creature, ſo ſweet and honourable a work as thine, to KNOW and LOVE thy Bountiful Glorious Creator? How happy is thy Lot? How bleſſed is thy portion in compariſon of theirs? And doſt thou forſake thy place, and deſcend to more ignoble objects, as if thou hadſt rather been ſome ſilly ſordid animal? If thou hadſt not rather be a Beaſt than a Man, why chooſeſt thou the love and pleaſures of a Beaſt, and refuſeſt the love and pleaſures of a man? Is Creation, and the Image of God in a Rational free ſoul, a thing thus to be contemned for nothing? What is the Sun good for, if it ſhould yield no light or heat? And what art thou good for more than the Beaſts that periſh, if thou KNOW not and LOVE not thy Creator? If God ſhould offer to unman thee, and turn thee into a Horſe or Dog, thou wouldſt think he thruſt thee into miſery: And yet thou canſt voluntarily and wilfully unman thy ſelf, and take it as thy eaſe and pleaſure. If death came this night to diſſolve thy nature, it would not pleaſe thee: And yet thou canſt daily deſtroy thy nature, as to its Uſe and End, and not lament it! it were better I had never been a man, nor never had a Heart or Love within me if I uſe it not in the holy Love of my Creator. It is true, I have a Body that is made to eat, and drink, and ſleep: But all this is but to ſerve my ſoul in the Love of him that giveth me all. Life is not for meat, or drink, or play; but theſe are for Life, and Life for the higher Ends of Life.]

Dir. 1.

§. 16. [‘2. Look unto thy Redeemer, drowzy ſoul! and conſider for what end he did Redeem thee? Was it to wander a few years about the earth? and to ſleep and ſport a while in fleſh? Or was it to crucifie thee to the world, and raiſe thee up to the Love of God? He came down to Earth from Love it ſelf, being full of Love, to ſhew the Lovelineſs of God, and reconcile thee to him, and take away the enmity, and by Love to teach thee the art of Love: His Love conſtrained him to offer himſelf a Sacrifice for ſin, to make thee a Prieſt thy ſelf to God, to offer up the Sacrifice of an enflamed heart in love and praiſe: And wilt thou diſappoint thy Redeemer, and diſappoint thy ſelf of the benefits of his Love? The Means is for the End: Thou maiſt as well ſay, I would not be Redeemed, as to ſay, I would not Love the Lord.]

§. 17. [‘3. And bethink thy ſelf, O drowzy ſoul, for what thou waſt Regenerated and ſanctified by the Spirit? Was it not that thou mightſt KNOW and LOVE the Lord? What is the Spirit of Adoption that is given to Believers, but a Spirit of

' predominant Love to God? *Gal.*4.6. Thou couldſt ' have loved Vanity, and doted on thy fleſhly friends ' and pleaſures, without the Spirit of God: It was ' not for theſe, but to deſtroy theſe, and kindle a ' more noble, heavenly fire in thy Breaſt, that the ' Spirit did renew thee.] Examine, ſearch, and try thy ſelf, whether the Spirit hath ſanctified thee or not. 'Knoweſt thou not, that if any Man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, the ſame is none of his? 2 Cor. 13. 5. Rom. 8. 9. And if Chriſt and his Spirit be in thee, thy Love is dead to earthly vanity, and quickned and raiſed to the moſt Holy God. Live then in the Spirit, if thou have the Spirit: To walk in the Spirit, is to walk in Love. Hath the Regenerating Spirit given thee on purpoſe a new principle of Love, and done ſo much to excite it, and been blowing at the Coals ſo oft, and ſhall thy carnality or ſluggiſhneſs yet extinguiſh it? As thou wouldſt not renounce or contemn thy Creation, thy Redemption, and Regeneration, contemn not and neglect not the Love of thy Creator, Redeemer and Regenerator, which is the End of all.]

Dir. 2. §. 18. Direct. 2. Think of the perfect fitneſs of God to be the only Object of thy Superlative Love; and how eaſie and neceſſary it ſhould ſeem to us to do a work ſo agreeable to right Reaſon and uncorrupted Nature; and abhor all temptations which would make God ſeem unſuitable to thee. [' O ſluggiſh, and unnatural ſoul! Should not an object ſo admirably fit, allure thee? Should not ſuch attractive Goodneſs draw thee? Should not perfect amiableneſs win thee wholly to it ſelf? Do but know thy ſelf and God, and then forbear to love him if thou canſt! Where ſhould the fiſh live, but in the Water? And where ſhould Birds flye, but in the Air? God is thy very Element: Thou dyeſt and ſinkeſt down to brutiſhneſs, if thou forſake him or be taken from him. What ſhould delight the ſmell, but odours? or the Appetite, but its delicious food? or the Eye, but Light, and what it ſheweth; and the ear but harmony! And what ſhould delight the Soul but God? If thou know thy ſelf, thou knoweſt, that the Nature of thy Mind inclineth to knowledge; and by the knowledge of effects to riſe up to the cauſe, and by the knowledge of lower and leſſer matters, to aſcend to the higheſt and greateſt: And if thou know God, thou knoweſt that he is the cauſe of all things, the Maker, Preſerver and Orderer of all, the Being of Beings, the moſt Great, and Wiſe, and Good, and Happy; ſo that to know him, is to know all; to know the moſt Excellent, independent, glorious being; that will leave no darkneſs nor unſatisfied deſire in thy ſoul. And is he not then moſt ſuitable to thy mind? If thou know thy ſelf, then thou knoweſt that thy will, as free as it is, hath a natural neceſſary inclination to Goodneſs: Thou canſt not Love evil as evil; nor canſt thou chooſe but Love apprehended goodneſs, eſpecially the chiefeſt good, (if rightly apprehended): And if thou know God, thou knoweſt that he is Infinitely good in himſelf, and the Cauſe of all the good that is in the world, and the Giver of all the good thou haſt received, and the only fit and ſuitable good, to ſatisfie thy deſires for the time to come: And yet ſhall it be ſo hard to thee to Love, ſo agreeably to perfect Nature, ſo Perfect, and full, and ſuitable a good? even goodneſs and Love it ſelf which hath begun to Love thee? Is any of the Creatures which thou Loveſt ſo ſuitable to thee? Are they good, and only Good, and Perfectly Good, and unchangeably and eternally Good? Are they the ſpring of Comfort, and the ſatisfying happineſs of thy Soul? Haſt thou found them ſo? Or doſt thou look to find them beſt at laſt? Fooliſh ſoul! Canſt thou love the uneven defective troubleſome Creature, if to ſome one ſmall inferiour uſe it ſeemeth ſuitable to thee? and canſt thou not love him that is all that rational Love can poſſibly deſire to enjoy? What though the creature be near thee, and God be infinitely above thee? He is nearer to thee than they: And though in glory he be diſtant, thou art paſſing to him in his glory, and wilt preſently be there. Though the Sun be diſtant from thee, it communicateth to thee its Light, and Heat, and is more ſuitable to thee, than the Candle that is nearer thee: What though God be moſt Holy, and thou too earthly and unclean? Is he not the fitter to purifie thee, and make thee Holy? Thou hadſt rather if thou be poor, have the company and favour of the Rich that can relieve thee, than of Beggars that will but complain with thee: And if thou be unlearned or ignorant, thou wouldſt have the company of the wiſe and learned that can teach thee, and not of thoſe that are as ignorant as thy ſelf. Who is ſo ſuitable to thy Deſires, as he that hath all that thou canſt wiſely deſire? and is willing and ready to ſatisfy thee to the full? Who is more ſuitable to thy Love, than he that loveth thee moſt, and hath done moſt for thee, and muſt do all that ever will be done for thee, and is himſelf moſt lovely in his infinite perfections? O poor diſeaſed lapſed ſoul! If ſin had not corrupted, and diſtempered, and perverted thee, thou wouldſt have thought God as ſuitable to thy Love, as meat to thy hunger, and drink to thy thirſt, and reſt to thy wearineſs, and as the earth and water, the Air and Sun are to the inhabitants of the world! O whither art thou fallen? and how far, how long, haſt thou wandered from thy God, that thou now draweſt back from him as a ſtranger to thee, and lookeſt away from him as an unſuitable good?

Dir. 3. §. 19. Direct. 3. Imagine not God to be far away from thee, but think of him as always near thee and with thee, in whoſe preſent Love and Goodneſs thou doſt ſubſiſt. Nearneſs of Objects doth excite the Faculties: we hear no ſound, nor ſmell no odour, nor taſte no ſweetneſs, nor ſee no colours, that are too diſtant from us: And the mind being limited in its activity, neglecteth or reacheth not things too diſtant, and requireth ſome Nearneſs of its object, as well as the ſenſe. Eſpecially to the excitation of affections and bodily action. A diſtant danger ſtirreth not up ſuch fears, nor a diſtant miſery ſuch grief, nor a diſtant Benefit ſuch pleaſure, as that which is at hand. Death doth more deeply affect us, when it ſeemeth very near, than when we think we have yet many years to live. So carnal minds are ſo drowned in fleſh and captivated to ſenſe, that they take little notice of what they ſee not, and therefore think of God as abſent, becauſe they ſee him not: They think of him as confined to Heaven, as we think of a friend that is in the Eaſt Indies, or at the Antipodes, who is, if not out of mind as well as out of ſight, yet too diſtant for us delightfully to converſe with. [' Remember always, O my ſoul, that none ' is ſo near thee as thy God. A Seneca could ſay, of good Men, that God is with us, and in us: Nature taught Heathens, that in him we live, and move, and have our being: Thy Friend may be abſent, but God is never abſent from thee. He is with thee, when as to men thou art alone. The Sun is ſufficient to illuminate but one part of the earth at once; and therefore muſt leave the reſt in darkneſs: But God is with thee night and day, and there is no night to the ſoul ſo far as it enjoyeth him. Thy life, thy health, thy Love and Joy, is not nearer to thee than thy God: He is now before thee, about thee, within thee, moving thee to good, reſtraining thee from evil, marking and accepting all that is well, diſliking and oppoſing all 'that is ill: The light of the Sun doth not more 'certainly fill the room, and compaſs thee about, 'than God doth with his goodneſs. He is as much 'at leiſure to obſerve thee, to converſe with thee, 'to hear and help thee, as if thou wert his only 'creature: As the Sun can as well illuminate every 'Bird and Fly, as if it ſhined unto no other crea-'ture. Open the Eye of Faith and Reaſon, and be-'hold thy God. Do not forget him, or unbelieving-'ly deny him, and then ſay, he is not here: Do not 'ſay, that the Sun doth not ſhine, becauſe thou wink-'eſt. O do not quench thy Love to God, by feign-'ing him to be out of reach, and taken up with other 'converſe! Turn not to inferiour delights, by think-'ing that he hath turned thee off to theſe: And 'love him not as an abſent friend: But as the 'friend that is always in thy ſight, in thy Boſom, 'and in thy heart; the Fewel that is neareſt to the 'Flames of Love.]

Dir. 4. §. 20. Direct. 4. All other Graces muſt do their part in aſſiſting Love, and all be exerciſed in ſubſervience to it, and with an Intention (directly or remotely) to promote it. Fear and watchfulneſs muſt keep away the ſin that would extinguiſh it, and preſerve you from that Guilt which would frighten away the ſoul from God: Repentance and mortification muſt keep away diverting and deceiving objects, which would ſteal away our Love from God: Faith muſt ſhew us God as preſent, in all his bleſſed attributes and perfections: Hope muſt depend on him for nearer acceſs and the promiſed felicity. Prudence muſt chooſe the fitteſt ſeaſon, and means and helps from our ſpecial approaches to him, and teach us how to avoid Impediments: And obedience muſt keep us in a fit capacity for communion with him. The mind that is turned looſe to wander after vanity the reſt of the day, is unfit in an hour of prayer or meditation to be taken up with the Love of God. It muſt be the work of the day, and of our Lives, to walk in a fitneſs for it, though we are not always in the immediate lively exerciſe of it. To ſin wilfully one hour, and be taken up with the love of God the next, is as unlikely, as one hour to abuſe our Parents, and provoke them to correct us, and the next to find the pleaſure of their love; or one hour to fall and break ones Bones, and the next to run and work as pleaſantly as we did before.

§. 21. And we muſt ſee that all other Graces be exerciſed in a juſt ſubſerviency to Love; and none of them degenerate into noxious extreams, to the hinderance of this which is their proper end. When you ſet your ſelves to Repent and Mourn for ſin, it muſt be from Love, and for Love: That by ingenuous lamentation of the Injuries you have done to a gracious God, you may be cleanſed from the filth that doth diſpleaſe him, and being reconciled to him in Chriſt, may be fit to return to the exerciſes and delights of Love. When you Fear God, let it be with a Filial Fear, that comes from Love, and is but a Preſervative or Reſtorative for Love. Avoid that ſlaviſh fear as a ſin, which tendeth to hatred, and would make you fly away from God. Love caſteth out this tormenting fear, and freeth the ſoul from the Spirit of Bondage. The Devil tempteth melancholly perſons to live before God, as one that is ſtill among Bears or Lyons that are ready to devour him: For he knoweth how much ſuch a fear is an enemy to Love. Satan would never promote ſuch fears, if they were of God, and tended to our good. You never found him promoting your Love or Delight in God! But he careth not how much he plungeth you into diſtracting terrours: If he can, he will frighten you out of your Love, and out of your Comforts, and out of your wits. A dull and ſluggiſh ſinner he will keep from fear, leſt it ſhould awaken him from his ſin: But a poor melancholly, penitent ſoul he would keep under perpetual terrours: It is ſo eaſie to ſuch to fear, that they may know it is a ſinful inordinate fear: For gracious works are not ſo eaſie. And reſiſt alſo all humiliation and grief, that doth not (immediately or remotely) tend to help your Love. A Religion that tendeth but to grief, and terminateth in grief, and goeth no further, hath too much in it of the malice of the enemy, to be of God. No tears are deſirable, but thoſe that tend to clear the eyes from the filth of ſin, that they may ſee the better the lovelineſs of God.

§. 22. Direct. 5. Eſteem thy want of Love to God, (with the turning of it unto the creature) to be the Heart of the old man; thy moſt comprehenſive odious ſin; and obſerve this as the Life of all thy particular ſins, and hate it above all the reſt. This is the very death and greateſt deformity of the ſoul; the abſence of Gods image, and Spirit, and objectively of himſelf. I never loath my heart ſo much as when I obſerve how little it loveth the Lord. Methinks all the ſins that ever I committed, are not ſo loathſome to me, as this want of love to God. And it is this that is the venom and malignity of every particular ſin: ['I never ſo much hate my 'ſelf, as when I obſerve how little of God is within 'me, and how far my heart is eſtranged from him. 'I never do ſo fully approve of the Juſtice of God, 'if he ſhould condemn me, and thruſt me for ever 'from his preſence, as when I obſerve how far 'I have thruſt him from my heart. If there were 'any ſin which proceeded not from a want of 'Love to God, I could eaſilier pardon it to my 'ſelf, as knowing that God would eaſilier pardon it. 'But not to Love the God of Love, the Fountain of 'Love, the felicity of ſouls, is a ſin unfit to be par-'doned to any till it be repented of, and partly 'cured: Chriſt will forgive it to none that keep 'it: And when it is uncurable, it is the ſpecial ſin of 'Hell, the badge of Devils and damned Souls. If 'God will not give me a heart to Love him, I 'would I had never had a heart. If he will give 'me this, he giveth me all. Happy are the poor, 'the deſpiſed, and the perſecuted, that can but live 'in the Love of God. O miſerable Emperours, 'Kings and Lords, that are ſtrangers to this Hea-'venly Love, and love their luſts above their Maker! 'Might I but live in the fervent Love of God, what 'matter is it in what Country, or what Cottage, 'or what Priſon I live? If I live not in the love of 'God, my Country would be worſe than baniſh-'ment; a Palace would be a Priſon; a Crown would 'be a miſerable comfort, to one that hath caſt away 'his comfort, and is going to everlaſting ſhame and 'woe.] Were we but duly ſenſible of the worth of love, and the odiouſneſs and malignity that is in the want of it, it would keep us from being quiet in the daily neglect of it, and would quicken us to ſeek it, and to ſtir it up.

Dir. 5.

Dir. 6. §. 23. Direct. 6. Improve the principle of ſelf-love, to the promoting of the Love of God, by conſidering what he hath done for thee, and what he is and would be to thee. I mean not carnal inordinate ſelf love, which is the chiefeſt enemy of the Love of God: But I mean that rational Love of Happineſs and ſelf-preſervation which God did put into innocent Adam, and hath planted in mans nature as neceſſary to his Government. This natural innocent ſelf-Love is that remaining principle in the Heart of man which God himſelf doth ſtill preſuppoſe in all his Laws and Exhortations; and which he taketh advantage of in his works and word, for the converſion of the wicked, and the perſwading of his ſervants themſelves to their obedience. This is the common Principle in which we are agreed with all the wicked wicked of the world [that all Men should desire and seek to be happy, and choose and do that which is best for themselves;]or else it were in vain for Ministers to preach to them, if we were agreed in nothing, and we had not this ground in them to cast our seed into, and to work upon. And if self-love be but informed and guided by understanding, it will compel you to love God, and tell you that nothing should be so much loved. Every one that is a man must Love himself: We will not intreat him, nor be beholden to him for this: And every one that loveth himself, will love that which he judgeth Best for himself: And every wise Man must know, that he never had, nor can have any good at all, but what he had from God. Why do men love lust, or wealth, or honour, but because they think that these are good for them? And would they not love God, if they practically knew that he is the best of all for them, and instead of all? [' Unnatural unthankful heart! Canst thou Love ' thy self, and not love him that gave thee thy ' self, and gives thee all things? Nature teacheth ' all men to love their most entire and necessary ' Friends: Do we deserve a reward by loving those ' that love us, when Publicans will do the like? ' Matth. 5 46.Art thou not bound to love them that ' hate thee, and curse, and persecute thee? ver. 44. ' 45. What reward then is due to thy unnatural in- ' gratitude, that canst not love thy chiefest friend? ' All the Friends that ever were kind to thee, and ' did thee good, were but his Messengers, to deli- ' ver what he sent thee. And canst thou love the ' bearer, and not the giver? He made thee a man, ' and not a beast: He cast thy lot in his visible ' Church,and not among deluded Infidels, or misе- ' rable Heathens, that never heard, unless in scorn, ' of the Redeemers name: He brought thee forth ' in a Land of light; In a Reformed Church where ' Knowledge and Holiness have as great advantage, ' as any where in all the world: and not among ' deluded ignorant Papists, where Ambition must ' have been thy Governour, and Pride and Tyranny ' have given thee Laws; and a formal Ceremonious ' Image of Piety must have been thy Religion. ' He give thee Parents that educated thee in his ' fear: and not such as were prophane and ignorant, ' and would have restrained and persecuted thee ' from a holy life: He spoke to thy Conscience early ' in thy childhood, and prevented the gross abo- ' minations which else thou hidst committed: He ' bore with the Folly and Frailties of thy Youth: ' He seasonably gave thee those Books,and Teachers, ' and company, and helps, which were fittest for ' thee; and blest them to the further awakening and ' instructing of thee, when he past by others, and ' left them in their sins: He taught thee to pray and ' heard thy Prayer: He turned all thy Fears and ' Groans to thy spiritual good: He pardoned all thy ' grievous sins: and since that, how much hath he ' endured and forgiven? He gave thee seasonable ' and necessary stripes, and brought thee up in the ' School of affliction; so moderating them, that ' they might not disable or discourage thee, but ' only correct thee, and keep thee from security, ' wantonness,stupidity,and contempt of holy things, ' and might spoil all Temptations to Ambition, ' worldliness, voluptuousness and fleshly lust. By ' the threatnings of great calamities and death, he ' hath frequently awakened thee to cry to Heaven; ' and by as frequent and wonderful Deliverances, ' he hath answered thy Prayers, and encouraged ' thee still to wait upon him: He hath given thee the ' hearty Prayers of many hundreds of his faithful ' servants, and heard them for thee in many a di- ' stress: He hath strangely preserved thee in ma- ' nifold dangers: He hath not made thee of the ' basest of the people, whose poverty might tempt ' them to discontent; nor set thee upon the pinnacle ' of worldly honour, where giddiness might have ' been thy ruin, and where temptations to pride,and ' lust, and luxury, and enmity to a holy life, are so ' violent that few escape them: He hath not set ' thee out upon a Sea of cares and vexations, world- ' ly Businesses and Encumbrances; but fed thee ' with Food convenient for thee, and given thee lei- ' sure to walk with God: He hath not chained thee ' to an unprofitable Profession, nor used thee as ' those that live like their Beasts, to eat, and drink, ' and sleep, and play, or live to live: But he hath ' called thee to the noblest and sweetest work; when ' that hath been thy business, which others were ' glad to taste of as a recreation and repast.He hath ' allowed thee to converse with Books,and with the ' best and wisest men, and to spend thy Days in ' sucking in delightful knowledge: And this not ' only for thy pleasure,but thy use; and not only for ' thy self, but many others? O how many sweet ' and precious truths,hath he allowed thee to feed on ' all the day, when others are diverted, and com- ' monly look at them sometimes afar off? O how ' many precious hours hath he granted me, in his ' holy Assemblies, and in his honourable and most ' pleasant work? How oft hath his Day,and his holy ' uncorrupted Ordinances, and the communion ' of his Saints,and the mentioning of his Name and ' Kingdom, and the pleading of his cause with sin- ' ners, and the celebrating of his praise, been my ' delight? O how many hundreds that he hath ' sent, have wanted the abundant Encouragement ' which I have had? When he hath seen the dis- ' ease of my despondent mind, he hath not tryed me ' by denying me success, nor suffered me with ' Jonas, according to my Inclination to overrun his ' work; but hath ticed me on by continued En- ' couragements, and strowed all the way with mer- ' cies: But his mercies to me in the Souls of others, ' have been so great, that I shall secretly acknow- ' ledge them, rather than here record them, where I ' must have respect to those usual mercies of Be- ' lievers, which lye in the common road to Heaven, ' And how endless would it be to mention all? All ' the good that friends and enemies have done me? ' All the wise and gracious Disposals of his Provi- ' dence? in every condition, and change of life, ' and change of times, and in every place where- ' ever he brought me: His every days renewed ' mercies: His Support under all my Languishings, ' and weakness; his plentiful Supplies; his gracious ' helps; his daily pardons; and the Glorious Hopes ' of a blessed Immortality which his Son hath pur- ' chased, and his Covenant and Spirit sealed to me? ' O the mercies that are in one Christ, one Holy ' Spirit, one Holy Scripture, and in the Blessed ' God himself. These I have mentioned, unthank- ' ful heart, to shame thee for thy want of Love to ' God. And these I will leave upon record, to be ' a Witness for God against thy ingratitude, and to ' confound thee with shame, if thou deny thy Love ' to such a God. Every one of all these Mercies, ' and multitudes more will rise up against thee, and ' shame thee before God and all the world, as a ' monster of unkindness, if thou love not him that ' hath used thee thus.]

Here also consider what God is for your future good, as well as what he hath been hitherto: How all-sufficient,how powerful, merciful and good: But of this more anon.

§. 24. Direct. 7. Improve the vanity and vexation of the Creature, and all thy Disappointments,and Injuries, and Afflictions, to the promoting of thy Love to God. And this by a double Advantage: First, By observing that there is nothing meet to divert thy Love, Dir. 7.

Love, or rob God of it; unless thou wilt Love thy trouble and distress! Secondly, That thy Love to God is the comfort by which thou must be supported under the Injuries and troubles which thou meetest with in the world: And therefore to neglect it, is but to give up thy self to misery. [‘Is ‘it for nothing, O my soul, that God hath turned ‘loose the world against thee? That Devils rage ‘against thee, and wicked men do reproach and slan‘der thee, and seek thy ruin, and friends prove in‘sufficient, and as broken Reeds? It had been as ea‘sie to God, to have prospered thee in the world, ‘and suited all things to thy own desires, and have ‘strawed thy way with the flowers of worldly com‘forts and delights; But he knew thy proneness to ‘undo thy self by carnal loves, and how easily thy ‘heart is enticed from thy God: And therefore he ‘hath wisely and mercifully ordered it, that thy tem‘ptations shall not be too strong, and no creature ‘shall appear to thee in an over-amiable tempting ‘dress. Therefore he hath suffered them to become ‘thy enemies: And wilt thou love an enemy better ‘than thy God? What an envious and malicious ‘world? A world of cares, and grief, and pains? ‘a weary, restless, empty world? How deep and ‘piercing are its injuries? How superficial and de‘ceitful is its friendship? How serious are its sor‘rows? What toyish shews and dreams are its de‘lights? How constant are its cares and labours? ‘How seldom and short are its flattering smiles? ‘Its comforts are disgraced by the certain expectation ‘of succeeding sorrows: Its sorrows are heightned ‘by the expectations of more: In the midst of its ‘flatteries, I hear something within me saying, [Thou ‘must dye: This is but the way to rottenness and ‘dust.] I see a Winding-sheet and a Grave still be‘fore me: I foresee how I must lye in pains and ‘groans, and then become a loathsome corpse. And ‘is this a world to be more delighted in than God? ‘What have I left me for my support and solace in ‘the midst of all this Vanity and Vexation, but to ‘look to him that is the All-sufficient, sure, never ‘failing good? I must love him, or I have nothing ‘to love, but enmity or deceit. And is this the worst ‘of Gods design, in permitting and causing my ‘pains and disappointments here? Is it but to drive ‘my foolish heart unto himself, that I may have ‘the solid delights and happiness of his Love? O ‘then let his blessed will be done! Come home my ‘soul; my wandring, tired, grieved soul: Love ‘where thy Love shall not be lost: Love him that ‘will not reject thee, nor deceive thee, nor requite ‘thee as the world doth with injuries and abuse: ‘Despair not of entertainment, though the world ‘deny it thee. The peaceable Region is above. In ‘the world thou must have trouble, that in Christ ‘thou maist have peace. Retire to the harbour, if ‘thou wouldst be free from storms. God will re‘ceive thee, when the world doth cast thee off, if ‘thou heartily cast off the world for him. O what ‘a solace is it to the soul, to be driven clearly from ‘the world to God, and there to be exercised in that ‘sacred Love, which will accompany us to the world ‘of Love!]

Dir. 8. §. 25. Direct. 8. Labour for the truest and fullest conceptions of the Goodness and excellencies of God, which are his Amiableness; and abhor all misrepresentations of him as unlovely. That which is apprehended as unlovely cannot be loved: And that which is apprehended as evil is apprehended as unlovely. Therefore it is the grand design of Satan to hide Gods Goodness, and misrepresent him as evil: Not to deny him to be Good in himself (for in that he hath no hope to be believed;) but to perswade men that he is not Good to them, or to make them forget or overlook his goodness. Not to perswade them that God is Evil in himself, but that he is evil to them, by restraining them from their beloved sins, and hating them as sinners, and resolving to damn them if they go on impenitently. This which is part of the Goodness of God, he maketh them believe is evil, by engaging them in a way and interest, which he knoweth that God is engaged against, and enticing them under the strokes of his Justice: And he tempteth believers themselves to poor diminutive unworthy thoughts of the Goodness and Mercifulness of God, and to continual apprehensions of his wrath and terrours: And if he can make them believe that God is their enemy, and think of him only as a consuming fire, how little are they like to Love him? If Christians knew how much of the Devils malice against God and them, doth exercise it self in this, to make God appear to man unlovely, they would more studiously watch against such misrepresentations, and fly from them with greater hatred. Not that we must first by the advice of arrogant Reason and self-love, as some do, draw a false description of Goodness and Amiableness in our minds, and make that the measure of our judgment of God, his nature, attributes and decrees; nor take his Goodness to be only his suitableness to our opinions, wills and interests: But we must take out from the word and works of God, that true description of his Goodness which he hath given of himself, and expunge out of our conceits whatsoever is contrary to it. Think of Gods Goodness in proportion with his other attributes [O my soul, how unequally hast thou thought of God? ‘Thou easily ‘believest that his Power is Omnipotence, and ‘that his Knowledge is Omniscience; but of his ‘Goodness how narrow and poor are thy conceiv‘ings? As if it were nothing to his Power and ‘Knowledge. How oft hast thou been amazed in the ‘consideration of his Greatness, and how seldom ‘affected with the apprehensions of his Goodness? ‘Thou gratifiest him that would have thee believe ‘and tremble as he doth himself, and not him that ‘would have thee Believe and Love. How oft ‘hast thou suffered the malicious enemy, to accuse ‘God to thee, and make thee believe that he is a ‘hater of man, and hateful to a man, or a hater of ‘thee, that he might make thee hate him? How oft ‘hast thou suffered him to draw in thy thoughts a ‘false representation of thy dearest Lord, and shew ‘him to thee as in that unlovely shape? How oft ‘have thy conceptions dishonoured and blaspheme ‘his Love and Goodness, while thou hast seemed ‘to magnifie his Knowledge and his Power? Think ‘of him now as Love it self, as fuller of Good‘ness, than the Sea of Water, or the Sun of Light. ‘Love freely and boldly, without the stops of ‘suspicions and fears, where thou art sure thou ‘canst never love enough, and if all the love ‘of men and Angels were united in one flame, ‘they could never love too much, or come near ‘the proportion of the Glorious Goodness which ‘they love. Cast thy self boldly into this ‘Ocean of delights: Though the narrowness ‘of thy own capacity confine thee, yet as ‘there are no bounds in the object of thy love, ‘let not false unbelieving thoughts confine ‘thee. O that I were all eye to see the ‘Glorious Amiableness of my God! O that I ‘were all Love that I might be filled with ‘his Goodness! O that all the Passions of my ‘soul were turned into this Holy Passion! O ‘that all my fears, and cares, and sorrows, were ‘turned into Love! And that all the thoughts that ‘confusedly crowd in upon me and molest me, were ‘turned into this one unceasant thought, of the in‘finite

O Orator, in tua oratione plus dilige Deum quam recipsum & alia: & si hoc facis, justus es & prudens, & de charitate & sanctitate habituatus: Qui habitus est amicus tuus in oratione—— O Orator! quando orabis pro commissis, justitiam, Dei tecum teneas diligendo; non autem odiendo: quia si sic, misericordia Dei non posset esse tua amica, eo quia injustus esset; & tuus hostis esset crudelis & aspe & charitate prolongatus & tuum amare in odire esset perversum, de quo odire esset in aeternum habituatus. 'finite Goodneſs of my God! O that all my tears 'and groanings, yea, and all my other mirth and 'pleaſures, were turned into the melodious ſongs 'of Love! And that the Pulſe, and voice, and ope 'rations of Love, were all the motion of my ſoul! 'Surely in Heaven it will be ſo, though it is not to 'be expected here.]

Dir. 9. §. 26. Direct. 9. The great Means of promoting Love to God, is duly to behold him in his appearances to man, in the ways of NATURE, GRACE, and GLORY: Firſt therefore learn to underſtand and improve his appearanees in NATURE, and to ſee the Creator in all his works, and by the Knowledge and Love of them to be raiſed to the Knowledge and Love of him: Though ſin hath ſo diſabled us to the due improvement of theſe Appearances of God in nature, that Grace muſt reſtore us, before we can do it effectually and acceptably; yet Objectively Nature is ſtill the ſame in ſubſtance, and affordeth us much help to the Knowledge and Love of God. He knoweth nothing of the world aright, that knoweth not God in it, and by it. Some note that the greateſt ſtudents in Nature are not uſually the beſt proficients in grace; and that Philoſophers and Phyſicians are ſeldom great admirers of piety: But this is to judge of the wiſe by the fooliſh, and to impute the ignorance and impiety of ſome, to others that abhor it. Doubtleſs he is no Philoſopher but a Fool, that ſeeth not, and admireth not the Creatour in his works. Indeed if a man do wholly give himſelf to know the ſhape and form of Letters, and to write them curiouſly, or cut them in braſs or ſtone, or to print them, and not to underſtand their ſignifications or uſe, no wonder if he be ignorant of the art and ſciences, which thoſe Letters well underſtood would teach him: Such a man may be called an Engraver, a Scrivener, a Printer, but not a Scholar: And no better can the Atheiſt be called a Philoſopher or learned man, that denyeth the moſt wiſe Almighty author, while he beholdeth his works: When the Nature and Name of God is ſo plainly engraven upon them all. It is a great part of a Chriſtians daily buſineſs, to ſee and admire God in his works, and to uſe them as ſteps to aſcend by to himſelf. Pſal. 111. 2, 3, 4. The works of the Lord are great, ſought out of all them that have pleaſure therein: His work is honourable and glorious; and his righteouſneſs endureth for ever: He hath made his wonderful works to be remembred—— Pſal. 143. 5. I meditate on all thy works: I muſe on the works of thy hands. [Pſal. 77. 12. I will meditate alſo of all thy works, and talk of thy doings. Pſal. 92. 4, 5, 6. For thou Lord haſt made me glad through thy work; I will triumph in the works of thy hands: A bruitiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a fool underſtand this: As the praiſing of Gods works, ſo the obſerving of God in his works, is much of the work of a holy ſoul. Pſal. 145. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 17. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed: And his greatneſs is unſearchable: One generation ſhall praiſe thy works to another, and ſhall declare thy mighty acts: I will ſpeak of the glorious honour of his Majeſty, and of thy wondrous works. And men ſhall ſpeak of the might of thy terrible acts, and I will declare thy greatneſs: They ſhall abundantly utter the memory of thy great Goodneſs, and ſhall ſing of thy righteouſneſs: —— All thy works ſhall praiſe thee O Lord, and thy Saints ſhall bleſs thee—— The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works, Rom. 1. 19, 20. That which may be known of God is manifeſt to them: For God hath ſhewed to them: For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made: Even his eternal power and Godhead, ſo that they are without excuſe.] If we converſe in the world as believers or rational creatures ought, we ſhould as oft as David repeat thoſe words, Pſal. 107. O that men would praiſe the Lord for his Goodneſs! and for his wondrous works to the Children of men! And let them ſacrifice the ſacrifices of thanksgiving, and declare his works with rejoycing: They that go down to the ſea in ſhips, that do buſineſs in great waters: theſe ſee the works of the Lord and his wonders in the deep, ver. 21, 22, 23, 24. But this is a ſubject fitter for a Volume (of Phylicks Theologically handled) than for ſo ſhort a touch. What an excellent Book is the viſible world for the daily ſtudies of a holy ſoul? Light is not more viſible to the eye in the Sun, than the Goodneſs of God is in it and all the creatures to the mind. If I Love not God, when all the world revealeth his Lovelineſs, and every creature telleth me that he is Good, what a blind and wicked heart have I? O wonderful Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and Power which appeareth in every thing we ſee? In every Tree, and Plant, and Flower: In every Bird, and Beaſt, and Fiſh: In every Worm, and Fly, and creeping thing: In every part of the Body of Man or Beaſt: Much more in the admirable compoſure of the whole: In the Sun, and Moon, and Stars, and Meteors: In the Lightning and Thunder; the Air and Winds, the Rain and Waters; the Heat and Cold; the Fire, and the Earth; Eſpecially in the compoſed frame of all, ſo far as we can ſee them ſet together: In the admirable order and co-operation of all things: In their times and ſeaſons; and the wonderful uſefulneſs of all for man: O how glorious is his Power, and Wiſdom, and Goodneſs of God in all the frame of nature! Every creature ſilently ſpeaks his Praiſe, declaring Him to Man whoſe office is, as the worlds High Prieſt, to ſtand between them and the Great Creator, and expreſly offer him the praiſe of all, Pſal. 8. 3, 4, 5, 6, 9. When I conſider the Heavens the work of thy fingers, the Moon, and the Stars which thou haſt ordained: What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him? For thou haſt made him a little lower than the Angels; and haſt crowned him with glory and honour. Thou madeſt him to have dominion over the works of thy hands: thou haſt put all things under his feet: O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the earth? O that men would praiſe the Lord for his Goodneſs, and declare his wondrous works to the children of men! The earth is full of the Goodneſs of the Lord, Pſal. 33. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Read Pſal 65. Thus Love God as appearing in the works of Nature.

Dir. 10. §. 27. Direct. 10. Study to know God, as he appeareth more clearly to ſinners in his Goodneſs in the works of GRACE; eſpecially in his Son, his Covenant, and his Saints, and there to Love him, in the admiration of his Love. Here Love hath made it ſelf an advantage of our ſin, and unworthineſs, of our neceſſities and miſeries, of the Law and Juſtice, and the flames of Hell: The abounding of ſin and miſery hath glorified abounding Grace: That Grace which fetcheth ſons for God from among the voluntary vaſſals of the Devil: Which fetcheth Children of Light out of darkneſs, and Living ſouls from among the dead, and heirs for Heaven from the gates of Hell, and brings us as from the Gallows, to the Throne. 1. A believing view of the Nature, Undertaking, Love, Obedience, Doctrine, Example, Sufferings, Interceſſion and Kingdom of JESUS CHRIST, muſt needs inflame the believers hearts with an anſwerable degree of the Love of God. To look on a Chriſt and not Love God, is to have eyes, and not to ſee, and to overlook him while we ſeem to look on him. He is the liveliest Image of Infinite Goodneſs, and the meſſenger of the moſt unſearchable aſtoniſhing Love, and the pur-chaſer of the moſt unvaluable benefits, that ever were revealed to the ſons of men. Our greateſt Love muſt be kindled by the Greateſt revelations and communications of the Love of God. And Greater Love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends, John 15. 13. that is, Men have no dearer and clearer a way to expreſs their Love to their friends: But that Love is aggravated indeed which will expreſs it ſelf as far for enemies. But God commendeth his Love towards us, in that while we were yet ſinners Chriſt died for us. And if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we ſhall be ſaved by his life: Rom. 5. 8, 9, 10. Steep then that ſtiff and hardened heart in the blood of Chriſt, and it will melt: Come near with Thomas, and by the paſſage of his wounds, get near unto his heart, and it will change thy unkind unthankful heart into the very nature of Love. Chriſt is the beſt Teacher of the leſſon of Love, that ever the world had: who taught it not only by his words, but by his blood: by his life and by his death: If thou canſt not learn it of him, thou canſt never learn it. Love is the greateſt commander of Love, and the moſt effectual argument that can inſuperably conſtrain us to it. And none ever loved at the meaſure and rates that Chriſt hath loved. To ſtand by ſuch a fire, is the way for a congealed heart to melt, and the coldeſt affections to grow warm. A lively faith ſtill holding Chriſt, the Glaſs of infinite Love and Goodneſs, before our faces, is the greateſt Leſſon in the Art of Love.

§. 28. 2. Behold God alſo in his Covenant of Grace, which he hath made in Chriſt. In that you may ſee ſuch ſure, ſuch great and wonderful mercies, freely given out to a world of ſinners, and to your ſelves among the reſt, as may afford abundant matter for Love and Thankfulneſs to feed on while you live. There you may ſee how loth God is that ſinners ſhould periſh: How he delighteth in mercy: And how great and unſpeakable that mercy is. There you may ſee an Act of Pardon and Oblivion granted upon the reaſonable condition of Believing, Penitent Acceptance, to all Mankind: The ſins that men hath been committing many years together, their wilful heinous aggravated ſins, you may there ſee pardoned by more aggravated Mercy: and the enemies of God reconciled to him, and condemned rebels ſav'd from Hell, and brought into his family, and made his ſons. [O what an Image of the Goodneſs of God is apparent in the tenour of his word and Covenant? Holineſs and Mercy make up the whole: They are expreſt in every leaf and line. The precepts which ſeem too ſtrict to ſinners, are but the perfect Rules of Holineſs and Love, for the health and happineſs of man. What Lovelineſs did David find in the Law it ſelf? And ſo ſhould we, if we read it with his eyes and heart: It was ſweeter to him than hony: he loved it above gold, Pſalm 119. 127, and 97. he cryeth out, O how I love thy Law! it is my meditation all the day. And muſt not the Law-giver then be much more lovely, whoſe Goodneſs here appeareth to us? Good and upright is the Lord: therefore will he teach ſinners in the way: Pſalm 25. 8. I will delight my ſelf in thy Commandments which I have loved: My hands alſo will I lift up to thy Commandments which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy ſtatutes. Pſalm 119. 47, 48. How delightfully then ſhould I love and meditate on the Bleſſed Author of this holy Law? But how can I read the hiſtory of Love, the ſtrange deſign of Grace in Chriſt, the myſtery which the Angels deſirouſly pry into, the promiſes of life to loſt and miſerable ſinners, and not feel the power of Love transform me? Behold with what Love the Father hath Loved us, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God? 1 John 3. 1. How doth God ſhed abroad his Love upon our hearts, but by opening to us the ſuperabundance of it in his word, and opening our hearts by his ſpirit to perceive it? O when a poor ſinner that firſt had felt the load of ſin, and the wrath of God, ſhall feelingly read or hear what mercy is tendered to him in the Covenant of Grace, and hear Chriſts meſſengers tell him from God, that All things are now ready, and therefore invite him to the heavenly feaſt, and even compel him to come in, what melting love muſt this affect the ſinners heart with? When we ſee the Grant of Life eternal ſealed to us by the blood of Chriſt, and a pardoning, juſtifying ſaving Covenant, ſo freely made, and ſurely confirmed to us, by that God whom we had ſo much offended, O what an incentive is here for Love?

§. 29. When I mention the Covenant, I imply the Sacraments which are but its appendants or confirming ſeals, and the inveſting the believer ſolemnly with its benefits. But in theſe God is pleaſed to condeſcend to the moſt familiar communion with his Church, that Love and Thankfulneſs might want no helps. There it is that the Love of God in Chriſt, applyeth it ſelf moſt cloſely to particular ſinners; And the meat or drink will be ſweet in the mouth, which was not ſweet to us on the table at all. O how many a heart hath this infected? How many have left the ſtirrings of that Love, which before they left not, when they have ſeen Chriſt crucified before their eyes, and have heard the Miniſter, in his name and at his command, bid them Take, and Eat, and Drink; commanding them not to Refuſe their Saviour, but Take him, and the benefits of his blood as their own, aſſuring them of his good will and readineſs to forgive and ſave them?

§. 30. 3. Behold alſo the Lovelineſs of God in his Holy ones, who bear his Image, and are advanced by his Love and Mercy: If you are Chriſtians indeed, you are taught of God to Love his ſervants and to ſee an excellency in the Saints on earth, and make them the people of your delight: Pſalm 16. 1, 2. 1 Theſ. 4. 9. And this muſt need accquaint you with the greater Aimableneſs, in the moſt Holy God that made them Holy. O how oft have the feeling and heavenly prayers of lively believers, excited thoſe affections in me, which before I felt not? How oft have I been warmed with their Heavenly diſcourſe? How amiable is that Holy Heavenly diſpoſition and converſation which appeareth in them? Their faith, their Love, their truſt in God, their cheerful obedience, their hatred of ſin, their deſire of the good of all, their meekneſs and patience: how much do theſe advance them above the ignorant, ſenſual, proud, malignant and ungodly world? How Good then is that God that makes men Good? And how little is the Goodneſs of the beſt of men, compared to his unmeaſurable Goodneſs? Whenever you converſe with holy men, ſtirs up your Love to them, riſe by it preſently to the God of Saints, and let all be turned to him that giveth all, to them and you.

§. 31. And as the excellency of the Saints, ſo their priviledge and great advancement, ſhould ſhew you the Goodneſs of God that doth advance them. As oft as thou ſeeſt a Saint, how poor and mean in the world ſoever, thou ſeeſt a living monument of the abundant kindneſs of the Lord: Thou ſeeſt a child of God, a member of Chriſt, an heir of Heaven: Thou ſeeſt one that hath all his ſins forgiven him, and is ſnatcht as a brand out of the fire, and delivered from the power of Satan, and tranſlated into the Kingdom of Chriſt: Thou ſeeſt one for whom Chriſt hath conquered the powers of Hell; and one that is freed from the bondage of the Fleſh; and one that of the Devils ſlave, is made a Prieſt to offer up the ſacrifices of Praiſe to God. Thou ſeeſt one that hath the Spirit of God within him; and one that hath daily intercourſe with Heaven, and audience with God, and is dearly beloved by him in Chriſt. Thou ſeeſt in fleſh a companion of Angels, and one that hath the Divine Nature, and muſt ſhortly be above the Stars in glory, and muſt be with Chriſt, and muſt love and magnifie God for ever. And is not the amiableneſs of God apparent in ſuch mercy, beſtowed upon ſinful man? And ſhould we not now begin to admire him in his Saints, and glorifie him in believers, who will come with thouſands of his Angels, to be glorified and admired in them at the laſt? 2 Theſ. 1. 10. O the abundant deliverances, Preſervations, Proviſions, Encouragements, which all his ſervants receive from God! Who ever ſaw the juſt forſaken, even while they think themſelves forſaken? For the Lord loveth judgment, and forſaketh not his Saints: they are preſerved for ever: The Law of his God is in his Heart: none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide: Mark the perfect Man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace: Pſal. 37. 25, 28, 31, 37. Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints: Pſalm 116. 15. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil: he preſerveth the ſouls of his Saints; he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked: Light is ſowen for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart, Pſal. 97. 10, 11. O love the Lord all his Saints! for the Lord preſerveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer: Pſal. 31. 23.

Dir. 11. §. 32. Direct. 11. Inſiſt not ſo much on your Deſires after viſion, as to undervalue the lower apprehenſions of Faith: but love God by the way of Faith, as in order to the Love of Intuition.

We are exceeding apt to be over-deſirous of ſight; and to take nothing as an object fit to affect us, which ſenſe perceiveth not. When we have the ſureſt evidence of the truth of things unſeen, it hardly ſatisfieth us, unleſs we may ſee or feel. And hereupon our Love to God is hindred; while we think of him as if he were not, or take the apprehenſions of faith, as if they were uncertain, and little differed from a dream. Yea, it proveth the ground of moſt dangerous temptations to Infidelity it ſelf: While we take that knowledge which we have of God, in the way of Faith, the Love and Communion which is exerciſed thereby, to be as nothing; we are next tempted to think, that there is no true knowledge of God, and communion with him to be attained: And when we have been ſearching and ſtriving long, and find that we can reach no more, we are tempted to think that the ſoul of man is made but as the beaſts, for preſent things, and is uncapable of thoſe higher things which are revealed in the Goſpel; and that if there were indeed a life to come, and man were made to enjoy his God, we ſhould get nearer to him than we are, and know him more, and love him better. 'But is it nothing, O 'preſumptuous ſoul, to ſee God in a Glaſs, in order 'to a nearer ſight? Is it nothing to have the Hea'venly Jeruſalem deſcribed and promiſed to thee, 'unleſs thou ſee it and poſſeſs it? Wilt thou travel 'to no place, but what thou ſeeſt all the way? 'Wouldſt thou have no difference betwixt Earth 'and Heaven? What canſt thou have more in Hea'ven, than immediate intuition? Wouldſt thou have 'no life of tryal, in the obedience of Faith, before 'the life of Fruition and Reward? Or canſt thou 'think that a life of ſight and ſenſe, is fit for tryal 'and preparation, to ſhew who is meet for the re'warding life? Unthankful Soul! Compare thy 'ſtate with that of Bruits: Is it nothing for thee to 'know thy Maker in the Works of his Creation 'and Providence, and in the revelations of Grace, 'and the belief of promiſed immortality, unleſs 'thou preſently ſee him in his glory? When theſe 'thy fellow creatures know him not at all? Com'pare thy ſelf now, with thy ſelf as heretofore, in 'the days of thy Ignorance and Carnality. Hadſt 'thou then any ſuch knowledge of God, as thou 'now undervalueſt? or any ſuch communion with 'him, as thou now accounteſt next to none? When 'the Light firſt ſhined in thine eyes, and thou hadſt 'firſt experience of the knowledge of God, thou 'thoughtſt it ſomething, and rejoycedſt in the light: 'If then thou couldſt have ſuddenly attained but 'to ſo much, as thou haſt now attained, wouldſt 'thou have called it Nothing? Would it not 'have ſeemed a greater treaſure to thee, than to 'have known both the Indies as thine own? O be 'not unthankful for the little which thou haſt re'ceived, when God might have ſhut thee out in 'that darkneſs which the greateſt part of the world 'lyeth in; and have left thee to thy ſelf to have 'deſired no higher knowledge, than ſuch as may 'feed thy fanſie, and pride, and luſt. Art thou ſo 'far drowned in fleſh and ſenſe, as to take Intel'lectual apprehenſions for dreams, unleſs thy ſenſe 'may ſee and feel? Wilt thou take thy ſoul, thy ſelf 'for nothing, becauſe thou art not to be ſeen or felt? 'Shall no ſubjects honour and obey their King, but 'they that have ſeen his Court and him? Deſire 'the fulleſt and the neareſt ſight; the pureſt and 'the ſtrongeſt Love; and deſire and ſpare not the life 'where all this will be had: But take heed of be'ing too haſty with God, and unthankful for the mer'cies of the way. Know better the Difference be'twixt thy travail and thy home: And know what 'is fit for Paſſengers to expect: Humbly ſubmit to 'an obedient waiting in a life of faith: And make 'much of the Teſtament of Chriſt, till thou be at 'age to poſſeſs the Inheritance. Thou muſt live, 'and love, and run, and fight, and conquer, and ſuf'fer by faith, if ever thou wilt come to ſee and to 'poſſeſs the Crown.

§. 33. Direct. 12. It is a powerful means to kindle the Love of God in a believer, to foreſee by faith the glory of Heaven, and what God will be there to his Saints for ever. And thus to behold God in his GLORY, is the uſe of GRACE. Though the manner of knowing him thus by faith, be far ſhort of what we there expect, yet it is the ſame God and glory that now we believe, which then we muſt more openly behold. And therefore as that Apprehenſion of Love will unconceivably excel the higheſt which can be here attained; ſo the fore-thoughts of that doth excel all other Arguments and means to affect us here; and will raiſe us as high as means can raiſe us. The greateſt things, and greateſt Intereſt of our ſouls being there, will greatly raiſe us to the love of God, if any thing will do it: To foreſee how near him we ſhall be ere long, and what a glorious proof we ſhall have of his good will! and how our ſouls will be raviſhed everlaſtingly with his Love! To think what hearts the bleſſed have that ſee his glory, and live with Chriſt! How full of love they are! and what a delight it is to them thus to love! muſt needs affect the heart of a Believer. ['Lift up thy head, poor drowſie ſinner! 'Look up to Heaven, and think where thou muſt 'live for ever! Think what the holy ones of God 'are doing! Do they love God, or do they not? 'Muſt it not be then thy life and work for ever? 'And canſt thou forbear to love him now, that is 'bringing thee to ſuch a world of Love? Thou 'wouldſt love him more, that would give thee ſe'curity to poſſeſs a Kingdom which thou never 'ſaweſt, than him that giveth thee but ſome toy in 'hand. And let it not ſeem too diſtant to affect 'thee: The Time is as nothing till thou wilt be 'there: Thou knoweſt not but thou maiſt be there 'this night: There thou ſhalt ſee the Maker of Si incœlis fidelibus hæc ſervatur hæreditas, frivola quædam & tepida proferunt aliqui, putantes eam ſe percipere in terrena Jeruſalem; mille annis exiſtimant eſſe delicias corporales, dum dicatur hanc hæreditatem nec corrumpi poſſe nec marceſcere. Didymus Alexand. in Petr. 1. cont. Millenar.

'the worlds, and know the misteries of his wonderous works. There shalt thou see thy blessed Lord, 'and feel that love which thou readest of in the Gospel, and enjoy the fruits of it for ever: There 'thou shalt see him that suffered for thee, and rose 'again, whom Angels see and worship in his glory. 'Thou shalt see there a more desirable sight, than 'those that saw him heal the blind, and lame, and sick, 'and raise the dead; or those that saw him in his 'transfiguration; or those that saw him on the Cross, 'or after his resurrection, or than Stephen saw when 'he was stoned, or Paul when he was converted, 'yea, more than it is like he saw when he was in 'his Rapture, in the third Heavens! O who can think 'believingly on the life which we must there 'shortly live, the glory which we must see, the 'love which we must receive, and the love which 'we must exercise, and not feel the fire begin to 'flame, and the Glass in which we see the Lord, 'become a Burning-glass to our Affections?] CHRIST and HEAVEN are the Books which we must be often reading; the Glasses in which we must daily gaze, if ever we will be good Proficients and Practitioners in the Art of Holy Love.

Dir. 13. §. 34. Direct. 13. Exercise your Souls so frequently and diligently in this way of Love, that the Method of it may be familiar to you, and the means and motives still at hand, and you may presently be able to fall into the way, as one that is well acquainted with it, and may not be distracted and lost in generals, as not knowing where to fix your thoughts. I know no Methods alone will serve to raise the dead, and cause a carnal senseless heart to love the Lord: But I know that many honest hearts, that have the Spirit of Love within them, have great need to be warned, that they quench not the Spirit, and great need to be directed how to stir up the grace which is given them: and that many live a more dull, or distracted, uncomfortable life, than they would do, if they wanted not Skill and Diligence The soul is most backward to this highest work; and therefore hath the greater need of helps: And the best have so much need, as that it is well if all will serve to keep up Loving and Grateful thoughts of God upon their minds. And when every Trade, and Art, and Science, requireth diligence, exercise and experience, and all are Bunglers at it at the first, can we reasonably think that we are like to attain any high degrees, with sleight, and short, and seldom thoughts?

Dir. 14. §. 35. Direct. 14. Yet let not weak headed or melancholy persons, set themselves on those Methods or lengths of Meditation, which their Heads cannot bear, lest the Tempter get advantage of them, and abate their Love, by making Religion seem a torment to them: but let such take up with shorter obvious Meditations, and exercise their Love in an active obediential way of living. This is the best Physick that is fitted to the Patients strength and case: And that's the best Shooe that is meetest for the foot, and not that which is the biggest, or the finest. It is a great design of Satan, to make all duties grievous and burdensome to us; and thereby to cast us into continual pain, and fear, and trouble, and so destroy our delight in God, and consequently our Love. Therefore pretend not to disability for carnal unwillingness and laziness of mind: but yet marr not all by grasping at more than you are able to bear: Take on you as you are able, and increase your work, if God increase your strength. If a melancholy person crack his brain with immoderate, unseasonable Endeavours, he will but disable himself for all.

Dir. 15. §. 36. Direct. 15. Keep clear, and hold fast the Evidences of thy Sincerity, that thou maist perceive thy interest in the Love of God; and resist the temptations which would hide his Love to thee, and cause thee to doubt of it, or deny it. Satan hath not his end when he hath troubled thee, and robbed thee of thy peace and comfort: It is worse that he is seeking to affect by this: His malice is more against God, than against thee: and more against God and thee in this point of Love, than in any other grace or duty. He knoweth that God esteemeth this most: And he knoweth if he could kill thy love, he kills thy Soul. And he knoweth how natural it is to man to love those that love him, and hate those that hate him, be they never so excellent in themselves. And therefore if he can perswade thee into despair, and to think that God hateth thee, and is resolved to damn thee, he will not despair of drawing thee to hate God. Or if he do but bring thee to fear that he loveth thee not, he will think accordingly to abate thy love. I know that a truly gracious soul keepeth up its love, when it looseth its assurance, and mourneth, and longeth, and seeketh in love, when it cannot triumph and rejoyce in love: But yet there are some prints left on the heart, of its former apprehensions of the Love of God: And such Souls exceedingly disadvantage themselves as to the exercises of love, and make it a work of wondrous difficulty. O it will exceedingly kindle love, when we can see Gods surest Love tokens in our hearts, and look to the promises, and say, They are all mine: and think of Heaven, as that which shall certainly be our own: and can say with Thomas, My Lord, and my God: and with Paul, that The Life which I live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, that loved me, and gave himself for me. Denyal of our grace may seem to be humility, but it tendeth to extinguish Love and Gratitude.

§. 37. But, you'l say, I must avoid Soul delusion and Pharisaical ostentation on the other side; and few reach Assurance: How then should we keep up the Love of God?

Signs of the Love of God.

Answ. 1. Though I am not come to the point of Trying and Discerning Grace, I shall give you this much help in the way, because it is so useful to the Exercises of Love. 1. If you have not Enjoying delighting Love, yet try whether you have not Desiring seeking Love. Love appeareth as truly in desiring and seeking Good as in delighting in it. Poor men shew their Love of the world, by Desiring and seeking it, as much as rich men do in delighting in it. What is it that you most desire and seek? 2. Or if this be so weak that you scarce discern it, do you not find a mourning and lamenting Love? You shew that you loved your Money, by mourning when you lose it; and that you loved your friend by grieving for his death, as well as by delighting in him while he lived. If you heartily lament it as your greatest unhappiness and loss, when you think that God doth cast you off, and that you are void of Grace, and cannot serve and honour him as you would, this shews you are not void of Love. 3. If you feel not that you Love him, do you feel that you would fain Love him, and that you Love to Love him? If you do so, it is a sign that you do Love him? When you do not only desire to find such an Evidence of salvation in you, but when you desire Love it self, and Love to Love God. Had you not rather have a heart to Love him perfectly, than to have all the riches in the world? Had you not rather live in the Love of God, if you could reach it, than to live in any earthly pleasure? If so, be sure he hath your hearts. The Will is the Love, and the Heart; If God have your Will he hath your Heart and Love. 4. What hath your Hearts if he have them not? Is there any thing that you prefer and seek before him, and that you had rather have than him? Can you be content without him, and let him go, in exchange for any earthly pleaſure? If not, it is a ſign he hath your Hearts. You love him ſavingly if you ſet more by nothing elſe than by him. 5. Do you love his holy Image in his word? Do you delight and meditate in his Law, Pſalm 1. 2. Is it in your hearts? Pſal. 40. 8. Or do you pray, Incline my heart unto thy Teſtimonies? Pſalm 119. 36. If you love Gods Image in his word, (the wiſdom and holineſs of it) you love God. 6. Do you love his Image on his Children? If you love them for their heavenly wiſdom and holineſs, you ſo far love God. He that loveth the Candle for its light, doth love the light it ſelf and the ſun: He that loveth the wiſe and holy for their wiſdom and holineſs, doth love wiſdom and holineſs it ſelf. The word and the ſaints being more in the reach of our ſenſible apprehenſions, than God himſelf is, we ordinarily feel our love to them, more ſenſibly than our Love to God; when indeed it is God in his word and ſervants that we love: 1 John 3. 14. Pſalm 15. 4. 7. Though for want of Aſſurance you feel not the Delights of Love, have you not a heart that would delight in it more than in all the Riches of the world, if you could but get aſſurance of your intereſt? Would it not comfort you more than any thing, if you could be ſure he loveth you, and could perfectly love him and obey him? If ſo, it is not for want of Love that you delight not in him, but for want of Aſſurance. So that if God have thy heart, either in a delighting Love, or a ſeeking and deſiring, or a lamenting mourning Love, he will not deſpiſe it or reject it. He is nigh to them that be of a broken heart, Pſalm 34. 18. A broken and contrite heart is his ſacrifice, which he will not deſpiſe, Pſalm 51. 17. The good Lord will have mercy on every one that prepareth their hearts to ſeek him, though they do it not according to the Preparation of the ſanctuary, 2 Chron. 30. 18, 19. By theſe Evidences you may diſcern the ſincerity of Love in ſmall degrees; and ſo you may make love the occaſion of more Love, by diſcerning that Goodneſs of God which is manifeſted to you in the leaſt.

§. 38. 2. But ſuppoſe you cannot yet attain Aſſurance: Neglect not to improve that Goodneſs and Mercy of God which he revealeth to you in the ſtate that you are in. Love him but as Infinite Goodneſs ſhould be loved, who ſo loved the world as to give his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life, Joh. 3. 16. Love him as the moſt bleſſed merciful God, who made you and all things, and hath given to the world an univerſal pardon, on condition of their penitent acceptance, and offereth them everlaſting life, and all this purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt: Love him as one that offereth you reconciliation, and intreateth you to be ſaved; and as one that delighteth not in the death of the wicked, but rather that they turn and live, and as one that would have all men to be ſaved and come to the knowledge of the truth, though he will ſave none but the penitent, that do acknowledge the truth. And when you love him ſincerely on theſe accounts, you will have the evidence of his ſpecial Love to you.

Dir. 16. §. 39. Direct. 16. Improve thy Senſe of natural and friendly love, to raiſe thee to the love of God. When thou feeſt or feeleſt what love a Parent hath to children, and a Husband to a Wife, or a Wife to a Husband, or faithful Friends to one another, think then [What Love do I owe to God? 'O how inconſiderable is the Loveline's of a Child, a wife, a friend, the beſt of Creatures, in compariſon of the love ineſs of God? Unworthy ſoul! Canſt thou love a drop of Goodneſs in thy friend? And canſt thou not love the Ocean of Goodneſs in thy God? Is a ſpark in the creature more amiable than the fire that kindled it? Thou canſt love thy friend for all his Blemiſhes, his ignorance, his Paſſions and manifold Imperfections: And canſt thou not love thy God, who hath none of theſe, nor any thing to diſcourage or damp thy love? Thou loveſt (and deſervedly loveſt) thy friend, becauſe he loveth thee, and deals friendly with thee: But O how much greater is the Love of God? Did ever friend love thee as he hath loved thee? Did ever friend do for thee as he hath done? He gave thee thy being, thy daily ſafety, and all the mercies of thy life: He gave thee his Son, his Spirit, and his Grace; He pardoned thy ſins, and took thee into his favour, and adopted thee for his Son and an heir of Heaven: He will glorifie thee with Angels in the Preſence of his Glory: How ſhould ſuch a friend as this be loved? How far above all mortal friends? Their love and friendſhip is, but a token and meſſage of his Love. Becauſe he loveth thee, he ſendeth thee kindneſs and mercy by thy friend: and when their kindneſs ceaſeth, or can do thee no good, his kindneſs will continue, and comfort thee for ever. Love them therefore as the meſſengers of his love; but love him in them, and love them for him, and love him much more.]

§. 40. Direct. 17. Think oft how delightful a life it would be to thee, if thou couldſt but live in the Love of God: And then the complacency will provoke deſire; and deſire will turn thy Face towards God till thou feel that thou loveſt him. The Love of a friend hath its ſweetneſs and delight: and when we love them, we feel ſuch pleaſure in our Love, that we love to love them. How pleaſant then would it be to love thy God? 'O bleſſed joyful life, if I could but love him as much as I deſire to love him? How freely could I leave the Ambitious, and the covetous, and the ſenſual, and voluptuous to their doting, deluſory, ſwiniſh love? How eaſily could I ſpare all earthly pleaſures? How near ſhould I come to the Angelical life? Could I love God as I would love him, it would fill me with continual pleaſure, and be the ſweeteſt feaſt that a ſoul can have. How eaſily would it quench all carnal love? How far would it raiſe me above theſe tranſitory things? How much ſhould I contemn them, and pity the wretches that know no better, and have their portion in this life? How readily ſhould I obey? And how pleaſant would obedience be? How ſweet would all my meditations be, when every thought is full of love? How ſweet would all my prayers be, when conſtraining love did bring me unto God, and indite and animate every word; How ſweet would Sacraments be, when my aſcending flaming love, ſhould meet that wonderful deſcending love which cometh from Heaven to call me thither, and in living bread and ſpiritual wine is the nouriſhment and cordial of my ſoul? How ſweet would all my ſpeeches be, when love commanded them, and every word were full of Love? How quiet would my Conſcience be, if it had never any of this Accuſation againſt me to caſt in my face to my ſhame and confuſion, that I am wanting in Love to the bleſſed God? O could I but love God with ſuch a powerful love as his Love and goodneſs ſhould command, I ſhould no more queſtion my ſincerity, nor doubt any more of his love to me. How freely then ſhould I acknowledge his grace, and how heartily ſhould I give him thanks for my juſtification, ſanctification and adoption, which now I mention with doubt and fear? O how would it lift up my ſoul unto his praiſe, and make it my delight to ſpeak good of his name? What a purifying fire would Love be in my breaſt, to burn up my Corruptions? It would endure nothing to enter or abide within me, that is contrary to the will and intereſt of my Lord; Dir. 17.

'Lord; but hate every motion that tendeth to diſhonour and diſpleaſe him. It would fill my ſoul with 'ſo much of Heaven, as would make me long to 'be in heaven, and make death welcome, which is 'now ſo terrible: Inſtead of theſe withdrawing 'ſhrinking fears, I ſhould deſire to depart and to be 'with Chriſt, as being beſt of all. O how eaſily 'ſhould I bear any burthen of reproach, or loſs, 'or want, when I thus loved God, and were aſſured 'of his love? How light would the Croſs be? And 'how honourable and joyful would it ſeem, to be 'impriſoned, reviled, ſpit upon and buffeted for 'the ſake of Chriſt? How deſirable would the 'flames of Martyrdom ſeem, for the teſtifying of my 'love, to him that loved me at dearer rates than I 'can love him? Lord is there no more of this bleſſed 'life of love to be attained here on earth? When 'all the world reveals thy Goodneſs; when thy ſon 'hath come down to declare thy love, in ſo full and 'wonderful a manner? When thy word hath open-'ed us a window into Heaven, where afar off we 'may diſcern thy Glory; yet ſhall our hearts be 'clods and ice? O pity this unkind unnatural ſoul! 'This dead, inſenſible, diſaffected ſoul! Teach me 'by thy ſpirit the art of Love! Love me not only ſo 'as to convince me that I have abundant cauſe to 'love thee above all, but love me ſo as to conſtrain 'me to it, by the magnetical attractive power of thy 'Goodneſs, and the inſuperable operations of thy 'omnipotent love!

Dir. 18. §. 41. Direct. 18. In thy Meditations upon all theſe Incentives of Love, preach them over earneſtly to thy heart, and expoſtulate and plead with it by way of ſoliloquy, till thou feel the fire begin to burn. Do not only think on the Arguments of Love, but diſpute it out with thy Conſcience, and by expoſtulating earneſt Reaſonings with thy heart, endeavour to affect it. There is much more moving force in this earneſt talking to our ſelves, than in bare cogitation, that breaks not out into mental words. Imitate the moſt powerful Preacher that ever thou waſt acquainted with: And juſt as he pleadeth the caſe with his hearers, and urgeth the truth and duty on them, by reaſon and importunity, ſo do thou in ſecret with thy ſelf. There is more in this than moſt Chriſtians are aware of, or uſe to practice. It is a great part of a Chriſtians skill and duty to be a good Preacher to himſelf. This is a lawful and a gainful way of preaching. No body here can make queſtion of thy call, nor deny thee a Licence, nor ſilence thee, if thou ſilence not thy ſelf. Two or three ſermons a week from others, is a fair proportion: but two or three ſermons a day from thy ſelf, is ordinarily too little. Therefore I have added ſoliloquies to many of theſe Directions for Love, to ſhew you how by ſuch pleadings with your ſelves, to affect your hearts and kindle Love.

§. 42. And O that this might be the happy fruit of theſe Directions with thee that art now reading or hearing them! That thou wouldſt but offer up thy flaming Heart, to Jeſus Chriſt our Great High-Prieſt, to be preſented an acceptable Sacrifice to God! Or if it flame not in Love as thou deſireſt, yet give it up to the Holy Spirit to increaſe the flames. Thou little knoweſt how much God ſetteth by a Heart. He calleth to thee himſelf, My Son, give me thy Heart, Prov. 23. 26. Without it, he cares not for any thing that thou canſt give him: He cares not for thy faireſt words without it: He cares not for thy loudeſt prayers without it: He cares not for thy coſtlieſt alms or ſacrifices if he have not thy heart. If thou give all thy goods to feed the poor, and give thy body to be burnt, and have not Love, it will profit thee nothing: If thou ſpeak with the Tongue of Men and Angels, and haſt not Love, thou art but as ſounding braſs or a tinkling Cymbal: If thou canſt propheſy, and preach to admiration, and underſtand all myſteries and knowledge, and hadſt faith to do miracles, and have not Love, thou art nothing: 1 Cor. 13. 1, 2, 3. Thou haſt but a ſhadow, and wanteſt that which is the ſubſtance and life of all. Come then and make an agreement with God, and reſolve now to offer to him thy Heart: He asketh thee for nothing which thou haſt not: It is not for riches or lands that he ſeeketh to thee; for then the poor might ſay as Peter, Silver and gold have I none: Give him but ſuch as thou haſt, and it ſufficeth. He knoweth that it is a polluted ſinful heart: but give it him, and he will make it clean: He knoweth that it is an unkind heart, that hath ſtood out too long: but give it him yet, and he will pardon and accept it. He knoweth that it is an unworthy heart: but give it him and he will be its worth. Only ſee that you give it him entirely and unreſervedly; for he will not bargain with the Devil or the World, for the dividing of thy heart between them. A half-heart and a hollow heart, that is but lent him till fleſhly intereſt or neceſſity ſhall call for it again, he will not accept. Only reſign it to him, and do but Conſent that thy Heart be his, and entirely and abſolutely his, and he will take it and uſe it as his own. It is his own by title; Let it be alſo ſo by thy Conſent. If God have it not, who ſhall have it? Shall the world, or pride, or fleſhly luſt? Did they make it? or did they purchaſe it? Will they be better to thee in the time of thy extremity? Do they bid more for thy heart than God will give thee? He will give thee his Son, and his Spirit, and Image, and the forgiveneſs of all thy ſins: If the greateſt gain, or honour, or pleaſure will win it and purchaſe it, he will have it; If Heaven will buy it, he will not break with thee for the price. Hath the world and ſin a greater price than this to give thee? And what doſt thou think that he will do with thy heart? and how will he uſe it, that thou art loth to give it him? Will he blind it, and deceive it, and corrupt it, and abuſe it, and at laſt torment it, as Satan will do? No; he will more illuminate it, and cleanſe it, and quicken it, Pſalm 51. 10. Epheſ. 2. 1. Jer. 24. 7. He will make it new, and heal and ſave it: Ezek. 36. 26. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Tit. 3. 3, 5. & 2. 14. He will advance and honour it, with the higheſt relations, Imployments and Delights: For Chriſt hath ſaid, John 12. 26. [If any Man ſerve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there ſhall alſo my Servant be: If any Man ſerve me, him will my Father honour.] He will Love it, and govern it, and comfort it, and the heart that is delivered to him ſhall be kept near unto his own: Joh. 26. 27. For the Father himſelf loveth you (ſaith Chriſt) becauſe you have loved me ——— Whereas if thou deliver not thy Heart to him, it will feed on the poyſon of luſcious vanity, which will gripe and tear it when it is down: It will be like a Houſe that nothing dwelleth in, but Dogs and Flies, and Worms, and Snakes: it will be like one that is loſt in the Wilderneſs, or in the night, that tireth himſelf in ſeeking the way home, and the longer the worſe: Deſpair and Reſtleſneſs will be its Companions for ever. Let me now once more in the Name of God beſpeak thy Heart? I will not uſe his Commands or Threatnings to thee now, (though theſe as Seconds muſt be uſed) becauſe that Love muſt have attractive Arguments, and is not raiſed by meer Authority or Fear: If there be not Love and Goodneſs enough in God, to deſerve the higheſt affections of every reaſonable creature, then let him go, and give thy Heart to one that's better. Hear how God pleadeth his own cauſe with an unkind unthankful people, Mic. 6. 2, 3. Hear O ye Mountains the Lords controverſy ———

O my people what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? teſtifie againſt me. What is there in him to turn away thy heart? Let malice it ſelf ſay the worſt without notorious impudence againſt him: What hath he ever done that deſerveth thy diſaffection and neglect? What wouldſt thou have to win a heart that is not in him? For which of his mercies or excellencies is it, that thou thus contemneſt and abuſeſt him? What doſt thou want that he cannot, yea, or will not give thee? Doth not thy tongue ſpeak honourably of his Goodneſs, while thy heart contradicteth it, and denieth all? What haſt thou found that will prove better to thee? Is it ſin or God that muſt be thy glory, reſt and joy, if thou wilt not be a fire-brand of reſtleſneſs and miſery for ever? What ſaiſt thou yet ſinner? Shall God, or the world and fleſhly pleaſures have thy Heart? Art thou not yet convinced which beſt deſerveth it, and which will be beſt to it? Canſt thou be a loſer by him? Will he make it worſe, and ſin make it better? Or wilt thou ever have cauſe to repent of giving it up to God, as thou haſt of giving it to the world and ſin? I tell thee, if God have not thy Heart, it were well for thee if thou hadſt no Heart——I had a thouſand times rather have the Heart of a dog or the baſeſt creature, than that mans heart that followeth his fleſhly luſts, and is not unfeignedly delivered up to God through Chriſt.

If I have not prevailed with your hearts for God, by all that I have ſaid, your Conſciences ſhall yet bear me witneſs, that I ſhewed you Gods title, and love, and goodneſs, and ſaid that which ought to have prevailed: and you ſhall find e're long, who it is that will have the worſt of it: But if you reſolve and give them preſently to God, he will entertain them, and ſanctifie and ſave them: And this happy day and work will be the Angels joy, Luke 15. 7. 10. and it will be my joy, and eſpecially your own everlaſting joy.

Grand Dir. 12. To Truſt in God.

DIRECT. XII.

Truſt God with that ſoul and body which thou haſt delivered up and dedicated to him; and quiet thy mind in his Love and faithfulneſs, whatever ſhall appear unto thee, or befall thee in the world.

Of the nature of Affiance and faith, I have written more fully in my Diſputation with Dr. Barlow of Saving Faith.

§. 1. I ſhall here briefly ſhew you; 1. What is the Nature of this Truſt in God. 2. What are the contraries to it. 3. What are the Counterfeits of it. 4. The Uſefulneſs of it. And then 5. I ſhall give you ſome Directions how to attain and exerciſe it.

SOLA fide Deo SOLI conſtanter adhære. A SOLO cuncta eri pierent malu. Peucerus his Diſtich in his ten years impriſonment. Scult. Curr. p. 22.

I. To Truſt in God is, upon the apprehenſion of the All-ſufficiency, Goodneſs, and faithfulneſs of God, to quiet our hearts in the expectation of the ſafety or benefits from him which we deſire, rejecting the cares, and fears, and griefs that would diſquiet them, if they had not the refuge of theſe hopes. It containeth in it a crediting the Word or Nature of God, or judging it to be a ſufficient ground of our ſecurity and expectation: And then ſecurity and expectation built upon that ground make up the reſt of the nature of truſt. Looking for the benefit, and finding a complacency and quietneſs of mind, in the ground diſcovered, and ceaſing all other cares and fears which would elſe diſquiet us. Aquinas and other School-men often call Affiance, ſpes robrata, a confirmed hope. There is a twofold Truſt in God: One is for that which he hath not promiſed to do, but yet we think that we find reaſon ſufficient from his Nature it ſelf, and relations, to expect: This may be more or leſs certain and ſtrong, as our collection of the Will of God from his Nature, is more or leſs ſure and clear. The other is, when we have not only Gods Nature, but his Promiſe alſo to truſt upon: And this giveth us a certainty (if we certainly underſtand his promiſe.) To the laſt ſort I may reduce that truſt in God for particular benefits, when we have only a promiſe in General, which maketh not the particulars known and certain to us: As the promiſe that all ſhall work together for our good, doth give us but a probability of health or outward protection and deliverances, becauſe we are uncertain how far they are for our good. All that is promiſed is ſure: But whether this or that be good for us, muſt be otherwiſe known. But thoſe general promiſes which contain particulars as ſurely known as the promiſe it ſelf, do make every one of the particular benefits as ſure by promiſe as the general: As the promiſe of the pardon of all our ſins, aſcertaineth us of the pardon of every ſin in particular. Where there is a promiſe, we Truſt Gods faithfulneſs as well as his Nature; but where there is none, we Truſt his Nature only. As a Child doth quietly truſt his Parents, without a promiſe, that they will not kill, or torment, or forſake him. But becauſe man is apt to make falſe collections of Gods will from his Nature, he hath given us ſuch clear expreſſions of it in his word, as may bring us above uncertain probabilities, and are ſufficent for faith to ground upon (ſuppoſing Gods properties) for our Government and peace. And it is certain, that all Collections of Gods will which are contrary to his Words, are the errors of the Collector.

§. 2. In what I have ſaid in this Direction, I deſire you chiefly to obſerve theſe three things: 1. That Gods Nature, and Love are the ſufficient general ſecurity to the ſoul. 2. That his Promiſe is the ſufficient particular ſecurity. 3. And that our unfeigned ſelf-dedication to him, is our ſufficient evidence of our intereſt in his Love and Covenant, which may warrant our ſpecial Truſt and expectations.

§. 3. II. The contraries to Truſt in God, are 1. Privative, not truſting him, not ſeeing the ground of juſt ſecurity in his Love and Promiſe: not crediting what is ſeen: nor ceaſing diſquietneſs and diſtruſtful cares and fears. 2. Poſitive diſtruſt: ſuppoſing the All-ſufficiency, Goodneſs and Promiſes of God, are not ſufficient grounds of our expectation and ſecurity: and thereupon diſquieting our minds with ſinful fears, and griefs, and cares, and ſhifting endeavours for our ſelves ſome other way: And this hath various degrees: In ſome it is predominant; in others not. 3. Oppoſite or adverſe: When we Truſt our ſelves, or friends, or wealth, or ſomething elſe inſtead of God, either againſt him, without him, or in co ordination with him.

§. 4. III. The Counterfeits of this Truſt are theſe: 1. When indeed we truſt in our wit, or power, or ſhifts, or friends, or in ſome means or creatures only, or in co-ordination with God, but pretend and think that we do it but in ſubordination to him, and that our primary truſt is in him alone. The detection of this is by trying how we can truſt God alone, when he giveth us a promiſe and no probable means. 2. Pretending to truſt God alone in the neglect of thoſe means which he hath appointed us to uſe; and in the neglect of thoſe duties which he hath made the condition of his promiſes: And this Truſt is but a ſelf-deceiving cover for ſin and ſloth. 3. Pretending to Truſt God in the uſe of ſelf-deviſed ſinful means, when he hath promiſed a bleſſing to no ſuch means, but threatned them with a curſe. 4. Thinking we Truſt God, when it is ſome falſe revelation of the Devil, or ſome deluſion of deceivers, vers, or ſome dream, or fancy, or brain-ſick proud conceit of our own, which indeed we believe, and ground our Truſt upon, as thoſe do that are deluded by falſe Prophets and falſe Teachers, and phantaſtical fancies of their corrupted imaginations. 6. When men in preſumption and carnal ſecurity will raſhly venture their ſouls in the darkneſs of uncertainty (as well as in the neglect of a holy life) and caſt away all the ſenſe of their miſerable ſtate, and all the neceſſary fear and care that tended to their recovery, and perſwade themſelves that they are in no great danger, or that their care will do no good, and call all this, A truſting God with their ſalvation. 7. A pretending to truſt God for that which is contrary to his Nature, as to love the wicked with complacency, or to take them into Heaven. 8. A pretending to truſt God for that which is contrary to his Word, as to ſave the unregenerate and unholy: And ſo [not believing him] it ſelf, is taken for a believing in him, or truſting him. 9. Pretending to believe and truſt him for that which neither his Nature or his Word did ever declare to be his will, in matters which he hath kept ſecret, or never gave us any revelation of, ſuch is that which ſome call A particular faith: As to believe in prayer that ſome particular never promiſed ſhall be granted, becauſe we ask it, or becauſe we feel a ſtrong perſwaſion that it will be ſo.

Of particular Faith.

§. 5. Qu. But is not ſuch a particular faith and truſt Divine and ſolid? Anſw. To expect any particular mercy which Gods Nature, or Word, or Works do tell us that he will give, is ſound and warrantable: And to expect any particular thing which by inſpiration, prophecy, or true extraordinary revelation ſhall be made known to us: For this is a word of God: But all other belief and expectation is but ſelf-promiſing and ſelf-deceiving. And wiſe men will not eaſily take themſelves for Prophets, nor take any thing for an inſpiration, or divine extraordinary revelation, which bringeth not the teſtimony of cogent evidence.

§. 6. IV. There are three Great Uſes and benefits of this Truſt in God, which highly commend it to us and make it neceſſary. 1. It is neceſſary to our Acknowledgment and Honouring of God. It is a cordial practical confeſſion of his Power, and Wiſdom and Goodneſs and Truth: For where any one of theſe are wanting, there is no ground of rational Truſt. And the greater the danger or aſſault againſt us is, the more God is acknowledged and honoured by our Truſt: For then we declare that no creature, or impediment can diſappoint his will; but that his Power is above all Power, and his Wiſdom above all Wiſdom, and his goodneſs and fidelity conſtant and invincible. Whereas Diſtruſt is a denying of God in ſome of his attributes, or a ſuſpecting of him. 2. It is neceſſary to our ſelves' for the quiet, and peace and comfort of our minds' which elſe will be left unavoidably to continual diſquietneſs and pain, by vexatious fears, and griefs, and cares, unleſs ſtupidity or deceit ſhould eaſe them. 3. It is neceſſary to prevent the errors and ſinful miſcarriage of our lives. For if we Truſt not in God, we ſhall ſpend all our thoughts and labours in the uſe of ſinful means: we ſhall be truſting idolatrouſly to the creature, and we ſhall be ſhifting for our ſelves by lies or any unlawful means, and loſe our ſelves by ſaving our ſelves, as from God, or without God.

§. 7. Hence it is that Truſt in God is ſo frequently and earneſtly commanded in the Scriptures, and ſuch bleſſings promiſed to it, as if it were the ſum of Godlineſs and Religion, Jer. 17. 5, 7. Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord —— Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in the Lord, and whoſe hope the Lord is, Prov. 16. 20. Whoſo truſteth in the Lord, happy is he, Pſalm 2. 12. Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him. So Pſal. 84. 12. & 34. 8 O taſte and ſee that the Lord is good, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him, Pſal. 32. 10. & 57. 1. & 86. 2. & 22. 4, 5, 8. Safety, ſtability, comfort, ſalvation, all mercies are promiſed to them that truſt in God, Pſal. 34. 22. & 37. 3, 5. 40. & 91. 2, 4. & 125. 1. Iſa. 50. 10. So faith in Chriſt is called Truſt, Matth. 12. 21. Epheſ. 1. 12, 13. And Idolaters and worldlings are deſcribed by Truſting in their Idols and their Wealth, Pſalm 115. 8. & 135. 18. Amos 6. 1. Mar. 10. 24. Prov. 11. 28. & 28. 26.

§. 7. Directions for a quieting and comforting Truſt in God.

Direct. 1. Let thy ſoul retain the deepeſt impreſſions of the Almightineſs, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and faithfulneſs of God, and how certainly all perſons, things and events are in his power, and how impotent all the world is to reſiſt him, and that nothing can hurt thee, but by his conſent. The principal means for a confirmed confidence in God, is to know him, and to know that all things that we can fear, are nothing, and can do nothing, but by his command, and motion, or permiſſion. I am not afraid of a Bird or a Worm, becauſe I know it is too weak for me: And if I rightly apprehend how much all creatures are too weak for God, and how ſufficient God is to deliver me, his Truſt would quiet me, Iſa. 41. 10. Fear thou not, for I am with thee, be not diſmayed, for I am thy God, I will ſtrengthen thee, yea, I will help thee, yea, I will uphold thee —— So v. 13, 14. & 43. 1. & 44. 2. 8. Pſal. 9, 10. They that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee, Iſa. 51. 7, 8. Hearken unto me ye that know righteouſneſs, the people in whoſe heart is my Law: Fear ye not the reproach of men, nether be afraid of their revilings, for the moth ſhall eat them up like a garment, the Worm ſhall eat them like Wooll. Dir. 1.

§. 9. Direct. 2. Labour for a ſound and clear underſtanding of the promiſes of God, that thou maiſt know how far he calleth thee to truſt him. For to think that he promiſeth what he doth not, is not to truſt him, but to deceive thy ſelf: And to think that he doth not promiſe what indeed he doth, is to caſt away the Ground of truſt. Dir. 2.

§. 10. Direct. 3. Yield not to the Tempter, who would either entice thee into terrifying guilt, and blot thine evidences, or elſe hide them from thee, and keep thee doubtful and ſuſpicious of the Love of God. For almoſt all that the diſtruſtful ſoul hath to ſay for it ſelf, to juſtifie its diſtruſt is, I am not ſure that the promiſes are mine. Remember ſtill, that a Heart dedicated to God, or conſenting to his Covenant, is your fulleſt Evidence: And ſuffer not this to be hid or blotted. Wilful ſin and guiltineſs breeds fears, and will interrupt your truſt and quiet till it be forſaken. Dir. 3.

§. 11. Direct. 4. Remember the Grounds of confidence and quietneſs which God hath given you in his Son, his Covenant, his Spirit, his Sacraments, and your own and others manifold experiences. I name them all together, becauſe I would have you ſet them all together before your eyes. Will he not give you all things with him, that hath given you his Son? Rom. 8. 32. Is not Chriſt a ſufficient undertaker and encourager? is not his Covenant, Promiſe and Oath, ſufficient ſecurity for you? Wherein God willing more abundantly to ſhew to the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an Oath, that by two immutable things in which it was impoſſible for God to lye, we might have a ſtrong conſolation —— Heb. 6. 17, 18. And is not the Heavenly ſeal and earneſt of his Spirit, ſufficient to confirm us? 2 Cor. 1. 22. Dir. 4.

1. 22. & 5. 5. Epheſ. 1. 13, 14. & 4. 30. And have you tryed God ſo oft, and yet cannot you truſt him? Our frequent experiences, though the leaſt of all theſe helps of Truſt, are very powerful, becauſe they are near us, and almoſt ſatisfie ſenſe it ſelf: When all our bones ſay, Lord who is like unto thee, who delivereſt the poor, &c. Pſal. 35. 10.

Dir. 5. §. 12. Direct. 5. Conſider of the greatneſs of the ſin of diſtruſt; how it denyeth God in his Attributes, and uſually ſuppoſeth the creature to be above him. Either thou doubteſt of, or denyeſt his Power to help thee, or his Wiſdom as deficient in making his promiſes, or finding out the means of thy deliverance, or his Goodneſs and Love, as if he would deceive thee; and ſo his Truth and faithfulneſs in his promiſes. And if thou fear a man how great ſoever, when God calleth thee to truſt him for thy help, what doſt thou but ſay, This man is more powerful than God? or God cannot deliver me out of his hands? If it be want, or ſickneſs, or death which thou feareſt, what doſt thou but ſay in thy heart, that God either knoweth not what is beſt for thee, ſo well as thou knoweſt thy ſelf, or elſe is not Powerful or Gracious enough to give it? nor true enough to keep his promiſe? He that believeth not, makes God a lyar, 1 John 5. 10, 11.

Dir. 6. §. 13. Direct. 6. Remember that Truſting God doth as it were oblige him, and diſtruſting him doth greatly diſoblige him: eſpecially when any thing elſe is truſted before him. If any man truſt you upon any encouragement given him by you, you will take your ſelves obliged to be truſty to him; and not to fail any honeſt truſt. But if he truſt you not, or truſt another, you will turn him off to thoſe that he hath truſted. God may ſay to thee, Let them help thee whom thou haſt truſted: Thou truſtedſt not in me; and therefore I fail not thy truſt when I forſake thee.

Dir. 7. §. 14. Direct. 7. Remember that thou muſt truſt in God or in nothing. For nothing is more ſure, nor more frequently experienced, than that all things elſe are utterly inſufficient to be our help. Shall we chooſe a broken reed, that we know beforehand will both deceive and pierce us; Wo to the man that hath no ſurer a foundation for his Truſt than Creatures? The greateſt of them are unable: and the Beſt of them are untruſty and deceitful. How ſad is thy caſe, if God turn thee off to theſe for help in the hour of thy extremity? Then wilt thou perceive, that it is better to truſt in the Lord, than to put any confidence in Princes: Pſal. 118. 8, 9. The righteous ſhall ſee, and fear, and laugh at him: Lo, this is the man that made not God his ſtrength, but truſted in the abundance of his riches, and ſtrengthened himſelf in his wickedneſs: Pſal. 52. 6, 7. But they that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as Mount Zion, that cannot be removed, but abideth for ever, Pſal. 125. 1. Creatures will certainly deceive thy truſt; but ſo will not God.

Dir. 8. §. 15. Direct. 8. Believe and remember the particular providence of God, which regardeth the falling of a Sparrow on the ground, and numbreth the very hairs of your heads. Matth. 10. 30. And can you diſtruſt him that is ſo punctually regardful of your leaſt concernments? that is alway preſent, and watcheth over you? You need not fear his abſence, diſregard, forgetfulneſs and inſufficiency. Doth he number your hairs, and doth he not number your groans, and prayers, and tears? How then doth he wipe away your tears, and put them all as in his bottle? Pſal. 56. 8. Rev. 7. 17.

Dir. 9. §. 16. Direct. 9. Compare God with thy deareſt and moſt faithful friend, and then think how boldly thou canſt truſt that friend if thy life or welfare were wholly in his hand; and how much more boldly thou ſhouldſt truſt in God, who is more wiſe, and kind, and merciful, and truſty, than any mortal man can be. When thou art in want, in priſon, in ſickneſs and in pain, expecting death; think now if my life, or health, or liberty were abſolutely in the power of my ſureſt friend, how quietly could I wait? and how confidently could I caſt away my fears, though I had no promiſe what he would do with me: For I know he would do nothing but what is for my good: And is not God to be truſted in much more? Indeed a friend would eaſe my pain, or ſupply my wants, or ſave my life, when God will not: But that is not becauſe God is leſs kind, but becauſe he is more wiſe, and better knoweth what tendeth to my hurt or good? My friend would pull off the Plaiſter as ſoon as I complain of ſmart; but God will ſtay till it have done the cure. But ſure God is more to be truſted for my real final good, though my friend be forwarder to give me eaſe. All friends may fail; but God never faileth.

Dir. 10. §. 17. Direct. 10. Make uſe of the natural Love of quietneſs, and thy natural wearineſs of tormenting cares, and fears, and ſorrows, to move thee to caſt thy ſelf on God, and quiet thy ſoul in truſting on him. For God hath purpoſely made thy ſelf and all things elſe inſufficient, unſatisfactory and vexatious to thee, that thou mighteſt be driven to reſt on him alone, when nothing elſe affords thee reſt. Cares, and fears, and unquietneſs of mind are ſuch Thorns and Bryars as nature cannot love or be content with: And you may be ſure that you can no way be delivered from them, but by truſting upon God. And will you chooſe care and torment, when ſo ſure and cheap a way of eaſe, is ſet before you? Who can endure to have fears torment him, and cares feed daily upon his heart, that may ſafely be delivered from it? An ulcerated, feſtered, pained mind, is a greater calamity, than any bodily diſtreſs alone. And if you be caſt upon your own care, or committed to the truſt of any creature, you can never rationally have peace. For your own eaſe and comfort then betake your ſelves to God, and caſt all your care and burden on him, who careth for you and knoweth perfectly what you want, 1 Pet. 5. 7. Matth. 6. 32. Read often Matth. 6. from v. 24. How ſweet an eaſe and quietneſs is it to the mind that can confidently truſt in God? How quiet is he from the ſtorms of trouble, and the ſickneſs of mind which others are diſtreſſed with? Iſa. 26. 3, 4. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee, becauſe he truſteth in thee; Truſt ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength. Pſal. 112. 7, 8. He ſhall not be afraid of evil tydings: his heart is fixed, truſting in the Lord: His heart is eſtabliſhed; he ſhall not be afraid———Pſal. 31. 19, 20. O how great is thy goodneſs which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee? which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee, before the Sons of men? Thou ſhalt hide them in the ſecret of thy preſence from the pride of man: thou ſhalt keep them ſecretly in thy pavilion from the ſtrife of tongues. 24. Be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Pſal. 56. 3, 4. What time I am afraid, I will truſt in thee: In God I will praiſe his word: In God have I put my truſt; I will not fear what fleſh can do unto me. How eaſie and ſweet a life is this?

Dir. 11. §. 18. Direct. 11. Remember that Diſtruſt is a pregnant multiplying ſin, and will carry thee to all iniquity and miſery, if thou ſuffer it to prevail. Diſtruſting God is but our entrance upon a life of error, ſin and wo: It preſently ſets us on idolatrous confidence on fleſh, and ſinful ſhifts, and ſtretching conſcience; It deludeth our judgements, and maketh every thing ſeem lawful, which ſeems neceſſary to our ſafety and welfare; and every thing ſeem neceſſary, without which man cannot accompliſh it.

All

All ſinful complyances, and temporizings, and man-pleaſing, and believing ſinful means to be no ſin, proceed from this Diſtruſt of God.

§. 19. Direct. 12. Suffer not diſtruſtful thoughts and reaſonings in thy mind, but caſt them out, and command them to be gone. Cogitations are the inſtruments of good and evil in the mind of man: They cannot be acted but by Thoughts: And the will hath more command of the Thoughts, than it hath immediately of the paſſions themſelves. If you cannot Truſt God ſo quietly as you would, nor keep under every fearful apprehenſion, yet keep out, or caſt out the Thoughts which exerciſe your ſin; and turn your thoughts to ſomething elſe. If thoughts do not actuate it, your diſtruſtful fears and cares will vaniſh. What are your cares, but the turmoiling of your thoughts? continually feeding upon difficulties and trouble, and tiring themſelves with hunting about for help? Caſt away the thoughts, and the cares are gone. You may do much in this, if you will, though it be difficult. Matth. 6. 25. Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, nor yet for your bodies, what ye ſhall put on——27, 28. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his ſtature? And why take ye thought for raiment?——

Dir. 13. §. 20. Direct. 13. When commands will not prevail, rebuke and chide thy unbelieving heart, and reaſon it out of its diſtruſtful cares, and fears, and ſorrows. Say to it as David oft, Pſal. 42. & 43. Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul? and why art thou ſo diſquieted within me? Truſt in God, for I ſhall yet give him thanks, who is the health of my countenance, and my God. O fooliſh ſoul! Haſt thou yet learned no better to know thy God? Doth he ſupport the Heavens and the Earth, and the whole Creation? and yet canſt not thou rely upon him? Is he not wiſe enough to be truſted with the conduct and diſpoſal of thee? Is he not good and gracious enough to be truſted, with thy life, eſtate, and name, and welfare? Is he not great and powerful enough to be truſted, againſt the great danger, or difficulties, or oppoſition that ever can befall thee? Is he not true and faithful enough to be truſted, whatever improbabilities may ariſe before thee? Where dwelt the man, and what was his name, that ever truſted him in vain, or was ever failed or deceived by him? Are not his Son, and Spirit, and Covenant, and Oath, ſufficient pledges of his love for thy ſecurity? How oft hath he performed his promiſes to thee? and heard thy cryes? and helpt and ſaved thee in thy diſtreſs? How oft hath he confuted thine unbelief? and ſhamed thy diſtruſtful fears and cares? And then thou couldſt reſolve to truſt him better in the next diſtreſs. And ſhall all his wonders of mercy be forgotten? and all thy confeſſions, thankſgivings and promiſes be now repented of, contradicted or recanted, by thy renewed diſtruſt and unbelief? Is he not the ſame God, that hath ſo frequently and abundantly had mercy on thee? Is he not the ſame God, that hath ſaved all that truſted in him, and wrought ſuch wonders for his ſervants in the earth, and brought ſo many ſafe to Heaven? Our Fathers truſted in him: they truſted and he delivered them: they cryed to him, and were delivered: they truſted in him, and were not confounded, Pſal. 22. 4, 5. And is he not ſufficient for thee, that is ſufficient for all the world? Who ever ſped ill that truſted in him? or who hath proſpered by truſting in themſelves or any other, without him, or againſt him? Unworthy ſoul! Wilt thou Atheiſtically deny the ſufficiency, or truth, or goodneſs of thy God? Shall thy diſtruſt deny him, or blaſpheme him? Wilt thou Idolatrouſly ſet up a Worm above him? Is there more in man, or any thing elſe, to hurt or ruine thee, than in God to ſave thee? Whom wilt thou truſt, if thou truſt not God? Dareſt thou think that any other is fitter for thy confidence? Thou wouldſt be quiet and confident if thy deareſt friend had thy life or welfare in his hands: and art thou troubled now it is in the hands of God? Is he enough to be our endleſs happineſs in Heaven, and not to be thy confidence on earth? Canſt thou truſt him to raiſe thy body from the duſt, and not raiſe thy ſtate, or name, or troubled mind? Either take him for thy Rock and hope, or never pretend to take him for thy God. If thou truſt not in him, thou muſt deſpair, or truſt againſt him? And whom wilt thou truſt to ſave thee from him? Hadſt thou no more encouragement to truſt him, but this, that he hath bid thee truſt him, thou mighteſt be ſure he never would deceive thee, Lament therefore thy diſquietment and ſelf-tormenting fears: Lament thy injurious diſtruſt of thy moſt dear All-mighty Father. Chooſe not vexation, when the harbour of his Love is open to ſecure thee. If men or Devils are againſt thee, ſay as thoſe believers, Dan. 3. 16, 17. We are not careful to anſwer thee in this matter: our God whom we ſerve, is able to deliver us——Go on with Daniel (6.) in praying to thy God, and truſt him with the Lions Jaws. Commit thy way unto the Lord: Truſt in him and he ſhall bring it to paſs, Pſal. 37. 5. Some truſt in Chariots, and ſome in Horſes, but I will remember the name of the Lord our God, Pſal. 20. 7. Truſt in him, for he is thy Help and Sheild, Pſal. 115. 9, 10, 11.

§. 21. Direct. 14. Take not the ſayings of the Tempter or thy own diſtruſtful heart, for the ſayings of God, or for any reaſon againſt thy confidence in him. Some take all the malicious ſuggeſtions of the Devil, for reaſons of their diſquietneſs and fears, as if it were the Spirit of God, that raiſed all the terrors and moleſtations in them, which are raiſed by the enemy of God and them: And they fear when Satan bids them, thinking it is a Spirit of God; and they dare not Truſt God when he commandeth them, for fear leſt it be the will of Satan. Some are ſo ſtrongly affected with their own conceits and fancies, that they think God ſaith all that their hearts or fancies ſay; and make one fear the reaſon of another. Thy Heart is not ſo wiſe or good, as that thou ſhouldſt take all its words, for the words of God. Thy fleſh and thy heart may fail thee, when God who is the Rock of thy heart, and thy portion, will never fail, Pſal. 73. 26 Thy heart may ſay, I have no grace, no help, no hope, when God never ſaid ſo, Pſal. 77. 7, 8, 9, 10. Thy heart may ſay, I am a reprobate, forſaken of God, he will not hear me, the time of grace is paſt, when God never ſaid ſo: Thy heart may ſay, I am undone, I can find no comfort in any friend, no evidence of grace within me, no comfort in God, in Chriſt, or in the promiſes, no comfort in my life, which is but a burden to me; I cannot pray, I cannot believe; I cannot anſwer the Objections of Satan, I can ſtrive no longer againſt my fears; I cannot bear my wounded conſcience: All this is the failing of the Heart; but proveth not any failing of God, whoſe grace is ſufficient for thee, and his ſtrength is manifeſted perfect in thy weakneſs. The heart hath a thouſand ſayings and conceits, which God is utterly againſt. Dir. 14.

§. 22. Direct. 15. When you cannot exerciſe a Truſt of Aſſurance, exerciſe the Truſt of general faith, and hope, and the quiet ſubmiſſion of thy ſelf to the holy Will of God. The common pretence of diſtruſt is, I know not that I am a Child of God: and it beſeems the ungodly to fear his wrath: But as the Goſpel is tydings of great joy to any people where it cometh; ſo is it a word of hope and truſt. At leaſt truſt God ſo far as Infinite Goodneſs ſhould be truſted, who will damn none but the finally obſtinate Dir. 15.

Of Hope and Assurance I have spoken afterward.

ſtinate refuſers of his ſaving grace. And with Aaron, Lev. 10. 3. hold your peace, when he is glorifying himſelf in his corrections: Remember that the will of God is never miſ-guided; that it is the Beginning and End of all things, Rev. 4. 11. Rom. 11. 36. that it never willeth any thing but good: that it is the Center and End of all our wills: There is no reſt or quietneſs for our wills, but in the will of God; And his will is alwaies for the good of them that truly deſire to be conformed to it, by obedience to his commands, and ſubmiſſion to his diſpoſal. Say therefore with your Saviour; Father, if it be thy will, let this cup paſs from me: but not as I will, but as thou wilt. There is nothing got by ſtrugling againſt the will of God; nor nothing loſt by a quiet ſubmiſſion to it: And if thou love it, and deſire to obey and pleaſe it, Truſt in it, for it will ſurely ſave thee.

Grand Dir. 13. For a Delight in God.

DIRECT. XIII.

Diligently labour that God and Holineſs may be thy chief DELIGHT: and this holy DELIGHT may be the ordinary temperament of thy Religion.

Directions for DELIGHTING our ſelves in God.

Dir. 1. Of Enthuſiaſtick impreſſions I have ſaid more in my Directions for the Cure of Church diviſions, and in the Defence of it, and in other books.

§. 1. Direct. 1. RIghtly underſtand what Delight in God it is, that you muſt ſeek and exerciſe. It is not a meer ſenſitive Delight, which is exerciſed about the objects of ſenſe or phantaſie, and is common to beaſts with men: Nor is it the delights of immediate intuition of God, ſuch as the bleſſed have in Heaven; nor is it an Enthuſiaſtick delight, conſiſting in irrational raptures, and joys which we can give no account of the Reaſon of. Nor is it a Delight inconſiſtent with ſorrow and fear, when they are duties: But it is the ſolid rational complacency of the ſoul in God and Holineſs, ariſing from the apprehenſions of that in him, which is juſtly delectable to us: And it is ſuch as in eſtimation of its object, and inward complacency and gladneſs, though not in paſſionate joy or mirth, muſt excel our delight in temporal pleaſure; and muſt be the end of all our humiliations and other inferior duties.

Dir. 2.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Underſtand how much of this holy Delight may be hoped for on earth. Though too many Chriſtians feel much more fear and ſorrow in their Religion than Delight: yet every true Chriſtian doth eſteem God more Delectable, or fit, and worthy of his Delights, if he could enjoy him: whereas to the carnal, fleſhly things do ſeem more fit to be their Delights. And though moſt Chriſtians reach not very high in their Delights in God, yet God hath preſcribed us ſuch means in which, if we faithfully uſed them, we might reach much higher: And this much we might well expect: 1. So much as might make our lives incomparably more quiet, contented and pleaſant to us, than are the lives of the greateſt or happieſt worldlings. 2. So much as might make our thoughts of God and the life to come to be ready, welcom, pleaſant thoughts to us. 3. So much as might greatly prevail againſt our inordinate griefs and fears, and our backwardneſs to duties, and wearineſs in them; and might make Religion an ordinary Pleaſure. 4. So much as might take off our hankering deſire after unneceſſary recreations and unlawful pleaſures of the fleſh. 5. So much as might ſweeten all our mercies to us, with a ſpiritual perfume or reliſh: 6. So much as might make ſome ſufferings joyful, and the reſt more eaſie to us. 7. And ſo much as might make the thoughts of death leſs terrible to us, and make us deſire to be with Chriſt.

Dir. 3. Hat[illegible] and Holineſs which is fit to be the ſouls Delight. As

1. Behold him in the infinite perfections of his Being; his Omnipotence, Omniſcience, and his Goodneſs, his Holineſs, Eternity, Immutability, &c. And as your eye delighteth in an excellent picture, or a comely building, or fields, or gardens, not becauſe they are yours, but becauſe they are a delectable object to the eye; ſo let your minds delight themſelves in God conſidered in himſelf, as the only object of higheſt delight. 2. Delight your ſelves alſo in his Relative Attributes, in which is expreſſed his Goodneſs to his Creatures: As his Alſufficiency, and faithfulneſs or truth, his benignity, his mercy, and compaſſion, and patience to ſinners; and his juſtice unto all. 3. Delight your ſelves in him as his Glory appeareth in his wondrous works, of Creation and daily providence. 4. Delight your ſelves in him as he is Related to you as your God and Father, and as all your intereſt, hope and happinneſs is in him alone. 5. Delight your ſelves in him as his excellencies ſhine forth in his bleſſed Son. 6. And as they appear in the wiſdom and goodneſs of his Word, in all the precepts and promiſes of the Goſpel. Pſal. 119. 162. Jer. 15. 16. 7. Delight thy ſelf in his Image though but imperfectly printed on thy ſoul; and alſo on his holy ſervants. Gal. 2. 20. 1 Cor. 15. 10. 2 Cor. 7. 18. 8. Delight your ſelves in the conſideration of the Glory which he hath from all his creatures, and the univerſal fulfilling of his will: As the proſperity and happineſs of your friend delighteth you, and the ſucceſs of any excellent enterpriſes, and the praiſe of excellent things and perſons, and as you have a ſpecial delight in the ſucceſs of truth, and the flouriſhing order, and unity, and peace, and proſperity of Kingdoms, eſpecially of the Church, much more than in your perſonal proſperity (unleſs you have ſelfiſh, private, baſe unmanly diſpoſitions); ſo much more ſhould you delight in the Glory and Happineſs of God. 9. Delight your ſelves in the ſafety which you have in his favour and defence: and the treaſury which you have in his Alſufficiency and Love, for your continual ſupplies in every want, and deliverance in every danger; and the ground of quiet contentedneſs and confidence which is offered to fearful ſouls in him. 10. Delight your ſelves in the particular diſcoveries of his common mercies to the world, and his ſpecial mercies to his ſaints; and his perſonal mercies to your ſelves, from your birth to this moment: both upon your ſouls, and bodies, and friends, and name, and eſtates, and affairs in all relations. 11. Delight your ſelves in the Priviledge you enjoy of ſpeaking to him, and of him, and hearing from him, and adoring and worſhipping him, and ſinging, and publiſhing his Praiſe, and in the communion which your ſouls may have with him through Chriſt, on his days, and at all times, in his ſacraments and in all your lives. And ſay as Solomon, 1 King. 8. 27. And will God indeed dwell on earth? will he dwell and walk with ſinful men? When the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him: Pſalm 40. 16. Let thoſe that ſeek him Rejoyce and be glad in him: and 122. 1. Let us be glad to go to the houſe of the Lord, and joyn with his holy Aſſemblies in his worſhip: Pſalm 46. 4. The ſtreams of his Grace make glad the City of God, the holy Tabernacles of the moſt high: God is in the midſt of her; ſhe ſhall not be moved: 12. Delight your ſelves above all in the forethoughts and hope of the Glory which you ſhall ſee and enjoy for ever. I do but name all theſe for your memory, becauſe they are before ſpoken of in the Directions for Love.

Cannot you see the will of your Father in all this? 16. If you cannot, yet lift up your heads, and foresee the eternal Delights which he hath prepared for you, when you shall enter into your Masters Joy: And then judge whether God be for your Delight?

Dir. 5. Reasons for Delight in God.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Take special notice of the Reasons why God commandeth you to Delight in him, and consequently how much of Religion consisteth in these Delights. 1. Thou vilifiest and dishonourest him, if thou judge him not the worthiest for thy Delights. 2. If thou Delight not in him, thy Thoughts of God will be seldom or unwelcome and unpleasant Thoughts. 3. And thy Speeches of him will be seldom, or heartless, forced Speeches. Who knoweth not how readily our Thoughts and Tongues do follow our Delight? Be it House, or Land, or Books, or Friends, or Actions which are our Delight, we need no force to bring our Thoughts to them. The Worldling thinks and talketh of his Wealth and Business; the proud man of his dignities and honour, the voluptuous Beast of his Lusts and Sports, and meats and drinks: because they most delight in these. And so must the Christian of his God, and Hopes, and Holy Business, as being his Delight. 4. It will keep you away from Holy Duties, in which you should have Communion with God, if you have no Delight in God and them. This makes so many neglect both Publick and Secret worship, because they have no Delight in it, when those that Delight in it are ready in taking all Opportunities. 5. It will corrupt your Judgments, and draw you to think that a little is enough, and that serious Diligence is unnecessary precisenes, and that one quarter of our Duty is an excess. A Man that hath no Delight in God and Godliness, is easily drawn to think that little, and seldom, and cold, and formal, and heartless, lifeless Preaching and Praying may serve the turn; and any lip-service is acceptable to God: and that more is more ado than needs: And hence he will be further drawn to reproach those that go beyond him, to quiet his own Conscience, and save his own Reputation; and at last be a forlorn satanical Reviler, Hater, and Persecutor of the serious Holy Worshippers of God. Jer. 6, 10. Behold the word of the Lord is a reproach to them: they have no Delight in it; Therefore I am full of the fury of the Lord——— 6. If you Delight not in it, you will do that which you do without a heart, with backwardness and weariness: as your Ox draweth unwillingly in the yoak, and is glad when you unyoak him; and as your Horse that goeth against his will, and will go no longer than he feels the spur; when Delight would cause alacrity and unweariedness. 7. It makes Men apt to quarrel with the word, and every weakness in the Minister offendeth them, and sick stomachs that have some fault or other still to find with their meat. 8. It greatly enclineth men to carnal and forbidden pleasures, because they tast not the higher and more excellent delights. Taverns, and ALE-houses, Plays, and Whores, Cards and Dice, and excess of recreation must be sought out for them, as Saul sought a Witch and a Musitian instead of God. It would be the most effectual Answer to all the silly reasonings of the Voluptuous, when they are pleading for the lawfulness of their unnecessary, foolish, time-wasting sports, if we could but help them to the Heavenly nature, and Hearts that more delight in God. This better pleasure is an Argument that would do more to confute and banish their sinful pleasure, than a twelve-months disputing or preaching will do with them, while they are strangers to the Souls Delight in God. Then they would rather say to their Companions; O come and taste those high delights, which we have found in God! 9. The want of a Delight in God and Holiness, doth leave the Soul as a prey to Sorrows: every affliction that assaulteth it may do its worst, and hath its full blow at the naked unfortified heart: For creature delights will prove but a poor preservative to it. 10. This want of a Delight in God and Holiness, is the way to Apostasie it self. Few Men will hold on in a way that they have no delight in, when all other delights must be forsaken for it. The caged Hypocrite while he is coopt up to a stricter life than he himself desires, even while he seemeth to serve him, is loathsome to God: For the Body without out the Will is but a carkaſe or carrion in his Eyes: If you had rather not ſerve God, you do not ſerve him while you ſeem to ſerve him: If you had rather live in ſin, you do live in ſin, reputatively, while you forbear the outward act: For in Gods account the Heart, or Will is the man; and what a man had rather be (habitually) that he is indeed. And yet this Hypocrite will be ſtill looking for a hole to get out of his cage, and forſake his unbeloved outſide of Religion: Like a beaſt that is driven in a way that he is loth to go, and will be turning out at every gap. All theſe miſchiefs follow the want of Delight in God.

§. 6. On the contrary, the Benefits which follow our Delight in God, (beſides the ſweetneſs of it) are unſpeakable: Thoſe which are contrary to the forementioned hurts, I leave to your own conſidera tion. 1. Delight in God will prove that thou Knoweſt him, and loveſt him, and that thou art prepared for his Kingdom: For all that truly Delight in him ſhall enjoy him. 2. Proſperity, which is but the ſmall Addition of earthly things, will not eaſily corrupt thee or tranſport thee. 3. Adverſity, which is the withholding of earthly delights, will not much grieve thee, or eaſily deject thee. 4. Thou wilt receive more profit by a Sermon or good Book or Conference which thou delighteſt in, than others that delight not in them will do in many. 5. All thy ſervice will be ſweet to thy ſelf and acceptable to God: If thou delight in him, he doth certainly delight in thee. Pſalm 149. 4. and 147. 11. 1 Chron. 29. 17. 6 Thou haſt a continual Feaſt with thee, which may ſweeten all the Croſſes of thy life, and afford thee greater joy than thy ſorrow is, in thy ſaddeſt caſe. 7. When you Delight in God, your creature-delight will be ſanctified to you, and warrantable in its proper place; which in others is idolatrous, or corrupt. Theſe with many other are the Benefits of Delight in God.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Conſider how ſuitable God and Holineſs are to be the matter of thy Delight, and take heed of all temptations which would repreſent him as unſuitable to you. He is, 1. Moſt perfect and Bleſſed in himſelf, 2. And full of all that thou canſt need; 3. He hath all the world at his command for thy relief. 4. He is neareſt to thee in preſence and relation in the world. 5. He hath fitted all things in Religion to thy Delight, for matter, variety and benefit. 6 He will be a certain and conſtant Delight to thee: and a durable delight when all others fail. Thy ſoul came from him, and therefore naturally ſhould tend to him. It is from him and for him, and therefore muſt Reſt in him, or have no Reſt. We delight in the houſe where we were born, and in our Native country, and in our parents; and every thing incli neth to its own Original: And ſo ſhould the ſoul to its Creator.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Corrupt not your Minds and Appetites with contrary Delights: Addict not your ſelves to fleſhly pleaſures: Taſt nothing that is forbidden. Sorrow it ſelf is not ſuch an Enemy to ſpiritual Delights, as ſenſual ſinful Pleaſures are. O leave your beaſtly and your childiſh pleaſures, and come and feaſt your ſouls on God. Iſa. 55. 1, 2, 3. Away with the Delights of luſt, and pride, and covetouſneſs, and vain ſports, and gluttony, and drunkenneſs, if ever you would have the ſolid and durable Delights! Think not of joyning both together. Be think your ſelves; Can it be any thing but the diſeaſe and wickedneſs of thy heart, that can make a play, or a feaſt, or drunken wanton company, more pleaſant to thee than God? What a heart is that which thinketh it a toil to meditate on God, and Heaven, and thinks it a pleaſure to think of the baits of pride and covetouſneſs? What a heart is that which thinks that ſenſuality, wantonneſs and vanity are the pleaſure of their Families, which muſt not be turned out; and that Godlineſs and Heavenly diſcourſe and exerciſes would be the ſadneſs and trouble of their families, which muſt not be brought in leſt it marr their mirth; That think it an intolerable toil and ſlavery to Love God, and Holineſs, and Heaven, and to be imployed for them; and thinks it a delightful thing to Love a Whore, or exceſs of meat or drink or ſports? Can you ſay any thing of a man that is more diſgraceful, unleſs you ſay he is a Devil? It were not ſo vile for a child to delight more in a Dog than in his Parents, or a Husband to delight more in the ugliеſt Harlot than in his Wife, as it is for a man to delight more in fleſhly vanities than in God. Will you be licking up this dung, when you ſhould be ſolacing your ſouls in Angelical pleaſures, and foretaſting the Delights of Heaven? O how juſtly will God thruſt away ſuch wretches from his everlaſting preſence, who ſo abhor his ways and him? Can they blame him for denying them, the things which they hate, or ſet ſo light by, as to prefer a luſt before them? If they were not Haters of God and Holineſs, they would never be ſo averſe even to the Delights which they ſhould have with him.

§. 9. Direct. 8. Take heed of a Melancholly habit of Body: For Melancholly people can ſcarce delight in any thing at all, and therefore not in God. Delight is as hard to them, as it is to a pained member to find pleaſure, or a ſick ſtomach to delight in the food which it loaths. They can think of God with trouble, and fear, and horrour, and deſpair; but not with delight. Dir. 8.

§. 10. Direct. 9. Take heed of an impatient pievish ſelf-tormenting mind, that can bear no croſs; and of overvaluing earthly things, which cauſeth impatience in the want of them. Make not too great a matter of fleſhly pain or pleaſure. Otherwiſe your minds will be called to a continual attendance on the fleſh, and taken up with continual deſires, or cares, or fears, or griefs, or pleaſures; and will not be permitted to ſolace themſelves with God. The ſoul that would have pure and high Delights, muſt abſtract it ſelf from the Concernments of the fleſh; and look on your body as if it were the body of another, whoſe pain or pleaſure you can chooſe whether you will feel. When Paul was rapt up into the third Heaven, and ſaw the things unutterable, he was ſo far freed from the Priſon of ſenſe, that he knew not whether he was in the Body, or out of it. As the ſeparated ſouls that ſee the face of God and the Redeemer, do leave the body to be buried and to rot in darkneſs, and feel not all this to the interrupting of their joys; ſo faith can imitate ſuch a death to the world, and ſuch a neglect of the fleſh, and ſome kind of elevating ſeparation of the mind, to the things above. If in this near conjunction you cannot leave the Body to rejoyce or ſuffer alone, yet as it ſelf is but a Servant to the Soul, ſo let not its pain or pleaſure be predominant, and control the high Operations of the Soul. A manly valiant believing Soul, though it cannot abate the pain at all, nor reconcile the fleſh to its calamity, yet it can do more, notwithſtanding the pain, to its own delight, than Strangers will believe. Dir. 9.

§. 11. Some Women and paſſionate weak-ſpirited men, eſpecially in ſickneſs, are ſo peeviſh and of ſuch impatient minds, that their daily work is to diſquiet and torment themſelves. One can ſcarce tell how to ſpeak to them, or look at them but it offendeth them. And the world is ſo full of occaſions of provocation, that ſuch perſons are like to have little quietneſs. It is unlike that theſe ſhould delight in God, who keep their minds in a continual ulcerated galled ſtate, uncapable of any Delights at all, and ceaſe not their ſelf-tormenting.

§. 12.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct 10. It is only a Life of Faith that will be a Life of holy Heavenly Delight: Exerciſe your ſelves therefore in believing Contemplations of the things unſeen. It muſt not be now and then a glance of the eye of the ſoul towards God, or a ſeldom ſalutation which you would give a ſtranger; but a walking with him, and frequent addreſſes of the ſoul unto him, which muſt help you to the Delights which Believers find in their communion with him.

Dir. 11. §. 13. Direct. 11. Eſpecially let faith go frequently to Heaven for renewed matter of delight, and frequently think what God will be to you there for ever, and with what full everlaſting delight he will ſatiate your Souls. As Heaven is the place of our full delight, ſo the foreſight and foretaſt of it is the higheſt delight, which on earth is to be attained. And a Soul that is ſtrange to the foreſight of Heaven, will be as ſtrange to the true Delights of Faith.

Dir. 12. §. 14. Direct. 12. It is a great Advantage to Holy Delight, to be much in the moſt Delightful parts of worſhip; as in Thankſgiving and Praiſe, and a due Celebration of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt: Of which I have ſpoken in the foregoing Directions.

Dir. 13. §. 15. Direct. 13. A ſkilful experienced Paſtor, who is able to open the treaſury of the Goſpel, and publickly and privately to direct his flock in the work of ſelf-examination and the Heavenly exerciſes of Faith, is a great help to Chriſtians ſpiritual delight. The experiences of Believers teach them this: How oft do they go away refreſhed and revived, who came to the Aſſembly or to their Paſtors in great diſtreſs, and almoſt in deſpair? See Job 33. 23. 2 Cor. 1. 3, 4. It is the Office and Delight of the Miniſters of Chriſt, to be Helpers of his peoples faith and joy. 2 Cor. 1. 24. Phil. 1. 4, 25. 1 Theſſ. 2. 20.

Dir. 14. §. 16. Direct. 14. Make uſe of all that Proſperity and lawful pleaſure, which God giveth you in outward things, for the increaſe and advantage of your Delight in God. Though corrupted nature is apter to abuſe Proſperity and earthly delights, than any other ſtate, to the diverting of the heart from God; and almoſt all the Devils poyſon is given in ſugered or gilded allectives; yet the primitive natural uſe of proſperity, of health, and plenty, and honour, and peace, is to lead up the mind to God, and give us a taſt of his ſpiritual Delights! That the neighbourhood of the Body might be the ſouls advantage; and that God, who in this life will be ſeen by us but in a Glaſs, and will give out his comforts by his appointed means, might make advantage of ſenſitive delights, for his own reception, and the communications of his Love and pleaſure unto man: That as ſoon as the eye, or ear, or taſt perceiveth the delightfulneſs of their ſeveral objects, the holy ſoul might preſently take the hint and motion, and be carried up to delightful thoughts of him that giveth us all theſe delights. And doubtleſs ſo far as we can make uſe of a Delight in Friends, or food, or health, or habitations, or any accommodations of our Bodies, to further our Delight in God, or to remove thoſe melancholy Fears or Sorrows, which would hinder this Spiritual Delight, it is not only Lawful, but our duty to uſe them, with that moderation as tendeth to this end.

Dir. 15. §. 17. Direct. 15. Make uſe of Affliction as a great advantage for your pureſt and unmixt delight in God. The Servants of Chriſt have uſually never ſo much of the joy in the Holy Ghoſt, as in their greateſt ſufferings: eſpecially if they be for his ſake. The ſoul never retireth ſo readily and delightfully to God, as when it hath none elſe that will receive it, or that it can take any comfort from. God comforteth us moſt, when he hath made us ſee that none elſe can or will relieve us. When all Friends have forſaken us ſave only one, that one is ſweeter to us then than ever. When all our houſe is fired down except one room, that room is pleaſanter to us than it was before. He that hath loſt one Eye, will love the other better than before. In proſperity our Delights in God are too often corrupted by a mixture of ſenſual delight: But all that remaineth when the Creature is gone, is purely divine.

§ 18. Direct. 16. Labour by Self Examination, deliberately managed under the Direction of an able ſpiritual Guide, to ſettle your Souls in the well grounded Perſwaſion of your ſpecial Intereſt in God and Heaven: And then ſuffer not Satan by his troubleſome importunity, to renew your Doubts, or moleſt your peace. An Orderly well-guided diligent ſelf examination, may quickly do much to ſhew you your condition: And if you are convinced that the truth of Grace is in you, let not Fears and Suſpicion go for reaſon, and cauſe you to deny that which you cannot without the gainſaying of your Conſciences deny. You ſee not the deſign of the Devil in all this: His buſineſs is by making you fear, that you have no intereſt in God, to deſtroy your delight in him and in his ſervice: And next that, to make you through wearineſs forſake him; and either deſpair or turn to ſenſual delights. Foreſee and prevent theſe deſigns of Satan, and ſuffer him not at his pleaſure to raiſe new ſtorms of fears and troubles, and draw you to deny your Fathers mercies, or to ſuſpect his proved love. Dir. 16.

§. 19. Direct. 17. Damp not your Delights by wilful ſin. If you grieve your Comforter he will grieve you, or leave you to grieve your ſelves: In that meaſure that any known ſin is cheriſhed, Delight in God will certainly decay. Dir. 17.

§. 20. Direct. 18. Improve your Obſervation of wicked mens ſenſual Delights, to provoke your ſouls to delight in God. Think with your ſelves: ſhall hawks, and hounds, and pride, and filthineſs, and cards, and dice, and plays and ſports, and luxury, and idleneſs, and fooliſh talk; or worldly honours be ſo delightful to theſe deluded ſinners? and ſhall not my God and Saviour, his Love and promiſes, and the hopes of Heaven, be more delightful to me? Is there any compariſon between the matter of my delights and theirs? Dir. 18.

§ 21. Direct. 19. Labour to overcome thoſe Fears of Death, which would damp your Joys in the foreſight of Everlaſting Joys. As nothing more feedeth Holy delights than the fore thoughts of Heaven; ſo there is ſcarce any thing that more hindreth our delight in thoſe forethoughts, than the fear of interpoſing death. See what I have written againſt this fear, in my Treatiſe of Self-denyal, and Saints Reſt, and in my Treatiſe of Death, as the laſt enemy, and in my Laſt work of a Believer. Dir. 19.

§. 22. Direct. 20. Pretend not any other Religious Duties againſt your Delights in God and Holineſs; but uſe them all in their proper ſubſervience to this. Penitent ſorrow is only a Purge to caſt out thoſe corruptions which hinder you from reliſhing your Spiritual Delights. Uſe it therefore as Phyſick, only when there is need; and not for it ſelf, but only to this end; and turn it not into your ordinary food. Delight in God is the Health of your Souls: Say not you cannot have while to be healthful, becauſe you muſt take Phyſick, or that you take Phyſick againſt Health, or inſtead of health, but for your health. So take up no Sorrow againſt your delight in God, or inſtead of it, but for it, and ſo much as promoteth it. See the Directions for Love before-going. Dir. 20.

§. 23. By this time you may ſee, that Holy Delight adjoyned to Love, is the principal part of our Religion, and that they miſtake it which place it in any thing elſe. And therefore how unexcuſable are are all the ungodly enemies or neglecters of a holy life? If it had been a life of grief and toyle they had had ſome pretence: But to fly from pleaſure, and refuſe delight, and ſuch delight is unexcuſable. Be it known to you ſinners, God calleth you not to forſake Delight, but to accept it: To change your Delight in ſin and vanity, for Delight in him: you dare not ſay but this is better: you cannot have your houſes and lands for ever, nor your luſt and luxury for ever; but you may have God for ever. And do you hope to live for ever with him, and have you no delight in him? Men deal with Chriſt as the Papiſts with the Reformed Churches: Becauſe we reject their formalities and ceremonious toys, they ſay we take down all Religion, ſo becauſe we would call men from their bruitiſh pleaſures, they ſay we would let them have no pleaſure: For the Epicure thinks when his luxury, luſt and ſport is gone, all is gone: Call a ſluggard from his bed, or a glutton from his feaſt, to receive a Kingdom, and he will grudge; if he obſerve only what you would take from him, and not what you give him in its ſtead: When earthly pleaſures end in miſery, then who would not wiſh they had preferred the Holy durable Delights?

DIRECT. XII.

Grand Dir. 12. For a life of Thankfulneſs.

Let Thankfulneſs to God thy Creatour, Redeemer and Regenerator, be the very temperament of thy ſoul, and faithfully expreſſed by thy Tongue and Life.

§ 1. THough our Thankfulneſs is no benefit to God, yet he is pleaſed with it, as that which is ſuitable to our condition, and ſheweth the ingenuity and honeſty of the Heart. An unthankful perſon is but a devourer of mercies, and a grave to bury them in, and one that hath not the wit and honeſty to know and acknowledge the hand that giveth them: But the Thankful looketh above himſelf, and returneth all, as he is able, to him from whom they flow.

§. 2. True Thankfulneſs to God is diſcerned from Counterfeit, by theſe qualifications. 1. True Thankfulneſs having a juſt eſtimate of mercies comparatively, preferreth ſpiritual and everlaſting mercies, before thoſe that are meerly corporal and tranſitory. But carnal Thankfulneſs chiefly valueth carnal Mercies, though notionally it may confeſs that the ſpiritual are the greater. 2. True Thankfulneſs inclineth the ſoul to a ſpiritual rejoycing in God, and to a deſire after more of his ſpiritual mercies: But carnal thankfulneſs is only a delight in the proſperity of the fleſh, or the deluſion and carnal ſecurity of the mind, inclining men to carnal empty mirth, and to a deſire of more ſuch fleſhly pleaſure, plenty or content: As a Beaſt that is full fed will skip, and play, and ſhew that he is pleaſed with his ſtate, or if he have eaſe, he would not be moleſted. 3. True thankfulneſs kindleth in the heart a love to the Giver above the Gift, or at leaſt a Love to God above our Carnal proſperity and pleaſure, and bringeth the heart ſtill nearer unto God, by all his mercies. But carnal thankfulneſs doth ſpring from Carnal ſelf-love, or love of fleſhly proſperity; and is moved by it, and is ſubſervient to it, and Loveth God, and Thanketh him but ſo far as he gratifieth or ſatisfieth the fleſh. A child-like Thankfulneſs maketh us love our Father more than his gift, and deſire to be with him in his arms: But a Dog doth love you and is thankful to you, but for feeding him: He loveth you in ſubordination to his appetite and his bones. 4. True thankfulneſs inclineth us to obey and pleaſe him that obligeth us by his benefits. But carnal thankfulneſs puts God off with the hypocritical complemental thanks of the lips, and ſpends the mercy in the pleaſing of the fleſh, and makes it but the fewel of luſt and ſin. 5. True thankfulneſs to God is neceſſarily tranſcendent, as his mercies are tranſcendent: The ſaving of our ſouls from Hell, and promiſing us eternal life, beſides the giving us our very beings and all that we have, do oblige us to be totally and abſolutely his, that is ſo tranſcendent a Benefactor to us, and cauſeth the thankful perſon to devote and reſign himſelf, and all that he hath to God, to anſwer ſo great an obligation: But carnal thankfulneſs falls ſhort of this abſolute and total dedication, and ſtill leaveth the ſinner in the power of ſelf-love, devoting himſelf (really) to himſelf, and uſing all that he is, or hath, to the pleaſing of his fleſhly mind, and giving God only the tythes or leavings of the fleſh, or ſo much as it can ſpare, leſt he ſhould ſtop the ſtreams of his benignity, and bereave the fleſh of its proſperity and contents.

§. 3. Directions for Thankfulneſs to God our Benefactor.

Direct. 1. Underſtand well how great this duty is, in the nature of the thing, but eſpecially how the very deſign and tenour of the Goſpel, and the way of our ſalvation by a Redeemer, beſpeaketh it as the very complexion of the ſoul, and of every duty. A creature that is wholly his Creatours, and is preſerved every moment by him, and daily fed and maintained by his bounty, and is put into a capacity of life eternal, muſt needs be obliged to unceſſant Gratitude. And Unthankfulneſs among men is juſtly taken for an unnatural monſtrous vice; which forfeiteth the benefits of friendſhip and ſociety, 2 Tim. 3. 2. The unthankful are numbred with the unholy, &c. as part of the monſters which ſhould come in the laſt times, (and which we have lived to ſee, exactly anſwering that large deſcription of them:) But the Deſign of God in the work of Redemption, is purpoſely laid for the raiſing of the higheſt Thankfulneſs in man: and the Covenant of Grace containeth ſuch abundant wonderous Mercies, as might compel the ſouls of men to Gratitude, or leave them utterly without excuſe. It is a great truth, and much to be conſidered; that Gratitude is that general duty of the Goſpel, which containeth and animateth all the reſt, as being Eſſential to all that is properly Evangelical. A Law as a Law requireth Obedience as the general duty: and this Obedience is to be exerciſed and found in every particular duty which it requireth: And the Covenant with the Jews was called The Law, becauſe the Regulating part was moſt eminent: and ſo obedience was the thing that was eminently required by the Law (though their meaſure of mercy obliged them alſo to thankfulneſs:) But the Goſpel or New Covenant is moſt eminently a hiſtory of Mercy, and a tender and promiſe of the moſt unmatchable benefits, that ever were heard of by the ears of man: ſo that the Gift of Mercy is the predominant or eminent part in the Goſpel or New Covenant; and though ſtill God be our Governour, and the New Covenant alſo hath its Precepts, and is a Law, yet that is in a ſort but the ſubſervient part: And what obedience is to a Law, that Thankfulneſs is to a Benefit; even the formal anſwering of its obligation: ſo that though we are called to as exact obedience as ever, yet it is now only a Thankful Obedience that we are called to: And juſt as Law and Promiſes or Gifts are conjoyned in the New Covenant, juſt ſo ſhould Obedience and Thankfulneſs be conjoyned in our hearts and lives; one to God as our Ruler, and the other to him as our Benefactor: And theſe two muſt animate every act of heart and life. We muſt Repent of

Dir. 1.

Gratitude is to the Promiſe, much what Obedience is to the Law.

pent of ſin: but it muſt be a Thankful Repenting, as becometh thoſe that have a free pardon of all their ſins procured by the blood of Chriſt, and offered them in the Goſpel: Leave out this Gratitude, and it is no Evangelical Repentance. And what is our ſaving faith in Chriſt, but the Aſſent to the truth of the Goſpel, with a Thankful Acceptance of the good which it offereth us, even Chriſt as our Saviour with the Benefits of his Redemption. The Love to God that is there required, is the Thankful Love of his Redeemed ones: And the Love to our very enemies, and the forgiving of wrongs, and all the Love to one another, and all the works of Charity there required, are the exerciſes of Gratitude, and are all to be done, on this account, becauſe Chriſt hath loved us, and forgiven us, and that we may ſhew our thankful Love to him. Preaching, and Praying, and Sacraments, and publick praiſes, and communion of Saints, and obedience, are all to be animated with Gratitude; and they are no further Evangelically performed, than Thankfulneſs is the very life and complexion of them all. The dark and defective opening of this by Preachers, gave occaſion to the Antinomians to run into the contrary extream, and to derogate too much from Gods Law and our Obedience: But if we obſcure the doctrine of Evangelical Gratitude, we do as bad or worſe than they. Obedience to our Ruler, and Thankfulneſs to our Benefactor, conjoyned and co-operating as the Head and Heart in the Natural body, do make a Chriſtian indeed. Underſtand this well, and it will much incline your hearts to Thankfulneſs.

Dir. 2. § 4. Direct. 2. Let the greatneſs of the manifold mercies of God, be continually before your eyes. Thankfulneſs is cauſed by the due apprehenſion of the greatneſs of mercies. If you either know them not to be mercies, or know not that they are mercies to you, or believe not what is ſaid and promiſed in the Goſpel, or forget them, or think not of them, or make light of them through the corruption of your minds, you cannot be thankful for them. I have before ſpoken of Mercy in order to the kindling of Love, and therefore ſhall now only recite theſe following to be always in your memories. 1. The Love of God in giving you a Redeemer, and the Love of Chriſt in giving his life for us, and in all the parts of our Redemption. 2. The Covenant of Grace, the pardon of all our ſins: the juſtification of our perſons; our adoption, and title to eternal life. 3. The aptneſs of means for calling us to Chriſt: The gracious and wiſe diſpoſals of providence to that end: the gifts and compaſſion of our inſtructors: the care of Parents; and the helps and examples of the ſervants of Chriſt. 4. The efficacy of all theſe means: the giving us to will and to do, and opening of our hearts, and giving us repentance unto life, and the Spirit of Chriſt to mortifie our ſins, and purifie our nature, and dwell within us. 5. A ſtanding in his Church, under the care of faithful Paſtors: the liberty, comfort, and frequent benefit of his Word and Sacraments, and the publick communion of his Saints. 6. The company of thoſe that fear the Lord, and their faithful admonitions, reproofs and encouragements; the kindneſs they have ſhewed us for body, or for ſoul. 7. The mercies of our Relations, or habitations, our eſtates, and the notable alterations and paſſages of our lives. 8. The manifold preſervations and deliverances of our ſouls, from errours and ſeducers, from terrours and diſtreſs; from dangerous temptations, and many a ſoul-wounding ſin; and that we are not left to the errours and deſires of our hearts, to ſeared Conſciences, as forſaken of God. 9. The manifold deliverances of our bodies from enemies, hurts, diſtreſſes, ſickneſſes and death. 10. The mercies of adverſity, in wholſome, neceſſary chaſtizements, or honourable ſufferings for his ſake and ſupport or comfort under all. 11. The communion which our ſouls have had with God, in the courſe of our private and publick duties, in Prayer, Sacraments and Meditation. 12. The uſe which he hath made of us for the good of others, that our time hath not been wholly loſt, and we have not lived as burdens of the world. 13. The mercies of all our friends and his ſervants, which were to us as our own, and our intereſt in the mercies and publick welfare of his Church, which are more than our own. 14. His patience and forbearance with us under our conſtant unprofitableneſs and provocations, and his renewed mercies notwithſtanding our abuſe, our perſeverance until now. 15. Our hopes of everlaſting Reſt and Glory, when this ſinful life is at an end. Aggravate theſe mercies in your more enlarged meditations, and they will ſure conſtrain you to cry out [Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, and all that is within me bleſs his holy name; bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diſeaſes; who redeemeth thy life from deſtruction, who crowneth thee with loving kindneſs and tender mercies, Pſal. 102. 1, 2, 3, 4. Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his Courts with praiſe, be thankful to him, and bleſs his name: For the Lord is good, his Mercy is everlaſting, and his truth endureth to all generations, Pſal. 100. 4, 5. The Lord is merciful and gracious; ſlow to anger, and plenteous in mercy —— For as the Heaven is high above the Earth, ſo great is his mercy to them that fear him, Pſal. 103. 8. 11. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever, Pſal. 136. 1, &c. O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name; make known his deeds among the people: ſing ye unto him; ſing Pſalms unto him; talk ye of all his wondrous works: glory ye in his holy name: Let the heart of them rejoyce that ſeek him, Pſal. 105. 1, 2, 3.]

§. 5. Direct. 3. Be well acquainted with the greatneſs of your ſins, and ſenſible of them as they are the aggravation of Gods Mercies to you. Dir. 3. This is the main end why God will humble thoſe that he will ſave: Not to drive them to deſpair of mercy, not that he taketh pleaſure in their ſorrows for themſelves: But to work the heart to a due eſteem of ſaving mercy, and to a ſerious deſire after it, that they may thankfully receive it, and carefully retain it, and faithfully uſe it. An unhumbled ſoul ſets lights by Chriſt, and Grace, and Glory: It reliſheth no ſpiritual mercy: It cannot be thankful for that which it findeth no great need of. But true humiliation recovereth our appetite, and teacheth us to value mercy as it is. Think therefore what ſin is (as I have opened to you, Dir. 8.) and think of your manifold aggravated ſins: and then think how great thoſe mercies are that are beſtowed on ſo great unworthy ſinners! Then mercy will melt your humbled hearts, when you confeſs that you are unworthy to be called Sons, Luke 15. and that you are not worthy to look up to Heaven, Luke 18. 13. and that you are not worthy of the leaſt of all the mercies of God, Gen. 32. 10. The humble ſoul is the thankful ſoul, and therefore ſo greatly valued by the Lord.

§. 6. Direct. 4. Underſtand what Miſery you were delivered from, and eſtimate the greatneſs of the mercy, by the greatneſs of the puniſhment which you had deſerved. Dir. 4. Miſery as well as ſin muſt tell us the greatneſs of our mercies. This is before opened, Chap. 1. Dir. 9. pag. 21.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct. 5. Suppoſe you ſaw the damned ſouls, or ſuppoſe you had been one day in Hell your ſelves, bethink you then how thankful you would have been for Chriſt and Mercy. And you were condemned to it by the Law of God, and if death had brought you to execution you had been there, and then Mercy would have been more eſteemed. If a Preacher were ſent to thoſe miſerable ſouls to offer them a pardon and eternal life on the terms as they are offered to us, do you think they would make as light of it as we do?

Dir. 6. §. 8. Direct. 6. Neglect not to keep clear the Evidences of thy title to thoſe eſpecial Mercies for which thou ſhouldſt be moſt thankful: And hearken not to Satan when he would tempt thee to think that they are none of thine, that ſo he might make thee deny God the Thanks for them, which he expecteth. Of this I have ſpoken in the Directions for Love.

Dir. 7. §. 9. Direct. 7. Think much of thoſe perſonal mercies which God hath ſhewed thee from thy youth up until now, by which he hath manifeſted his care of thee, and particular kindneſs to thee. Though the common mercies of Gods ſervants be the greateſt, which all other Chriſtians ſhare in with each one; yet perſonal favours peculiar to our ſelves, are apt much to affect us, as being near our apprehenſion, and expreſſing a peculiar care and love of us. Therefore Chriſtians ſhould mark Gods dealings with them, and write down the great and notable mercies of their lives, (which are not unfit for others to know, if they ſhould ſee it.)

Dir. 8. §. 10. Direct. 8. Compare thy proportion of Mercies with the reſt of the peoples in the world. And thou wilt find that it is not one of many thouſands that hath thy proportion. It is ſo ſmall a part of the world that are Chriſtians, and of thoſe ſo few that are Othordox Reformed Chriſtians, and of thoſe ſo few that are ſeriouſly godly as devoted to God; and of thoſe ſo few that fall not into ſome perplexities, errours, ſcandals, or great afflictions and diſtreſs, that thoſe few that are in none of theſe ranks have cauſe of wonderous thankfulneſs to God: Yea, the moſt afflicted Chriſtians in the world: Suppoſe God had divided his mercies equally to all men in the world, as health, and wealth, and honour, and grace, and the Goſpel, &c. How little of them would have come to thy ſhare in compariſon of what thou now poſſeſſeſt? How many have leſs wealth or honour than thou? How many thouſands have leſs of the Goſpel and of Grace? In reaſon therefore thy thankfulneſs ſhould be proportionable and extraordinary.

Dir. 9. §. 11. Direct. 9. Compare the Mercies which thou wanteſt, with thoſe which thou poſſeſſeſt, and obſerve how much thy receivings are greater than thy ſufferings. Thou haſt many meals plenty, for one day of ſcarcity or pinching hunger: Thou haſt many days health, for one days ſickneſs, and if one part be ill, there are more that are not: If one Croſs befall thee, thou eſcapeſt many more that might befall thee, and which thou deſerveſt.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct. 10. Bethink thee how thou wouldſt value thy mercies, if thou wert deprived of them. The want of them uſually teacheth us moſt effectually to eſteem them. Think how thou ſhouldſt value Chriſt and hope, if thou wert in Deſpair? And how thou wouldſt value the mercies of Earth, if thou wert in Hell? And the Mercies of England, if thou wert among bloody Inquiſitors and perſecutors, and wicked cruel Heathens or Mahometans, or bruitiſh ſavage Americans. Think how good ſleep would ſeem to thee, if thou couldſt not ſleep for pains? Or how good thy meat, or drink, or cloaths, or houſe, or maintenance, or friends, would all ſeem to thee, if they were taken from thee. And how great a mercy health would ſeem, if thou wert under ſome tormenting ſickneſs; and what a mercy Time would ſeem, if Death were at hand, and Time were ending: And what a mercy thy leaſt ſincere deſires, or meaſure of grace is in compariſon of their caſe that are the haters, deſpiſers and perſecutors of holineſs; Theſe thoughts if followed home, may ſhame thee into thankfulneſs.

Dir. 11. §. 13. Direct. 11. Let Heaven be ever in thine eye, and ſtill think of the endleſs joy which thou ſhalt have with Chriſt. For that is the mercy of all mercies: and he that hath not that in hope to be thankful for, will never be thankful aright for any thing: and he that hath Heaven in promiſe to be thankful for, hath ſtill reaſon for the higheſt joyful Thanks, whatever worldly thing he want; or though he were ſure never more to have comfort in any creature upon earth. He is unthankful indeed, that will not be thankful for Heaven: But that is a mercy which will conſtrain to Thankfulneſs ſo far as our title is diſcerned. The more believing and heavenly the mind is, the more thankful.

Dir. 12. §. 14. Direct. 12. Look on earthly and preſent Mercies in connexion with Heaven which is their End, and as ſweetned by our intereſt in God that giveth them. You leave out all the life and ſweetneſs, which muſt cauſe your thankfulneſs, if you leave our God and overlook him. A dead carcaſs hath not the Lovelineſs or Uſefulneſs as a living man: You mortifie your mercies, when you ſeparate them from God and Heaven, and then their beauty, and ſweetneſs, and excellency is gone: And how can you be thankful for the huſks and ſhells when you fooliſhly neglect the kernel? Take every bit as from thy Fathers hands: Remember that he feedeth, and clotheth, and protecteth thee, as his Child: It is to Our Father which is in Heaven, that we muſt go every day for our daily bread. Taſte his Love in it, and wilt thou ſay, that It is ſweet. Remember whither all his Mercies tend, and where they will leave thee, even in the boſom of Eternal Love. Think with thy ſelf, How good is this with th Love of God? This and Heaven are full enough for me. Courſe fare, and courſe clothing, and courſe uſage in the world, and hard labour, and a poor habitation, with Heaven after all, is Mercy beyond all humane eſtimation or conceiving. Nothing can be little, which is a token of the love of God, and leadeth to Eternal Glory. The Relation to Heaven, is the life and glory of every mercy.

Dir. 13. §. 15. Direct. 13. Think oft how great a mercy it is that Thankfulneſs for mercy is made ſo great a part of thy duty. Is it not the ſweeteſt employment in the world, to be always thinking on ſo ſweet a thing as the mercies of God, and to be mentioning them with glad and thankful hearts: Is not this a ſweeter kind of work, than to be abuſing mercy, and caſting it away upon fleſhly luſts, and ſinning it away, and turning it againſt us? Yea, is it not a ſweeter work, than to be groaning under ſin and miſery? If God had as much fixt your thoughts upon ſadning heart-breaking objects, as he hath (by his commands) upon reviving and delighting objects, you might have thought Religion a melancholy life. But when ſorrow is required but as preparatory to delight, and chearful Thanksgiving is made the life and ſum of your Religion, who but a Monſter will think it grievous, to live in Thankfulneſs to our great Benefactor? To think thus of the ſweetneſs of it, will do much to incline us to it, and make it eaſie to us.

Dir. 14. §. 16. Direct. 14. Make conſcience ordinarily of allowing Gods mercies as great a room in thy Thoughts and Prayers, as thou alloweſt to thy ſins, and and wants and troubles. In a day of humiliation, or after ſome notable fall into ſin, or in ſome ſpecial caſes of diſtreſs, I confeſs ſin and danger may have the greater ſhare. But ordinarily mercy ſhould take up more time in our remembrance and confeſſion than our ſins. Let the Reaſons of it firſt convince you, that this is your duty: And when you are convinced hold your ſelves to the performance of it. If you cannot be ſo Thankful as you deſire, yet ſpend as much time in the confeſſing of Gods Mercy to you, as in confeſſing your ſins, and mentioning your wants. Thanksgiving is an effectual petitioning for more. It ſheweth that the ſoul is not drowned in ſelfiſhneſs; but would carry the fruit of all his mercies back to God. If you cannot think on mercy ſo thankfully as you would, yet ſee that it have a due proportion of your thoughts. This courſe (of allowing mercy its due time in our Thoughts and Prayers) would work the ſoul to greater thankfulneſs by degrees. Whereas on the contrary, when men accuſtom themſelves to have ten words or twenty of Confeſſion and Petition, for one of thanksgiving, and ten thoughts of ſins, and wants, and troubles, for one of mercies, this ſtarveth thankfulneſs, and turneth it out of doors. You can command your words and thoughts if you will: Reſolve therefore on this duty.

Dir. 15. §. 17. Direct 15. Take heed of a proud, a covetous, a fleſhly, or a diſcontented mind: for all theſe are enemies to Thankfulneſs. A proud heart thinks it ſelf the worthieſt for more, and thinks diminutively of all. A covetous heart is ſtill gaping after more, and never returning the fruit of what it hath received. A fleſhly mind is an inſatiable gulf of corporal mercies, like a greedy Dog that is gaping for another bone when he hath devoured one, and ſacrificeth all to his belly, which is his God, Phil. 3. 18. A diſcontented mind is alwayes murmuring, and never pleaſed, but findeth ſomething ſtill to quarrel at, and taketh more notice of the denying of its unjuſt deſires, than of the giving of many undeſerved mercies: Thankfulneſs proſpereth not, where theſe vices proſper.

Dir. 16. §. 18. Direct. 16. Avoid as much as may be a Melancholy and over-fearful temper: for that will not ſuffer you to ſee or taſte your greateſt mercies, nor to be glad or thankful for any thing you have, but is ſtill repreſenting all things to you in a terrible or lamenting ſhape. The Grace of Thankfulneſs may be habitually in a timerous melancholy mind: And that appeareth in their valuation of the Mercy: How glad and thankful would they be, if they were aſſured that the Love of God is towards them? But it is next to impoſſible for them ordinarily, to exerciſe thankfulneſs, becauſe they cannot believe any thing of themſelves that is good and comfortable: It is as natural for them to be ſtill fearing and deſparing, and complaining, and troubling themſelves, as for froward Children to be crying, or ſick men to groan. Befriend not therefore this miſerable diſeaſe, but reſiſt it by all due remedies.

Dir. 17. §. 19. Direct. 17. Take heed of unthankful doctrines, which teach you to deny or undervalue mercy. Such is 1. The Doctrine of the Pelagians (whom Proſper calleth the Ungrateful) that denyed faith and ſpecial grace to be any ſpecial gift of God: and that teach you that Peter is no more beholden to God, than Judas, for his differencing grace. 2. The Doctrine which denyeth general grace (which is preſuppoſed unto ſpecial,) and tells the world, that Chriſt dyed only for the Elect. and that all the mercy of the Goſpel is confined to them alone; and teacheth all men to deny God any thanks for Chriſt or any Goſpel mercy, till they know that they are elect, and juſtified: and would teach the wicked (on Earth and in Hell) that they ought not to accuſe themſelves for ſinning againſt any Goſpel mercy, or for rejecting a Chriſt that dyed for them. 3. All Doctrine which makes God the phyſical, efficient predeterminer of every act of the creature conſidered in all its circumſtances; and ſo tells you, that ſaving grace is no more, nor no otherwiſe cauſed of God, than ſin and every natural act is; and our thanks that we owe him for keeping us from ſin, is but for not irreſiſtible premoving us to it. Such Doctrines cut the veins of thankfulneſs; and being not doctrines according to godlineſs, the life of grace, and ſpiritual ſenſe of believers is againſt them.

§. 20. Direct. 18. Put not God off with verbal Thanks, but give him thy ſelf and all thou haſt. Dir. 18. Thankfulneſs cauſeth the ſoul to enquire, What ſhall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me? Pſal. 116. 12. And it is no leſs than thy ſelf and all thou haſt that thou muſt render: that is, thou muſt give God not only thy Tythes, and the Sacrifice of Cain, but thy ſelf to be entirely his ſervant, and all that thou haſt to be at his command, and uſed in the order that he would have thee uſe it. A thankful ſoul devoteth it ſelf to God: This is the living acceptable Sacrifice, Rom. 12. 1. It ſtudieth how to do him ſervice, and how to do good with all his mercies. Thankfulneſs is a powerful ſpring of obedience, and makes men long to be fruitful and profitable, and glad of opportunities to be ſerviceable to God. Thus Law, and Goſpel, Obedience and Gratitude concur. A thankful obedience, and an obedient thankfulneſs are a Chriſtians life, Pſal. 50. 14, 15, 23. Offer unto God thankſgiving, and pay thy Vows to the Moſt High: And call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me——Who ſo offereth praiſe, glorifieth me: and to him that ordereth his converſation aright, I will ſhew the ſalvation of God.

§. 21. I beſeech thee now that readeſt theſe Lines, Dir. 19. be ſo true to God, be ſo ingenuous, be ſo much a friend to the comfort of thy ſoul, and ſo much love a life of pleaſure, as to ſet thy ſelf for the time to come to a more conſcionable performance of this noble work: and ſteep thy thoughts in the abundant mercies of thy God, and expreſs them more in all thy ſpeech to God and man. Say as David, [Pſal. 116. 16, 17. O Lord, truly I am thy ſervant——thou haſt looſed my bonds. I will offer to thee the Sacrifice of Thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord. Pſal. 30. 1, 2, 3, 4, 11, 12. I will extol thee, O Lord, for thou haſt lifted me up, and haſt not made my foes to rejoyce over me. O Lord my God, I cryed unto thee, and thou haſt healed me. O Lord, thou haſt brought up my ſoul from the grave: thou haſt kept me alive, that I ſhould not go down to the pit. Sing unto the Lord, O ye Saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holineſs—— Thou haſt put off my ſackcloth, and girded me with gladneſs, to the end that my glory may ſing praiſe to thee, and not be ſilent: O Lord my God, I will give thanks to thee for ever. Pſal. 69. 30. I will praiſe the name of God with a Song, and magnifie him with thanksgiving: This alſo ſhall pleaſe the Lord better than an Oxe——Pſal. 92. 1, 2. It is a good thing to give thanks to the Lord, and to ſing unto thy Name, O Moſt High: To ſhew forth thy loving kindneſs in the morning, and thy faithfulneſs every night, Pſal. 119. 62. At midnight will I riſe to give thanks unto thee, becauſe of thy righteous judgement, Pſal. 140. 13. Surely the righteous ſhall give thanks unto thy Name; the upright ſhall dwell in thy preſence.] Remember that you are commanded, in every thing to give thanks, 1 Theſſ. 5. 18. When God is ſcant in mercy to thee, then be thou ſcant in thankfulneſs to him; and not when the Devil and a forgetful, or unbelieving, or diſcontented heart, would hide his greateſt mercies from thee. It is juſt with God to give up that perſon to ſadneſs of heart, and to uncomfortable ſelf-tormenting melancholy, that will not be perſwaded by the greatneſs and multitude of mercies, to be frequent in the ſweet returns of Thanks.

DIRECT. XV.

Grand Dir. 15. To Glorifie God.

Let thy very heart be ſet to GLORIFIE GOD, thy Creatour, Redeemer, and Sanctifier, both with the Eſtimation of thy Mind, the Praiſes of thy Mouth, and the Holineſs of thy Life.

§. 1. THe GLORIFYING of GOD being the End of man, and the whole Creation, muſt be the higheſt duty of our lives; and therefore deſerveth our diſtinct conſideration. 1 Cor. 10. 31. Whether ye eat or drink, or what ever ye do, do all to the glory of God. 1 Pet. 4. 11 That God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be praiſe and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. I ſhall therefore firſt ſhew you what it is to glorifie God, and then give Directions how to do it.

Heb. 1. 3. Act. 7. 55. Rom. 3. 23. Rev. 21. 11. 23. Jude 24. 1 Pet. 4. 13. 1 Cor. 3. 18.

§. 2. To glorifie God, is not to add to his eſſential perfections, or felicity, or real glory: The glory of God is a word, that is taken in theſe various ſenſes: 1. Sometime it ſignifieth the eſſential tranſcendent Excellencies of God, in himſelf conſidered. So Rom. 6. 4. Pſal. 19. 2. 2. Sometime it ſignifieth that glory which the Angels and Saints behold in Heaven: What this is, a ſoul in fleſh cannot formally conceive or comprehend: It ſeemeth not to be the Eſſence of God, becauſe that is every where, and ſo is not that glory: Or if any think that his Eſſence is that glory, and is every where alike, and that the creatures capacity is all the difference betwixt Heaven and Earth, he ſeems confuted in that the glory of Heaven will be ſeen by the glorified Body it ſelf, which it's thought cannot ſee the Eſſence of God. Whether then that Glory be the Eſſence of God, or any immediate Emanation from his Excellency, as the beams and light that are ſent forth by the Sun, or a created glory for the felicity of his ſervants, we ſhall know when with the bleſſed we enjoy it. 3. Sometime it is taken for the appearance of Gods perfections in his creatures, either natural or free agents, as diſcerned by man, and for his Honour in the eſteem of man. John 11. 4. 40. 1 Cor. 11. 7. 2 Cor. 4. 15. Phil. 1. 11. & 2. 11. Iſa. 35. 2. & 40. 5, &c. And ſo to glorifie God, is 1. Objectively to repreſent his Excellencies or Glory: 2. Mentally to conceive of them. 3. And Verbally to declare them. I ſhall therefore diſtinctly Direct you, 1. How to glorifie God in your Minds. 2. By your Tongues. 3. By your lives

Directions for Glorifying God with the Heart.

Dir. 1. Lege Gregorii Orat. inaugural. in Inſtitut. Athanaſ.

§. 3. Direct. 1. Abhor all Blaſphemous repreſentations and thoughts of God, and think not of him lamely, unequally, or diminutively, nor as under any corporeal ſhape; nor think not to comprehend him, but reverently admire him. Conceive of him as Incomprehenſible and Infinite. And if Satan would tempt thee to think meanly of any thing in God, or to think highly of one of his Perfections, and meanly of another, abhor ſuch temptations; And think of his Power, Knowledge and Goodneſs equally as the Infinite perfections of God.

§. 4. Direct. 2. Behold his glory in the glory of his works of Nature and of Grace, and ſee him in all as the ſoul, the Glory, the All of the whole Creation. What a Power is that which made and preſerveth all the world? What a Wiſdom is that which ſet in joynt the Univerſal frame of Heaven and Earth, and keepeth all things in their Order. How good is he that made all good, and gave the creatures all their goodneſs, both natural and ſpiritual, by Creation and Renewing grace? Thus [The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his handy work, Pſal. 19. 1. His glory covereth the Heavens, and the earth is full of his praiſe, Hab. 3. 3. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, the God of glory thundereth, Pſal. 29. 3. Pſal. 145.] Dir. 2.

§. 5. Direct. 3. Behold him in the Perſon, Miracles, Reſurrection, Dominion and Glory of his bleſſed Son. Who is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, upholding all things by the word of his power, and having by himſelf purged our ſins, ſate down at the right hand of the Majeſty on high, being made better than the Angels, &c. Heb. 1. 3, 4. By him it is that glory is given to God in the Church, Eph. 3. 21. God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, of things in Heaven, and things in Earth, and things under the Earth, and that every tongue ſhould confeſs, that Jeſus is Chriſt to the glory of God the Father, Phil. 2. 9, 10, 11. Pray therefore that the God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Father of glory, may give you the Spirit of Wiſdom and Revelation in the acknowledgment of him; the eyes of your underſtanding being enlightned, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the Saints; and what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to usward who believe; according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead, and ſet him at his right hand in the celeſtials; far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be Head over all things to his Church, Eph. 1. 17. &c. The Father hath glorified his name in his Son, John 12. 28. & 13. 31, 32. & 14. 13. & 17. 1. Dir. 3.

§. 6 Direct. 4. Behold God as the End of the whole Creation, and intend him as the End of all the actions of thy life. You honour him not as God, if you practically eſteem him not as your ultimate end; even the Pleaſing of his will, and the honouring him in the world. If any thing elſe be made your chiefeſt end, you honour it before him, and make a God of it. Dir. 4.

§. 7. Direct. 5. Anſwer all his bleſſed attributes with ſuitable affections (as I have directed in my Treatiſe of the Knowledge of God, and here briefly Dir. 4.) and his Relations to us with the duty which they command (ſubjection, Love, &c.) as I have opened in the foregoing Directions. We glorifie him in our hearts, when the Image of his Attributes is there received. Dir. 4.

§. 8. Direct. 6. Behold him by faith as always preſent with you. And then every Attribute will the more affect you, and you will not admit diſhonourable thoughts of him: Pray to him as if you ſaw him, and you will ſpeak to him with reverence. Speak of him, as if you ſaw him, and you dare not take his name in vain, nor talk of God with a common frame of mind, nor in a common manner, as of common things. By faith Moſes forſook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the King: for he endured Dir. 6.

as seeing him that is invisible, Heb. 11. 27. God is contemned by them that think they are behind his back.

Dir. 7. §. 9. Direct. 7. Think of him as in Heaven where he is revealed in Glory to the blessed, and magnified by their high —— everlasting Praise. Nothing so much helpeth us to Glorifie God in our minds, as by faith to behold him where he is most Glorious. The very reading over the description of the Glory of the New Jerusalem, Rev. 21. & 22. will much affect a believing mind, with a sense of the Gloriousness of God. Suppose with Stephen we saw Heaven opened, and the ancient of days, the Great Jehovah Gloriously illustrating the City of God, and Jesus in Glory at his right hand, and the innumerable army of Glorified Spirits before his throne, Praising and magnifying him with the highest admirations, and joyfullest acclamations, that creatures are capable of; would it not raise us to some of the same admirations? The soul that by faith is much above, doth most Glorifie God, as being neerest to his Glory.

Dir. 8. §. 10. Direct. 8. Foresee by faith the coming of Christ and the day of the universal Judgement, when Christ shall come in flaming fire with thousands of his holy Angels, to be Glorified in his Saints, and admired in all them that do believe, 2 Thes. 1. 10.

Dir. 9. §. 11. Direct. 9. Abhor all Doctrines, which blaspheme or dishonour the name of God, and would blemish and hide the Glory of his Majesty. I give you this rule for your own preservation, and not in imitation of uncharitable firebands and dividers of the Church, to exercise your pride and imperious humour, in condemning all men, to whose opinions you can maliciously affix a blasphemous consequence, which either followeth but in your own imagination, or is not acknowledged but hated by those on whom you do affix it. Let it suffice you to detest false doctrines, without detesting the persons that you imagine guilty of them, who profess to believe the contrary truth as stedfastly as you your selves.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct. 10. Take heed of sinking into flesh and earth, and being diverted by things sensible from the daily contemplation of the Glory of God. If your belly become your God, and you mind earthly things, and are set upon the honours, or profits or pleasures of the world, when your conversation should be in Heaven, you will be glorying in your shame, when you should be admiring the Glory of your Maker, Phil. 3. 18, 19, 20. and you will have so much to do on earth, that you will find no leisure (because you have no hearts) to look up seriously to God.

Directions for Glorifying God with our tongues, in his Praises.

Dir. 1. How great a duty Praising God is. §. 13. Direct. 1. Conceive of this duty of Praising God according to its superlative excellencies, as being the highest service that the tongue of men or Angels can perform. To Bless, or Praise, or Magnifie God, is not to make him Greater or better, or happier than he is; but to declare and extol his Greatness, Goodness and felicity. And that your hearts may be inflamed to this excellent work, I will here shew you how great and necessary, how high and acceptable a work it is.

Christianus est homo divinus & faciens ingrata diabolo, & ornans gloriam Dei, autoris vitæ & satis suæ. Bucholtzer.

§. 14. 1. It is the giving to God his chiefest due: A speaking of him as he is: And when we have spoken the highest, how far fall we short, of the due expression of his glorious perfections? O how great Praise doth that Almightiness deserve, which created and conserveth all the world, and overruleth all the sons of men, and is able to do whatsoever he will? Great is the Lord and greatly to be praised: and his Greatness is unsearchable. One Generation shall praise his works to another and declare his mighty acts: I will speak of the glorious honour of thy Majesty, and of thy wondrous works: And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts, and I will declare thy Greatness, Psal. 145. 3, 4, 5. What Praise doth that knowledge deserve which extendeth to all things that are, or were, or ever shall be? and that wisdom which ordereth all the world? He knoweth every thought of man, and all the secrets of the heart. Psalm 44. 21. & 94. 11. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world, Acts 15. 18. His understanding is infinite, Psalm 147. 5. What praise doth that Goodness and Mercy deserve, which is diffused throughout all the world, and is the life and hope and happiness of men and Angels? His Mercy is Great unto the Heavens, and his truth unto the Clouds: Psalm 57. 10. O how great is his Goodness to them that fear him? Psalm 31. 10. and therefore how great should be his Praise? Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? and who can shew forth all his Praise, Psalm 106. 2 For great is the Glory of the Lord, Psalm 138. 5.

§. 15. 2. It is the end of all Gods wondrous works, and especially the end which man was made for, that all things might Praise him Objectively, and men (and Angels) in estimation and expression. That his Glorious excellency might be visible in his works, and be admired and extolled by the rational creature: For this all things were created and are continued? For this we have our understanding and our speech: This is the fruit that God expecteth from all his works. Deny him this and you are guilty of frustrating the whole creation, as much as in you lyeth. You would have the Sun to shine in vain, and the Heavens and Earth to stand in vain, and man and all things to live in vain, if you would not have God have the praise and Glory of his works. Therefore Sun, and Moon, and Stars, and Firmament are called on to Praise the Lord, Psalm 148. 2, 3, 4. as they are the matter for which he must by us be praised. O praise him therefore for his mighty acts: Praise him according to his excellent greatness. Psalm 150. 2. O that men would praise the Lord for his Goodness, and declare his wondrous works for the children of men: Psalm 107. 8, &c. Yea it is the end of Christ in the Redemption of the world, and in saving his elect, that God might in the Church in Earth and Heaven have the praise and Glory of his Grace, Ephes. 1. 6, 12, 14. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name, Heb. 13. 15. And let the redeemed of the Lord say, that his mercy endureth for ever: Psalm 107. 2. For this all his Saints are a chosen Generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that they should shew forth the praises of him that hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 5. 9.

§. 16. 3. The Praise of God is the highest and noblest work in it self. 1. It hath the highest object, even the glorious excellencies of God. Thanksgiving is somewhat lower as having more respect to our selves and the Benefits received: But Praise is terminated directly on the perfections of God himself. 2. It is the work that is most immediately neerest on God as he is Our End: And as the end is such is better than all the means set together (as such:) so are the final duties about the end greater than all the mediate duties. 3. It is the work of the most excellent creatures of God, the holy Angels: They proclaimed the coming of Christ, by way of Praise, Luke 2. 13, 14. Glory to God in the highest: on earth peace: Good will towards men; Psalm 103. 20 & 148. 2.

& 148. 2. And as we must be equal to the Angels, it must be in equal Praising God, or else it will not be in equality of Glory. 4. It is the work of Heaven, the place and state of all perfection: And that is best and highest which is nearest Heaven: Where they rest not day nor night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come ——— Thou art worthy O Lord to receive glory, and Honour, and Power, for thou hast created all things, and for thy Pleasure they are and were created, Rev. 4. 8, 10. Rev. 19. 5. A voice came out of the throne saying, Praise our God all ye his Servants, and ye that fear him both small and great. Verse 6. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty Thunderings, saying, Alleluiah: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; Let us be glad and rejoyce and give honour unto him, for the Marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made her self ready.

§. 17. 4. It beseemeth us and much concerneth us to learn and exercise that work which in Heaven we must do for ever: and that is, to Love and joyfully Praise the Lord. For earth is but the place of our Apprentiship for Heaven. The preparing works of mortifying repentance must in their place be done: but only as subservient to these which we must ever do: When we shall sing the new song before the Lamb, Thou art worthy——— For thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us Kings and Priests unto our God, Rev. 5 9,10. Therefore the Primitive Church of Believers is described as most like to Heaven, Luke 24. 53. with great joy they were continually in the Temple praising and blessing God. O Praise the Lord therefore in the Congregations of the Saints: Let Israel rejoyce in him that made him: Let the Children of Zion be joyful in their King. Psalm 149. 1, 2. Let the Saints be joyful in glory: Let the high Praises of God be in their mouths, verse 5, 6.

§. 18. 5. Though we are yet diseased sinners, and in our warfare, among enemies, dangers and perplexities, yet Praise is seasonable and suitable to our condition here, as the greatest part of our duty, which all the rest must but promote. Pretend not that it is not fit for you because you are sinners, and that humiliation only is suitable to your state. For the design of your redemption, the Tenour of the Gospel, and your own condition, engage you to it. Are they not engaged to praise the Lord, that are brought so near him to that end? 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. that are reconciled to him? To whom he hath given and forgiven so much. 1 Tim. 1. 15. Tit. 3. 3, 5. Psalm 103. 1, 2, 3. that have so many great and precious promises? 2 Pet. 1. 4. that are the Temples of the Holy Ghost, who dwelleth in them, and sanctifyeth them to God? That have a Christ interceding for them in the highest? Rom. 8. 33, 34. That are always safe in the Arms of Christ; that are guarded by Angels, and Devils, and Enemies forbidden to touch them, further than their Father seeth necessary for their good? That have the Lord for their God, Psalm 33. 12. & 4. 8. That have his Saints for their companions and helpers? That have so many ordinances to help their souls? And so many Creatures and Comforts for their Bodies? That live continually upon the plenty of his Love? That have received so much, and are still receiving? Should we not bless him every day with praise, that blesseth us every day with Benefits? Should we not praise the Bridge that we go over? The Friend that we have tryed so oft? And resolve as Psalm 145. Every day will I bless thee: I will praise thy name for ever and ever; Psalm 63. 3, 4. Because thy loving kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee: Thus will I bless thee while I live: I will lift up my hands in thy name. Are they not bound to praise him on earth, that must reign with Christ for ever in Heaven? Rom. 8. 17, 33. Rev. 1. 5, 6. Col. 1, 12. 1 Pet. 1. 4.

6. The Praises of God do exercise our highest Graces: Praise is the very breath of Love, and Joy, and Gratitude: It tendeth to raise us above our selves, and make our hearts to burn within us, while the glorious name of God is magnified: It hath the most pure and spiritual and elevating effect upon the soul; and therefore tendeth most effectually to make us more holy, by the encrease of these graces.

§. 19. 7. To be much employed in the praise of God, doth tend exceedingly to the vanquishing of all hurtful Doubts, and Fears, and Sorrows. Joy and Praise promote each other: And this it doth 1. By keeping the soul near to God, and within the warmth of his love and goodness, Psal. 140. 13. 2. By the exercise of Love and Joy, which are the cordial, reviving, strengthning graces, Psal. 94. 19. & 116. 1, 3. By dissipating distrustful vexing thoughts, and diverting the mind to sweeter things, Psal. 104. 34. 4. By keeping off the Tempter; who usually is least able to follow us with his molestations, when we are highest in the praises of our God. 5. By bringing out the Evidences of our sincerity into the light, while the chiefest graces are in exercise, 2 Cor. 3. 18. 6. And by way of Reward from God that loveth the Praises of his meanest Servants. And here I would commend this experiment to uncomfortable troubled Souls, that have not found comfort by long searching after evidence in themselves. Exercise your selves much in the Praises of God: This is a duty that you have no pretence against. Against Thanksgiving for his grace, you pretend that you know not that you have received his grace: But to praise him in the excellency of his perfections, his power, and wisdom, and goodness, and mercy, and truth, is the duty of all men in the world. While you are doing this, you will feel your graces stir, and feel that comfort from the face of God, which you are not like to meet with in any other way whatsoever. Evidences are exceeding useful to our ordinary stated peace and comfort. But it is oft long before we confidently discern them: and they are oft discerned when yet the soul is not excited to much sense of comfort and delight: and we quickly loose the sight of evidences, if we be not very wise and careful: But a life of praise bringeth comfort to the soul, as standing in a Sunshine bringeth light and warmth: Or as labouring doth warm the body: or as the sight and converse of our deerest friend, or the hearing of glad tydings doth rejoyce the heart; without any great reasoning or arguing the case. This is the way to have comfort by feeling, to be much in the hearty praises of the Lord: When we come to Heaven we shall have our Joy, by immediate Vision, and the delightful exercise of Love and Praise: And if you would taste the Heavenly Joys on earth, you must imitate them in Heaven as near as possibly you can: And this is your work of nearest imitation.

§. 20. 8. To live a life of Praising God will make Religion sweet and easie to us, and take off the wearisomness of it, and make the work of God a pleasure to us. Whereas they that set themselves only to the works of humiliation, and leave out these soul-delighting exercises, do cast themselves into exceeding danger, by making Religion seem to them a grievous and undesirable life. This makes Men backward to every duty, and do it heartlesly, and easily yield to Temptations of Omission and neglect, if not at last fall off through weariness: whereas the Soul that is daily employed in the high and holy

Praises

Praiſes of his God, is ſtill drawn on by encouraging Experience, and doth all with a willing ready mind.

§. 21. 9. No Duty is more pleaſing to God, than the cheerful Praiſes of his Servants? He loveth your prayers, tears and groans; but your Praiſes much more: And that which pleaſeth God moſt, muſt be moſt pleaſing to his ſervants: For to pleaſe him is their End: This is the End of all their labour, that whether preſent or abſent, they may be accepted of him. 2 Cor. 5. 9. So that it is a final enjoying, and therefore a delighting duty.

§. 22. 10. To be much employed in the Praiſes of God, will acquaint the world with the nature of true Religion, and remove their prejudice, and confute their diſhonourable Thoughts and Accuſations of it, and recover the honour of Chriſt, and his holy ways, and Servants. Many are averſe to a holy life, becauſe they think that it conſiſteth but of melancholy fears or ſcrupulosity: But who dare open his mouth againſt the joyful Praiſes of his Maker? I have heard and read of ſeveral enemies and murderers, that have broke in upon Chriſtians with an intent to kill them, or carry them away, that finding them on their knees in prayer, and reverencing the work ſo much as to ſtay and hear them till they had done, have reverenced the Perſons alſo, and departed, and durſt not touch the heavenly worſhippers of God. This life of praiſe is a continual pleaſure to the Soul; clean contrary to a Melancholy life: It is recreating to the Spirits, and healthful to the body, which is conſumed by Cares, and Fears, and Sorrows. It is the way that yieldeth that mirth which doth good like a medicine, and is a continual feaſt, Prov. 17. 22. & 15. 15. Therefore ſaith the Apoſtle, James 5. 13. Is any merry, let him ſing Pſalms. He cannot better exerciſe mirth, than in ſinging praiſes to his God. This keeps the Soul continually on the wing, deſiring ſtill to be nearer God, that it may have more of theſe delights: And ſo it overcomes the ſenſe of Perſecutions and Afflictions, and the fears of death; and is a moſt excellent cordial and companion in the greateſt ſufferings. Was it not an excellent hearing, to have been a Witneſs of the Joy of Paul and Silas, when in the Priſon and Stocks, with their backs ſore with ſcourges, they ſang at midnight the Praiſes of the Lord? Acts 16. 25. ſo that all the doors were opened, and all the Priſoners bonds were looſed, that had been their Auditors; ſo great was Gods acceptance of their work. O that we would do that honour and right to true Religion, as to ſhew the world the nature and uſe of it, by living in the cheerful praiſes of our God, and did not teach them to blaſpheme it by our miſdoings!

I have ſaid the more of the excellency and benefits of this work, becauſe it is one of your beſt helps to perform it, to know the Reaſons of it, and how much of your Religion, and Duty, and comfort conſiſteth in it: and the forgetting of this, is the common cauſe that it is ſo boldly and ordinarily neglected, or ſlubbered over as it is.

Dir. 2. §. 23. Direct. 2. The keeping of the Heart in the Admiration and Glorifying of God, (according to the fore-going Directions) is the principal Help to the right praiſing of him with our Lips. For out of the hearts abundance the mouth will ſpeak: And if the Heart do not bear its part, no praiſe is melodious to God.

Dir. 3. §. 24. Direct. 3. Read much thoſe Scriptures which ſpeak of the Praiſes of God; eſpecially the Pſalms: and furniſh your Memories with ſtore of thoſe holy Expreſſions of the Excellencies of God, which he himſelf hath taught you in his Word. None knoweth the things of God, but the Spirit of God; who teacheth us in the Scripture to ſpeak divinely of things divine. No other Dialect ſo well becometh the work of praiſe. God that beſt knoweth himſelf, doth beſt teach us how to know and praiſe him. Every Chriſtian ſhould have a treaſury of theſe ſacred materials in his memory, that he may be able at all times, in Conference and in Worſhip, to ſpeak of God in the words of God.

Dir. 4. §. 25. Direct. 4. Be much in ſinging Pſalms of praiſe, and that with the moſt heart-riſing cheerfulneſs and melody: eſpecially in the Holy Aſſemblies. The Melody and the conjunction of many ſerious holy ſouls, doth tend much to elevate the heart. And where it is done intelligibly, reverently, in conjunction with a rational, ſpiritual, ſerious Worſhip, the uſe of Muſical Inſtruments are not to be ſcrupled or refuſed; any more than the Tunes or Melody of the Voice.

Dir. 5. §. 26. Direct. 5. Remember to allow the Praiſes of God, their due proportion in all your Prayers. Uſe not to ſhut it out, or forget it, or cut it ſhort with two or three words in the concluſion. The Lords Prayer begins and ends with it: and the three firſt Petitions are for the glorifying the Name of God, and the coming of his Kingdom, and the doing of his Will, by which he is glorified: and all this before we ask any thing directly for our ſelves. Uſe will much help you in the Praiſe of God.

Dir. 6. §. 27. Direct. 6. Eſpecially let the Lords day be principally ſpent in Praiſes and Thanksgivings for the work of our Redemption, and the Benefits thereof. This day is ſeparated by God himſelf to this holy work: And if you ſpend it (ordinarily) in other Religious Duties, that ſubſerve not this, you ſpend it not as God requireth you: The thankful and praiſeful Commemoration of the work of mans Redemption, is the ſpecial work of the day: And the Celebrating of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, (which is therefore called the Euchariſt) was part of theſe laudatory Exerciſes, and uſed every Lords Day by the Primitive Church. It is not only a holy day, ſeparated to Gods Worſhip in general; but to this Euchariſtical Worſhip in ſpecial above the reſt, as a day of Praiſes and Thankſgiving unto God: And thus all Chriſtians (ordinarily) ſhould uſe it.

Dir. 7. §. 28. Direct. 7. Let your holy Conference with others be much about the glorious Excellencies, Works, and Mercies of the Lord, in way of Praiſe and Admiration. This is indeed to ſpeak to Edification, and as the Oracles of God. Epheſ. 4. 29. that God in all things may be glorified, 1 Pet. 4. 11. Pſal. 29. 9. In his Temple doth every one ſpeak of his Glory. Pſal. 35. 28. My tongue ſhall ſpeak of thy righteouſneſs, and of thy Praiſes all the day long, Pſal. 145. 6, 11, 21. And men ſhall ſpeak of the might of thy terrible Acts. —— They ſhall ſpeak of the glory of thy Kingdom, and talk of thy power: to make known to the Sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious Majeſty of his Kingdom —— My mouth ſhall ſpeak of the praiſes of the Lord, and let all fleſh bleſs his holy name for ever and ever. Pſal. 105. 2, 3. Talk ye of all his wondrous works: glory ye in his holy name.

Dir. 8. §. 29. Direct. 8. Speak not of God in a light unreverent or common ſort, as if you talkt of common things: but with all poſſible ſeriouſneſs, gravity, and reverence, as if you ſaw the Majeſty of the Lord. A common and a holy manner of Speech are contrary. That only is holy which is ſeparated to God from common uſe. You ſpeak prophanely, (in the manner, how holy ſoever the matter be) when you ſpeak of God with that careleſs levity, as you uſe to ſpeak of common things. Such ſpeaking of God is diſhonourable to him, and hurts the hearers more than ſilence, by breeding in them a contempt of God, and teaching them to imitate you in ſleight

fleight conceits and Speech of the Almighty: Whereas one that ſpeaketh reverently of God, as in his preſence, doth oftimes more affect the hearers with a reverence of his Majeſty, with a few words, than unreverent Preachers with the moſt accurate Sermons, delivered in a common or affected ſtrain. When ever you ſpeak of God, let the hearers perceive that your hearts are poſſeſſed with his Fear and Love, and that you put more difference between God and Man, than between a King and the ſmalleſt Worm: ſo when you talk of death or judgment, of Heaven or Hell, of holineſs or ſin, or any thing that nearly relates to God, do it with that Gravity and Serioufneſs as the matter doth require.

Dir. 9. §. 30. Direct. 9. Speak not ſo unskilfully and fooliſhly of God or holy things, as may tempt the hearers to turn it into a matter of Scorn or laughter. Eſpecially underſtand how your parts are ſuited to the company that you are in. Among thoſe that are more ignorant, ſome weak diſcourſes may be tolerable and profitable: For they are moſt affected with that which is delivered in their own Dialect and Mode: but among judicious or captious hearers, unskilful perſons muſt be very ſparing of their words, leſt they do hurt, while they deſire to do good, and make Religion ſeem ridiculous. We may rejoyce in the Scorns which we undergo for Chriſt, and which are bent againſt his holy Laws, or the ſubſtance of our duty: But if men are jeered for ſpeaking ridiculouſly and fooliſhly of holy things, they have little reaſon to take comfort in any thing of that, but their honeſt Meanings and Intents: Nay, they muſt be humbled for being a Diſhonour to the name of Godlineſs. But the miſery is, that few of the Ignorant and Weak have Knowledge and Humility enough to perceive their Ignorance and Weakneſs, but they think they ſpeak as wiſely as the beſt, and are offended if their words be not reverenced accordingly. As a Miniſter ſhould ſtudy and labour for a skill and ability to preach, becauſe it is his work; ſo every Chriſtian ſhould ſtudy for skill to diſcourſe with wiſdom and meet expreſſions, about holy things; becauſe this is his work. And as unfit expreſſions and behaviour in a Miniſter, do cauſe contempt inſtead of edifying; ſo do they in diſcourſe.

Dir. 10. §. 31. Direct. 10. When ever Gods holy Name or Word is blaſphemed, or uſed in levity or jeaſt, or a holy life is made a ſcorn, or God is notoriouſly abuſed or diſhonoured, be ready to reprove it with Gravity where you can; and where you cannot, at leaſt let your Deteſtation of it be conveniently manifeſted. Among thoſe to whom you may freely ſpeak, lay open the greatneſs of their ſin: Or if you are unable for long or accurate diſcourſe, at leaſt tell them who hath ſaid [Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his Name in vain:] And where your ſpeech is unmeet (as to ſome Superiours) or is like to do more harm than good, let your departing the room, or your looks, or rather your tears ſhew your diſlike.

Of Prayer I have ſpoken afterward. Tom. 2. &c.

Directions for the glorifying God in our Lives.

Dir. 1. §. 32. Direct. 1. Our Lives then glorifie God when they are ſuch as his Excellencies moſt appear in: And that is when they are moſt Divine or Holy: when they are ſo managed, that the world may ſee, that it is God that we have chiefly reſpect unto, and that HOLINESS TO THE LORD is written upon all our Faculties and Affairs. So much of GOD as appeareth in our lives, ſo much they are truly venerable, and advanced above the rank of fleſhly worldly lives. God only is the real glory of every perſon, and every thing, and every Word or Action of our Lives. And the natural conſcience of the world, which in deſpight of their Atheiſm, is forced to confeſs and reverence a Deity; will be forced (even when they are hated and perſecuted) to reverence the appearance of God in his holy ones. Let it appear therefore, 1. That Gods Authority commandeth you, above all the Powers of the earth, and againſt all the power of fleſhly luſts: 2. That it is the Glory and Intereſt of God that you live for and look after principally in the world, and not your own carnal intereſt and glory: And that it is his work that you are doing, and not your own; and his cauſe and not your own that you are engaged in. 3. That it is his Word and Law that is your Rule. 4. And the Example of his Son that is your Pattern. 5. And that your Hearts and Lives are moved and acted in the world, by motives fetcht from the Rewards which he hath promiſed, and the Puniſhments which he hath threatned in the world to come. 6. And that it is a ſupernatural powerful Principle ſent from God into your Hearts, even the Holy Ghoſt, by which you are enclined and actuate in the Tenour of your Lives. 7. And that your Daily converſe is with God, and that men and other Creatures are comparatively nothing to you, but are made to ſtand by, while God is preferred, and honoured, and ſerved by you: And that all your buſineſs is with him, or for him in the world.

Nam illa quæ de regno cœlorum commemorantur à nobis, deq; ipſa rerum cognitione rerum contemptu, vel non capiunt, vel non facile ſibi perſuadent cum ſenſus ſuos ſenſibus eveniunt. Acoſta l. 4. c. 18. p. 418.

§. 33. Direct. 2. The more of Heaven appeareth in your Lives, the more your Lives do glorifie God. Dir. 2. Worldly and carnal Men are conſcious, that their glory is a vaniſhing Glory, and their Pleaſure but a tranſitory dream, and that all their honour and wealth will ſhortly leave them in the duſt: And therefore they are forced in deſpight of their Senſuality, to bear ſome reverence to the life to come: And tho' they have not hearts themſelves, to deny the pleaſures and profits of the world, and to ſpend their Days in preparing for Eternity, and in laying up a Treaſure in Heaven, yet they are convinced that thoſe that do ſo are the beſt and wiſeſt Men; and they could wiſh that they might dye the death of the righteous, and that their laſt end might be like his: As Heaven exceedeth Earth, even in the reverent acknowledgment of the World, though not in their practical eſteem and choice: ſo Heavenly Chriſtians have a reverent acknowledgment from them (when malice doth not hide their Heavenlineſs by ſlanders,) though they will not be ſuch themſelves. Let it appear in your Lives, that really you ſeek a higher happineſs than this world affordeth, and that you verily look to live with Chriſt, and that as Honour, and Wealth, and Pleaſure command the lives of the Ungodly, ſo the hope of Heaven commandeth yours. Let it appear that this is your deſign and buſineſs in the world, and that your Hearts and converſations are above, and that whatever you do or ſuffer, is for this, and not for any lower end; and this is a life that God is glorified by.

§. 34. Direct. 3. It glorifieth God, by ſhewing the excellency of Faith, when we contemn the Riches and Honour of the World, and live above the Worldlings life, accounting that a deſpicable thing; which he accounts his Happineſs, and looſeth his Soul for. Dir. 3. As men deſpiſe the Toys of Children, ſo a Believer muſt take the Tranſitory Vanities of this world, for matters ſo inconſiderable, as not to be worthy his regard, ſave only as they are the matter of his duty to God, or as they relate to him or the life to come: Saith Paul, 2 Cor. 4. 18. We look not at the things which are ſeen (they are not worth our obſerving or looking at) but at the things which are not ſeen: For the things which are ſeen are Temporal, but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal. The World is under a Believers Feet, while his Eye is fixed fixed on the cœleſtial world. He travelleth through it to his home, and he will be thankful if his way be fair, and if he have his daily bread, but it is not his home, nor doth he make any great matter, whether his uſage in it be kind or unkind, or whether his Inn be well adorned or not. He is almoſt indifferent whether for ſo ſhort a time, he be rich or poor, in a high or in a low condition, further than as it tendeth to his Maſters ſervice. Let men ſee that you have a higher birth than they, and higher hopes, and higher hearts, by ſetting light by that which their hearts are ſet upon as their felicity. When ſeeming Chriſtians are as worldly and ambitious as others, and make as great a matter of their gain, and wealth, and honour, it ſheweth that they do but cover the baſe and ſordid Spirit of worldlings, with the viſor of the Chriſtian name, to deceive themſelves, and bring the faith of Chriſtians into ſcorn, and diſhonour the holy name which they uſurp.

Dir. 5. §. 35. Direct. 4. It much honoureth God, when his ſervants can quietly and fearleſly truſt in him, in the face of all the dangers and threatnings which Devils or men can caſt before them; and can joyfully ſuffer pain or death, in obedience to his commands, and in confidence on his promiſe of everlaſting happineſs. This ſheweth that we believe indeed that there is a God, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6. and that he is true and juſt, and that his promiſes are to be truſted on; and that he is able to make them good in deſpight of all the malice of his enemies, and that the threats or frowns of ſinful Worms are contemptible to him that feareth God, Pſal. 58. 11. So that men ſhall ſay, Verily there is a reward for the righteous: Verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth, and that at laſt will judge the world in righteouſneſs: Paul gloried in the Theſſalonians, for their faith and patience, in all their perſecutions and tribulations which they endured; as a manifeſt token of the righteous judgement of God, that they might be accounted worthy of the Kingdom of God, for which they ſuffered: Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompence tribulation to them that trouble us, and reſt with his Saints to thoſe that are troubled; 2 Theſſ. 1. 4, 5, 6, 7. If ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory, and of God reſteth upon you, on their part he is evil ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified, 1 Pet. 1. 14. If any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed, but let him glorifie God on this behalf; Verſe 16. When confidence in God, and aſſurance of the great reward in Heaven (Matth. 5. 11, 12.) doth cauſe a believer undauntedly to ſay as the three Witneſſes, Dan. 3. We are not careful, O King, to anſwer thee in this matter: The God whom we ſerve is able to deliver us, when by faith we can go through the tryal of carnal mockings and ſcourgings, of bonds and impriſonment, to be deſtitute and afflicted, yea, and tortured, not accepting deliverance (upon ſinful terms) thus God is glorified by believers. Lift up your voices, O ye afflicted Saints, and ſing, for the Majeſty of the Lord——— Glorifie ye the Lord in the fires, even the name of the Lord God of Iſrael in the Iſles of the Sea, Iſa. 24. 14, 15. Sing to his Praiſe with Paul and Silas, though your feet be in the ſtocks: If God call for your lives, remember that you are not your own, you are bought with a price: therefore glorifie God in your bodies and Spirits which are his, 1 Cor. 6. 20. Rejoyce in it if you bear in your bodies the marks of the Lord Jeſus, Gal. 6. 17. And if you always bear about in the body the dying of the Lord Jeſus, that the life alſo of Jeſus may be manifeſted in your bodies, 2 Cor. 4. 10. And with all boldneſs ſee that Chriſt be magnified in your bodies, whether it be by life or death, Phil. 1. 20. He diſhonoureth and reproacheth Chriſt and faith, that thinks he is not to be truſted even unto the death.

§. 36. Direct. 5. It much honoureth God, when the hopes of everlaſting joys, do cauſe believers to live much more joyfully than the moſt proſperous worldlings: not with their kind of doting mirth, in vain ſports and pleaſures, and fooliſh talking, and uncomely jeſts: But in that conſtant chearfulneſs and gladneſs which beſeemeth the heirs of glory. Let it appear to the world, that indeed you hope to live with Chriſt, and to be equal with the Angels: Doth a dejected countenance, and a mournful, troubled, and complaining life, expreſs ſuch hopes? or rather tell men that your hopes are ſmall, and that God is a hard Maſter, and his ſervice grievous? Do not thus diſhonour him by your inordinate dejectedneſs: Do not affright and diſcourage ſinners from the pleaſant ſervice of the Lord. Dir. 5.

§. 37. Direct. 6. When Chriſtians live in a readineſs to dye, and can rejoyce in the approach of death, and love and long for the day of Judgement, when Chriſt ſhall juſtifie them from the ſlanders of the world, and ſhall judge them to eternal joys, this is to the glory of God and our profeſſion. When death which is the King of fears to others, appeareth as diſarmed and conquered to believers: when Judgment which is the terror of others is their deſire, this ſheweth a triumphant faith, and that godlineſs, is not in vain. It muſt be ſomething above nature that can make a man deſire to depart and be with Chriſt as beſt of all, and to be abſent from the body and preſent with the Lord, and to comfort one another with the mention of the glorious coming of their Lord, and the day when he ſhall judge the world in righteouſneſs, Phil. 1. 21. 2 Cor. 5. 8. 1 Theſſ. 4. 18. & 2. 1. 10. Dir. 6.

§. 38. Direct. 7. The Humility, and Meekneſs, and Patience of Chriſtians, much honour God and their holy faith: as Pride, and Paſſion, and Impatience diſhonour him. Let men ſee that the Spirit of God doth caſt down the devilliſh ſin of Pride, and maketh you like your Maſter, that humbled himſelf to aſſume our fleſh, and to the death of the Croſs, and to the contradiction and reproach of fooliſh ſinners, and made himſelf of no reputation, but endured the ſhame, of being derided, ſpit upon and crucified, Phil. 2. 7, 8, 9. Heb. 12. 2. and ſtooped to waſh the feet of his Diſciples. It is not ſtoutneſs and lifting up the head, and ſtanding upon your terms, and upon your honour in the world, that is the honouring of God. When you are as little Children, and as nothing in your own eyes, and ſeek not the honour that is of men, but ſay, Not to us O Lord, not to us, but to thy Name be the glory, Pſal. 115. 1. and are content that your honour decreaſe and be trodden into the dirt, that his may increaſe, and his name be magnified: this is the glorifying of God. So when you ſhew the world, that you are above the impotent paſſions of men; not to be inſenſible, but to be angry and ſin not, and to give place to wrath, and not to reſiſt and avenge your ſelves, Rom. 12. 19. and to be meek and lowly in heart, Matth. 11. 29. It will appear that you have the wiſdom which is from above, if you be firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, eaſie to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and hypocriſie, James 3. 17. But if you have bitter envying and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, and lye not againſt the truth (as if this were the wiſdom from above, which glorifieth God) For this wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual and deviliſh, v. 14, 15. A meek and quiet Spirit is of great price in the ſight of God, 1 Pet. 3. 4. An Ornament commended to women by the Scripture, which is amiable in the eyes of all.

Dir. 8. §. 39. Direct. 8. It honoureth God and your profession, when you abound in love and good works: Loving the godly with a special love, but all men with so much love, as makes you earnestly desirous of their welfare, and to love your enemies, and put up wrongs, and to study to do good to all, and hurt to none. To be abundant in love, is to be like to God, who is LOVE it self, 1 John 4. 7. 11. and sheweth that God dwelleth in us, v. 12. All men may know that we are Christs Disciples, if we love one another, John 13. 35. This is the new and the great commandment: The fulfilling of the Law, Rom. 13. 10 John 15. 12, 17. & 13. 34. You will be known to be the children of your heavenly Father, if you love your enemies, and bless them that curse you, and pray for them that hate and persecute you, and despightfully use you, Matth. 5. 44. Do all the good that possibly you can, if you would be like him that doth good to the evil, and whose mercies are over all his works. Shew the world that you are his workmanship created to good works in Christ Jesus which he hath ordained for you to walk in, Eph. 2. 10. Herein is your Father glorified, that ye bring forth much fruit. John 15. 8. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven, Matth. 5. 16. Honour God with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thy increase, Prov. 3. 9. And those that honour him, he will honour, 1 Sam. 2. 30. When barren worldly hypocrites, that honour God only with their lips, and flattering words, shall be used as those that really dishonour him.

Dir. 9. § 40. Direct. 9. The Unity, Concord and Peace of Christians, doth glorifie God and their profession: when their divisions, contentions and malicious persecutions of one another doth heinously dishonour him. Men reverence that faith and practice which they see us unanimously accord in. And the same men will despise both it and us, when they see us together by the ears about it, and hear us in a Babel of confusion, one saying, This is the way, and another, That is it: one saying, Loe here is the true Church and Worship; and another saying, Loe it is there. Not that one man or a few must make a Shooe meet for his own foot, and then say, All that will not dishonour God by discord, must wear this Shooe, Think as I think, and say as I say, or else you are Schismaticks. But we must all agree in believing and obeying God, and walking by the same rule so far as we have attained, Phil. 3. 15, 16. The strong must bear the infirmities of the weak, and not please themselves; but every one of us please his neighbour for good to edification: and be like minded one towards another, according to Christ Jesus, that we may with one mind, and one mouth glorifie God, receiving one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God, Rom. 15. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7.

Dir. 10. §. 41. Direct. 10. Justice commutative and distributive, private and publick, in bargainings and in government and Judgement, doth honour God and our profession in the eyes of all: when we do no wrong, but do to all men as we would they should do to us, Matth. 7. 12. That no man go beyond or defraud his brother in any matter: for the Lord is the avenger of all such, 1 Thess. 4. 6. That a mans word be his Master, and that we lye not one to another, nor equivocate or deal subtilly and deceitfully, but in plainness and singleness of heart, and in simplicity and godly sincerity have our conversation in the world: Perjured persons and Covenant-breakers, that dissolve the bonds of humane society, and take the name of God in vain, shall find by his vengeance that he holdeth them not guiltless.

Dir. 11. §. 42. Direct. 11. It much glorifieth God to worship him rationally and purely, in Spirit and in truth, according to the glory of his wisdom and goodness, and it dishonoureth him to be worshipped ignorantly and carnally, with spells and mimical irrational actions, as if he were less wise than serious grave understanding men. The worshippers of God have great cause to take heed how they behave themselves. Lest they meet with the reward of Nadab and Abihu, and God tell them by his judgments, that he will be sanctified in all them that come nigh him, and before all the people he will be glorified, Lev. 10. 1, 2, 3. The second Commandment is enforced by the Jealousie of God about his Worship. Ignorant, rude, unseemly words, or unhandsome gestures, which tend to raise contempt in the audito, or levity of speech which makes men laugh, is abominable in a Preacher of the Gospel. And so is it to pray irrationally, incoherently, confusedly, with vain repetitions and tautologies, as if men thought to be heard for their babling over so many words, while there is not so much as an appearance of a well composed, serious, rational and reverent address of a fervent soul to God. To worship God as the Papists do, with Images, Agnus Dei's, Crucifixes, Crossings, Spittle, Oyl, Candles, Holy water, kissing the Pax, dropping Beads, praying to the Virgin Mary, and to other Saints, repeating over the Name of Jesus nine times in a breath, and saying such and such sentences so oft, praying to God in an unknown Tongue, and saying to him they know not what, adoring the consecrated Bread as no Bread, but the very flesh of Christ himself, choosing the tutelar Saint whose name they will invocate, fasting by feasting upon Fish instead of Flesh, saying so many Masses a day, and offering Sacrifice for the quick and the dead, praying for souls in Purgatory, purchasing Indulgences for their deliverance out of Purgatory from the Pope, carrying the pretended bones or other Reliques of their Saints, the Popes canonizing now and then one for a Saint, pretending Miracles to delude the People, going on Pilgrimages to Images, Shrines or Reliques, offering before the Images, with a multitude more of such parcels of Devotion, do most heinously dishonour God, and as the Apostle truly saith, do make unbelievers say, They are mad, 1 Cor. 14. 23. and that they are children in understanding, and not men, v. 20. Insomuch as it seemeth one of the greatest impediments to the Conversion of the Heathen and Mahometan world, and the chiefest means of confirming them in their Infidelity, and making them hate and scorn Christianity, that the Romish, and the Eastern and Southern Churches, within their view do worship God so dishonourably as they do: as if our God were like a little Child that must have pretty toyes bought him in the Fair, and brought home to please him. Whereas if the unreformed Churches in the East, West and South, were Reformed, and had a Learned, Pious, able Ministry, that clearly preached and seriously applyed the Word of God, and worshipped God with understanding, gravity, reverence, and serious spirituality, and lived a holy, heavenly, mortified, self-denying conversation, this would be the way to propagate Christiany, and win the Infidel world to Christ.

Dir. 12. §. 43. Direct. 12. If you will glorifie God in your lives, you must be above a selfish, private, narrow mind, and must be chiefly intent upon the publick good, and the spreading of the Gospel through the world. A selfish, private narrow soul, brings little honour to the cause of God: It's always taken up about it self, or imprisoned in a corner in the dark, to the inrerest of some Sect or Party, and seeth not how things go in the world: Its desires and prayers, and endeavours go no further than they can see or travel. But a larger soul beholdeth all the earth, and is desirous to know how it goeth with the Cause and Servants of the Lord, and how the Gospel gets ground upon the unbelieving Nations; and such are affected with a state of the Church a thousand miles off, almost as if it were at hand, as being Members of the whole Body of Christ, and not only of a Sect. They pray for the Hallowing of Gods Name, and the coming of his Kingdom, and the doing of his Will throughout the Earth, as it is in Heaven, before they come to their own Necessities, at least in order of esteem and desire. The Prosperity of themselves, or their Party or Country satisfieth them not, while the Church abroad is in distress. They live as those that know the Honour of God is more concerned in the welfare of the whole, than in the success of any Party against the rest. They pray that the Gospel may have free Course and be glorified abroad, as it is with them, and the Preachers of it be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men, 2 Thess. 3. 1, 2. The silencing the Ministers, and suppressing the Interest of Christ and souls, is the most grievous tidings to them: Therefore they pray for Kings, and all in Authority, not for any carnal ends, but that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all Godliness and Honesty, 1 Tim. 2. 1, 2, 3. Thus God must be glorified by our Lives.

DIRECT. XVI.

Grand Dir. 16. Let your Life on Earth be a Conversation in Heaven; by the constant work of Faith and Love: even such a Faith as maketh things future as now present, and the unseen world as if it were continually open to your sight; and such a Love as makes you long to see the glorious Face of God, and the Glory of your dear Redeemer, and to be taken up with blessed Spirits in his perfect, endless Love and Praise.

MY Treatise of The Life of Faith, and the fourth Part of The Saints Rest, being written wholly or mostly to this use, I must refer the Reader to them, and say no more of it in this Direction.

DIRECT. XVII.

Grand I pass not this by as a small matter to be passed by also by the Reader. For I take the Love of God kindled by Faith in Christ, with the full Denyal of our carnal selves, to be the sum of all Religion. But because I would not injure so great a Duty by saying but a little of it; And therefore desire the Reader, who studieth for Practice, and needeth such helps, to peruse the mentioned Books of Self-denyal, and Crucifying the World.

As the Soul must be carried up to God, and devoted to him, according to all the foregoing Directions, so must it be delivered from carnal selfishness, or flesh-pleasing, which is the grand enemy to God and Godliness in the world; and from the three great Branches of this Idolatry, viz. the Love of sensual Pleasures, the Love of worldly Wealth, and the proud Desire and Love of worldly Honour and esteem: And the mortifying of these must be much of the Labour of your Lives.

OF this also I have written so much in a Treatise of Self denial, and in another called The Crucifying of the World by the Cross of Christ, that I shall now pass by all, save what will be more seasonable anon under the more Particular Directions, in the fourth Tome, when I come to speak of Selfishness, as opposed to the Love of others.

I Have now given you the General Grand Directions, containing the very Being and Life of Godliness and Christianity; with those particular subdirections which are needful to the Performance of them: And I must tell you, that as your Life, and Strength, and Comfort principally depend on these, so doth your success in resisting all your particular sins: And therefore if you first obey not these General Directions, the more particular ones that follow, will be almost useless to you, even as Branches cut off from the Stock of the Tree, which are deprived thereby of their support and life. But upon supposition that first you will maintain these Vital parts of your Religion, I shall proceed to Direct you first in some particulars most nearly subordinate to the forementioned Duties, and then to the remoter Branches.

APPENDIX.

The True Doctrine of LOVE to GOD, to HOLINESS, to OUR SELVES, and to OTHERS, opened in certain Propositions; Especially for resolving the Questions, what Self love is Lawful? What Sinful? Whether God must be loved above our own Felicity? And how? Whether to Love our Felicity more than God, may stand with a state of Saving Grace? Whether it be a middle state between Sensuality and the Divine Nature, to Love God more for our selves than for Himself? Whether to Love God for our selves be the state of a Believer as he is under the Promise of the New Covenant? And whether the Spirit and Sanctification promised to Believers, be the Love of God for himself, and so the Divine Nature, promised to him that chooseth Christ and God by him out of Self love for his own Felicity? How God supposeth and worketh on the Principle of Self-love in Mans Conversion? With many such like. To avoid the tediousness of a distinct debating each Question.

THough these things principally belong to the Theory, and so to another Treatise in hand, called Methodus Theologiæ; yet because they are also Practical, and have a great influence upon the more Practical Directions, and the right understanding of them may help the Reader himself to determin a multitude of Cases of Conscience, the particular discussion and decision of which would too much increase this Volume, which is so big already, I shall here explain them in such brief Propositions as yet shall give light to one another, and I hope contain much of the true nature of Love, which is the mystery of the Christian Religion.

Propos. 1. The formal Act of LOVE is COMPLACENCY, expressed by a Placet; which Augustine so oft calleth Delectation.

2. Benevolence, or desiring the Good of those we Love, is but a secondary act of Love, or an effect of the prime formal Act. For to wish one well is not to Love him, formerly; but we wish him well becauſe we Love him; and therefore firſt in order Love him.

3. Their Definition of Love is therefore inept, and but from an Effect, who ſay it is, Alicui bene velle, ut ipſi bene ſit.

4. Love is either meerly Senſitive and Paſſionate, which is the ſenſible Act and Paſſion of the ſenſitive and phantaſtical Appetite; Or it is Rational, which is the Act of the Rational appetite or will. The firſt is called ſenſitive in a double reſpect, 1. Becauſe it followeth the Apprehenſion of the Senſes, or Phantaſie, Loving that which they apprehend as Good; 2. And becauſe it is exerciſed paſſionately and feelingly by the ſenſitive Appetite. And the other is called Rational, 1. Becauſe it is the Love of that which Reaſon apprehendeth as Good; and 2. Becauſe it is the complacency of that will which is a higher Faculty than the ſenſitive Appetite.

5. Senſitive Love is oft without Rational (always in Bruits) But Rational Love is never totally without ſenſitive, at leaſt in this life; whether it be becauſe that the ſenſitive and Rational are Faculties of the ſame ſoul, or becauſe they are ſo nearly connexed, as that one cannot here move or act without the other?

6. But yet one is predominant in ſome Perſons, and the other in others.

7. Love is the Complacency of the Appetite in apprehended Good. Good is the Formal Object of Love. Senſitive Love is the Complacency of the ſenſitive Appetite in ſenſible Good, (or in that which the Senſe and Imagination apprehendeth as Good). Rational Love is the Complacency of the Rational Appetite in that which Reaſon apprehendeth Good: The ſame thing with Primary Volition.

8. Good is not only a mans own Felicity and the means thereto, called mihi Bonum, Good to me; either as profitable, pleaſant, or honourable (as ſome think they have unmanned themſelves): But there is extrinſick Good which is ſuch in it ſelf, in others, or for others, which yet is the natural Object of mans Love, (ſo far as nature is ſound). As the Learning, and Wiſdom, and Juſtice, and Charity, and all other Perfections of a Man at the Antipodes whom I never ſaw, nor hope to ſee, or to receive any Benefit by, is yet amiable to every Man that hath not unmanned himſelf. So alſo is the Good of Poſterity, of Countries, of Kingdoms, of the Church, of the World, apprehended as future when we are dead and gone; yea, if we ſhould be annihilated, deſirable, and therefore amiable to us: When yet it could be no benefit to us.

9. SELF-LOVE is Senſitive or Rational: Senſitive as ſuch is neceſſary and not free; And it is purpoſely by the moſt Wiſe and Bleſſed Creator planted in Man and Brutes, as a Principle uſeful to preſerve the world, and to engage the Creature in the uſe of the means of its own preſervation, and ſo to bring it to perfection, and to endue it with thoſe Fears and Hopes which make us Subjects capable of Moral Government:

10. The Rational or Higher Appetite alſo hath a Natural Inclination to Self-preſervation, perfection and Felicity; But as ordinable and ordinate to higher ends.

11. The Rational Powers cannot nullifie the ſenſitive, nor directly or totally hinder the Action of them; But they may and muſt indirectly hinder the Act (by avoiding the objects and temptations, by diverting the thoughts to higher things, &c.) And may hinder the effects by Governing the Locomotive power.

12. Senſitive Self-love containeth in it, 1. A Love of Life, and that is, of Individual ſelf-exiſtence; 2. And a Love of all ſenſitive Pleaſures of Life, and 3. Conſequently a Love of the Means of Life and Pleaſure.

13. In Senſitive ſelf-love therefore SELF, that is, Life, is both the Material and Formal object: We love our ſelves even becauſe we are our ſelves: We love this individual perſon, and loath annihilation or diſſolution.

14. Though the Will (or higher Faculties) are Naturally inclined alſo to Love our ſelves, and our own Felicity; yet they exerciſe this Inclination with a certain Liberty: And though the Act of ſimple Complacency or Volition towards our own Being and Felicity be ſo Free as yet to be Neceſſary; yet the Comparate Act (by which comparing ſeveral Goods, we chooſe one and refuſe another) may be ſo Free as not to be neceſſary; that is, A Man may will his own Annihilation rather than ſome greater evil (of which anon); Not as good in it ſelf, and therefore not willed for it ſelf, but as a Means to a greater good; and ſo he may Leſs Nill it than a greater evil.

15. Alſo a tolerable Pain may on the ſame account be willed, or leſs nilled, and ſo conſented to for the avoiding of a greater evil; but Intolerable pain cannot poſſibly be willed, or conſented to, or not nilled, becauſe it taketh away the Exerciſe of Reaſon and Free-will: But what is to be called Intolerable, I determin not, it being variouſly meaſurable according to the patients ſtrength.

16. The Soul as Intellectual by its Rational appetite hath alſo a Natural Inclination to Intellectual Operations (to Know and Love) and to Intellectual Objects as ſuch, and to Intellectual perfections in it ſelf. Yet ſo that though it neceſſarily (though freely) Loveth the ſaid Acts and Perfections while it hath a being; yet doth it not neceſſarily Love all the ſaid Objects, nor neceſſarily Chooſe the continuance of its own Being, but in ſome caſes, as aforeſaid, can yield or conſent to an Annihilation as a leſſer evil.

17. The Rational Soul being not of it ſelf, nor for it ſelf alone, or chiefly, is naturally inclined not only to Love to it ſelf, and that which is for it ſelf, but alſo to Love extrinſick good (as was aforeſaid); And accordingly it ſhould Love that Beſt which is Beſt: For à quatenus & ad omne & ad gradum, valet argumentum. If we muſt Love any thing or perſon becauſe it is good (as the formal reaſon) then we ſhould Love all that is Good, and Love that beſt which is beſt, if ſo diſcerned.

18. Tho' I muſt Love greater ſimple extrinſick Good above my ſelf with that Love which is purely Rational, yet it cannot ordinarily be done with a more ſenſitive and paſſionate Love.

19. I am not always bound to do moſt good to him that I love better than others, and ought ſo to love, nor to him that I muſt wiſh moſt good to. Becauſe there are other particular laws to regulate my Actions, divers from that which commandeth my affections: As thoſe that put children, relations, families, neighbours, under our eſpecial charge and care; though often others muſt be more loved.

20. That Good which is the object of Love, is not a meer Univerſal or General notion, but is always ſome particular or ſingle being in eſſe reali, vel in eſſe cognito. As there is no ſuch thing in rerum natura, as Good in a meer General, which is neither the Good of natural exiſtence, or of moral perfection, or of Pleaſure, Profit, Honour, &c. Yet, which is not in this or in that ſingular ſubject, or ſo conceived; ſo there is no ſuch thing as love, which hath not ſome ſuch ſingular object. (As Rada and other Scotiſts have made plain).

21. All Good is either GOD or a CREATURE, or a Creatures Act or Work.

22. GOD

22. GOD is GOOD Infinitely, Eternally, Primitively, Independently, Immutably, Communicatively, of whom, and by whom, and to whom are all things: The Beginning or firſt efficient, the Dirigent and ultimately ultimate cauſe of all created Good: As Making and Directing all things for Himſelf.

23. Therefore it is the duty of the Intellectual Creature, to Love God Totally, without any exceptions or reſtrictions, with all the Power, Mind and Will, not only in degree above our ſelves and all the world; But alſo as GOD, with a Love in kind tranſcending the Love of every Creature.

24. All the Goodneſs of the Creature doth formally conſiſt in its threefold Relation to GOD, viz. 1. In the Impreſſes of God as its firſt Efficient or Creator; as it is his Image or the effect and demonſtration of his perfections, viz. his Infinite Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs. 2. In its Conformity to his Directions, or Governing Laws, and ſo in its Order and Obedience. 3. And in its Aptitude and Tendency to God as its final cauſe even to the demonſtration of his Glory, and the Complacency of his Will.

25. All Created Good is therefore Derivative, Dependent, Contingent, Finite, Secondary, From God, By God, and To God, receiving its Form and Meaſure from its reſpect to Him.

26. Yet as it may be ſubordinately From man, as the Principle of his own Actions, and By man as a ſubordinate Ruler of himſelf or others, and To man as a ſubordinate End; ſo there is accordingly a ſubordinate ſort of Goodneſs, which is ſo denominated from theſe reſpects unto the Creature, that is himſelf Good ſubordinately.

27. But all this ſubordinate Goodneſs (Bonum à nobis, Bonum per nos, Bonum nobis) is but Analogically ſo; and dependently on the former ſort of Goodneſs, and is ſomething in due ſubordination to it, and againſt it, nothing, that is, not properly Good.

28. The beſt and excelleneſt Creatures, in the foreſaid Goodneſs related to God, are moſt to be loved; and all according to the Degree of their Goodneſs more than as Good in relation to our ſelves.

29. But ſeeing their Goodneſs is formally their Relation unto God, it followeth that they are Loved primarily only for his ſake, and conſequently Gods Image or Glory in them is firſt Loved; and ſo the true Love of any Creature is but a ſecondary ſort of the Love of God.

30. The beſt Being next to God is the univerſe, or whole Creation, and therefore next him moſt to be loved by us.

31. The next in Amiableneſs is the whole celeſtial ſociety, Chriſt, Angels and Saints.

32. The next, when we come to diſtinguiſh them, is Chriſts own Created Glorified Nature in the Perſon of the Mediator. Becauſe Gods Glory, or Image is moſt upon him.

33. The next in Amiableneſs is the whole Angelical ſociety, or the orders of Intellectual Spirits above man.

34. The next is the ſpirits of the Juſt made perfect, or the Triumphant Church of Saints in Heaven.

35. The next is all this lower world.

36. The next is the Church in the world, or militant on earth.

37. The next are the particular Kingdoms and Societies of the world (and ſo the Churches) according to their various degrees.

38. The next under ſocieties and multitudes, are thoſe individual perſons who are Beſt in the three fore-mentioned reſpects: Whether our ſelves or others. And thus by the objects, ſhould our Love that is Rational, be diverſified in Degree, and that be Loved beſt that is beſt.

39. The Amiable Image of God in man is (as hath oft been ſaid:) 1. Our Natural Image of God, or the Image of his three Eſſential properties as ſuch, that is, Our Vital Active Power, our Intellect, and our will. 2. Our Moral Image, or the Image of his ſaid properties in their perfections. viz. Our Holineſs, that is, Our Holy Life or ſpiritual vivacity and Active Power, Our Holy Light, or Wiſdom, our Holy Wills or Love. 3. Our Relative Image of God, or the Image of his Supereminency, Dominion or Majeſty; which is, 1. Common to Man, in reſpect to the Inferiour Creatures, that we are their Owners, Governors and End (and Benefactors) 2. Eminently in Rulers of Men, Parents and Princes, who are Analogically ſub owners, ſub rulers, and ſub-benefactors to their inferiors, in various degrees. By which it is diſcernable what it is that we are to Love in man, and with what variety of kinds and degrees of Love, as the kinds and degrees of amiableneſs in the objects differ.

40. Even the Sun and Moon and frame of Nature, the Inanimates and Bruits, muſt be Loved in that Degree Compared to Man and to one another, as their Goodneſs before deſcribed, that is, the Impreſſions of the Divine perfections do more or leſs Glorioufly, appear in them; and as they are adapted to him the ultimate end.

41. As God is in this life ſeen but darkly and as in a Glaſs, ſo alſo proportionably to be Loved: For our Love cannot exceed our Knowledge.

42. Yet it followeth not that we muſt Love him only as he appeareth in his works, (which demonſtrate him as effects do their cauſe;) For both by the ſaid works improved by Reaſon, and by his word, we know that he is before his works, and above them, and ſo diſtinct from them as to tranſcend, and comprehend, and cauſe them all, by a continual cauſality: And therefore he muſt accordingly be Loved.

43. It greatly hindereth our Love to God, when we overlook all the intermediate excellencies between Him and us, which are much better, and therefore more amiable than our ſelves: ſuch as are before recited.

44. The Love of the univerſe as bearing the livelieſt Image or impreſs of their Cauſe, is an eminent ſecondary Love of God, and a great help to our Primary or Immediate Love of him. Could we comprehend the Glorious excellency of the univerſal Creation, in its matter, form, parts, order and uſes, we ſhould ſee ſo Glorious an Image of God, as would unſpeakably promote the work of Love.

45. Whether the GLORY of God in HEAVEN which will for ever beautifie the beholders and poſſeſſors, be the Divine Eſſence (which is every where) or a Created Glory purpoſely there placed for the felicity of holy ſpirits, and what that Glory is, are queſtions fitteſt for the beholders and poſſeſſors to reſolve.

46. But if it be no more than the Univerſal exiſtent frame of Nature, Containing all the Creatures of God, beheld uno intuitu in the Nature, order and uſe of all the parts, it would be an unconceivable felicity to the beholders, as being an unconceivable Glorious Demonſtration of the Deity.

47. It is lawful and a needful duty, to labour by the means of ſuch excellencies as we know, which Heaven is reſembled to in Scripture, to imprint upon our Imaginations themſelves, ſuch an Image of the GLORY of the Heavenly Society, CHRIST, ANGELS, SAINTS, and the HEAVENLY PLACE and STATE, as ſhall help our Intellectual apprehenſions of the Spiritual Excellencies which tranſcend imagination. And the neglect of Loving God as foreſeen in the Demonſtration of the Heavenly GLORY, doth greatly hinder our Love to him immediately as in himſelf conſidered.

48. The LORD JESUS CHRIST in his Glorified Created Nature, is Crowned with the higheſt excellency of any particular Creature; that he might be the MEDIATOR OF OUR LOVE to God; and in him (ſeen by faith) we might ſee the GLORY of the Deity. And as in Heaven we ſhall have (ſpiritual Glorified) Bodies, as well as Souls, ſo the Glorified Created Nature of Chriſt will be an Objective Glory fit for our Bodies (at leaſt) to behold in order to their Glory, as the Divine Nature (as it pleaſeth God in Glory) revealed, will be to the ſoul.

49. The exerciſe of our Love upon God as now appearing to the glorified, in the glorious created nature of CHRIST, (beheld by us by faith) is a great part of our preſent exerciſe of Divine Love: And we extinguiſh our Love to GOD, by beholding ſo little by faith, our glorified Mediator.

50. We owe greater Love to ANGELS than to Men, becauſe they are Better, nearer God and liker to him, and more demonſtrate his Glory: and indeed alſo Love us better, and do more for us, than we can do for one another. And the neglect of our due Love and Gratitude to Angels, and forgetting our relation to them, and receivings by them, and communion with them, and living as if we had little to do with them, is a culpable overlooking God, as he appeareth in his moſt noble creatures, and is a neglect of our Love to God in them, and a great hinderance to our higher more immediate Love. Therefore by Faith and Love we ſhould exerciſe a daily converſe with Angels, as part of our heavenly converſation, Phil. 3. 20, 21. Heb. 12. 22. and uſe our ſelves to Love God in them: Though not to pray to them, or give them Divine Worſhip.

51. We muſt Love the glorified Saints more than the Inhabitants of this lower world, becauſe they are far better, and liker to God, and nearer to him, and more demonſtrate his holineſs and glory: And our neglect of converſing with them by faith, and of Loving them above our ſelves, and things on earth, is a neglect of our Love to God in them; and a hinderance of our more immediate Love: And a Loving Converſation with them by faith, would greatly help our higher Love to God.

52. Our neglect of Love to the Church on earth, and to the Kingdoms and publick Societies of mankind, is a ſinful neglect of our Love to God in them, and a hinderance of our higher Love to him: And the true uſe of ſuch a Publick Love, would greatly further our higher Love.

53. If thoſe Heathens who laid down their lives for their Countrys, had neither done this for fame, nor meerly as eſteeming the temporal good of their Country, above their own temporal good and lives, but for the true excellency of Many above One, and for Gods greater Intereſt in them, they had done a moſt noble holy work.

54. Our adherence to our carnal ſelves firſt, and then to our carnal intereſts, and friends, and neglecting the Love of the higheſt excellencies in the ſervants of God, and not Loving men according to the meaſure of the Image of God on them, and their Relation to him, is a great neglect of our Love of God in them, and a hinderance of our higher immediate Love. And to uſe our ſelves to Love men as God appeareth in them, would much promote our higher Love. And ſo we ſhould Love the beſt of men, above our ſelves.

55. The Loving of our ſelves ſenſually, preferring our preſent Life and earthly Pleaſure, before our higher ſpiritual felicity in Heaven, and our neglecting to Love Holineſs, and ſeek it for our ſelves and then to Love God in our ſelves, is a neglect and hinderance of the Love of God.

56. Man hath not loſt ſo much of the knowledge and Love of God, as appearing in his Greatneſs, and Wiſdom, and Natural Goodneſs in the frame of Nature, as he is the Author of the creatures natural goodneſs, as he hath of the Knowledge and Love of his Holineſs, as he is the Holy Ruler, Sanctifier and End of ſouls.

57. The ſenſitive faculty and ſenſitive Intereſt, are ſtill predominant in a carnal or ſenſual man: And his Reaſon is voluntarily enſlaved to his ſenſe: ſo that even the Intellectual Appetite contrary to its primitive and ſound nature, Loveth chiefly the ſenſitive Life and Pleaſure.

58. It is therefore exceeding hard in this depraved ſtate of nature, to Love God or any thing better than our ſelves: becauſe we Love more by Senſe than by Reaſon; and Reaſon is weak and ſerveth the intereſt of Senſe.

59. Yet the ſame man who is prevalently ſenſual, may know that he hath a rational immortal ſoul, and that Knowledge and Rectitude are the Felicity of his ſoul; and that it is the Knowledge and Love of, and Delight in God, the higheſt Good, that can make him perpetually happy: And therefore as theſe are apprehended as a means of his own Felicity, he may have ſome kind of Love or Will unto them all.

60. The thing therefore that every carnal man would have, is an everlaſting perfect ſenſual pleaſure; And he apprehendeth the ſtate of his ſouls perfection moſtly as conſiſting in this kind of felicity: And even the Knowledge and Love of God which he taketh for part of his felicity, is principally apprehended but as a ſpeculative gratifying of the imagination, as carnal men now deſire knowledge. Or if there be a righter notion of God and Holineſs to be Loved for themſelves, even ultimately above our ſenſual pleaſure and our ſelves, yet this is but an uneffectual dreaming Knowledge, producing but an anſwerable lazy wiſh: And it will not here prevail againſt the ſtronger Love of ſenſuality and phantaſtical pleaſure, nor againſt inordinate ſelf-love. And it is a ſenſual Heaven, under a ſpiritual Name, which the carnal hope for.

61. This carnal man may Love God as a means to this Felicity ſo dreamed of, as knowing that without him it cannot be had, and taſting corporal comforts from him here: And he may Love Holineſs as it removeth his contrary calamities, and as he thinks it is crowned with ſuch a reward. But he had rather have that reward of it ſelf without Holineſs.

62. He may alſo Love and deſire Chriſt, as a means (conceived) to ſuch an end: And he may uſe much Religious duty to that end: And he may forbear ſuch ſins as that End can ſpare, leſt they deprive him of his hoped-for felicity. Yea, he may ſuffer much to prevent an endleſs ſuffering.

63. As Nature neceſſarily Loveth ſelf and ſelf-felicity, God and the Devil do both make great uſe of this natural pondus or neceſſitating Principle, for their ſeveral ends: The Devil ſaith, Thou Loveſt Pleaſure, therefore take it, and make proviſion for it. God ſaith, Thou loveſt felicity and feareſt miſery: I and my Love are the true felicity, and adhering to ſenſual pleaſure, depriveth thee of better, and is the beginning of thy miſery, and will bring thee unto worſe.

64. God commandeth man nothing that is not for his own good, and forbiddeth him nothing which is not (directly or indirectly) to his hurt: And therefore engageth ſelf-love on his ſide, for every act of our obedience.

65. Yet

65. Yet this good of our own is not the higheſt, nor all the good which God intendeth, and we muſt intend, but it is ſubordinate unto the greater good fore-mentioned.

66. As a carnal man may have opinionative uneffectual convictions, that God and his Love are his ſpiritual felicity (better than ſenſual) yea, and that God is his ultimate End above his own felicity it ſelf: ſo the ſanctifying of man conſiſteth in bringing up theſe convictions to be truly effectual and practical, to renew and rule the Mind, and Will, and Life.

67. Whether this be done by firſt knowing God as the Beginning and End, above our ſelves, and then knowing (effectually) that he is mans felicity, or whether ſelf Love be firſt excited to Love him as our own felicity, and next we be carryed up to Love him for himſelf as our higheſt End, it cometh all to one when the work is done; And we cannot prove that God tyeth himſelf conſtantly to either of theſe methods alone. But experience telleth us, that the latter is the uſual way; and that as Nature, ſo Grace beginneth with the ſmalleſt ſeed, and groweth upward towards perfection: And that ſelf-love and deſire of endleſs felicity and fear of endleſs miſery, are the firſt notable effects or changes on a repenting ſoul.

68. And indeed the ſtate of ſin lyeth both in mans fall from GOD to SELF, and in the miſtake of his own felicity, preferring even for Himſelf a ſenſible good, before a ſpiritual, and the Creature before the Creatour; And therefore he muſt be rectified in both.

69. And the hypocrites uneffectual Love to God and Holineſs is much diſcovered in this, that (as he loveth dead Saints, and their Images and Holy-days, becauſe they trouble him not) ſo he beſt loveth (opinionatively) and leaſt hateth (practically) the Saints in Heaven, and the Holineſs that is far from him, and God as he conceiveth of him as one that is in Heaven to glorifie men; but he hateth (practically, though not profeſſedly) the God that would make him holy, and deprive him of all his ſinful pleaſures, or condemn him for them: And he can better like Holineſs in his Paſtor, neighbour or child, than in Himſelf.

70. Therefore ſincerity much conſiſteth in the Love of ſelf-holineſs; but not as for ſelf alone; but as carrying ſelf and all to God.

71. As the Sun-beams do without any interception reach the eye, and by them without interception our ſight aſcendeth and extendeth to the Sun; ſo Gods communicated Goodneſs and Glorious Revelation extend through, and by all inferiour mediums to our underſtandings, and our wills; And our Knowledge and Love aſcendeth and extended through all, and by all again to God. And as it were unnatural for the eye illuminated by the Sun, to ſee it ſelf only, or to ſee the mediate creatures, and not to ſee the light and Sun by which it ſeeth (nay, it doth leaſt ſee it ſelf) ſo it is unnatural for the ſoul to underſtand and Love it ſelf alone (which it little underſtandeth and ſhould Love with ſelf-denyal) and the Creatures only, and not to Love God by whom we know and Love the creature.

72. It is poſſible to Love God and holineſs and Heaven, as a conceited ſtate and means of our ſenſual felicity, and eſcape of pain and miſery: But to Love God as the true felicity of the Intellectual nature, and as our ſpiritual Reſt, and yet to Love him only or chiefly for our ſelves, and not rather for Himſelf as our higheſt end, implyeth a contradiction. The ſame I ſay of Holineſs, as Loved only for our ſelves. The evidence whereof is plain, in that it is Eſſential to God, to be not only better than our ſelves and every creature, but alſo to be the Ultimate End of all things, to which they ſhould tend in all their perfections. And it is Eſſential to Holineſs to be the ſouls devotion of it ſelf to God as God, and not only to God as our felicity. Therefore to Love God only or chiefly for our ſelves, is to make him only a means to our felicity, and not our chief End; and it is to make our ſelves Better, and ſo more Amiable than God, that is, to be Gods our ſelves.

73. This is much of the ſenſe of the Controverſie between the Epicureans and the ſober Philoſophers (as is to be ſeen in Cicero, &c.) The ſober Philoſophers ſaid, that Virtue was to be loved for it ſelf, more than for Pleaſure: Becauſe if Pleaſure as ſuch, be better than virtue as ſuch, then all ſenſual Pleaſure would be better than virtue as ſuch. The Epicureans ſaid, that not all pleaſure but the pleaſure of Virtue, was the chief good (as Torquatus his words in Cicero ſhew.) And if it had been firſt proved, that a mans ſelf is his juſt ultimate end, as the finis cui, or the perſonal end, then it would be a hard queſtion whether the Epicureans were not in the right as to the finis cujus, or the Real end (which indeed is but a medium to the perſonal, cui.) But when it is moſt certain that no mans perſon is to be his own ultimate end, as cui, but God, and then the Univerſe, and ſocieties of the world as beforeſaid, it is then eaſie to prove that the ſober Philoſophers were in the right, and that no mans Pleaſure is his ultimate end, finis cujus: Becauſe no mans Pleaſure is either ſuch a demonſtration of the Divine perfection as Virtue is as ſuch; nor yet doth it ſo much conduce to the common good of ſocieties or mankind, and ſo to the pleaſing and glorifying of God. And this way Cicero might eaſily have made good his cauſe againſt the Epicureans.

74. Though no man indeed Love God as God, who Loveth him not as Better than himſelf, and therefore Loveth him not better, and as his abſolutely ultimate end, and though no man deſire Holineſs indeed, who deſireth not to be devoted abſolutely to God, before and above himſelf, yet is it very common to have a falſe imperfect notion of God and Holineſs, as being the felicity of man, and though not to deny, yet to leave out the eſſential ſuperlative notion of the Deity; and it is more common to confeſs all this of God and Holineſs notionally (as was aforeſaid) and practically to take in no more of God and Holineſs, but that they are better for us than temporary pleaſures, and ſome go further, and take them as better for them, than any (though perpetual) meer ſenſual delights: and ſo make the perfection of mans higheſt faculties (practically) to be their ultimate end; And deſire or Love God and Holineſs (defectively and falſly apprehended) for themſelves, or their own felicity, and not Themſelves and their felicity and Holineſs, ultimately for God. Which ſheweth that though theſe men have ſomewhat overcome the ſenſual concupiſcence or fleſh, yet have they not ſufficiently overcome the SELFISH diſpoſition, nor yet known and Loved God as God, nor Good as Good.

75. Yet is it not a ſin to Love God for our ſelves and our own felicity, ſo be it we make him not a meer Means to that felicity as our abſolutely ultimate End. For as God indeed is, 1. The efficient of all our good: 2. The Dirigent Cauſe that leadeth us to it: 3. The end in which our felicity truly conſiſteth, ſo is he to be Loved on all theſe accounts.

76. If God were not thus to be Loved for our ſelves (ſubordinated to him) Thankfulneſs would not be a Chriſtian duty.

77. Our Love to God is a Love of Friendſhip, and a deſire of a kind of Union, Communion, or Adherence. But not ſuch as is between creatures where there there is ſome ſort of equality: But as between them that are totally unequal; the one infinitely below the other, and abſolutely ſubject and ſubordinate to him.

78. Therefore though in Love of Friendſhip, a Union of both parties, and conſequently a conjunct intereſt of both (and not one alone) do make up the ultimate End of Love; yet here it ſhould be with an utter diſproportion, we being obliged to know God as Infinitely Better than our ſelves, and therefore to Love him incomparably more (though yet it will be but according to the proportion of the faculties of the Lover)

79. The pureſt proceſs of Love therefore, is firſt thankfully to perceive the Divine Efficiencies, and to Love God as communicative of what we and all things are, and have, and ſhall receive, and therein to ſee his perfect Goodneſs in Himſelf, and to Love him as God for that Goodneſs, wherein is nothing but the final Act which is our Love, and the Final Object which is the Infinite Good: ſo that the Act is mans (from God) but nothing is to be joyned with God as the abſolutely final Object; For that were to joyn ſomewhat with God as God.

80. And though it be moſt true, that this Act may be made the object of another Act, and (as Ameſius ſaith, Omnium gentium conſenſu dicimus Volo Velle, ſo) we may and muſt ſay Amo Amare, I Love to Love God, and the very exerciſe of my own Love is my Delight, and ſo is my Felicity in the very Eſſential Nature of it (being a complacency, and being on the higheſt objective Good:) And alſo this ſame Love is my Holineſs, and ſo It and I are Pleaſing unto God, yet theſe are all conſequential to the true notion of the final Act, and circularly lead to the ſame again: We muſt Love our Felicity and Holineſs which conſiſteth in our Love to God, but as that which ſubordinately relateth to God, in which he is firſt glorified, and then finally pleaſed; and ſo from his Will which we delight to pleaſe, we aſcend to his total perfect Being, to which we adhere by perfect Love. In a word, our Ultimate End of Acquiſition (and Gods own, ſo far as he may be ſaid to have an End) is the pleaſing of the Divine Will, in his Glorification: And our ultimate End of Complacency objectively, is the Infinite Goodneſs of the Divine Will and Nature.

81. There is therefore place for the Queſtion, Whether I muſt Love God or my ſelf more or better? (as it is reſolved.) But there is no place for the Queſtion, Whether I muſt Love God or my ſelf? Becauſe God alloweth me not ever to ſeparate them: (Though there is a degree of juſt ſelf-loathing or ſelf-hatred in deep Repentance.) Nor yet for the Queſtion, Whether I muſt ſeek Gods glory and pleaſure, or my own felicity? for I muſt ever ſeek them both, though not with the ſame eſteem. Yea, I may be ſaid to ſeek them both with the ſame Diligence, becauſe by the ſame Endeavour and act that I ſeek one, I ſeek the other, and I cannot poſſibly do any thing for one that doth not equally promote the other, if I do them rightly, preferring God before my ſelf in my inward Eſtimation, Love and Intention.

82. Though it be eſſential to Divine Love, and conſequently to true Holineſs, to Love God for Himſelf, and as Better than our ſelves; (or elſe we Love him not as God, as is before ſaid) yet this is hardly and ſeldom perceived in the beginning in him that hath it: Becauſe the Love of our ſelf is more Paſſionate, and raiſeth in us more ſubordinate paſſions, of fear of puniſhment, and deſires of felicity, and ſorrow for hurt and miſery, &c. Whereas God being Immaterial and Inviſible, is not at all an object of our ſenſe, but only of our Reaſon and our Will, and therefore not directly of ſenſitive Paſſionate Love; Though conſequently while the ſoul is united to the body, its acting even on Immoteriai objects, moveth the lower ſenſitive faculties, and the corporeal ſpirits. Alſo God needeth nothing for us to deſire for him, nor ſuffereth nothing for us to grieve for, though we muſt grieve for injuring him, and being diſpleaſing to his Will.

83. I cannot ſay nor believe (though till it be ſearched the opinion hath an enticing aſpect) that the Goſpel faith which hath the promiſe of Juſtification, and of the Spirit, is only a Believing in Chriſt as the Means of our felicity by Redemption and Salvation, out of the principle of ſelf love alone, and for no higher end then our ſaid Felicity: Becauſe he is not believed in as Chriſt, if he be not taken as a Reconciler to bring us home to God. And we take him not to bring us to God as God, if it be not to bring us to God as the Beginning and End of all things, and as infinitely more Lovely than our ſelves. And our Repentance for not Loving God accordingly above our ſelves, muſt go along with our firſt juſtifying faith. Therefore though we are Learners before we are Lovers, and our Aſſent goeth before the Wills Conſent, yet our Aſſent that God is God, and better than our ſelves, muſt go together with our Aſſent that Chriſt is the Mediator to ſave us, by bringing us to him: And ſo muſt our Aſſent that this is ſalvation, even to Love God above our ſelves, and as better than our ſelves: And accordingly our Conſent to theſe particulars muſt concur in ſaving faith.

84. He therefore that out of ſelf-love, accepteth Chriſt as the Means of his own felicity, doth (if he know practically what felicity is) accept him as a means to bring him to Love God perfectly as God above himſelf, and to be perfectly Pleaſing to his Will.

85. Yet it is apparent that almoſt all Gods preparing Grace conſiſteth in exciting and improving the Natural Principle of ſelf-love in man; and manifeſting to him, that if he will do as one that Loveth himſelf, he muſt be a Chriſtian and muſt forſake ſin, and the inordinate Love of his ſenſuality, and muſt be Holy, and Love God for his own Eſſential, as well as Communicated Goodneſs. And if he do otherwiſe, he will do as one that hateth himſelf, and ſeeketh in the event his own damnation. And could we but get men rationally to improve true ſelf-love, they would be Chriſtians, and ſo be Holy.

86. But becauſe this is a great, though tender point, and it that I have more generally touched in the Caſe, Whether Faith in Chriſt, or Love to God as our End go firſt; and becauſe indeed it is it for which I principally premiſe the reſt of theſe Propoſitions, I ſhall preſume to venture a little further, and more diſtinctly to tell you, how much of Love to God is in our firſt Juſtifying Faith, and how much not? and how far the ſtate of ſuch a Believer is a middle ſtate between meer Preparation, or common Grace, and proper Sanctification or poſſeſſion of the Holy Ghoſt? And ſo how far Vocation giving us the firſt faith, and Repentance differeth from Sanctification: And the rather becauſe my unriper thoughts and Writings defended Mr Pemble, who made them one, in oppoſition to the ſtream of our Divines. And I conceive that all theſe following Acts about the point in queſtion, are found in every true Believer, at his firſt faith, though not diſtinctly noted by himſelf.

1. The ſinner hath an Intellectual notice, that there is a God (for an Atheiſt is not a believer) and ſo that this God is the Firſt and Laſt, the beſt of beings, the Maker, Owner, Ruler and Benefactor of the world, the juſt End of all created being and actions, and to be Loved and Pleaſed above our

our ſelves: (For all this is but to believe that there is a God.)

2. He is convinced that his own chief Felicity lyeth, not in temporary or carnal pleaſure, but in the Perfect Knowing, Loving and Pleaſing this God above himſelf: (For if he know not what true Salvation and Felicity is, he cannot deſire or accept it.)

3. He knoweth that hitherto he hath been without this Love, and this Felicity.

4. He deſireth to be Happy, and to eſcape everlaſting miſery.

5. He repenteth, that is, is ſorry that he hath not all this while loved God as God, and ſought felicity therein.

6. He is willing and deſirous for the time to come, to Love God as God above himſelf, and to Pleaſe him before himſelf; that is, to have a heart diſpoſed to do it.

7. He findeth that he cannot do it of himſelf, nor with his old carnal indiſpoſed heart.

8. He believeth that Chriſt by his Doctrine and Spirit, is the appointed Saviour to bring him to it.

9. He gladly conſenteth that Chriſt ſhall be ſuch a Saviour to him, and ſhall not only juſtifie him from guilt, and ſave him from ſenſible Puniſhment, but alſo thus bring him to the Perfect Love of God.

10. He had rather Chriſt would bring him to this by ſanctification, than to enjoy all the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon, yea, or to have a perpetual ſenſitive felicity, without this perfect Love to God, and Pleaſing of him.

11. God being declared to him in Jeſus Chriſt, a God of Love, forgiving ſin, and conditionally giving pardon and life to his very Enemies, as he is hence the eaſilier Loved with Thankfulneſs for our ſelves, ſo the Goodneſs of his Nature in himſelf is hereby inſinuated and notified with ſome ſecret complacency to the Soul. He is ſure Good that is ſo merciful and ready to do Good, and that ſo wonderfully as in Chriſt is manifeſted.

12. So that as Baptiſm (which is but explicite Juſtifying faith, or the expreſſion of it in covenanting with God) is our Dedication by Vow to all the Three Perſons; to God the Father, as well as to the Son and Holy Ghoſt; ſo faith it ſelf is ſuch a heart-dedication.

13 Herein I dedicate my ſelf to God as God, to be Glorified and Pleaſed in my Juſtification, Sanctification and Glorification, that is, in my Reception of the Fruits of his Love, and in my Loving him above all as God: or to be pleaſed in me, and I in him for ever.

14. In all this the Underſtanding acknowledgeth God to be God (by Aſſent) and to be loved above my ſelf, and the Will deſireth ſo to Love him: But the object of the Will here directly, is its own future Diſpoſition and Act: It doth not ſay, I do already Love God, as God above my ſelf; but only I would ſo love him, and I would be ſo changed as may diſpoſe me ſo to love him; I acknowledge that I ſhould ſo love him, and that I do Love him for his mercies to my ſelf and others. Nor can it be ſaid, that Volo Velle or Volo amare, a deſire to Love God as ſuch, is direct Love to God. Becauſe it is not all one to have God to be the object of my Will, and to have my own Act of Willing or Loving to be the object of it. And becauſe that a man may for other ends (as for meer fear of Hell) Will to Will or Love, that which yet he doth not Will or Love, at leaſt for it ſelf.

15. In this caſe above all others, it is manifeſt that every Conviction of the underſtanding doth not accordingly determine the Will. For in this new convert the underſtanding ſaith plainly, God is to be Loved as God, above my ſelf: But the Will ſaith, I cannot do it, though I would. I am ſo captivated by ſelf love, and ſo void of the true Love of God, that I can ſay no more, but that Propter me vellem amare Deum propter ſe; I love my own felicity ſo well, that I love God as my felicity, and Love him under the notion of God the perfect Good, who is infinirely better than my ſelf; and deſire a heart to Love him more than my ſelf; but I cannot ſay, that I yet do it, or that I love him beſt or moſt, whom I acknowledge to be beſt, and as ſuch to be loved.

16. Yet in all this there is not only ſemen amoris, a ſeed of divine love to God as God, but the foundation of it laid, and ſome obſcure ſecret conception of it beginning, or in fieri, in the ſoul. For while the underſtanding confeſſeth God to be moſt Amiable, and the Will deſireth that felicity which doth conſiſt in loving him above my ſelf, and experience telleth me, that he is Good to me, and therefore good in himſelf, it can hardly be conceived, but that in all this there is ſome kind of ſecret love to God, as better than my ſelf.

87. In all this note, that it is one thing to Love God under the notion of the Infinite Good, better than my ſelf and all things, and another thing for the will to Love him more, as that notion obligeth.

88. And the reaſon why theſe are often ſeparated, is, becauſe beſides a ſlight intellectual apprehenſion, there is neceſſary to the Wills juſt determination, a clear and deep apprehenſion, with a right diſpoſition of the Will, and a ſuſcitation of the Active Power.

89. Yea, and every ſlight Volition or Velleity will not conquer oppoſing Concupiſcence and Volitions: nor is every Will effectual to command the life, and prevail againſt its contrary.

90. Therefore I conceive, that in our firſt believing in Chriſt, even to Juſtification, though our Reaſon tell us that he is more Amiable than our ſelves, and we are deſirous ſo to Love him for the future, and have an obſcure weak beginning of Love to God as God, or as ſo conceived; yet 1. The ſtrength of ſenſitive ſelf-love, maketh our Love to our ſelves more paſſionately ſtrong; 2. And that Reaſon, at leaſt in its Degree of Apprehenſion is too Intenſe in apprehending our ſelf-intereſt, and too remiſs in apprehending the Amiableneſs of God as God; And ſo far even our Rational Love is yet greater to our ſelves, though as to the Notion, God hath the preheminence: 3. And that in this whole affair of our Baptiſmal Covenanting, Conſent or Chriſtianity, our Love to our own felicity as ſuch, is more Powerful and effectual, in moving the ſoul, and prevailing for our reſolution for a new life, than is our Love to God as for himſelf, and as God.

91. And therefore it is that Fear hath ſo great a hand in our firſt Change: For all that ſuch Fear doth, it doth as moved by ſelf-love; I mean the fear of ſuffering and damnation: And yet experience telleth us, that Converſion commonly beginneth in Fear. And though where ſelf love and fear are alone, without the Love of God as Good in and for himſelf, there is no true grace: yet I conceive that there is true grace initial in thoſe weak Chriſtians that have more Fear and ſelf-love in the paſſionate and powerful part, than Love to God, ſo be it they have not more love to ſin, and to any thing that ſtands in competition with God.

92. Therefore he that hath a Carnal ſelf-love, (or inordinate) inclining him to the creature which is ſtronger in him than the Love of God, is Graceleſs leſs: Becauſe it will turn his heart and life from God: But he that hath only a neceſſary ſelf love, even a love to his own ſpiritual eternal felicity, operating by ſtrong deſire and fear, conjunct with a weaker degree of Love to God as Good in himſelf, I think hath grace, and may ſo be ſayed: Becauſe here is but an unequal motion to the ſame End, and not a competition.

93. If any diſlike any of this deciſion, I only deſire him to remember, that on both hands there are apparent Rocks to be avoided: Firſt, It is a dangerous thing to ſay that a man is in a ſtate of grace and ſalvation, who loveth not God as God, that is, better than himſelf: And on the other hand the experience of moſt Chriſtians in the world ſaith, that at their firſt believing (if not long after) they Loved God more for themſelves, than for Himſelf, and Loved themſelves more than God, though they knew that God was better and more amiable; and that the fear of miſery, and the deſire of their own ſalvation, was more effectual and prevalent with them, than that Love of God for himſelf. And I doubt, that not very many have this at all in ſo high a degree as to be clear and certain of it. And if we ſhall make that neceſſary to ſalvation, which few of the beſt Chriſtians find in themſelves, we either condemn almoſt all profeſſed Chriſtians, or at leaſt leave them under uncertainty and terrours. Therefore Gods Intereſt ſpeaking ſo loud on one hand, and mans experience on the other, I think we have need to cut by a thred, and walk by line, with greateſt accurateneſs.

94. By this time we may ſee that as Chriſt is the way to the Father, and the Saviour and recoverer of lapſed man from Himſelf to God, ſo faith in Chriſt as ſuch is a Mediate and Medicinal Grace and work; and that is Faith but the bellows of Love; And that our firſt Believing in Chriſt, though it be the regenerating work, which generateth Love, yet is but a middle ſtate, between an unregenerate and a regenerate: Not as a third ſtate ſpecifically diſtinct from both, but the initium of the latter; or as the embryo or ſtate of Conception in the womb, is as to a man and no man: Faith containeth Love in fieri.

95. As the Love of our ſelves doth moſt powerfully, (though not only) move us to cloſe with Chriſt as our Saviour, ſo while hereby we are united unto Him, we have a double aſſiſtance or influx from him for the production of the purer Love of God. The one is Objective in all the Divine demonſtrations of Gods Love, in his Incarnation, Life, Death, Reſurrection, in his Doctrine, Example, Interceſſion, and in all his benefits given us; in our pardon, adoption, and the promiſes of future Glory. The other is in the ſecret operations of the Holy Spirit which he giveth us to concur with theſe means, and make them all effectual.

96. The true ſtate of ſanctification as different from meer vocation and faith conſiſteth in this pure Love of God, and Holineſs, and that more for himſelf and his Infinite Goodneſs, than for our ſelves and as our felicity.

97. Therefore when we are Promiſed the ſpirit to be given to us, if we Believe in Chriſt, and ſanctification is promiſed us with Juſtification on this condition of faith, this is part of the meaning of that promiſe, that if we truly take Chriſt for our Saviour to bring us to the Love of God, though at preſent we are moſt moved with the Love of our ſelves to accept him, he will by his word, works and ſpirit bring us to it, initially here, and perfectly in Heaven, even to be perfectly Pleaſed in God for his own perfect Goodneſs, and ſo to be fully Pleaſant to him. And thus (beſides the extraordinary gifts to a few) the ſpirit of holineſs or Love, which is the ſpirit of Adoption, is promiſed by Covenant to all Believers.

98. Accordingly this promiſe is ſo fulfilled that in the firſt inſtant of time we have a Relative Right to Chriſt as our Head and the ſender of the ſpirit, and to the Holy Spirit himſelf as our ſanctifier by undertaking, according to the terms of the Covenant: But this doth not produce always a ſenſible or effectual Love of God above our ſelves in us, at the very firſt, but by degrees, as we follow the work of faith in our practice.

99. For it is ſpecially to be noted that the Doctrinal or Objective means of Love, which Chriſt doth uſe, and his internal ſpiritual influx do concur; And his way is not to work on us by his ſpirit alone, without thoſe objects, nor yet by the objects without the ſpirit, nor by both diſtinctly and dividedly as producing ſeveral effects: But by both conjunctly for the ſame effect; The ſpirits influx cauſing us effectually to improve the objects and reaſons of our Love, as the hand that uſeth the ſeal, and the ſeal it ſelf make one impreſſion.

100. As Chriſt began to win our Love to God by the excitation of our ſelf-love, multiplying and revealing Gods mercies to our ſelves, ſo doth he much carry it on to increaſe the ſame way. For while every day addeth freſh experience of the greatneſs of Gods Love to us, by this we have a certain Taſte that God is Love, and Good in Himſelf; and ſo by degrees we learn to Love him more for himſelf, and to improve our notional eſteem of his Eſſential Goodneſs into practical.

101. Though Faith it ſelf is not wrought in us without the Holy Ghoſt, nor is it (if ſincere) a common gift, yet this operation of the ſpirit drawing us to Chriſt, by ſuch arguments and means as are fitted to the work of believing, is different from the Conſequent Covenant-right to Chriſt and the ſpirit which is given to Believers, and from the ſpirit of Adoption as recovering us as aforeſaid to the Love of God.

102. In this laſt ſenſe it is that the Holy Ghoſt is ſaid to dwell in Believers, and to be the new name, the pledge, the earneſt, the firſt-fruits of life eternal, the witneſs of our right to Chriſt and life, and Chriſts agent and witneſs in us to maintain his cauſe and intereſt.

103. Even as a man that by ſickneſs hath loſt his Appetite to meat, is told that ſuch a Phyſician will cure him, if he will take a certain medicinal food that he will give him; And at firſt he taketh it without appetite to the food or medicine in it ſelf, but meerly for the Love of health: but after he is doubly brought to Love it for it ſelf; Firſt, becauſe he hath taſted the ſweetneſs of that which he did but ſee before, and next becauſe his health and appetite is recovered: ſo is it with the ſoul as to the Love of God procured by believing: When we have tatted thro' the perſwaſion of ſelf-love, our taſte and recovery cauſe us to Love God for himſelf.

104. When the ſoul is riſen to this Habitual predominant Love of GOD and Holineſs as ſuch, for their own Goodneſs, above its own felicity as ſuch, (though ever in conjunction with it, and as his felicity it ſelf) then is the Law written in the Heart; and this Love is the virtual fulfilling of all the Law; And for ſuch it is that it is ſaid that the Law is not made, that is, In that meaſure that they Love the Good for it ſelf, they need not be moved to it with threats or Promiſes of extrinſick things, which work but by ſelf-love and fear: Not but that Divine Authority muſt concur with Love to produce obedience, eſpecially while Love is but imperfect: but that Love is the higheſt principle making the commanded good connatural to us.

105. And I think it is this ſpirit of Adoption and

Love

Love which is called The Divine Nature in us, as it inclineth us to Love God and Holineſs for it ſelf, as Nature is inclined to ſelf-love and to food and other neceſſaries. Not that the ſpecifick eſſential Nature, that is, ſubſtance or form of the ſoul is changed, and man Deified; and he become a God that was before a man; But his humane Soul or Nature is elevated or more perfected (as a ſick man by health, or a blind man by his ſight) by the ſpirit of God inclining him habitually to God himſelf, as in and for himſelf. (And this is all which the publiſher of Sir H. Vane's notions of the two Covenants and two Natures, can ſoundly mean, and ſeemeth to grope after.)

106. By all this you ſee that as the Love of God hath a double ſelf-love in us to deal with, ſo it dealeth variouſly with each: 1. Senſual inordinate ſelf-love it deſtroyeth: both as it conſiſteth in the inordinate Love of ſenſual pleaſure, and in the inordinate Love of ſelf or life: 2. Lawful and juſt ſelf-love it increaſeth and improveth to our further good, but ſubjecteth it to the higheſt pureſt Love of God.

107. By this you may gather what a confirmed Chriſtian is, even one in whom the pure Love of God as God, and all things for God, is predominant and more potent than (not only the vicious, but alſo) the good, and lawful, and neceſſary love of himſelf.

108. Though Chriſtians therefore muſt ſtudy themſelves, and keep up a care of their own ſalvation, yet muſt they much more ſtudy God, his Greatneſs, Wiſdom and Goodneſs as ſhining in his works and word, and in his Son, and as foreſeen in the Heavenly Glory: And in this knowledge of God and Chriſt is life eternal. And nothing more tendeth to the holy advancement and perfection of the ſoul, than to keep continually due apprehenſions of the Divine Nature, Properties and Glorious appearances in his works upon the Soul, ſo as it may become a conſtant courſe of contemplation, and the habit and conſtitution of the mind, and the conſtant guide of Heart and Life.

109. The attainment of this would be a taſte of Heaven on Earth: Our wills would follow the will of God, and Reſt therein, and abhor reluctancy: All our duty would be both quickened and ſweetned with Love: Self-intereſt would be diſabled from either ſeducing us to ſin, or vexing us with griefs, cares, fears or diſcontents. We ſhould ſo far truſt ſoul and body in the Will and Love of God, as to be more comforted that both are at his will than if they were abſolutely at our own. And GOD being our All, the conſtant, fixing, ſatisfying object of our Love, our ſouls would be conſtantly fixed and ſatisfied, and live in ſuch experience of the ſanctifying grace of Chriſt, as would moſt powerfully conquer our unbelief; and in ſuch foretaſtes of Heaven, as would make Life ſweet, Death welcome, and Heaven unſpeakably deſirable to us. But it is not the meer Love of perſonal Goodneſs as our own perfection that would do all this upon us.

110. The ſoul that is troubled with doubts whether he Love God as God, or only as a means of his own felicity in ſubordination to ſelf-love, muſt thus reſolve his doubts. If you truly believe that God is God, that is, the Efficient, Dirigent and Final cauſe, the juſt end of every rational agent, the Infinite Good and chiefly to be loved, in compariſon of whom you are vile, contemptible and as no thing; If you feelingly take your ſelf as loathſome by ſin; if you would not take up with an everlaſting ſenſual pleaſure alone, without Holineſs if you could have it; No nor with any perfection of your intellectual nature, meerly as ſuch and for your ſelves, without the Pleaſing and Glorifying God in it; If you practically perceive that every thing is therefore and ſo far Good and Amiable, as God ſhineth in it as its cauſe, or as it conduceth to Glorifie him, and Pleaſe his Will: If accordingly you Love that perſon beſt on whom you perceive moſt of God, and that is moſt ſerviceable to him, though not at all beneficial to your ſelf: If you Love the welfare of the Church, the Kingdom, the World, and of the Heavenly Society, Saints, Angels and Chriſt, as the Divine Nature, intereſt, Image or impreſs maketh all Lovely in their ſeveral degrees; and would rather be annihilated were it put upon your choice, than Saints, Angels, Kingdoms, Church ſhould be annihilated; If your hearts have devoted themſelves and all that you have to God, as his own to be uſed to his utmoſt ſervice: If your chief deſire and endeavour in the world be to pleaſe his bleſſed will; and in that will and the contemplation of his infinite perfections you ſeek your reſt; If you deſire your own everlaſting happineſs, in no other kind, but as conſiſting in the perfect ſight of Gods Glory, and in your perfect Loving of him, and being pleaſant or beloved to him, and this as reſting more in the Infinite Amiableneſs of God, than the felicity which hence will follow to your ſelves (though that alſo muſt be deſired.) If now you deny your own glory for his Glory; if your chief deſire and endeavour be to Love him more and more; and you Love your ſelves beſt when you Love him moſt; In a word, If nothing more take up your care than how to Love God more, and nothing in the whole world (your ſelf or others) ſeem more Amiable to your ſober practical judgement, and your wills, than the Infinite Goodneſs of God as ſuch; If all this be ſo, you have not only attained ſincerity (which is not now the queſtion,) but this Divine nature, and high confirmed Holineſs; Though withall you never ſo much deſire your own ſalvation, which is but to deſire more of this Love; and though your Nature have ſuch a ſenſitive ſelfiſh deſire of Life and Pleaſure, as is brought into ſubjection to this Divine Love.

If any be offended that ſo many propoſitions muſt be uſed in opening the caſe, and ſay that they rather confound mens wits than inform them; I Anſwer, 1. The matter is high, and I could not aſcend by a ſhorter ladder. Nor have I the faculty of climbing it per ſaltum, ſtepping immediately from the loweſt to the higheſt part: If any will make the caſe plainer in fewer words, and with leſs ado, I ſhall thankfully accept his labour as a very great benefit when I ſee it: 2. Either all theſe particulars are really diverſe, and really pertinent to the matter in queſtion or not: If not, it is not blaming the number that will evince it, but naming ſuch particulars as are either unjuſtly or unneceſſarily either diſtinguiſhed or inſerted: And if it be but repeating the ſame things that is blamed, I ſhall be glad if all theſe words and more would make ſuch weighty caſes clear; and do confeſs that after all I need more light, and am almoſt ſtalled with the difficulties my ſelf. But if the particulars can be neither proved falſe nor needleſs, but the Reader be only overſet with multitude, I would intreat him to be patient with other men that are more laborious and more capable of knowledge; And let him know that if his difficulties do not rather engage him in a diligent ſearch, than tempt him to impatience and accuſation, I number him not only with the ſlothful contemners, but therefore alſo with the enemies of knowledge; even as I reckon the neglecters and contemners and accuſers of Piety among its enemies.

But ere I end I muſt anſwer ſome Objections.

Object. 1. Some will ſay, Doth not every man Love God above himſelf and all, while he knoweth him to be Better and ſo more Lovely? For there is ſome Act of the will that anſwereth this of the underſtanding.

Anſw. 1. You muſt know that the carnal mind is firſt captivated to carnal ſelf and ſenſuality: And therefore the moſt practical and powerful apprehenſions of Goodneſs or Amiableneſs in every ſuch perſon, doth faſten upon Life and Pleaſure or ſenſual proſperity: And the ſenſe having here engaged the mind and will, the contrary concluſions (that God is beſt) are but ſuperficial and uneffectual like dreams, and though they have anſwerable effects in the will, they are but uneffectual velleities or wiſhes, which are born down with far ſtronger deſires of the contrary. And though God be loved as one that is notionally conceived to be Beſt and Moſt to be Loved, yet he is not loved Beſt or Moſt: Yea though ordinarily the underſtanding ſay God is Beſt, and Beſt to me, and for me, and Moſt to be loved; when it cometh to volition or choice, there is a ſecret apprehenſion which ſaith more powerfully hic & nunc this ſenſible pleaſure is Better for me, and more eligible: Why elſe is it choſen? Unleſs you will ſay that the motion is principally ſenſitive, and the force of the ſenſitive Appetite ſuſpendeth all forcible oppoſition of the Intellect, and ſo ruleth the Locomotive faculty it ſelf. But whether the Intellect be Active or but Omiſſive in it, the ſin cometh up to the ſame height of evil. However it be, it is moſt evident that while ſuch men ſay God is moſt to be Loved, they love him not moſt, when they will not leave a luſt or known ſin for his Love: nor ſhew any ſuch love, but the contrary in their lives.

Object. 2. But do not all men practically Love God beſt, when they Love Wiſdom, Honeſty and Goodneſs in all men? Even in ſtrangers that will never profit them? And what is God but Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Greatneſs it ſelf?

Anſw. They firſt Idolize themſelves and their ſenſual delights: and then they Love ſuch Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Greatneſs as is ſuitable to their ſelfiſh ſenſual luſt and intereſt. And it is not the Prime Good which is above them, and to be preferred before them which they love as ſuch, but ſuch Goodneſs as is fitted to their fleſhly concupiſcence and ends. And therefore Holineſs they Love not. And though they love that which is never like to benefit them, that is but as it is of the ſame kind with that which in others nearer them may benefit them, and therefore is ſuitable to their minds and intereſt. And yet we confeſs that the mind of man hath ſome principles of virtue, and ſome footſteps and witneſſes of a Deity left upon it; But though theſe work up to an approbation of Good and a diſlike of evil in the General notion of it, and in particular ſo far as it croſſeth not their Luſt, yet never to prefer the Beſt things practically before their Luſt: And God is not Loved Beſt, nor as God, if he be not Loved better than fleſhly luſt.

Object. 3. But it ſeems that moſt or all men love God practically beſt. For there are few if any but would rather be annihilated, than there ſhould be no God, or no world. Therefore they Love God better than themſelves.

Anſw. 1. They know that if there were no God or no world, they could not be themſelves; and ſo muſt alſo be annihilated. 2. But ſuppoſe that they would rather be annihilated, than continue in proſperity alone were it poſſible without a God, that is but for the worlds ſake, becauſe the world cannot be the world without a God, which proveth but that they are ſo much men, as to Love the whole world better than themſelves. But could the world poſſibly be what it is without a God, I ſcarce think they would chooſe annihilation, rather than that there ſhould be no God. 3. But ſuppoſe they would, yet I ſay that ſome ſenſual men love their Luſts or ſenſuality better than their being; and had rather be annihilated for ever, ſo they might but ſpend their lives in Pleaſure, than to live for ever without thoſe pleaſures. And therefore they will ſay, that a ſhort life with pleaſure is better than a long one without it: And when they profeſs to believe the life to come, and the danger of ſinning; yet will they not leave their ſinful pleaſures to ſave their ſouls. Therefore that man that would rather be annihilated than there ſhould be no God, may yet love his Luſts better than God, though not his Being. 4. And I cannot ſay that every one ſhall be ſaved that Loveth God under a falſe idea or image better than himſelf: No more than that it will ſave a diſtracted melancholy Venereous Lover, if he Loved his Paramour or Miſtreſs better than himſelf: For God is not Loved as God, if he be not loved as Infinitely Great, and Wiſe, and Good, which containeth his Holineſs, and alſo as the Owner, and Holy Governour and End of man: If any therefore ſhould love God upon conceit that God loveth him, and will indulge him in his ſins; or if he love him only for his Greatneſs, and as the fountain of all natural ſenſible Good, and love him not as Holy, nor as a Holy and Juſt Governour and End, it is not God indeed that this man loveth; or he loveth him but ſecundum quid, and not as God.

Object. 4. But ſuppoſe I ſhould love God above all, as he is only Great, and Wiſe, and Good in the production of all ſenſible natural Good, without the Notion of Holineſs and hatred of ſin, would not this Love it ſelf be holy and ſaving?

Anſw. Your Love would be no holier or better, than the object of it is conceived to be: If you conceive not of God as Holy, and Pure, you cannot love him with a pure and holy Love. If you conceive of him but as the Cauſe of Sun and Moon, light, and heat, and life and health, and meat and drink, you will love him but with ſuch a Love as you have to theſe: which will not ſeperate you, from any ſin as ſuch, but will conſiſt with all ſenſuality of heart and Life. And it is not all in God, that Nature in its corrupted ſtate doth hate, or is fallen out with: But if you love him not ſo well as your luſts and pleaſure, nor love him not as your Moſt Holy Governour and End, you love him not as God, or but ſecundum quid; But if you love him Holily, you love him as Holy.

Object. 5. God himſelf loveth the ſubſtance or perſon more than the Holineſs; for he continueth the perſons of men and Devils; when he permitteth the holineſs to periſh, or giveth it not.

Anſw. As the exiſtence and Event, and the Moral Goodneſs muſt be diſtinguiſhed; ſo muſt Gods meer Volition of Event, and his Complacency in Good as Good. God doth not Will the Exiſtence of a reaſonable ſoul in a Stone or Straw: And yet it followeth not, that he loveth a Stone or Straw for its ſubſtance, better than Reaſon in a man: For though God willeth to make his Creatures various in degrees of Goodneſs, and taketh it to be good ſo to do, and that every Creature be not of the Beſt, yet ſtill this Goodneſs of them is various: as one hath more excellency in it than another. The Goodneſs of the whole, may require that each part be not Beſt in it ſelf, and yet beſt reſpectively in order to the beauty of the whole. As a Peg is not better than a Standard, and yet is better to the Building in its place: And a Finger is not better than a Hand, and yet is better to the body in its place, than another Head would be in that place. The Head therefore muſt be loved comparatively better than the Finger, and the Finger may be cut off off to ſave life, when the Head muſt not: So God can ſee meet to permit Men and Devils to fall into miſery, and Thieves to be hanged, and uſe this to the beauty of the whole, and yet love a true man better than a Thief, and a good Man better than a bad.

And either you ſpeak of Goodneſs or Holineſs exiſtent or non exiſtent: In a Devil there is ſubſtance, which is Good in its natural kind, and therefore ſo far loved of God: But there is no Holineſs in him: And that which is not, is not Amiable: But if you mean exiſtent Holineſs, in a Saint, then it is falſe, that God loveth the perſon of a Devil better than the Holineſs of a Saint. Nor is it a proof that he loveth them equally, becauſe he equally willeth their exiſtence: For he willeth not they ſhall be equal in Goodneſs, though equally exiſtent: And it is complacency, and not meer Volition of exiſtence, which we mean by Love.

Otherwiſe your arguing is as ſtrong if it run thus; That which God bringeth to paſs, and not another thing; he willeth and loveth more than that other: But God bringeth to paſs mens ſickneſs, pain, death and damnation, and not the Holineſs, Eaſe or Salvation of thoſe Perſons: Therefore he loveth their pain, death and damnation better than their Holineſs: Therefore we ſhould love them better, than the Devils or miſerable men ſhould love their miſery better than Holineſs. God ſheweth what he loveth, oft by commanding it, when he doth not effect it: He loveth Holineſs in eſſe cognito, and in eſſe exiſtente reſpectively as his Image.

Object. But at leaſt it will follow, that in this or that perſon as the Devils, God loveth the Subſtance better than Holineſs: For what he Willeth he Loveth: But he willeth the Subſtance without the Holineſs: Therefore he Loveth the Subſtance without the Holineſs.

Anſw. It is anſwered already. Moreover 1. God willed that Holineſs ſhould be the Duty of all men and Devils, tho' he willed not inſuperably and abſolutely to effect it. 2. The word [without] meaneth either an Excluſion or a meer non incluſion. God willeth not the Perſon excluding the Holineſs. For he excludeth it not by will or work; but only he willeth the Perſon, not including the Holineſs, as to any abſolute will. And ſo God loveth the Perſon without the Holineſs; but not ſo much as he would love him if he were holy.

Object. But you intimate, that it is beſt as to the beauty of the Univerſe, that there be ſin, and unholineſs, and damnation: And God loveth that which is Good as to the Univerſe, yea, that is a Higher Good than perſonal Good, as the Subject is more noble; and therefore more to be loved of us as it is of God.

Anſw. 1. I know Auguſtine is oft alledged as ſaying, Bonum eſt ut malum fiat. But ſin and puniſhment muſt be diſtinguiſhed: It is true of Puniſhment preſuppoſing ſin, that it is Good and Lovely, in reſpect to publick Ends, though hurtful to the perſon ſuffering: And therefore as God willeth it as Good, ſo ſhould we not only be patient, but be pleaſed in it as it is the demonſtration of the Juſtice and Holineſs of God, and as it is Good, though not as it is our hurt. But ſin (or unholineſs privative) is not Good in it ſelf, nor to the Univerſe: Nor is it a true ſaying, that It is good that there be ſin: Nor is it willed of God. (Though not nilled with an abſolute effective Nolition) as hath been elſewhere opened at large. Sin is not Good to the Univerſe, nor any part of the Beauty of the Creature; God neither willeth it, Cauſeth it or Loveth it.

Object. At leaſt he hath no great Love to Holineſs in thoſe Perſons, that he never giveth it to. Otherwiſe he would work it in them.

Anſw. He cannot love that exiſtent which exiſteth not. Nor doth he any further Will to give it them, than to Command it, and give them all neceſſary means and perſwaſions to it. But what if God make but one Sun? Will you ſay, that he hath no great Love to a Sun, that will make no more? What if he make no more Worlds? Doth that prove that he hath no great Love to a World? He loveth the World, the Sun, and ſo the Saints, which he hath made. And he doth not ſo far love Suns, or Worlds, or Saints, as to make as many Suns, or Worlds, or Saints as fooliſh Wits would preſcribe unto him. Our Queſtion is, What Being God loveth, and we ſhould moſt love, as being Beſt and Likeſt him, and not what he ſhould give a Being to that is not.

Object. 6. Holineſs is but an Accident, and the Perſon is the Subſtance, and better than the Accident: And Dr. Twiſs oppugneth on ſuch Accounts, the Saying of Arminius, That God loveth Juſtice better than juſt Men, becauſe it is for Juſtice that he loveth them.

Anſw. 1. Ariſtotle and Porphyrie have not ſo clearly made known to us the nature of thoſe things or modes which they are pleaſed to call Accidents, as that we ſhould lay any great ſtreſs upon their ſayings about them. Another will ſay, that Goodneſs it ſelf is but an Accident, and moſt will call it a Mode; and they will ſay, that the Subſtance is better than the Mode or Accident, and therefore better than Goodneſs it ſelf: And would this, think you, be good arguing? Diſtinguiſh then between Phyſical Goodneſs of Being, in the ſoul, both as a Subſtance, and as a Formal Vertue; and the Perfective, or Modal, qualitative or gradual Goodneſs: And then conſider, that the latter alway preſuppoſeth the former: where there is Holineſs, there is the Subſtance, with its Phyſical Goodneſs, and the perfective, Modal or Moral Goodneſs too: But where there is no Holineſs, there is only a Subſtance deprived of its Modal Moral Goodneſs. And is not both better than one, and a perfect Being, than an imperfect?

And as to Arminius ſaying, He cannot mean that God loveth Righteouſneſs with a Subject or Subſtance, better than a Subject without Righteouſneſs; For there is no ſuch thing to love, as Righteouſneſs without a Subject: (Though there may be an abſtracted diſtinct conception of it.) If therefore the Queſtion be only, Whether God love the ſame man better, as he is a Man, or as he is a Saint, I anſwer, he hath a love to each which is ſuitable to its kind. He hath ſuch complacency in the ſubſtance of a Serpent, a Man, a Devil, as is agreeable to their being; that is, as they bear the natural Impreſſions of his creating Perfections, yet ſuch as may ſtand with their pain, death, and miſery. But he hath ſuch a complacency in the actual Holineſs, Love and Obedience of men and Angels, as that he taketh the perſon that hath them, to be meet for his Service, and glory, and everlaſting felicity and delight in him, as being qualified for it. So that Gods Love muſt be denominatively diſtinguiſhed from the object; and ſo it is a Love of Nature, and a Love of the Moral Perfections of Nature: the firſt Love is that by which he loveth a man, becauſe he is a man, and ſo all other creatures: the ſecond Love is that by which he loveth a good man, becauſe he is Good or Holy. And if it will comfort you, that God loveth your being without your perfections or virtue, let it comfort you in pain, and death, and Hell, that he continueth your being without your well being or felicity.

Object. 7. All Goodneſs or Holineſs is ſome ones Goodneſs or Holineſs (as health is) And as it is the perſons welfare and perfection, ſo it is given for the perſons ſake: Therefore the Perſon as the finis cui, and utmoſt End, is better than the thing given him, and ſo more amiable.

Anſw. That all Goodneſs is ſome ones Goodneſs, proveth but that ſome one is the Subject or Being that is Good, but not that to Be, is better than to be Good as ſuch. And as he is in ſome reſpect the finis cui, for whom it is, and ſo it is Good to him, yet he and his Goodneſs are for a higher end, which is the pleaſing of God in the demonſtration of his Goodneſs. That therefore is beſt, which moſt demonſtrateth Gods Goodneſs. And there is no ſubject or ſubſtance without its accidents or modes: And that perſon that is not Good and Holy, is Bad and Unholy: Therefore the queſtion ſhould be, Whether a perſon bad and unholy, be more amiable than a perſon good and holy, that hath both Phyſical and Moral Goodneſs. And for all that the name of an Accident maketh Action ſeem below the perſon; yet it muſt be alſo ſaid, that the perſon and his faculties are for Action, as being but the ſubſtance in a perfect Mode, and that Action is for higher ends than the perſons being or felicity.

Object. 8. Love is nothing but benevolence, Velle bonum alicui ut ei bene ſit. But who is it that would not wiſh good to God, that is to be bleſſed, as he is? But how can holineſs then be loved, but rather the perſon for his holineſs; becauſe we cannot wiſh it good, but only to be what it is.

Anſw. The definition is falſe, as hath been ſhewed, and as the inſtance proveth, elſe a man could not be ſaid to love Learning, Virtue, or any quality, but only to love the perſon that wanteth it, or hath it. But Love is a Complacency, and benevolence is but its effect or antecedent. 2. The unholy wiſh not good to God, for they would all depoſe him from his Godhead: They would not have him to be a hater of their ſin, nor to be their Holy and Righteous Governour and Judge.

Object. 9. It is better to be a man, though a ſinner and miſerable in Hell, than not to be at all. Elſe God would never ordain, cauſe or permit it.

Anſw. 1. It is better to the higheſt ends, Gods Glory and the Univerſal Order, to be a puniſhed man, than to be nothing (when God will have it ſo:) Becauſe Puniſhment as to thoſe higheſt ends is good: Though it is not beſt for the poor miſerable ſinner. But the ſame cannot be ſaid of ſin. It is indeed better alſo to thoſe higheſt ends, to be a Man though a ſinner (while God continueth humanity:) But not to be a Man and a ſinner: For the latter implyeth ſome Good to be in the ſin, which hath no Good, and therefore God neither cauſeth it, nor willeth it, though he permit it: But though a ſinful man is better than no man to Gods ends, it followeth not, that to be a man, is better than to be a good man.

Object. 10. If that be beſt and moſt amiable, which is moſt to the glory of God, then it is more amiable to be a ſinner in Hell torment glorifying his Juſtice, than not to be at all, or to be a brute.

Anſw. 1. It is neither of theſe that is offered to your Love and Choice, but to be Holy. All Good is not matter of Election. But that Good which is in Hell is not the ſin, but the puniſhment. For the ſin doth reputatively, and as much as in it lyeth rob God of his glory, and puniſhment repaireth it. Therefore love the puniſhment if you can, and ſpare not, ſo you love Holineſs better: For that would honour God more excellently, and pleaſe him more.

Object. 11. If I muſt love to be like God, I muſt love to be Great, and I muſt Love the Greateſt as moſt like him.

Anſw. You muſt love to be like him in thoſe perfections which you are capable of, and to the ends and uſes of your proper nature. Therefore you muſt be deſirous to be like him in your meaſure, even in ſuch Power and Greatneſs as is ſuitable to the Nature and Ends of a Rational ſoul. Not in ſuch ſtrength as he giveth a Horſe, or ſuch magnitude as he giveth a Mountain, which is not to be moſt like him; But in the vital activity and power of an Intellectual free-agent: To be Powerful and great in Love to God and all his ſervice, and in all good works, to be profitable to the world, to be lively and ready in all obedience, ſtrong to ſuffer and to conquer ſin, and all temptations: In a word, to be Great and Powerful in Wiſdom and true Goodneſs. Thus ſeek even in Power to be like God in your Capacities.

Object. 12. God himſelf doth not love men only for their Goodneſs, nor Love that beſt which is beſt. For he loveth his Elect while enemies and ungodly, and he telleth Iſrael, he loved them, becauſe he would love them, and not becauſe they were better than others: And in the womb he loved Jacob beſt, when he was no better than Eſau.

Anſw. 1. Diſtinguiſh between Gods Complacence and Benevolence. 2. Between the good that is preſent, and foreſeen good with a preſent capacity for it.

1. God had a greater Benevolence to Jacob than Eſau, and to the Iſraelites than to other Nations that were perhaps not much worſe. And it is not for our Goodneſs that God decreeth to make us good, or to give us a double proportion of any of thoſe mercies, which he giveth not as Rector, but as Dominus, and Benefactor, as an abſolute Owner and free Benefactor. And with this Love of Benevolence he loveth us, when we are his enemies, that is, he purpoſeth to make us good. But this benevolence is but a ſecondary Love, and fruit of Complacency, joyned with the free unequal diſtribution of his own.

2. But for Complacency, which is Love in the firſt and ſtricteſt ſenſe, God ſo loveth the wicked though Elect, no farther than they are Good and Lovely; that is, 1. As they have the Natural Goodneſs of Rational Creatures. 2. And as they are capable of all the future ſervice they will do him, and glory they will bring him. 3. And as his Infinite Wiſdom knoweth it fit to chooſe them to that ſervice. Or if the Benevolence of Election do go before his firſt Complacence in them above others, as being before his foreſight that they will ſerve and love him better, yet ſtill this proper Love called Complacence, goeth not beyond the worth of the thing loved.

Object. Doth God love us Complacentially in Chriſt, beyond the Good that is in us.

Anſw. Not beyond our Real and Relative Good, as we are in our ſelves, by his grace, and as we are in Chriſt related to him, and both ways ſuch as demonſtrate the Divine perfections, and ſhall Love, and Glorifie, and Pleaſe him for ever.

So much for the opening of the true Nature of LOVE to God, our ſelves and others, and of mans ultimate end, and of the Nature of Holineſs and Goodneſs, and thoſe Myſteries of Religion which are involved in theſe points.

CHAP. IV.

Subordinate Directions against those Grand heart-sins, which are directly contrary to the Life of Godliness and Christianity.

THE positive Directions to the Essential Duties of Godliness and Christianity have already given you Directions * against the contrary sins: As in the first Grand Direction you have helps against direct Unbelief: In the second you have Directions against Unbelief, as it signifieth the not using and applying of Christ according to our various needs. In the third you have Directions against † all resisting or neglecting the Holy Ghost. (Which were first, because in Practice we must come by the Son and the Spirit to the saving Knowledge and Love of the Father.) In the fourth you have Directions * against Atheism, Idolatry and Ungodliness. In the fifth you have Directions against self-idolizing, and self dependance, and unholiness in alienating your selves from God. In the sixth you are Directed against Rebellion and Disobedience against God. In the seventh you have Directions against Unteachableness, Ignorance and Error. In the eighth you have Directions against Impenitency, Unhumbleness, Impurity, Unreformedness, and all sin in general as sin. In the ninth you are directed against † Security, Unwatchfulness, and yielding to temptations, and in general against all danger to the soul. In the tenth you are directed against Barrenness, Unprofitableness, and Sloth, and Uncharitableness: and against mistakes in matter of duty or good works. In the eleventh you are directed against all Averseness, Disaffection, or cold Indifferency of heart to God. In the twelfth you are directed against Distrust, and sinful Cares, and Fears, and Sorrows. In the thirteenth you are directed against an over sad or heartless serving of God, as meerly from fear, or forcedly without delight. In the fourteenth you are directed against Unthankfulness. In the fifteenth you are directed against all unholy or dishonourable thoughts of God, and against all injurious speeches of him, or barrenness of the tongue, and against all scandal or barrenness of life. In the Books referred to in the sixteenth and seventeenth you are directed against Selfishness (self esteem, self love, self-conceit, self-will, self seeking) and against all worldliness and fleshliness of mind or life. But yet lest any necessary helps should be wanting against such heinous sins, I shall add some more particular Directions against such of them as were not fully spoken to before.

* The recital of such sins as the former Positive Directions do detect, and afford help against.

† Of the sin against the Holy Ghost, I have written a special Treatise in my Unreasonableness of Infidelity.

* Since the writing of this, I have published the same more at large in my Reasons of the Christian Religion, and in my Life of Faith.

† Of Presumption and false hope, enough is said in the Saints Rest, and here about Temptation, Hope, and other Heads afterward.

PART I.

Directions against UNBELIEF.

Q. Whether not to believe that my sins are pardoned, be indeed Unbelief?

§. 1. I Know that most poor troubled Christians, when they complain of the sin of Unbelief, do mean by it, their not believing that they are sincere believers, and personally justified, and shall be saved. And I know that some Divines have affirmed, that the sense of that Article of the Creed [I believe the Remission of sins] is [I believe my sins are already forgiven.] But the truth is, to believe that I am elect or justified, or that my sins are forgiven, or that I am a sincere believer, is not to Believe any word of God at all: For no word of God doth say any of these; nor any thing equivalent; nor any thing out of which it can be gathered: For it is a Rational Conclusion; and one of the premises which do inter it, must be found in my self by reflexion; or internal sense and self knowledge: The Scripture only saith [He that truly believeth is justified, and shall be saved.] But it is Conscience, and not Belief of Scripture, which must say [I do sincerely believe.] Therefore the Conclusion [that I am justified, and shall be saved] is a Rational Collection from what I find in Scripture and in my self, set together; and resulting from both, can be no firmer or surer than is the weaker of the premises: Now Certainty is objective or subjective, in the Thing, or in my Apprehension: As to Objective Certainty in the thing it self, all truths are equally true: But all Truths are not equally discernable; there being much more cause of doubting concerning some (which are less evident) than concerning others (which are more evident.) And so the Truth of Gods promise of Justification to believers, is more certain, that is, hath fuller surer Evidence to be discerned by, than the Truth of my sincere believing: And [that I sincerely believe] is the more Debile of the premises, and therefore the conclusion followeth this in its Debility: And so can be no article of faith. And as to the subjective Certainty, that varyeth according to mens various apprehensions. The premises as in their evidence or aptitude to ascertain us, are the cause of the Conclusion as evident, or knowable. And the premises as apprehended are the Cause of the Conclusion as known.

Whether a man can be more certain that he believeth, than he is that the thing believed is true?

Now it is a great doubt with some, Whether a man can possibly be more certain that he believeth, than he is that the thing believed is true; because the act can extend no further than the object; and to be sure I believe, is but to be sure that I take the thing believed to be true: But I shall grant the contrary, that a man may possibly be surer that he believeth, than he is that the thing believed is true, because my believing is not always a full subjective certainty, that the thing is true; but a believing that it's true. And though you are fully certain that all Gods word is true; yet you may believe that this is his word with some mixture of unbelief or doubting: And so the question is but this, Whether you may not certainly without doubting know, that you Believe the Word of God to be true, though with some doubting, and it seems you may. But then it is a further question, Whether you can be surer of the saving sincerity of your faith, than you are that this Word of God is true: And that ordinarily men doubt of the first as much as they doubt of the latter, I think is an experimented truth. But yet grant that with some it may be otherwise (because he believeth sincerely, that so far believeth the Word of God, as to trust his life and soul upon it, and forsake all in obedience to it: And that I do so, I may know with less doubting, than I yet have about the Truth of the Word so believed.) All that will follow is but this, That of those men that doubt of their Justification and Salvation; some of their doubts are caused more by their doubting of Gods Word, than by the doubting whether they sincerely though doubtingly believe it: and the doubts of others whether they are justified and shall be saved, is caused much more by their doubting of their own sincere belief, than by their doubting of the truth of Scriptures. And the far greatest number of Christians seem to themselves to be of this latter sort. For no doubt, but though a man of clear understanding can scarcely believe, and yet not know that he believeth, yet he may believe sincerely, and not know that he believeth sincerely. But still ſtill the Knowledge of our own Juſtification, is but the effect or progeny of our Belief of the Word of God, and of our Knowledge that we do ſincerely believe it, which conjunctly are the Parents and Cauſes of it: And it can be no ſtronger than the weaker of the Parents, (which in eſſe cognoſcibili is our Faith, but in eſſe cognito is ſometime the one, and ſometime the other.) And the effect is not the cauſe: The effect of Faith and knowledge conjunct, is not Faith it ſelf. It is not a Believing the Word of God, to believe that you believe, or that you are Juſtified: But yet becauſe that Faith is one of the Parents of it, ſome call it by the Name of Faith, though they ſhould call it but an Effect of Faith (as one of the cauſes.) And well may our doubtings of our own ſalvation, be ſaid to be from Unbelief, becauſe Unbelief is one of the Cauſes of them, and the ſinfulleſt Cauſe.

The Article of Remiſſion of ſin to be believed applyingly.

§. 2. And that the Article of Remiſſion of ſin is to be Believed with application to our ſelves, is certain: But not with the Application of Aſſurance, Perſwaſion or Belief that we are already pardoned: but with an applying Acceptance of an offered pardon, and Conſent to the Covenant which maketh it ours. We believe that Chriſt hath purchaſed Remiſſion of ſin, and made a Conditional Grant of it in his Goſpel, to all, viz. if they will repent, and Believe in him, or take him for their Saviour, or become Penitent Chriſtians: And we conſent to do ſo, and to accept it on theſe terms: And we believe that all are actually pardoned that thus conſent.

§. 3. By all this you may perceive, that thoſe troubled Chriſtians which doubt not of the truth of the Word of God, but only of their own ſincerity, and conſequently of their Juſtification and Salvation, do ignorantly complain that they have not faith, or that they cannot believe: For it is no act of unbelief at all, for me to doubt whether my own heart be ſincere: This is my ignorance of my ſelf, but it is not any degree of unbelief: For Gods Word doth no where ſay that I am ſincere: And therefore I may doubt of this, without doubting of Gods Word at all. And let all troubled Chriſtians know, that they have no more belief in them, than they have doubting or unbelief of the truth of the Word of God: Even that deſpair it ſelf, which hath none of this in it, hath no unbelief in it (if there be any ſuch): I thought it needful thus far to tell you what unbelief is, before I come to give you Directions againſt it: And though the meer doubting of our own ſincerity be no unbelief at all, yet real unbelief of the very truth of the Holy Scriptures, is ſo common and dangerous a ſin, and ſome degree of it is latent in the beſt, that I think we can no way ſo much further the work of Grace, as by deſtroying this: The weakneſs of our faith in the truth of Scriptures, and the remnant of our unbelief of it, is the principal cauſe of all the Languiſhings of our Love and Obedience and every Grace; and to ſtrengthen Faith, is to ſtrengthen all. What I have fullier written in my Saints Reſt, Part 2. and my Treatiſe againſt Infidelity, I here ſuppoſe.

Dir. 1. §. 4. Direct. 1. Conſider well how much of Religion Nature it ſelf teacheth, and Reaſon (without ſupernatural Revelation) muſt needs confeſs: (as that there is another life which man was made for, and that he is obliged to the fulleſt Love and Obedience to God, and the reſt before laid down in the Introduction:) And then obſerve how congruouſly the doctrine of Chriſt comes in, to help where Nature is at a loſs, and how exactly it ſuits with Natural Truths, and how clearly it explaineth them, and fully containeth ſo much of them as are neceſſary to ſalvation: and how ſuitable and proper a means it is to attain their Ends, and how great a teſtimony the Doctrines of Nature and Grace do give unto each other. I muſt profeſs that the Nature and wonderful Difference of the Godly and Ungodly, and their converſation in the World, are perpetual viſible Evidences in my Eyes, of the truth of the Holy Scriptures.

1. That there ſhould be ſo Univerſal and implacable a hatred againſt the Godly in the common ſort of unrenewed Men, in all Ages and Nations of the Earth, when theſe Men deſerve ſo well of them, and do them no wrong; is a viſible proof of Adams Fall, and the need of a Saviour and a Sanctifier.

2. That all thoſe who are ſeriouſly Chriſtians, ſhould be ſo far renewed, and recovered from the common Corruption, as their Heavenly Minds and Lives, and their wonderful Difference from other Men ſheweth, this is a viſible Proof that Chriſtianity is of God.

3. That God doth ſo plainly ſhew a particular ſpecial Providence in the converting and confirming Souls, by differencing Grace, and work on the Soul as the ſanctified feel, doth ſhew that indeed the work is his.

4. That God doth ſo plainly grant many of his Servants Prayers, by ſpecial Providences, doth prove his owning them and his Promiſes.

5. That God ſuffereth his Servants in all times and places ordinarily to ſuffer ſo much for his Love and Service, from the World and Fleſh, doth ſhew that there is a Judgment, and Rewards, and Puniſhments hereafter. Or elſe our higheſt duty, would be our greateſt loſs; and then how ſhould his Government of Men be juſt?

6. That the Renewed Nature (which maketh Men better, and therefore is of God) doth wholly look at the life to come, and lead us to it, and live upon it, this ſheweth that ſuch a life there is, or elſe this would be delufory and vain, and Goodneſs it ſelf would be a deceit.

7. When it is undeniable that de facto eſſe, the World is not Governed without the Hopes and Fears of another life; almoſt all Nations among the Heathens believing it (and ſhewing by their very worſhipping their dead Heroes as Gods, that they believed that their Souls did live) and even the wicked generally being reſtrained by thoſe Hopes and Fears in themſelves: And alſo that de poſſe it is not poſſible the world ſhould be governed agreeably to Mans rational nature, without the Hopes and Fears of another life: But men would be worſe than Beaſts, and all Villanies would be the allowed Practice of the World. (As every Man may feel in himſelf what he were like to be and do, if he had no ſuch Reſtraint): And there being no Doctrine or Life comparable to Chriſtianity, in their tendency to the life to come: All theſe are viſible ſtanding Evidences, affiſted ſo much by common Senſe and Reaſon, and ſtill apparent to all, that they leave Infidelity without excuſe; and are ever at hand to help our Faith, and reſiſt Temptations to unbelief.

8. And if the world had not a Beginning according to the Scriptures. 1. We ſhould have found Monuments of Antiquity above ſix thouſand years old. 2. Arts and Sciences would have come to more Perfection, and Printing, Guns, &c. not have been of ſo late Invention. 3. And ſo much of America and other parts of the World would not have been yet uninhabited, unplanted, or undiſcovered.

Of Atheiſm I have ſpoken before in the Introduction; and Nature ſo clearly revealeth a God, that I take it as almoſt needleſs to ſay much of it to ſober Men.

§. 5. Direct. 2. Conſider that Mans End being in the Life to come, and God being the righteous and merciful Governour of Man in order to that End, it muſt needs be that God will give him ſufficient means to know his Will in order to that end: And that the cleareſt fulleſt means muſt needs demonſtrate moſt of the Government and Mercy of God. Dir. 2.

§. 6. Direct. 3. Conſider what full and ſad experience the World hath of its pravity and great corruption; and that the natural tendency of Reaſon is to thoſe high and excellent things, which corruption and brutiſhneſs do almoſt extinguiſh or caſt out with the moſt: and that the prevalency of the lower faculties againſt right reaſon is ſo lamentable and univerſal to the confuſion of the world, that it is enough to tell us that this is not the ſtate that God firſt made us in, and that certainly ſin hath ſullied and diſordered his work. The wickedneſs of the world is a great confirmation of the Scripture. Dir. 3.

§. 7. Direct. 4. Conſider how exactly the Doctrine of the Goſpel and Covenant of Grace is ſuited to the lapſed ſtate of Man: even as the Law of Works was ſuited to his ſtate of innocency: ſo that the Goſpel may be called the Law of Lapſed Nature as ſuited to it, (though not as revealed by it) as the other was the Law of Entire Nature. Dir. 4.

§. 8. Direct. 5. Compare the many Prophecies of Chriſt with the fulfilling of them in his Perſon. As that of Moſes recited by Stephen, Acts 7. 37. & Iſa. 53. & Dan. 9. 24, 25, 26, &c. And conſider that thoſe Jews which are the Chriſtians bittereſt enemies, acknowledge and preſerve thoſe Prophecies, and all the Old Teſtament, which giveth ſo full a Teſtimony to the New. Dir. 5.

Dir. 6. §. 9. Direct. 6. Conſider what an admirable ſuitableneſs there is in the Doctrine of Chriſt to the reliſh of a ſerious heavenly mind, and how all that is ſpiritual and truly good in us, doth cloſe with it and embrace it from a certain congruity of Natures, as the eye doth with the light, and the ſtomach with its proper food. Every good man in reading the Holy Scripture, feeleth ſomething (even all that's good) within him, bear witneſs to it. And only our worſer part is quarrelling with it, and rebels againſt it.

Dir. 7. §. 10. Direct. 7. Conſider how all the firſt Churches were planted by the ſucceſs of all thoſe Miracles mentioned in the Scripture. And that the Apoſtles and thouſands of others ſaw the Miracles of Chriſt, and the Churches ſaw the Miracles of the Apoſtles, and heard them ſpeak in Languages unlearnt: and had the ſame extraordinary gifts communicated to themſelves. And theſe being openly and frequently manifeſted, convinced unbelievers: and were openly urged by the Apoſtles to ſtop the mouths of oppoſers, and confirm believers, who would all have ſcorned his arguments, and the faith which they ſupported, if all theſe had been fictions, of which they themſelves were ſaid to be eye-witneſſes and agents. So that the very exiſtence of the Churches, was a teſtimony to the matter of fact. And what teſtimony can be greater of Gods intereſt and approbation, than Chriſts Reſurrection, and all theſe Miracles?

Gal. 3. 1, 2, 3.

Dir. 8. §. 11. Direct. 8. Conſider how no one of all the Hereticks or Apoſtates, did ever contradict the matters of fact, or hath left the world any kind of confutation of them, which they wanted not malice or encouragement, or opportunity to have done.

Dir. 9. §. 12. Direct. 9. Conſider how that no one of all thoſe thouſands that aſſerted theſe miracles have ever mentioned in any hiſtory as repenting of it, either in their health, or at the hour of death, whereas it had been ſo heinous a villany to have cheated the world in ſo great a cauſe, that ſome conſciencies of dying men, eſpecially of men that placed all their hopes in the life to come, muſt needs have repented of.

Dir. 10. §. 13 Direct. 10. Conſider that the witneſſes of all theſe Miracles, and all the Churches that believed them, were taught by their own doctrine and experience, to forſake all that they had in the world, and to be reproached, hated and perſecuted of all men, and to be as lambs among wolves, in expectation of death; and all this for the hope of that bleſſedneſs promiſed them by a Crucified Riſen Chriſt. So that no worldly end could move them to deceive or willingly to be deceived.

Dir. 11. §. 14. Direct. 11. Conſider how impoſſible it is in it ſelf, that ſo many men ſhould agree together to deceive the world and that for nothing, and at the rate of their own undoing and death, and that they ſhould all agree in the ſame narratives and doctrines ſo unanimouſly. And that none of theſe ſhould ever confeſs the deceit, and diſgrace the reſt. All things well conſidered, this will appear not only a Moral but a Natural impoſſibility: Eſpecially conſidering their quality and diſtance, there being thouſands in ſeveral countries, that never ſaw the faces of the reſt, much leſs could enter a confederacy with them, to deceive the world.

Dir. 12. §. 15. Direct. 12. Conſider the certain way by which the Doctrine and Writings of the Apoſtles and other evangelical meſſengers, hath been delivered down to us, without any poſſibility of material alteration. Becauſe the Holy Scriptures were not left only to the care of private men, or of the Chriſtians of one country, who might have agreed upon corruptions and alterations: But it was made the office of the ordinary Miniſters to read, and expound, and apply them: And every Congregation had one or more of theſe Miniſters: And the people received the Scriptures as the Law of God, and that by which they muſt live and be judged, and as their charter for Heaven: So that it was not poſſible for one Miniſter to corrupt the Scripture Text, but the reſt with the people would have quickly reproved him: Nor for thoſe of one Kingdom to bring all other Chriſtians to it throughout the world, without a great deal of conſultation and oppoſition (if at all) which never was recorded to us.

Dir. 13. §. 16. Direct. 13. Be acquainted as fully as you can with the Hiſtory of the Church, that you may know how the Goſpel hath been planted, and propagated, and aſſaulted, and preſerved until now, which will much better ſatisfie you, than general uncertain talk of others.

Dir. 14. §. 17. Direct. 14. Judge whether God being the Wiſe and Merciful Governour of the world, would ſuffer the honeſteſt and obedienteſt ſubjects that he hath upon earth, to be deceived in a matter of ſuch importance, by pretence of Doctrines and Miracles proceeding from himſelf, and which none but (or God by his ſpecial grant) is able to do, without diſowning them, or giving any ſufficient means to the world to diſcover the deceit. For certainly he needeth not deceit to govern us. If you ſay that he permits Mahometaniſm, I anſwer, 1. The main poſitive doctrine of the Mahometans, for the worſhipping of one only God againſt Idolatry, is true: And the by-fancies of their pretended Prophet are not commended to the world upon the pretence of atteſting Miracles at all, but upon the affirmation of revelations without any credible ſeal or Divine atteſtation, and obtruded on the world by the power of the ſword. 2. And God hath given the world ſufficient preſervatives againſt them, in the nullity of the proof of them, and the evident foppery of the writings and the things themſelves. So that honeſty and diligence will eaſily eſcape them.

Dir. 15. §. 18. Direct. 15. Obſerve the ſupernatural effects of the Goſpel upon the ſouls of believers: How it planteth on man the Image of the Holy God: Powerfully ſubduing both ſenſe and the greateſt intereſt of the fleſh to the will of God, and making men Wiſe and Good: and putting an admirable difference between them and all other men: And then judge whether it be not Gods ſeal having his Image firſt upon it ſelf, which he doth uſe and honour to be the inſtrument of imprinting his Image upon us.

Dir. 15. Pietas fundamentum eſt omnium virtutum. Cicer. pro Plan.

Dir. 16. §. 19. Direct. 16. Mark well the certain Vanity of all other Religions that prevail on the earth: Idolatry and Mahometaniſm which openly bear the mark of their own ſhame, have ſhared between them almoſt all the reſt of the earth: For meer Deiſm is ſcarce any where in Poſſeſſion, and Judaiſm hath no conſiderable inheritance, and both of them as ſenſibly confuted by mans corruption, neceſſity and deſert.

Dir. 17. §. 20. Direct. 17. Mark the great difference between the Chriſtian part of the world, (thoſe that receive Chriſtianity ſeriouſly and in ſincerity) and all the reſt: Thoſe that are fartheſt from Chriſtianity, are fartheſt from piety, honeſty, civility or any laudable parts or converſations: Moſt of them are beaſtly and ungodly: And the reſt are but a little better: And ignorance and brutiſhneſs cannot be the perfection of a man. Nay, among profeſſed Chriſtians, the multitudes that have but the Name, and hate the Nature and Practice of it, are like Swine or Wolves; and ſome of the worſt, near kin to Devils: When all that receive Chriſtianity practically into their hearts and lives, are heavenly and holy, and (in the ſame meaſure that they receive it) their ſins are all mortified; and they are devoted to God, and poſſeſſed with Juſtice, Charity and Patience to men, and are carried up above this world, and contemn that which the reſt do make their felicity and delight. So that if that be Good which doth Good, then

Dir. 17. Xenophon reporteth Cyrus as ſaying, If all my ſubjects were endued with piety to God, they would do leſs evil to one another and to me, l. 8.

then is the Goodneſs of the Chriſtian faith, apparent to all, that have any acquaintance, reaſon and impartiality to judge.

Dir. 18. Pietate adempta Deos fabulâ, nec vos etiam & ſocietas humani generis, & una excellentiſſima virtus juſtitia, tollatur neceſſe eſt. Cicero de Nat. Deo. 1 § 21. Direct. 18. Bethink you what you ſhould have been your ſelves if you had not been Chriſtians? Yet what would yet be the conſequent if you ſhould fall from the Chriſtian faith? Would you not look at the life to come as doubtful? And reſolve to take your pleaſure in the world, and to gratifie the fleſh, and to neglect your ſouls, and to venture upon almoſt any vice, that ſeemeth neceſſary to your carnal ends. Chriſtianity hath cleanſed and ſanctified you if you are ſanctified: And if (which God forbid) you ſhould forſake Chriſtianity, it is moſt likely you would quickly ſhew the difference, by your dirty, fleſhly, worldly lives.

Dir. 19. §. 22. Direct. 19. When you ſee the evidence of Divine Revelation and authority, it is enough to ſilence your doubts and cavils about particular words or circumſtances. For you know that God is True and Infallible; and you know that you are ſilly ignorant worms, that are utterly at a loſs, when you have not one at hand to open every difficulty to you: And that all arts and ſciences ſeem full of difficulties and contradictions to ignorant unexperienced novices.

Dir. 20. §. 23. Direct. 20. Allow all along in your learning, for the difficulties which muſt needs ariſe, from the tranſlation, ambiguity of all humane language, change and variety of words and cuſtoms, time, place and other circumſtances, and eſpecially from your own unacquainted with all theſe: That ſo your own infirmities and ignorance, and miſtakes in reaſoning, may not be aſcribed to the truth.

Dir. 21. §. 24. Direct. 21. Underſtand the proper uſe of holy Scripture, and ſo how far it is Divine; that ſo you be not tempted to unbelief, by expecting in it that which never was intended, and then finding your cauſleſs expectations fruſtrate. It is not ſo Divine as to the terms, and ſtyle, and order, and ſuch modal and circumſtantial matters, as if all the exactneſs might be expected in it, that God could put into a Book: Nor is it intended as a ſyſtem of Phyſicks, or Logick, or any ſubſervient ſciences or arts: But it is an Infallible Revelation of the will of God, for the Government of the Church, and the conducting men to life eternal: And it is ordered and worded ſo as to partake of ſuch humane infirmity, as yet ſhall no way impeach the Truth or efficacy of it; but rather make it more ſuitable to the generality of men, whoſe infirmity required ſuch a ſtyle and manner of handling. So that as a child of God hath a Body from Parents, which yet is of God, but ſo of God, as to partake of the infirmities of the parents; or rather as Adam had a body from God, but yet from Earth; and accordingly frail; but a ſoul more immediately from God, which was more pure and divine: ſo Scripture hath its ſtyle, and language, and method ſo from God, as to have nothing in it unſuitable to its ends; but not ſo from God, as if he himſelf had ſhewed in it his own moſt perfect wiſdom to the utmoſt, and as if there were nothing in it of humane imperfection: But the Truth and Goodneſs which is the ſoul of Scripture, is more immediately from God. The ſtyle and method of the penmen may be various; but the ſame ſoul animateth all the parts. It is no diſhonour to the Holy Scriptures, if Cicero be preferred for purity of ſtyle, and phraſe, and oratory, as for other common uſes: But certainly it is to be preferred as to its proper uſe: that being the beſt ſtyle for an Act of Parliament, which is next to the worſt in an Oration. The means are for the end.

Dir. 22. §. 25. Direct 22. Conſider how great aſſiſtance Apparition, and Witch-crafts, and other ſenſible Evidences of Spirits converſing with mankind, do give to faith. Of which I have written in the forementioned Treatiſes, and therefore now paſs it over.

Dir. 23. §. 26. Direct. 23. Conſider what advantage faith may have, by obſerving the nature and tendency of the ſoul, and its hopes and fears of a life to come, together with the ſuperior glorious worlds, which certainly are poſſeſſed by nobler inhabitants. He that ſeeth every corner of the Earth, and ſea, and air inhabited, and thinks what earth is in compariſon of all the great and glorious Orbes above it, will hardly once dream that they are all void of inhabitants, or that there is not room enough for ſouls. See my Book called A Saint or a Brute.

Dir. 24. §. 27. Direct. 24. The miniſtry of Angels, of which particular providences give us a great probability, doth give ſome help to that doctrine which telleth us, that we muſt live with Angels; and that we ſhall aſcend to more familiarity with them, who condeſcend to ſo great ſervice now for us.

Dir. 25. §. 28. Direct. 25. The univerſal wonderful implacable enmity of corrupted man to the holy doctrine and wayes and ſervants of Chriſt, and the open war which in every Kingdom, and the ſecret war which in every heart, is kept up between Chriſt and Satan through the world; with the tendency of every temptation, their violence, conſtancy, in all ages, to all perſons, all making againſt Chriſt and Heaven and Holineſs, do notoriouſly declare that the Chriſtian doctrine and life do tend to our ſalvation, which the Devil ſo maliciouſly and unceſſantly oppoſeth. And thus his Temptations give great advantage to the tempted ſoul againſt the Tempter. For it is not for nothing that the enemy of our ſouls makes ſo much oppoſition. And that there is ſuch a Devil that thus oppoſeth Chriſt and tempteth us, not only ſenſible Apparitions and Witch-crafts prove, but the too ſenſible temptations, which by their Matter and Manner, plainly tell us whence they come. Eſpecially when all the world, is formed as into two hoſtile Armies, the one fighting under Chriſt, and the other under the Devil; and ſo have continued ſince Cain and Abel to this day.

Dir. 26. §. 29. Direct. 26. The prophecies of Chriſt himſelf of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the gathering of his Church, and the cruel uſage of it through the world, do give great aſſiſtance to our faith, when we ſee them all ſo punctually fulfilled.

Dir. 27. §. 30. Direct. 27. Mark whether it be not a reſpect to things temporal that aſſaulteth thy Belief, and come not with a byaſſed ſenſual mind to ſearch into ſo great a myſtery. Worldlineſs, and pride, and ſenſuality are deadly enemies to faith; and where they prevail they will ſhew their enmity, and blind the mind: If the ſoul be ſunk into mud and filth, it cannot ſee the things of God.

Dir. 28 §. 31. Direct. 28. Come with humility and a ſenſe of your ignorance, and not with arrogance and ſelf-conceit, as if all muſt needs be wrong that your empty fooliſh minds cannot preſently perceive to be right. The famouſeſt Apoſtates that ever I knew, were all men of notorious Pride and ſelf conceitedneſs.

Dir. 29. §. 32. Direct. 29. Provoke not God by wilful ſinning againſt the Light which thou haſt already received, to forſake thee, and give thee over to infidelity; 2 Theſſ. 2. 10, 11, 12. Becauſe men receive not the Love of the truth that they might be ſaved, for this cauſe God ſends them ſtrong deluſions to believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. Obey Chriſts doctrine ſo far as you know it, and you ſhall fullier know it to be of God, John 7. 17. & 10. 4.

Dir. 30. §. 33. Direct. 30. Tempt not your ſelves to Infidelity by pretended Humility, in abaſing your Natural faculties, when you ſhould be humbled for your moral pravity: Vilifying the ſoul, and its Reaſon and Natural Free-will, doth tend to Infidelity, by making us think that we are but as other inferior animals.

mals, uncapable of a life above with God: When as self-abasing because of the corruption of Reason and Free-will, doth tend to shew us the need of a Physician, and so assist our faith in Christ.

Dir. 31. §. 34. Direct. 31. Judge not of so great a thing by sudden apprehensions, or the surprize of a temptation, when you have not leisure to look up all the evidences of faith, and lay them together, and take a full deliberate view of all the cause. It is a mystery so great as requireth a clear and vacant mind, delivered from prejudice, abstracted from diverting and deceiving things; which upon the best assistance, and with the greatest diligence, must lay all together to discern the truth. And if upon the best assistance and consideration you have been convinced of the truth, and then will let every sudden thought, or temptation, or difficulty seem enough to question all again, this is unfaithfulness to the truth, and the way to resist the clearest evidences, and never to have done. It is like as if you should answer your adversary in the Court, when your witnesses are all dismist, or out of the way, and all your evidences are absent, and perhaps your Counsellor and Advocate too. It is like the casting up of a long and intricate account, which a man hath finished by study and time, and when he hath done all, one questioneth this particular, and another that, when his accounts are absent: It is not fit for him to answer all particulars, nor question his own accounts, till he have as full opportunity and help to cast up all again.

Dir. 32. §. 35. Direct. 32. If the work seem too hard for you, go and consult with the wisest most experienced Christians, who can easily answer the difficulties which most perplex and tempt you. Modesty will tell you that the advantage of study and experience may make every one wisest in his own profession, and set others above you while you have less of these.

Dir. 33. §. 36. Direct. 33. Remember that Christianity being the surest way to secure your eternal hopes, and the matters of this life which cause men to forsake it, being such transitory trifles, you can be no losers by it, and therefore if you doubted, yet you might be sure that it's the safest way.

Dir. 34. §. 37. Direct. 34. Judge not of so great a cause in a time of Melancholy, when fears and confusions make you unfit; But in such a case as that, as also when ever Satan would disturb your setled faith, or tempt you at his pleasure, to be still new questioning resolved cases, and discerned truths, abhor his suggestions, and give them no entertainment in your thoughts, but cast them back into the Tempters face. There is not one Melancholy person of a multitude, but is violently assaulted with temptations to blasphemy and unbelief, when they have but half the use of Reason and no composedness of mind to debate such controversies with the Devil: It is not fit for them in this incapacity to hearken to any of those suggestions, which draw them to dispute the foundations of their faith, but to cast them away with resolute abhorrence: Nor should any Christian that is soundly setled on the true foundation, gratifie the Devil so much as to dispute with him when ever he provoketh us to it, but only endeavour to strengthen our Faith, and destroy the remnants of unbelief.

§. 38. Direct. 35. Remember that Christ doth propagate his Religion conjunctly by his spirit and his word, and effecteth himself the faith which he commandeth: For though there be sufficient evidence of credibility in his word, yet the blinded Mind and corrupt perverted hearts of men, do need the cure of his medicinal Grace, before they will effectually and savingly believe a doctrine which is so holy, high and heavenly, and doth so much control their lusts See therefore that you distrust your corrupted hearts, and earnestly beg the spirit of Christ.

§. 39. Direct. 36. Labour earnestly for the Love of every Truth which you believe, and to feel the renewing power of it upon your hearts; and the reforming power on your lives; especially that you may be advanced to the love of God, and to a Heavenly mind and life: And this will be a most excellent help against all temptations to unbelief. For, the Heart holdeth the Gospel much faster than the Head alone. The seed that is cast into the earth if it quicken and take root, is best preserved; and the deeper rooted the surer it abideth: but if it die, it perisheth and is gone. When the seed of the holy word hath produced the new creature, it is sure and safe: But when it is retained only in the brain as a dead Opinion, every temptation can overturn it. It is an excellent advantage that the serious practical Christian hath, above all hypocrites and unsanctified men: Love will hold faster than dead belief. Love is the Grace that abideth for ever; and that is the enduring faith which works by Love. The experienced Christian hath felt so much of the power and Goodness of the word, that if you puzzle his head with subtile reasonings against it, yet his heart and experience will not suffer him to let it go. He hath tasted it so sweet, that he will not believe it to be bitter, though he cannot answer all that is said against it. If another would perswade you to believe ill of your dearest friend or Father, Love and experience would better preserve you from his deceit, than reasoning would do. The new creature, or new nature in believers, and the experience of Gods Love communicated by Jesus Christ unto their souls, are constant witnesses to the word of God: He that believeth hath the witness in himself; that is, The Holy Ghost which was given him, which is an objective testimony or an evidence, and an effective. Of this see my Treatise of Infidelity. Unsanctified men may be easilier turned to Infidelity, for they never felt the renewed quickning work of faith; nor were ever brought by it to the Love of God and a holy and heavenly mind and life. They that never were Christians at the Heart, are soonest turned from being Christians in opinion and name. Dir. 35.

Quest. By what Reason, evidence or obligation were the Jews bound to believe the Prophets? Seeing Isaiah, Jeremy, Ezekiel, &c. wrought no miracles, and there were false prophets in their daies; How then could any man know that indeed they were sent of God, when they nakedly affirmed it?

Answ. I mention this objection or case, because in my book of the Reas. of Christian Religion (to which for all the rest I refer the Reader) it is forgotten: And because it is one of the hardest questions about our faith.

1. Those that think that every book of Scripture doth now prove it self to be Divine propria luce, by its own matter, style and other properties, will accordingly say, that by Hearing the Prophets then, as well as by Reading them now, this intrinsick satisfactory evidence was discernable. All that I can say of this is, that there are such Characters in the Prophecies as are a help to faith, as making it the more easily credible that they are of God, but not such as I could have been ascertained by (especially as delivered by parcels then,) if there had been no more.

2. Nor do I acquiesce in their answer who say that, Those that have the same spirit, know the stile of the spirit in the Prophets. For, 1. This would suppose none capable of believing them groundedly that had not the same spirit; 2. And the spirit of sanctification is not enough to our discerning Prophetical inspirations, as reason and experience fully proveth. The gift of discerning spirits, 1 Cor. 12. 10. was not common to all the sanctified.

3. It is much to be obſerved, that God never ſent any Prophet to make a Law or Covenant on which the ſalvation of the people did depend, without the atteſtation of unqueſtionable Miracles. Moſes wrought numerous open miracles, and ſuch as controlled and confuted the contradicters ſeeming Miracles in Egypt. And Chriſt and his Apoſtles wrought more than Moſes. So that the Laws and Covenants by which God would rule and judge the people, were all confirmed beyond all ſuch exception.

4. It muſt be noted that many other Prophets alſo wrought Miracles to confirm their Doctrine, and prove that they were ſent of God, as did Elias, and Eliſha.

5. It muſt be noted, that there were Schools of Prophets, or ſocieties of them in thoſe times, 1 Sam. 10.10. & 19.20. 1 Kings 20.35,41. & 22.13. 2 Kings 2.3,5,7,15. & 4.1,38. & 5.22. & 6.1. & 9.1. 1 Cor. 14.32. Who were educated in ſuch a way as fitted them to the reception of prophetical inſpirations, when it pleaſed God to give them. Not that meer education made any one a Prophet, nor that the Prophets had at all times the preſent actual gift of Prophecy; but God was pleaſed ſo far to own mens commanded diligence, as to joyn his bleſſing to a meet education, and at ſuch times as he thought meet, to illuminate ſuch by Viſions and Revelations above all others. And therefore it is ſpoken of Amos as a thing extraordinary, that he was made a Prophet of a herdſman.

6. Therefore a Prophet among the Jews was known to be ſuch, uſually, before theſe Recorded Prophecies of theirs, which we have now in the Holy Scriptures: 1. The ſpirits of the Prophets which are ſubject to the Prophets, were judged of by thoſe Prophets that had indeed the Spirit: And ſo the people had the teſtimony of the other Prophets concerning them. 2. The Lords own direction to know a true Prophet by, Deut. 18.22. is the coming to paſs of that which he foretelleth. Now it is like that before they were received into the number of Prophets, they had given ſatisfaction to the ſocieties of the Prophets, by the events of things before foretold by them. 3. Or they might have wrought miracles before to have ſatisfied the members of the Colledge of their calling, though theſe Miracles are not all mentioned in the Scripture. 4. Or the other Prophets might have ſome Divine teſtimony concerning them, by viſions, revelations or inſpirations of their own. So that the people were not left to the credulity of naked unproved aſſertions, of any one that would ſay that he was ſent of God.

7. There were ſome ſigns given by ſome of the Prophets to confirm their word: As Iſaiahs predictions of Hezekiahs danger, and remedy, and recovery, and of the going back of the ſhadow on Ahaz dyal ten degrees, &c. And more ſuch there might be, which we know not of.

8. All Prophecies were not of equal obligation. The firſt Prophecies of any Prophet who brought no atteſtation by Miracles, nor had yet ſpoken any Prophecy that had been fulfilled, might be a merciful revelation from God, which might oblige the hearers to a reverent regard, and an enquiry into the authority of the Prophet, and a waiting in ſuſpenſe till they ſaw whether it would come to paſs: And the fulfilling of it increaſeth their obligation. Some Prophecies that foretold but temporal things (captivities or deliverances) might at firſt (before the Prophets produced a Divine atteſtation) be rather a bare prediction than a Law; and if men believed them not, it might not make them guilty of any damning ſin at all, but only they refuſed that warning of a temporal judgment, which might have been of uſe to them, had they received it.

9. But our obligation now to believe the ſame Scripture Prophecies is greater; becauſe we live in the ages when moſt of them are fulfilled, and the reſt are atteſted by Chriſt and his Apoſtles who proved their atteſtations by manifold Miracles.

10. When the Prophets reproved the known ſins of the people, and called men to ſuch duties as the Law required, no man could ſpeed ill by obeying ſuch a Prophet; becauſe the Matter of his Prophecies was found in Gods own Law, which muſt of neceſſity be obeyed. And this is the chief part of the recorded Prophecies.

11. And any man that ſpake againſt any part of Gods Law (of natural or ſuper-natural revelation) was not to be believed, Deut. 13. & 18. Becauſe God cannot ſpeak contrary to himſelf.

12. But the Prophets themſelves had another kind of obligation to believe their own Viſions and Inſpirations, than any of their hearers had: For Gods great extraordinary Revelation, was like the Light, which immediately revealed it ſelf, and conſtrained the underſtanding to know that it was of God: And ſuch were the Revelations that came by Angelical apparitions, and Viſions. Therefore Prophets themſelves might be bound to more, than their bare word could have bound their hearers to. As to wound themſelves, to go bare, to feed on dung, &c. And this was Abrahams caſe in offering Iſaac. Yet God did never command a Prophet, or any by a Prophet, a thing ſimply evil, but only ſuch things as were of a mutable nature, and which his will could alter, and make to be good. And ſuch was the caſe of Abraham himſelf, if well conſidered.

PART II.

Directions againſt Hardneſs of Heart.

§. 1. IT is neceſſary that ſome Chriſtians be better informed what Hardneſs of Heart is who moſt complain of it. The Metaphor is taken from the Hardneſs of any matter which a workman would make an impreſſion on: And it ſignifieth the paſſive and active Reſiſtance of the heart againſt the Word and Works of God: When it receiveth not the impreſſions which the Word ſhould make, and obeyeth not Gods Commands, but after great and powerful means remaineth as it was before, unmoved, unaffected, and diſobedient. So that Hardneſs of heart is not a diſtinct ſin, but the habitual power of every ſin, or the deadneſs, unmoveableneſs and obſtinacy of the heart in any ſin. So many duties and ſins as there be, ſo many ways may the heart be hardned againſt the Word which forbiddeth thoſe ſins, and commandeth thoſe duties. It is therefore an error that hath had very ill conſequents on many perſons, to think that Hardneſs of Heart is nothing but a want of paſſionate feeling in the matters which concern the ſoul; eſpecially a want of ſorrow and tears. This hath made them over-careful for ſuch tears, and grief, and paſſions, and dangerouſly to make light of the many greater inſtances of the Hardneſs of their Hearts. Many beginners in Religion (who are taken up in penitential duties) do think that all Repentance is nothing, but a change of opinion, except they have thoſe paſſionate griefs, and tears, which indeed would well become the penitent: And hereupon they take more pains with themſelves to affect their hearts with ſorrow for ſin, and to wring out tears, than they do for many greater duties: But when God calleth them to Love him, and to Praiſe him, and to be Thankful for his Mercies, or to love an enemy, or forgive a wrong; when he calleth calleth them to mortify their earthly mindedneſs, their carnality, their pride, their paſſion, or their diſobedience, they yield but little to his call, and ſhew here much greater Hardneſs of Heart, and yet little complain of this, or take notice of it. I intreat you therefore to obſerve, that the greater the Duty is, the worſe it is to harden the Heart againſt it: And the greater the ſin is, the worſe it is to Harden the heart by obſtinacy in it. And that the great duties are, The love of God and Man, with a mortified and heavenly mind and life, and to reſiſt Gods Word commanding theſe is the great and dangerous Hardning of the Heart. The life of grace lyeth, 1. In the preferring of God, and Heaven, and Holineſs in the Eſtimation of our minds before all worldly things: 2. In the Chooſing them, and Reſolving for them with our Wills, before all others: 3. In the Seeking of them in the bent and drift of our Endeavours. Theſe three make up a ſtate of Holineſs. But for ſtrength of parts, or memory, or expreſſion, and ſo for paſſionate affections of ſorrow, or joy, or the tears that expreſs them, all theſe in their time, and place, and meaſure are deſireable, but not of neceſſity to ſalvation, or to the life of grace. They follow much the temperature of the body, and ſome have much of them that have little or no grace, and ſome want them that have much grace. The work of Repentance conſiſteth moſt in loathing and falling out with our ſelves for our ſins, and in forſaking them with abhorrence, and turning unto God; And he that can do this without tears, is truly penitent, and he that hath never ſo many tears without this, is impenitent ſtill. And that is the hard hearted ſinner that will not be wrought to a love of Holineſs, nor let go his ſin, when God commandeth him; but after all exhortations and mercies, and perhaps afflictions is ſtill the ſame, as if he had never been admoniſhed, or took no notice what God hath been ſaying or doing to reclaim him. Having thus told you what Hardneſs of Heart is, you may ſee that I have given you Directions againſt it at large before, Chap. 3. Direct. 6. &. 8. but ſhall add theſe few.

Non tamen ideo beatus eſt, quia patienter miſer eſt, Auguſt de Civit. l. 14. c. 25.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. Remember the Majeſty and Preſence of that Moſt Holy God, with whom we have to do, Heb. 4. 13. Nothing will more affect and awe the heart, and over-rule it in the matters of Religion, than the true knowledge of God. We will not talk ſleepily or contemptuouſly to a King: How much leſs ſhould we be ſtupid or contemptuous before the God of Heaven? It is that God whom Angels worſhip, that ſuſtaineth the world, that keepeth us in life, that is always preſent, obſerving all that we think, or ſay, or do, whoſe Commands are upon us, and with whom we have to do in all things; and ſhall we be hardned againſt his fear? Who hath hardned himſelf againſt him and hath proſpered? Job 9. 4.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. Think well of the unſpeakable greatneſs and importance of thoſe Truths and Things which ſhould affect you, and of thoſe Duties which are required of you: Eternity of Joy or Torment is ſuch an amazing thing, that one would think every thought, and every mention either of it, or of any thing that concerneth it, ſhould go to our very hearts, and deeply affect us, and ſhould command the obedience and ſervice of our Souls. It is true, they are things unſeen, and therefore leſs apt in that reſpect to affect us, than things viſible: But the Greatneſs of them ſhould recompence that diſadvantage a thouſand fold. If our lives lay upon every word we ſpeak, or upon every ſtep we go, how carefully ſhould we ſpeak and go? But O how deeply ſhould things affect us which our everlaſting life is concerned in? One would think a thing of ſo great moment, as dying and paſſing into an endleſs life of pain or pleaſure, ſhould ſo take up and tranſport the mind of man, that we ſhould have much ado to bring our ſelves to mind, regard, or talk of the inconſiderable intereſts of the fleſh. How unexcuſable a thing, is a ſenſeleſs, careleſs, negligent heart, when God looketh on us, and Heaven or Hell is a little before us? Yea, when we are ſo heavily laden with our ſins, and compaſſed about with ſo many enemies, and in the midſt of ſuch great and manifold dangers, to be yet ſenſeleſs under all, is (ſo far) to be dead. Will not the wounds of ſin, and the threatnings of the Law, and the accuſations of conſcience make you feel? He that cannot feel the prick of a Pin, will feel the ſtab of a Dagger, if he be alive.

Dir. 3. Lento gradu ad vindictam ſui Divina proceditira: tarditatemque ſupplicii gravitate compenſat. Valerius Max. de Dionyſ. l. 1. c. 2.

§. 4. Direct. 3. Remember how near the time is when ſtupidity and ſenſeleſs neglect of God will be baniſhed from all the world: and what certain and powerful means are before you at death and judgment, to awaken and pierce the hardeſt heart. There are but few that are quite inſenſible at death: There are none paſt feeling after death, in Heaven or Hell. No man will ſtand before the Lord in the day of Judgment, with a ſleepy or a ſenſleſs heart. God will recover your feeling by miſery, if you will loſe it by ſin, and not recover it by Grace. He can make you now a terrour to your ſelves, Jer. 20. 4. He can make conſcience ſay ſuch things in ſecret to you, as you ſhall not be able to forget or ſlight. But if conſcience awake you not, the approach of Death it's likely will awake you; when you ſee that God is now in earneſt with you, and that dye you muſt, and there is no remedy, will you not begin to think now whither muſt I go? and what will become of me for ever? Will you then harden your heart againſt God and his warnings? If you do, the firſt moment of your entrance upon Eternity, will cure your ſtupidity for ever. It would grieve a heart that is not ſtone, to think what a feeling ſtony hearted ſinners will ſhortly have: When God will purpoſely make them feel, with his wrathful ſtreams of fire and brimſtone? When Satan that now hindreth your feeling, will do his worſt to make you feel; and Conſcience, the never dying Worm, will gnaw your hearts, and make them feel without eaſe or hope of remedy. Think what a wakening day is coming.

Dir. 4 §. 5. Direct. 4. Think often of the Love of God in Chriſt, and of the Bloody Sufferings of thy Redeemer; for it hath a mighty power to melt the heart. If Love, and the Love of God, and ſo great and wonderful a Love, will not ſoften thy hardned heart, what will?

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. Labour for a full Apprehenſion of the Evil and Danger of a hardned Heart. It is the Death of the ſoul, ſo far as it prevaileth: At the eaſieſt it is like the ſtupidity of a paralytical member, or a ſeared part: Obſerve the Names which Scripture giveth it. The Hardning of the heart, Prov. 28. 14. The hardning of the neck, Prov. 29. 10. which ſignifieth Inflexibility: The hardning the Face, which ſignifieth impudency, Prov. 21. 29. The ſearedneſs of the Conſcience, 1 Tim. 4. 2. The Impenitency of the heart: Rom. 2. 5. Sometime it is called, ſottiſhneſs or ſtupidity: Jer. 4. 22. Sometime it is called a not caring, or not laying things to heart; and not regarding: Iſa. 42. 25. & 5. 12. & 32. 9, 10, 11. Sometime it is denominated metaphorically from inanimates, A Face harder than a Rock: Jer. 5. 3. Stony Hearts, Ezek. 11. 19. & 36. 26. A neck with an Iron ſinew: Iſa. 48. 4. and a bow of Braſs. It is called ſleep, and a deep ſlumber, and a Spirit of ſlumber, Rom. 13. 11. & 11. 8. Matth. 25. 5. and Death it ſelf, 1 Tim. 5. 6. Epheſ. 2. 1, 5. Col. 2. 13. Jude 12.

§. 7. Obſerve alſo how dreadful a caſe it is, if it be predominant, both ſymptomatically and effectively.

ly. It is the Fore-runner of miſchief, Prov. 28. 14. It is a dreadful ſign of one that is far more unlikely than others to be converted: when they are alienated from the Life of God by their ignorance, and are paſt feeling, they are given up to work uncleanneſs with greedineſs, Ephel. 4. 14. Uſually God calleth thoſe that he will ſave, before they are paſt feeling: Though ſuch are not hopeleſs, their hope lyeth in the recovering of the Feeling which they want: And a hardned heart, and Iron Neck, and brazen Forehead, is a ſadder ſign of Gods diſpleaſure, than if he had made the Heavens as Braſs, and the Earth as Iron to you, or let out the greateſt diſtreſs upon your Bodies. When Men have Eyes and ſee not, and ears and hear not, and hearts but underſtand not, it is a ſad prognoſtick that they are very unlikely to be converted and forgiven, Mark 4. 12. Acts 28. 27. A hardned heart (predominantly) is garriſoned and fortified by Satan, againſt all the means that we can uſe to help them: and none but the Almighty can caſt him out and deliver them. Let Husband, or Wife, or Parents, or the deareſt Friends intreat a hardned ſinner to be converted, and he will not hear them. Let the learnedeſt, or wiſeſt, or holieſt Man alive both preach, and beſeech him, and he will not turn. At a diſtance he may reverence and honour a great Divine, and a learned, or a holy Man, eſpecially when they are dead: But let the beſt man on earth be the Miniſter of the place where he liveth, and intreat him daily to repent, and he will either hate and perſecute him, or neglect and diſobey him. What Miniſter was ever ſo learned, or holy, or powerful a Preacher, that had not ſad Experience of this? When the Prophet, Iſa. 53. 1. cryeth out, Who hath believed our report? And the Apoſtles were fain to ſhake off the duſt of their Feet againſt many that rejected them; and were abuſed, and ſcorned, and perſecuted by thoſe whoſe ſouls they would have ſaved? Nay, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf was refuſed by the moſt that heard him: And no Miniſter dare compare himſelf with Chriſt. If our Lord and Maſter was blaſphemed, ſcorned and murdered by ſinners, what better ſhould his ableſt Miniſters expect? St. Auguſtine found Drunkenneſs ſo common in Africk, that he motioned that a Council might be called for the ſuppreſſion of it: But if a General Council of all the Learned Biſhops and Paſtors in the World were called, they could not convert one hardned ſinner, by all their Authority, Wit, or Diligence, without the power of the Almighty God. For will they be converted by Man, that are hardned againſt God? What can we deviſe to ſay to them that can reach their hearts, and get within them, and do them good? Shall we tell them of the Law and Judgments of the Lord, and of his wrath againſt them? Why all theſe things they have heard ſo often till they ſleep under it, or laugh at them. Shall we tell them of Death, and Judgment, and Eternity? Why we ſpeak to the Poſts or men aſleep: They hear us as if they heard us not. Shall we tell them of endleſs Joy and Torments? They feel not, and therefore fear not, nor regard not: They have heard of all theſe, till they are aweary of hearing them, and our words ſeem to them, but as the noiſe of the Wind or Water, which is of no ſignification. If Miracles were wrought among them by a Preacher, that healed the ſick, and raiſed the dead, they would wonder at him, but would not be converted. For Chriſt did thus, and yet prevailed but with few, John 11. 48. 53. And the Apoſtles wrought Miracles and yet were rejected by the moſt, Acts 7. 57. & 22. 22. Nay, if one of their old companions ſhould be ſent from the dead to give them warning, he might affright them, but not convert them; for Chriſt hath told us ſo himſelf, Luke 16. 31. Or if an Angel from Heaven ſhould preach to them, they would be hardned ſtill, as Balaam and others have been. Chriſt roſe from the dead, and yet was after that rejected. We read not of the Converſion of the Souldiers that watcht his Sepulchre, though they were affrighted with the ſight of the Angels; but they were after that hired for a little money, to lye, and ſay that Chriſts Diſciples ſtole him away. If Magiſtrates that have power on their bodies, ſhould endeavour to bring them to Godlineſs, they would not obey them, nor be perſwaded. King Hezekiah's meſſengers were but mocked by the People. David and Solomon could not convert their hardned Subjects. Puniſh them and hang them, and they will be wicked to the death: Witneſs the impenitent Thief that dyed with Chriſt, and dyed reproaching him. Though God afflict them with rod after rod, yet ſtill they ſin and are the ſame: Pſal. 78. Hoſ. 7. 14. Amos 4. 9. Jer. 5. 3. Iſa. 1. 5. Let death come near and look them in the face, and let them ſee that they muſt preſently go to judgment, it will affright them, but not convert them. Let them know and confeſs that ſin is bad, that Holineſs is beſt, that death and eternity are at hand, yet are they the ſame, and all will not win their hearts to God: Till Grace take away their ſtony hearts, and give them tender fleſhly hearts, Ezek. 36. 26.

§. 8. Direct. 6. Take notice of the doleful effects of hard heartedneſs in the world. This fills the world with wickedneſs and confuſion; with Wars and bloodſhed, and leaveth it under that lamentable deſertion and deluſion, which we behold in the far greateſt part of the Earth. How many Kingdoms are left in the blindneſs of Heatheniſm and Mahometaniſm, for hardning their hearts againſt the Lord! How many Chriſtian Nations are given up to the moſt groſs deceits of Popery, and Princes and People are enemies to Reformation; becauſe they hardned their hearts againſt the light of truth. What vice ſo odious, even beaſtly filthineſs, and bittereſt hatred and perſecution of the ways of God, which men of all degrees and ranks, do not ſecurely wallow in through the hardneſs of their hearts? This is the thing that grieves the godly, that wearieth good Magiſtrates, and breaks the hearts of faithful Miniſters: when they have done their beſt, they are fain, as Chriſt himſelf before them, to grieve for the hardneſs of Mens hearts. Alas, we live among the dead: Our Towns and Countries are in a ſadder caſe than Ægypt, when every houſe had a dead man. Even in our Churches it were well if the dead were only under ground, and moſt of our ſeats had not a dead man, that ſitteth as if he heard, and kneeleth as if he prayed, when nothing ever pierced to the quick. We have ſtudied the moſt quickning words! we have preached with tears in the moſt earneſt manner, and yet we cannot make them feel: As if we cried like Baals worſhippers, O Baal hear us; or like the Iriſh to their dead [Why wouldſt thou dye, and leave thy houſe, and lands, and friends?] So we talk to them about the death of their ſouls, and their wilful miſery, who never feel the weight of any thing we ſay: we are left to ring them a peal of lamentation, and weep over them as the dead that are not moved by our tears: we caſt the ſeed into ſtony Ground, Matth. 13. 5, 20. It ſtops in the ſurface, and it is not in our power to open their hearts, and get within them. I confeſs that we are much to blame our ſelves, that ever we did ſpeak to ſuch miſerable ſouls without more importunate earneſtneſs and tears: (and it is becauſe the ſtone of the heart is much uncured in our ſelves; for which God now juſtly layeth ſo many of us by:) But yet we muſt ſay our importunity is ſuch, as leaveth them without excuſe: we ſpeak to them of the greateſt matters in all the world: we ſpeak it to them in the name of God: we ſhew them his own word for it; and pleid with them the Arguments which he hath put into our mouths: and yet we ſpeak as to poſts and ſtones, to men paſt feeling. What a pitiful ſight was it to ſee Chriſt ſtand weeping over Jeruſalem, for the hardneſs of their hearts, and the nearneſs and greatneſs of their miſery? while they themſelves were ſo far from weeping for it, that they raged againſt the life of him that ſo much pityed them? We bleſs God that it is not thus with all: He hath encouraged ſome of us with the heart-yielding obedient attention of many great Congregations: But among the beſt, alas, how many of theſe hardned ſinners are mixed? and in many places how do they abound? Hence it is that ſuch odious abominations are committed; ſuch filthineſs, and lying, and perjury, and acts of malicious enmity againſt the ſervants of the Lord; and that ſo many are haters of God and Godlineſs. If Satan had not firſt hardned their hearts, he could never have brought them to ſuch odious crimes, as now with impudency are committed in the Land. As Lots daughters were fain to make their Father drunk, that he might commit the ſin of inceſt; ſo the Devil doth firſt deprive men both of reaſon and feeling, that he might bring them to ſuch heinous wickedneſs as this, and make them laugh at their own deſtruction, and abhor thoſe moſt, that fain would ſave them: And they are not only paſt feeling, but ſo hate any quickning Miniſtry, or Truth, or Means which would recover their feeling, that they ſeem to go to Hell as ſome condemned Malefactors to the Gallows, that make themſelves drunk before they go, as if it were all they had to care for to keep themſelves hoodwinkt, from knowing or feeling whither they go, till they are there.

§. 9. See what a Picture of a hardned people God giveth to Ezekiel 3. 7. But the houſe of Iſrael will not hearken to thee; for they will not hearken to me: for all the houſe of Iſrael are impudent and hard hearted. Obſerve but what a caſe it is that they are ſo inſenſible of, and then you will ſee what a hard hearted ſinner, paſt feeling, is.

1. They are the Servants of ſin, Rom. 6. 16. in the power of it; corrupted by it; and yet they feel it not.

2. They have the guilt of many thouſand ſins upon them, all is unpardoned that ever they committed, and yet they feel it not.

3. They have the threatnings and curſes of God in force againſt them in his Word; even words ſo terrible, as you would think might affright them out of their ſins or their wits; and they take on them to believe this Word of God; and yet they feel not.

4. They are in the power of the Devil; ruled and deceived by him, and taken captive by him at his will, Acts 26. 18. 2 Tim. 2. 26.

5. They may be certain that if they dye in this condition they ſhall be damned, and they are uncertain whether they ſhall live another day: they are never ſure to be one hour longer out of Hell: and yet they feel not.

Feriemini, moriemini, ſentietis: an cæci autem an videntes, id in veſtra manu eſt. Optate igitur bene mori (quod ipſum niſi bene vixeritis fruſtra eſt.) Optate, inquam, nitimini, & quod in vobis eſt facile: reliquum illi committite; qui vos in hanc vitam ultro non vocatos intulit; egreſſurus, non niſi vocatus & rogatus manum dabit. Non mori autem nolite optare. Petrach. Dial. 107. l. 2.

6. They know that they muſt dye, and that it is a great change, and of the greateſt, endleſs conſequence, that death will make with them, and they know that this is ſure and near, and are paſt doubt of it, and yet they feel it not.

7. They muſt ſhortly appear before the Lord, and be judged for all that they have done in the body, and be doomed to their endleſs ſtate; and yet they feel not.

8. They know that life is ſhort, and that they have but a little time to prepare for all this terrible change, and that it muſt go with them for ever, as they now prepare; and yet they feel not.

9. They hear and read of the caſe of hardned wicked men, that have gone before them, and have reſiſted grace, and loſt their time, as they now do: and they read or hear of the miſerable end that ſuch have come to: and yet they feel not.

10. They have a world of examples continually before them: They ſee the filthy lives of many for their warning, and the holy lives of others for their imitation, and ſee how Chriſt and Satan ſtrive for ſouls; and yet they feel not.

11. They are always before the eye of God, and do all things before his face: He warned them, and calleth them to repentance: and yet they feel not.

12. They have Chriſt as it were crucified before their eyes, Gal. 3. 1. They hear of his Sufferings: They may ſee in him what ſin is, and what the Love of God is: He pleadeth with them his blood and Sufferings againſt their obſtinate unkindneſs; and yet they feel not.

13. They have everlaſting joy and glory offered them, and Heaven ſo opened to them in Gods promiſes, that they may ſee it as in a Glaſs: 1 Cor. 13. 12. They take on them to believe, how much the bleſſed Spirits there abhor ſuch wickedneſs as theirs: and yet they feel not.

14. They have the Torments of Hell opened to them in the Word of God: They read what impenitent ſouls muſt ſuffer to all eternity: They hear ſome in deſpair in this life roaring in the miſery of their Souls: They hear the joyful thankſgivings of Believers, that Chriſt delivereth them from thoſe torments; and yet they feel not.

15. All the Promiſes of Salvation in the Goſpel, do put in an Exception againſt theſe Men, unleſs they be converted: They are made to the Penitent and not to the Impenitent: There is Juſtification and life; but not for them. There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, that walk not after the Fleſh, but after the Spirit: Rom. 8. 1. But he that believeth not, is condemned already: Joh. 3. 18, 36. and they that after their hardneſs and impenitent hearts, do treaſure up wrath againſt the day of wrath, ſhall have tribulation and anguiſh, Rom. 2. 5, 6, 7. Here is comfort for repenting ſinners, but none (but on condition they repent) for them: when others are welcomed to Chriſts marriage Feaſt, he ſaith to theſe [How came you in hither?] and yet they feel not.

16. They ſtill carry about with them the doleful evidences of all this miſery: One would think the ambitious, and covetous, and voluptuous might ſee theſe death-marks on themſelves; and the ungodly might feel that God hath not their hearts; eſpecially they that hate the Godly, and ſhew their wolfiſh cruelty againſt them, and are the progeny of Cain; and yet they feel not any of this, but live as quietly, and talk as pleaſantly, as if all were well with them, and their ſouls were ſafe, and their calling and election were made ſure. Alas, if theſe ſouls, were not hardned in ſin, we ſhould ſee it in their tears, or hear it in their complaints; they would after Sermon ſometime come to the Miniſter, as they Acts 2. 37. & Acts 16. 30. Sirs, what muſt we do to be ſaved? or we ſhould ſee it in their lives, or hear of it by report of others, who would obſerve the change that grace hath made; and Sermons would ſtick longer by them, and not at beſt be turned off with a fruitleſs commendation; and ſaying, it was a good Sermon, and there is an end of it. Judge now by this true deſcription which I have given you, what a hardned ſinner is. And then the godly may ſo ſee cauſe to bewail the remnants of this miſchief, as yet to be daily thankful to God, that they are not in the power of it.

Dir. 7. §. 10. Direct. 7. Live if you can poſſibly under a lively quickning Miniſtry, and in the Company of ſerious lively Chriſtians: It is true, that we ſhould be deeply affected with the truths of God, how coldly ſoever they be delivered: But the queſtion is not, what is our duty, but what is our diſeaſe and our neceſſity and the proper remedy: All men ſhould be ſo holy, as not to need any exhortations to converſion at all: But ſhall the Miniſters therefore neglect ſuch exhortations, or they that need them turn away their ears? Hear if poſſible that Miniſter that firſt feels what he ſpeaks, and ſo ſpeaks what he feels, as tendeth moſt to make you feel: Iſa. 58. 1, 2. Cry aloud; ſpare not, lift up thy Voice like a Trumpet, and ſhew my People their tranſgreſſions, and the Houſe of Iſrael their ſins: Though ſuch as ſeek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a Nation that did righteouſneſs, and forſook not the Ordinances of their God. God is the chief Agent, but he uſeth to work according to the fitneſs of the inſtrument. O woful caſe! to hear a dead Miniſter ſpeaking to a dead people, the living truths of the living God! As Chriſt ſaid, If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch; And if the dead muſt raiſe the dead, and the ungodly enemies of a holy life muſt bring men to godlineſs and to a holy life, it muſt be by ſuch a power as once made uſe of clay and ſpittle, to open the eyes of the blind. It ſeems it was a Proverb in Chriſts days, Let the dead bury their dead: But not, Let the dead raiſe the dead: God may honour the bones of the dead Prophet with the raiſing a Corpſe that is caſt into its grave, and toucheth them: A meeting of a dead Miniſter and a dead people, is like a place of Graves; and though it be a lamentable thing to hear a man ſpeak without any life, of life eternal, yet God can concur to the quickning of a ſoul. But ſure we have no great reaſon to expect that ordinarily he ſhould convert men ſo miraculouſly, without the moral aptitude of means. It is moſt incongruous for any man in his familiar diſcourſe, to ſpeak without great ſeriouſneſs and reverence, of things concerning life eternal: But for a Preacher to talk of God, of Chriſt, of Heaven and Hell, as coldly and ſleepily, as if he were perſwading men not to believe him, or regard him, that no more regards himſelf, is leſs tolerable. It is a ſad thing to hear a man draw out a dreaming dull diſcourſe about ſuch aſtoniſhing weighty things: and to ſpeak as if it were the buſineſs of his art, to teach men to ſleep while the names of Heaven and Hell are in their ears, and not to be moved while they hear the meſſage of the living God, about their life or death everlaſting. If a man tell in the Streets of a fire in the Town, or a Souldier bring an Alarm of the enemy at the Gates, in a reading or jeaſting tone, the hearers will neglect him, and think that he believeth not himſelf. I know it is not meer noiſe that will convert a ſoul: A bawling fervency which the hearers may diſcern to be but hiſtrionical and affected, and not to come from a ſerious heart, doth harden the auditors worſt of all: A rude unreverent noiſe is unbeſeeming an Embaſſadour of Chriſt: But an ignorant ſaying of a few confuſed words, or a ſleepy recital of the moſt pertinent things, do as little beſeem them. Chriſt raiſed not Lazarus by the loudneſs of his voice; But where the natural ears are the paſſage to the mind, the voice and manner ſhould be ſuitable to the matter. Noiſe without ſeriouſneſs and pertinent matter, is like Gunpowder without Bullet, that cauſeth ſound, and no execution: And the weightieſt matter without clear explication and lively application, is like Bullet without Powder: If you will throw Cannon Bullets at the enemy with your hands, they will ſooner fall on your feet than on them. And it is deadneſs aggravated by hypo- [illegible] *acher will pretend moderation, as if he were afraid of ſpeaking too loud and earneſtly, leſt he ſhould awake the dead, whom lightning and thunder will not awake; and when he will excuſe himſelf by accuſing thoſe that are not as drowſie or dead as he; and would make men believe that ſeriouſneſs is intemperate rage or madneſs: If you are caſt upon a cold and ſleepy Miniſter, conſider the matter more than the manner: But chooſe not ſuch a one for the cure of hardneſs and inſenſibility of heart.

2 Kings 23. 21.

§. 11. Direct. 8. Take notice how ſenſible tender hearted Chriſtians are, of ſins far leſs than thoſe that you make a jeaſt of: And how cloſe thoſe matters come to their hearts that touch not yours. And have not you as much cauſe to be moved as they? and as much need to lay ſuch things to heart? Did you but know what a trouble it is to them, to be haunted with temptations to the unbelief and Atheiſm which prevaileth with you: tho' they are far from chooſing them or delighting in them! did you ſee how involuntary thoughts and frailties make ſome of them aweary of themſelves! and how they even hate their hearts for believing no more, and loving God no more, and for being ſo ſtrange to God and Heaven, when yet there is nothing in the world ſo dear to them, nor hath ſo much of their Eſtimation or Endeavour! You would think ſure that if ſuch hearts had your ſin and miſery to feel, they would feel it to their grief indeed, (unleſs the ſin it ſelf did hinder the feeling, as it doth with you.) Let tender hearted Chriſtians inſtruct you, and not be witneſſes againſt you. Dir. 8.

§. 12. Direct. 9. Take heed of hardning Company, Examples, and Diſcourſe. To hear men rail and ſcoff at Holineſs, and curſe, and ſwear, and blaſpheme the Name and Truth of God, will at firſt make you tremble. But if you wilfully caſt your ſelf ordinarily into ſuch Company, by degrees your ſenſe and tenderneſs will be gone, and you will find a very great hardning power, in the company and frequent diſcourſe and practiſes, which your ſelves condemn. Dir. 9.

§. 13. Direct. 10. Take heed of wilful ſinning againſt knowledge: much more of lying in ſuch ſin unrepented of. It greatly hardneth to ſin againſt knowledge; and much more to commit ſuch ſins over and over. Direct. 11. Take heed of being cuſtomary in the uſe of thoſe means that muſt be the means of curing heardned hearts. If once the lively preaching and holy living and fervent praying, of the ſervants of God, be taken by thee but as matters of courſe, and thou go with them to Church and to prayers, but as to eat, or drink, or kneel with them but for cuſtom; thou wilt be as the Smiths Dog that can ſleep by the Anvil, while the Hammers are beating, and the Sparks are flying about his ears. It is dangerous to grow Cuſtomary and dull, under powerful lively helps. Dir. 11.

And ordinarily the humbling and ſoftning of a hard impenitent heart begins in Fear, and ends in Love. The work of preparation is in a manner the work of Fear alone: The firſt work of true Converſion is begun in a great meaſure of fear, and ſomewhat of Love; but ſo little as is ſcarce perceived, becauſe of the more ſenſible operations of Fear. Directions againſt Hypocriſie.

Multi Chriſtum oſculantur; pauci amant: Aliud eſt εὐλὰν, aliud καταλιλεὶν: Abr. Bucholtzer in Scultet. cur. p. 15. Dicunt Stoici ſapientes eſſe ſinceros, obſervatèque & cavere ſollicite nequid de ſe melius quam ſit commendare putemus fuco ſeu arte aliqua mala occultante, & bona quæ inſunt apparere faciente, ac circumcidere vocis omnem fictionem.

§. 1. HYpocriſie is the acting the part of a Religious perſon as upon a ſtage, by one that is not Religious indeed. A ſeeming in Religion to be what you are not, or to do what you do not. Or a diſſembling or counterfeiting that piety which you have not: To counterfeit a ſtate of Godlineſs is the ſin only of the unregenerate, who at the preſent are in a ſtate of miſery: To counterfeit ſome particular act of Godlineſs, or ſome higher degree, is an odious ſin, but ſuch as a regenerate perſon may be tempted into. This act of Hypocriſie doth not denominate the perſon an Hypocrite; but the ſtate of Hypocriſie doth. Every Hypocrite therefore is an ungodly perſon ſeeming Godly: or one that indeed is no true Chriſtian, profeſſing himſelf a Chriſtian. Of Hypocrites there be two ſorts: ſome deſire to deceive others but not themſelves, but know themſelves to be but diſſemblers; and theſe are commonly called, Groſs Hypocrites: And ſome deceive both themſelves and others, and think they are no Hypocrites, but are as confident of their honeſty and ſincerity, as if they were no diſſemblers at all: But yet they are as verily Hypocrites as the former, becauſe they ſeem to be Religious and ſincere when indeed they are not, though they think they are: and profeſs themſelves to be true Chriſtians, when they are nothing leſs. Theſe are called, Cloſe Hypocrites, becauſe they know not themſelves to be Hypocrites; (though they might know it if they would.) This is the commoneſt ſort of Hypocrites.

§. 2. There are alſo two Degrees of Hypocrites: Some of them have only a General profeſſion of Chriſtianity and Godlineſs which is the profeſſed Religion of the Country where they live: and theſe are Hypocrites becauſe they profeſs to be what they are not: And others make a greater and extraordinary profeſſion of ſpecial ſtrictneſs in their Religion, when they are not ſincere: And theſe are Eminently called Hypocrites: Such as the Phariſees were among the Jews, and many Fryers, and Jeſuits, and Nuns among the Papiſts, who by their ſeparating Vows, and Orders, and Habits, profeſs extraordinarily an extraordinary meaſure of devotion, while they want the life of Godlineſs.

§. 3. In all Hypocriſie there is conſiderable, 1. The thing pretended. 2. The pretence, or means of ſeeming, or the cloke of their deceit. 1. The thing pretended by common Hypocrites is to be true Chriſtians, and ſervants of God, and heirs of Heaven, though not to be ſo zealous in it as ſome of a higher degree. The thing pretended by Eminent Hypocrites is, to be zealous eminent Chriſtians, or at leaſt to be ſincere in a ſpecial manner, while they diſcern the common Hypocrite not to be ſincere. 2. The cloak of ſeeming or pretence by which they would be thought to be what they are not, is any thing in general that hath an appearance of Godlineſs, and is apt to make others think them godly. And thus there are divers ſorts of Hypocrites according to the variety of their cloaks or ways of diſſimulation, though hypocriſie it ſelf be in all of them the ſame thing. As among the very Mahometans, and Heathens, there oft ariſe ſome notable Hypocrites, that by pretended Revelations and auſterity of life, profeſs themſelves (as Mahomet did) to be Holy perſons, that had ſome extraordinary familiarity with God or Angels. So among the Papiſts there are, beſides the common ones, as many ſorts of Hypocrites as they have ſelf-deviſed Orders. And every where the cloak of the common Hypocrite is ſo thin and tranſparent, that it ſheweth his nakedneſs to the more intelligent ſort: And this puts the Eminent Hypocrite upon ſome more laudable pretence that is not ſo tranſparent. As for inſtance, the Hypocriſie of common Papiſts, whoſe cloak is made up of penances and ceremonies, of ſaying over latin words, or numbring words and beads for prayers, with all the reſt of their trumpery before named (Chap. 3. Gr. Dir. 15. Dir. 11.) is ſo thin a cloak that it will not ſatisfie ſome among themſelves, but they withdraw into diſtinct ſocieties and orders, (the Church and the profeſſion of Chriſtianity being not enough for them) that they may be Religious, as if they ſaw that the reſt are not Religious. And then the common ſort of ungodly Proteſtants have ſo much wit as to ſee through the cloak of all the Popiſh Hypocriſie: and therefore they take up a fitter for themſelves: and that is, the name of a Proteſtant Reformed Religion and Church, joyned to the Common Profeſſion of Chriſtianity: The Name or Profeſſion of a Chriſtian and a Proteſtant with going to Church, and a heartleſs lip-ſervice or ſaying their Prayers, is the cloak of all ungodly Proteſtants. Others diſcerning the thinneſs of this cloak, do think to make themſelves a better, and they take up the ſtricteſt opinions in Religion, and own thoſe which they account the ſtricteſt party, and own that which they eſteem the pureſt and moſt ſpiritual worſhip; The cloak of theſe men is their opinions, party and way of worſhip, while their carnal lives detect their Hypocriſie. Some that ſee through through all these pretences, do take up the most excellent cloak of all, and that is, An appearance of serious spirituality in Religion, with a due observation of all the outward parts and means, and a Reformation of life, in works of piety, Justice and charity; I say, An appearance of all these; which if they had indeed, they were sincere, and should be saved, in which the Godly Christian goeth beyond them all.

Laert. in Zenone. Philoſophia res adeo difficilis eſt, ut tam vel ſimulare magna ſit pars philoſophiæ. Paul. Scalig. It was one of the Roman Laws of the 12. tables, [Impius ne audeto placere donis iram Deorum] [Let no ungodly perſon dare to go about to appeaſe the diſpleaſure of the Gods by gifts] viz. He muſt appeaſe them firſt by reformation. Bona conſcientia prodire vult & conſpici, Ipſas nequitia tenebras timet. Senec.

§. 4. By this it is plain, that among us in England all men that are not Saints are Hypocrites, because that all (except here or there a Jew or Infidel) profess themselves to be Christians; and every true Christian is a Saint. They know that none but Saints or Godly persons shall be saved: And there is few of them that will renounce their hopes of Heaven; and therefore they must pretend to be all godly. And is it not most cursed horrid hypocrisie, for a man to pretend to Religion as the only way to his salvation, and confidently call himself a Christian, while he hateth and derideth the power and practice of that very Religion which he doth profess? Of this see my Treatise of The vain Religion of the Formal Hypocrite.

§. 5. The Hypocrites Ends in his pretences and dissemblings are not all the same: One intendeth the pleasing of Parents or some friends on whom he doth depend, that will else be displeased with him, and think ill of him: Another intendeth the pleasing of the higher powers, when it falls out that they are friends to Godliness. Another intends the preserving of his esteem with religious persons, that they may not judge him wicked and prophane. Another intendeth the hiding of some particular villany, or the success of some ambitious enterprize. But the most common end is to quiet and comfort their guilty souls, with an Image of that Holiness which they are without, and to steal some peace to their Consciences by a lye: And so because they will not be Religious indeed, they will take up some shew or image of Religion, to make themselves as well as others believe that they are Religious.

When Petrarch in vita sua speaketh of others extolling his eloquence, he addeth his own neglect of it, Ego modo bene vixissem, qualiter dixissem parvi facerem. Ventosa gloria est, de solo verborum splendore famam quærere.

Conscientiam potius quam famam attende. Falli sæpe poterit fama: Conscientia nunquam. Senec.

Dir. 1. §. 6. Direct. 1. To escape Hypocrisie understand well wherein the life and power of Godliness doth consist, and wherein it differeth from the lifeless Image or Corpse of Godliness. The life of Godliness is expressed in the 17 Grand Directions in Chap. 4. It principally consisteth in such a faith in Christ as causeth us to Love God above all, and obey him before all, and prefer his favour and the hopes of Heaven before all the pleasures, or profits or honours of the world, and to worship him in spirit and truth according to the direction of his word. The Images of Religion I shewed you before §. 3. Take heed of such a lifeless Image.

Dir. 2. §. 7. Direct. 2. See that your chief study be about the Heart, that there Gods Image may be planted, and his interest advanced, and the interest of the world and flesh subdued, and the Love of every sin cast out, and the Love of Holiness succeed: and that you content not your selves with seeming to do good in outward acts, when you are bad your selves, and strangers to the great internal duties. The first and great work of a Christian is about his heart. There it is that God dwelleth by his spirit, in his Saints; And there it is that sin and Satan reign in the ungodly. The great duties and the great sins are those of the heart. There is the root of Good and Evil: The tongue and life are but the fruits and expressions of that which dwelleth within. The inward habit of sin is a second nature: And a sinful nature is worse than a sinful act. Keep your hearts with all diligence: for from thence are the issues of life, Prov. 4. 23. Make the tree good and the fruit will be good: But the viperous generation that are evil, cannot speak good, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, Matth. 12. 33, 34. Till the spirit have regenerated the soul, all outward Religion will be but a dead and pitiful thing: Though there is something which God hath appointed an unregenerate man to do in order to his own conversion, yet no such antecedent act will prove that the person is justified or reconciled to God, till he be converted. To make up a Religion of doing or saying something that is good, while the heart is void of the spirit of Christ, and sanctifying grace, is the Hypocrites Religion, Rom. 8. 9.

Dir. 3. §. 8. Direct. 3. Make conscience of the sins of the thoughts and the desire and other affections or passions of the mind, as well as of the sins of tongue or hand: A lustful thought, a malicious thought, a proud ambitious or covetous thought, especially if it proceed to a wish or contrivance or consent, is a sin the more dangerous by how much the more inward and near the heart, as Christ hath shewed you, Mat. 5. & 6. The Hypocrite who most respecteth the eye of man, doth live as if his Thoughts were free.

Dir. 4. §. 9. Direct. 4. Make conscience of secret sins, which are committed out of the sight of men, and may be concealed from them, as well as of open and notorious sins. If he can do it in the dark and secure his reputation, the Hypocrite is bold: But a sincere believer doth bear a reverence to his conscience, and much more to the all seeing God.

Dir. 5. §. 10. Direct. 5. Be faithful in secret duties which have no witness but God and Conscience: As meditation and self-examination, and secret prayer: And be not only Religious in the sight of men.

Dir. 6. §. 11. Direct. 6. In all publick worship be more laborious with the heart, than with the tongue or knee: and see that your tongue over-run not your heart, and leave it not behind: Neglect not the due composure of your words, and due behaviour of your Bodies: But take much more pains for the exercise of holy desires from a believing, loving, fervent soul.

Dir. 7. §. 12. Direct. 7. Place not more in the externals, or modes, or circumstances, or ceremonies of worship than is due, and lay not out more zeal for indifferent or little things, than cometh to their share; but let the great substantials of Religion have the precedency and be far preferred before them: Let the Love of God and man be the sum of your obedience: And be sure you learn well what that meaneth; I will have mercy and not sacrifice. And remember that the great thing which God requireth of you, is to do Justice, and love mercy, and walk humbly with your God. Destroy not him with your meat for whom Christ dyed. Call not for fire from Heaven upon Dissenters; and think not every man intolerable in the Church, that is not in every little matter of your mind. Remember that the hypocrisie of the Pharisees is described by Christ, as consisting in a zeal for their own traditions and the inventions of men, and the smallest matters of the Ceremonial Law, with a neglect of greatest moral duties, and a furious cruelty against the spiritual worshippers of God, Matth. 15. 2. Why do thy disci- ples tranſgreſs the Tradition of the Elders? For they waſh not their hands when they eat bread. v. 7. Ye Hypocrites, well did Eſaias propheſy of you, ſaying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their Mouth, and honoureth me with their Lips, but their heart is far from me: but in vain do they worſhip me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Matth. 23. 4, 5, 6, 13, 14, &c. They bind heavy burdens, which they touch not themſelves. All their works they do to be ſeen of men: They make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their Garments; and love the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, and the chief Seats in the Synagogues, and greetings in publick, and to be called Rabbi — But they ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven againſt men, and were the greateſt enemies of the entertainment of the Goſpel by the people: They tythed mint, and aniſe, and Cummin, and omitted the great matters of the Law, Judgment and Mercy and Faith. They ſtrained at a gnat and ſwallowed a Camel: They had a great veneration for the dead Prophets and Saints, and yet were Perſecutors and Murderers of their Succeſſours that were living, v. 23, &c. By this Deſcription you may ſee which way Hypocriſie doth moſt ordinarily work: even to a blind and bloody zeal for opinions, and traditions, and ceremonies and other little things, to the treading down the Intereſt of Chriſt and his Goſpel, and a neglect of the life and power of Godlineſs, and a cruel Perſecuting thoſe Servants of Chriſt, whom they are bound to love above their ceremonies. I marvel that many Papiſts tremble not when they read the Character of the Phariſees? But that Hypocriſie is a hidden ſin, and is an enemy to the light which would diſcover it.

Dir. 8. §. 13. Direct. 8. Make conſcience of the Duties of Obedience to Superiours, and of Juſtice and Mercy towards Men, as well as of Acts of Piety to God. Say not a long Maſs in order to devour a Widows houſe, or a Chriſtians life or reputation. Be equally exact in Juſtice and Mercy as you are in Prayers. And labour as much to exceed common men in the one as in the other. Set your ſelves to do all the good you can to all, and do hurt to none: And do to all men as you would they ſhould do to you.

Dir. 9. §. 14. Direct. 9. Be much more buſie about your ſelves than about others: and more cenſorious of your ſelves than of other Men, and more ſtrict in the Reforming of your ſelves, than of any others. For this is the character of the ſincere: When the Hypocrite is little at home and much abroad; and is a ſharp Reprehender of others, and perniciouſly tender and indulgent to himſelf. Mark his Diſcourſe in all Companies, and you ſhall hear how liberal he is in his Cenſures and bitter Reproach of others: How ſuch Men and ſuch Men (that differ from him, or have oppoſed him, or that he hates,) are thus and thus faulty and bad and hateful: Yea, he is as great an Accuſer of his Adverſaries for Hypocriſy, as if he were not an Hypocrite himſelf: Becauſe he can accuſe them of a Heart ſin without any viſible Controul: If he call them Drunkards, or Swearers, or Perſecutors, or Oppreſſours, all that know them, could know that he belyeth them: but when he ſpeaks about Matters in the dark, he thinks the Reputation of his Lies have more Advantage. Many a Word you may hear from him, how bad his Adverſaries are; but if ſuch Hypocritical Talk did not tell you, he would not tell you how bad he is himſelf.

It is one of Thales ſayings in Laert. Q. Quomodo optime ac juſtiſſime vivemus?

Reſp. Si quæ in aliis reprehendimus ipſi non faciamus. To judge of our ſelves as we judge of others, is the way of the Sincere.

Dir. 10. §. 15. Direct. 10. Be impartial, and ſet your ſelves before your Conſciences in the Caſe of others: Think with your ſelves: How ſhould I Judge of this in ſuch and ſuch a Man that I uſe to blame? What ſhould I ſay of him if my Adverſary did as I do? And is it not as bad in me as in him? Is not the ſin moſt dangerous to me that is neareſt me? And ſhould I be more vigilant over any mans faults than my own? My damnation will not be cauſed by his ſin; but by my own it may. Inſtead of ſeeing the gnat in his Eye, I have more cauſe to caſt out a gnat from my own than a Camel from his.

Dir. 11. §. 16. Direct. 11. Study firſt to be whatever (judiciouſly) you deſire to ſeem. Deſire a thouſand times more to be Godly, than to ſeem ſo; and to be liberal than to be thought ſo; and to be blameleſs from every ſecret or preſumptuous ſin, than to be eſteemed ſuch. And when you feel a deſire to be accounted good, let it make you think how much more neceſſary and deſirable it is to be good indeed: To be godly is to be an Heir of Heaven: Your Salvation followeth it. But to be eſteemed Godly is of little profit to you.

Cato, hæc virtuti ſimillima qui nunquam reliè ſecit, ut facere videretur, ſed quia aliter facere non poterat; cuique id ſolum viſum eſt rationem habere, quod haberet juſtitiam. Vellejus Patercul. l. 2.

Dir. 12. §. 17. Direct. 12. Overvalue not Man, and ſet no more by the approbation or applauſe of his thoughts or ſpeeches of you than they are worth. Hypocriſie much conſiſteth in overvaluing man, and making too great a matter of his thoughts and words: The Hypocrites Religion is Divine in Name, but Human in deed: It is man that he ſerveth and obſerveth moſt: and the ſhame of the world is the evil which he moſt ſtudiouſly avoideth: And the high eſteem and commendation of the world is his Reward. O think what a ſilly worm is man? And of how little moment are his thoughts or ſpeeches of you, in compariſon of the Love of God? His thoughts of you make you not the better or the worſe; And if they either lift you up, or trouble you, it is your proud and fooliſh fantaſie that doth it, when you might chooſe. If you have not loſt the key and government of your hearts, ſhut you the door, and keep all thence, and let mens reproaches go no further than your ears, and then what the worſe will you be for all the lyes and ſlanders of the world? And beſides the pleaſing of an effeminate mind, what the better are you for their applauſe?

Jam in eccleſia ipſa quæruntur, & omnia Apoſtolicorum ſimplicitas & puritate verborum, quaſi ad Athenæum & ad auditoria componitur ut plauſus circumſtantium ſuſcitentur, ut oratio rhetoricæ artis fucata mendacio quaſi quædam meretricula procedat in publicum, non tam eruditura populos, quam favorem populi quæſitura ——— Hieron. in præf. l. 3. in Galat.

Dir. 13. §. 18. Direct. 13. Look upon all men that you converſe with, as ready to dye and turn to duſt, and paſſing into that world where you will be little concerned in their Cenſure or Eſteem of you. If you do any thing before an infant, you little care for his preſence or obſervation of you: Much leſs if it be before the dead: If you knew that a man were to dye to morrow, tho' he were a Prince, you would not be much ſollicitous to avoid his cenſure or procure his applauſe; becauſe his thoughts all periſh with him; and it is a ſmall matter what he thinks of you for a day. Seeing therefore that all men are haſting to their duſt, and you are certain that all that applaud or cenſure you, will be quickly gone, how little ſhould you regard their judgment? Look that man in the face whoſe applauſe you deſire or whoſe cenſure you fear, and remember that he is a breathing clod of clay; and how many ſuch are now in the grave, whoſe thoughts you once as much eſteemed! and this will make you more indifferent in the caſe.

Dir. 14. §. 19. Direct. 14. At leaſt remember that you are paſſing out of the world your ſelves, and look every moment when you are called away, and certainly know that you ſhall be here but a little while. And is it any great matter what ſtrangers think of you as you are paſſing by? You can be contented that your name, and worth, and vertues be concealed in your Inn, where where you stay but a Night, and that they be unknown to travellers that meet you on the road: The foolish expectation of more time on earth than God hath given you warrant to expect, is the cause that we overvalue the judgment of man, as well as other earthly things, and is a great maintainer of every sensual Vice.

Dir. 15. §. 20. Direct. 15. Set your selves to the mortifying of Self-love and Pride: For Hypocrisie is but the exercise of these. Hypocrisie is dead so far as Pride is dead; and so far as self-denial and humility prevail. Hypocrisie is a proud desire to appear better than you are. Be throughly humbled and vile in your own eyes, and Hypocrisie is done.

Dir. 16. §. 21. Direct. 16 Be most suspicious of your hearts in cases where self-interest or passions are engaged: For they will easily deal deceitfully and cheat your selves, in the Smoak and Dust of such distempers. Interest and Passion so blind the mind, that you may verily think you are defending the truth, and serving God in sincerity and zeal, when all the while you are but defending some errour of your own, and serving your selves, and fighting against God. The Pharisees thought they took part with Gods Law and Truth against Christ: The Pope and his Cardinals, and Prelates think (as in charity I must think) that it is for Christ, and Unity, and Truth, that they endeavour to subject the world to their own power: And what is it but Interest that blindeth them into such Hypocrisie? So passionate disputers do ordinarily deceive themselves, and think verily that they are zealous for the Faith, when they are but contending for their honour or conceits. Passion covers much deceit from the passionate.

Dir. 17. §. 22. Direct. 17. Suspect your selves most among the great, the wise, the learned, and the godly, or any whose Favour, Opinion, or Applause you most esteem. It is easie for an arrant Hypocrite to despise the Favour or Opinion of the Vulgar, of the Ignorant, of the Prophane, or any whose Judgment he contemneth. It is no great honour or dishonour to be praised or dispraised by a Child, or Fool, or a Person that for his Ignorance or Prophaneness is become contemptible. But Hypocrisie and Pride do work most to procure the esteem of those whose judgment or parts you most admire. One most admireth worldly greatness; and such a one will play the Hypocrite most, to flatter or please the great ones he admireth. Another that is wiser, more admireth the Judgment of the wise and learned; and he will play the Hypocrite to procure the good esteem of such, tho' he can slight a thousand of the ignorant; (and his pride it self will make him slight them). Another that is yet wiser is convinced of the excellency of Godly men, above all the great and learned of the world: And this man is more in danger of Pride and Hypocrisie in seeking the good opinion of the Godly; and therefore can despise the greatest multitudes of the ignorant and prophane: Yea, pride it self will make him take it as an addition to his glory to be villified and oppos'd by such miscreants as these.

Dir. 18. §. 23. Direct. 18. Remember the Perfections of that God whom you worship, that he is a Spirit, and therefore to be worshipped in Spirit and in truth, and that he is most great and terrible, and therefore to be worshipped with seriousness and reverence, and not to be dallyed with or served with toyes or lifeless lip-service; and that he is most holy, pure, and jealous, and therefore to be purely worshipped: and that he is still present with you, and all things are naked and open to him with whom we have to do. The knowledge of God, and the remembrance of his all-seeing presence, is the most powerful means against Hypocrisie. Christ himself argueth from the Nature of God, who is a Spirit, against the hypocritical ceremoniousness of the Samaritans and Jews, John 4. 23, 24. Hypocrites offer that to God, which they know a man of ordinary wisdom would scorn if they offered it to him: If a man knew their hearts as God doth, would he be pleased with words, and Complements, and Gestures, which are not accompanied with any suitable seriousness of the mind? Would he be pleased with affected histrionical Actions? One that seeth a Papist Priest come out in his Formalities, and there lead the people in a Language which they understand not, to worship God by a number of Ceremonies, and canting, repeated, customary words, would think he saw a Stage player acting his part, and not a wise and holy people, seriously worshipping the most holy God. And not only in worship, but in private duties, and in converse with men, and in all your lives, the Remembrance of Gods presence is a powerful Rebuke for all Hypocrisie. It is more foolish to sin in the sight of God, because you can hide it from the World, than to steal or commit Adultery in the open Market-place before the crowd, and be careful that Dogs and Crows discern it not. If all the world see you, it is not so much as if God in secret see you: Be not deceived, God is not mocked, Gal. 6. 7.

Dir. 19. §. 24. Direct. 19. Remember how Hypocrisie is hated of God; and what Punishment is appointed for Hypocrites. They are joyned in torment with unbelievers: and as wicked mens Punishment is aggravated by their being condemned to the fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels; so the Punishment of ordinary ungodly Persons, is aggravated by this, that their Portion shall be with hypocrites and unbelievers. How oft find you the Lamb of God himself, denouncing his thundering Woes against the Hypocritical Scribes and Pharisees? How oft doth he inculcate to his Disciples, Be not as the Hypocrites, Matth. 6. 2, 5, 16. And no wonder if Hypocrites be hateful to God, when they and their Services are lifeless Images, and have nothing but the Name and outside of Christianity, and some antique dress to set them off, and human ornaments of Wit and Parts; as a Corpse is more drest with Flowers than the living, as needing those Ceremonies for want of life to keep them sweet. And a Carrion is not amiable to God. And the Hypocrite puts a scorn on God; as if he thought that God were like the Heathens Idols, that have eyes and see not, and could not discern the secret dissemblings of his heart? or as if he were like Fools and Children that are pleased with fair Words and little Toys. God must needs hate such abuse as this.

Dir. 20. §. 25. Direct. 20. Come into the Light that your Hearts and Lives may be throwly known to you: Love the most searching faithful Ministry and Books, and be thankful to Reprovers and plain dealing Friends. Darkness is it that cherisheth deceit: It is the office of the Light to manifest. Justly do those Wretches perish in their Hypocrisie, who will not endure the light which would undeceive them; but fly from a plain and powerful Ministry, and hate plain reproof, and set themselves by excuses and cavils to defend their own deceit.

Permanem tepidi, ignavi, negligentes, vani, leves, voluptuosi, delicati; commoda corpores superflua ... sectantur, suum compendium in omnibus quærunt, ubicunque honorem & existimationem nominis sui integra servare possunt: Intus propriæ voluntati pertinaciter addicti, irresignati, minime abnegati, superbi curiosi, & contumaces sunt in omnibus, licet externe coram hominibus bene morati videantur. In tentationibus impatientes, amari, procaces, iracundi, tristes, aliis molesti, verbis tamen ingenioque scioli, ——— In prosperis nimium elati & hilares: In adversis, nimium turbati sunt & pusillanimes: Aliorum temerarii sunt judices: aliorum vitia accuratissime perscrutari, de aliorum defectibus frequenter garrire, ac gloriari egregium putant. Ex istis & similibus operibus facillime cognosci poterunt: nam moribus gestibusque suis seu forex quispiam suopte semet indicio produnt. Thauler. ffor. pag. 65, 66.

Dir. 21. §. 26. Direct. 21. Be very diligent in the examining of your hearts and all your actions by the Word of God, and call your selves often to a strict account. Deceit and guilt will not endure strict examination. The word of God is quick and powerful, discovering the Thoughts and Imaginations of the Heart. There is no Hypocrite but might be delivered from his own Deceits, if by the assistance of an able Guide, he would faithfully go on in the work of self-trying, without partiality or sloth.

Dir. 22. §. 27. Direct. 22. Live continually as one that is going to be judged at the Bar of God, where all Hypocrisie will be opened and shamed, and Hypocrites condemned by the All-knowing God. One thought of our appearing before the Lord, and of the Day of his impartial Judgment, one would think should make man walk as in the light, and teach them to understand, that the Sun is not eclipsed as often as they wink, nor is it night because they draw the Curtains: What a shame will it be to have all your dissimulation laid open before all the world? Luke 12. 1, 2, 3. Beware of the leven of the Pharisees which is Hypocrisie: For there is nothing covered, which shall not be revealed, neither hid, that shall not be known: Therefore what ever ye have spoken in darkness, shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets, shall be proclaimed on the house tops.

Dir. 23. §. 28. Direct. 23. Think not that you avoid Hypocrisie by changing the Expressions of it; but see that you run not into a more subtile kind, while you avoid a grosser. There is no outward way of worshipping God, nor no opinion in Religion so found, but an Hypocrite can make a cloak of it. You see an ignorant ridiculous Hypocrite, such as Bishop Hall describeth in his character, that can pray up to a Pillar, when his Heart knoweth not what his tongue is doing, that babbleth over a few words to God while he is dressing or washing him, and talking between to the standers by; who offereth to God the sacrifice of a fool, and knoweth not that he doth evil, Eccles. 5. 2. that serveth God with toys and antique gestures, and saying over certain words which were never acquainted with the feeling of his heart; nor scarce with his understanding: And to avoid his Hypocrisie perhaps you can merrily deride him, and make a formal Popish Hypocrite the subject of your Jests; and you can your selves with good understanding pour out your selves many hours together in orderly and meet expressions of prayer: But remember that many an hypocrite maketh himself a cloak of as good stuff as this: And that as Pride hath more advantage to work upon your greater knowledge and better parts; so Hypocrisie is but the off spring of Pride. All this without a Heart entirely devoted unto God, is but a carkass better dress; as the rich have more curious monuments than the poor. There is no outside thing, in which an Hypocrite may not seem excellent.

Dir. 24. §. 29. Direct. 24. Be true to Conscience, and hearken diligently to all it saith, and be often treating with it, and daily conversant and well acquainted with it. Hypocrites bear little reverence to their Consciences: They make so often and so grosly bold with them, that Conscience is deposed from its office at the present, and silenced by them, lest it should gall them by preaching to them those hard Sayings which they cannot bear: And perhaps at last it is feared or bribed to take part with sin: But usually an Hypocrite hath a secret Judge within him which condemneth him. Take heed how you use your consciences, as you love your peace and happiness. Next Christ, it must be your best friend, or your greatest enemy: Palliate it how you will at present, if you wound it, it will smart at last. And it is easier to bear poverty, or shame, or torment, than to bear its wounds, Prov. 18. 14. 1. Mark the very principles and former judgment of your Consciences; and if they are changed, know what changed them. 2. Hearken to all the secret counsel and reproofs of Conscience: especially when it speaketh oft and terribly: Turn it not off without a hearing: yea, know the reason of its very scruples and doubts. 3. When it is sick and disquieted, know what the matter is, Psal. 53. 5. and vomit up the matter that justly disquiets it, whatever it cost you: and be sure you go to the bottom, and do not leave the root behind. 4. Open your Consciences to some able trusty guide when it is necessary; though it cost you shame. An over-tender avoiding of such shame is the Hypocrites sin and folly. Counsel is safe in matters of such importance. 5. Prefer Conscience before all men how great soever: None is above it but God. It is Gods messenger when it is Conscience indeed: Remember what it saith to you, and from whom, and for what end. Let Friends, and Neighbours, and Company, and business, and profit, and sports, and honour stand by, and all give place whilst Conscience speaketh. For it will be a better friend to you than any of these, if you use it as a friend. It would have been better to Judas than his thirty pieces were. 6. Yet see that it be well informed, and see its commission: for it is not above God; nor is it masterless or lawless. 7. Converse not with it only in a crowd, but in secret, Psal. 4. 4. 8. Keep it awake: and keep it among awakening means and company: It will much sooner fall asleep in an Ale-house, or a Play-house, or among the foolish and prophane, than at a lively Sermon, or Prayers, or reverent discourse of God. If I could but get Conscience awakened to perform its office, and preach over all this that I have said, in secret, it would ferret the Hypocrite out of his self-deceit. Go Conscience, and search that deceitful heart, and speak to it in the Name of God: Ask that Hypocrite whether Conversion ever made him a new creature, and whether his Soul and all that he hath be entirely devoted unto God? and whether his hopes and treasure be laid up in Heaven, and his Heart be there? and whether he subject all his worldly interest to the Will of God, and the interest of his soul? and whether his greatest work be about his Heart, and to approve himself to God? and whether he make an impartial diligent inquiry after the truth, with a desire to receive it at the dearest rates? Tell him that a proud self-flattery may now make him justifie or extenuate his sins, and take his formalities and lip-service and abuse of God for true Devotion, and hate every man that would detect his hypocrisie, and convert him by bringing in the light: But a light will shortly appear to his soul, which he shall not resist. And then let him stand to his justification if he can: and let him then make it good that he gave up himself in sincerity, simplicity, and self-denyal to his God.

Quid prodest recondere se & celos hominum auresque vitare? Bona conscientia tuebitur absentem; malam autem in solitudine anxia & sollicita est. Si honesta sunt quæ facis, omnes sciant: Si turpia, quid refert neminem scire, cum tu scias: O te miserum si contemnis hunc testem. Sen. Ep. 56. Matth. 23. 13, 14, 15, 23, 25, 27, 29.

§. 30. Direct. 25. Remember that Hypocrisie lyeth much in doubling, and in a dividing heart and life: See therefore that you serve God in singleness of heart, or simplicity and integrity, as being his alone. Think not of serving God and Mammon: A deep reserve at the heart for the world, while they seem to give up themselves in Covenant to God, is the Grand Character of an Hypocrite. Live as those that have One Lord and one Master that all power stoopeth to, and One End or Scope to which all other are, but means: and One work of absolute Necessity to do? and one Kingdom to seek first, and with greatest Care and Diligence to make sure of, and that that have your hearts and faces still one way, and that agree with your selves in what you think, and say, and do. A double heart, and a double tongue is the fashion of the Hypocrite, Psal. 12. 2. 1 Tim. 3. 8. He hath a heart for the world, and pride, and lust, which must seem sometimes to be lifted up to ask forgiveness, that he may sin with quietness and hope of salvation: you would not think when you see him drop his Beads, or lift up his hands and eyes, and seem devoutly to say his prayers, how lately he came from a Tavern, or a Whore, or a Lye, or from scorning at serious godliness. As Bishop Hall saith, He seemeth to serve that God at Church on Holy-days, whom he neglecteth at home; and boweth at the Name of Jesus, and sweareth prophanely by the Name of God. Remember that there is but one God, one Heaven for us, one Happiness, and one Way: And this one is of such moment, as calls for all the intention and attention of our souls, and is enough to satisfie us, and should be enough to call us off from all that would divert us. A divided heart is a false and self-deceiving heart. Are there two Gods? or is Christ divided? While you grasp at both (God and the world) you will certainly lose one, and it is like you will lose both. To have two Gods, two Rules, two Heavens, is to have no God, no true Rule, no Heaven, or happiness at all. Halt not therefore between two opinions: If God be God, obey him and love him: If Heaven be Heaven, be sure it be first sought. But if thy Belly be thy God, and the World be thy Heaven, then serve and seek them, and make thy best of them.

Dir. 25. Matth. 2. 8. Eph. 4. 2, 3. 4. 5. Luke 10. 42. Matth. 6. 33. 2 Pet. 1. 10. Joh. 6. 27.

Dir. 26. §. 31. Direct. 26. Take heed of all that fleshly policy or craft, and worldly wisdom, which is contrary to the wisdom of the Word of God, and would draw thee from the plain and open heartedness which godly sincerity requireth. Let that which was Pauls rejoycing, be yours, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not in fleshly wisdom, you have had your conversation in the world. Christianity renounceth not wisdom and honest self-preservation: But yet it maketh men plain-hearted and haters of crafty fraudulent minds. What is the famous hypocritical Religion superadded to Christianity and called Popery, but that which Paul feared in his godly jealousie for the Corinthians, lest as the Serpent beguiled Eve by his subtilty, so their minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. A forsaking the Christian simplicity of DOCTRINE, DISCIPLINE, WORSHIP and CONVERSATION, is the Hypocrisie of Religion, and of life. Equivocating and dishonest shifts and hiding, beseemeth those that have an ill Cause, or an ill Conscience, or an ill Master whom they dare not trust; and not those that have so good a Cause and God as Christians have.

2 Cor. 1. 12. 2 Cor. 11. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 13.

Dir. 27. §. 32. Direct. 27. Remember how much of sincerity consisteth in seriousness, and how much of Hypocrisie consisteth in seeming, and dreaming, and trifling in the things of God and our salvation: see therefore that you keep your souls awake, in a sensible and serious frame. Read over the fifty Considerations which in the third Part of my Saints Rest, I have given to convince you of the necessity of being serious. See that there be as much in your Faith as in your Creed, and as much as in your Heart and Lives as in your Belief. Remember that seeming and dreaming will not mortifie deep rooted sins, nor conquer strong and subtile enemies; nor make you acceptable to God, nor save your souls from his revenging justice. Remember what a mad kind of prophaneness it is to jest and trifle about Heaven and Hell, and to dally with the great and dreadful God. Seeing all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought you to be in all holy conversation and Godliness? 2 Pet. 3. 11. You pray for an obedience answering the pattern of the heavenly society, when you say [Thy will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven.] And will you be such Hypocrites as to pray that you may imitate Saints and Angels in the purity and obedience of your hearts and lives, and when you have done, take up with shews, and seemings, and saying a few words, and a lifeless Image of that Holiness which you never had; yea, and perhaps deride and persecute in others, the very thing which you daily pray for. O horrible abuse of the All-seeing God! Do you no more believe or fear his justice? When the Apostle saith, Gal. 6. 7. Be not deceived, God is not mocked; he intimateth that Hypocrites go about to put a scorn on God by a Mock religion, though it is not he, but themselves that will prove mocked in the end. They offer God a deaf Nut, or an empty Shell or Cask for a Sacrifice. An Hypocrite differeth from a true Christian, as a Fencer from a Souldier, He playeth his part very formally upon a Stage with much applause; but you may perceive that he is not in good sadness, by his trifling and formality, and never killing any of his sins. Would men shew no more of the great everlasting matters of their own profest Belief, in any seriousness of affection or endeavour, than most men do, if they were not Hypocrites? Would they hate and scorn men for doing but that (and part of that) which they pray and profess to do themselves, if they were not hypocrites? Wo to the world because of Hypocrisie! Wo to the carnal members of the Church! Wo to Idol Shepherds, and the seeming nominal lifeless Christians, of what Sect soever: For God will not be mocked. They are Christians; but it is with a Mock-Christianity; while their souls are strange to the true esteem and use of Christ. They are Believers, but with a mock-belief, described James 2. They believe God should be loved above all, but they love him not. They believe that Holiness is better than all the pleasures of sin; yet they choose it not, but hate it: They are Religious, with a seeming vain Religion, which will not so much as humble them, nor bridle their tongues, James 1. 26. They are wise, with a mock-wisdom: They are wise enough to prove their sins to be all lawful, or but venial sins: And wise enough to cast away the Medicine that would heal them; and to confute the Physician, and to answer the learnedst Preacher of them all, and to scape salvation, and to secure themselves a place in Hell, and keep themselves ignorant of it till they are there. They are converted, but with a mock-conversion; which leaveth them as carnal, and proud, and worldly as before; being born of Water, but not of the Spirit, and being sensual still, John 3. 5, 6. Jude 19. They Repent, but with a mock-repentance: They Repent, but they will not leave their sin, nor confess and bewail it, but hate reproof, and excuse their sin. They are Honest, but with a mock-honesty: Though they swear, and curse, and rail, and slander, and backbite, and scorn as piety it self, yet they mean well, and have honest hearts: Though they receive not the Word with deep rooting in their hearts, but are abominable and disobedient, and to every good work reprobate, they are honest for all that, Luke 8. 15. Tit. 1. 16. They Love God above all, though they love not to think or speak of him seriously, but hate his Holiness and Justice, his Word and holy ways and servants, and are

The causes of superstition (and so of hypocrisie) are pleasing and sensual Rites and Ceremonies: Love of outward and Pharisaical holiness:

Over great reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the Church: The stratagems of Prelates for their own ambition and lucre. The savouring too much good intentions, which openeth a gate to conceits and novelties. Lord Bacon Essay. As P. Callimachus Exper. describeth [illegible], that he was a devourer of Flesh and Wine, &c. and yet Religione perfunctionibusque de Diis à gente sua susceptis, usque ad superstitionem addictus —— Gall. p. are such as the Scripture calleth haters of God, and keep not his Commandments, nor live not to his glory. They Love the servants of God, but they care not if the world were rid of them all, and take them to be but a company of self-conceited trouble-some fellows, and as very hypocrites as themselves: And the poor Christians that are cruelly used by them, think they are neither in good sadness nor in jest, when they profess to love the worshippers of God. They love not their mony, nor lands, nor lusts, with such a kind of love, I am sure. They have also always good desires; but they are such mock-desires as those in James 2. 15. that wished the poor were fed, and clothed, and warmed, but gave them nothing towards it: And such good desires as the sluggard hath that lyeth in bed and wisheth that all his work were done, Prov. 21. 25. The desire of the sluggard killeth him, because his hands refuse to labour. They pray, but with mock prayers: you would little think that they are speaking to the most holy God, for no less than the saving of their souls, when they are more serious in their very games and sports. They pray for grace, but they cannot abide it: They pray for Holiness, but they are resolved they'll have none of it: They pray against their sin, but no entreaty can perswade them from it. They would have a Mock-ministry, a Mock-discipline, a Mock-Church, a Mock-Sacrament, as they make a Mock-profession, and give God but a Mock-obedience, as I might shew you through all the particulars, but for being tedious. And all is, because they have but a Mock-faith: They believe not that God is in good earnest with them in his commands and threatnings and fore telling of his Judgments: As Lot to his Sons-in-law, Gen. 19. 14. He seemeth to them as one that mocked, and therefore they serve him as those that would mock him. O wretched Hypocrites! Is this agreeable to your holy profession? You call your selves Christians, and profess to believe the doctrine of Christ: Is this agreeable to Christianity? to your Creed, to the ten Commandments, to the Lords Prayer, and to the rest of the Word of God? Had you none but the holy Jealous God to make a mock of? Had you nothing less than Religion, and matters of salvation and damnation to play with? Do you serve God as if he were a child, or an Idol, or a man of straw? that either knoweth not your hearts, or is pleased with toys and complements, and shews, and saying over certain words, or acting a part before him as on a stage? Do you know what you offer, and to whom? His Power is Omnipotency, his Glory is ten thousand fold above that of the Sun: his Wisdom is infinite: Millions of Angels adore him continually: He is thy King and Judge: he abhorreth hypocrites: If thou didst but see one glimpse of his glory, or the meanest of his Angels, the sight would awake thee from thy dreaming, and dallying, and frighten thee from thy canting and trifling into a serious regard of God and thy everlasting state, Mal. 1. 8. Offer this now to thy Governour: Will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person, saith the Lord of Hosts? If your servants set before you upon your Table, the Feathers instead of the Fowl, and the Hair and Wool instead of the Flesh, and the Scales instead of the Fish, would you not think they rather mockt than served you? How dear have some paid even in this life for mocking God? Let the case of Aarons Sons, Lev. 10. 1, 2, 3. and of Ananias and Saphira, Acts 5. inform you: If with the Fig-tree, Matth. 21. 19. you offer God Leaves only instead of fruit, you are nigh unto cursing, and your end is to be burnt: Do you not read what he saith to the Church of Laodicea, Rev. 3. 15, 16. I would thou were cold or hot: Because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth, that is, either be an open Infidel, or a holy downright sound Christian: But because thou callest thy self a Christian, and hast not the life or zeal of a Christian, but covereſt thy wickedness and carnality with that holy name, I will cast thee away as an abominable vomit. It would make the heart of a believer ake to think of the Hypocrisie of most that usurp the name of Christians, and how cruelly they mock themselves. What a glory is offered them, and they lose it by their dallying? What a price is in their hands? What mercy is offered them, and they lose it by their dallying? What danger is before them, and they will fall into it by their dallying! Doth not the weight of your salvation forbid this trifling? You might better set the Town on fire, and make a jest of it, than jest your souls into the fire of Hell. Then you will find that Hell is no jesting matter: If you mock your selves out of your salvation, where are you then? If you play with time, and means, and mercy till they are gone, you are undone for ever. O dally not till you are past remedy. Alas poor dreaming trifling Hypocrites! Is time so sweet, and life so short, and death so sure and near, and God so holy, just and terrible, and Heaven so glorious, and Hell so hot, and both everlasting, and yet will you not be in earnest about your work? Up and be doing, as you are men! and as ever you care what becomes of you for ever! Depart from iniquity, if you will name the name of Christ, 2 Tim. 2. 19. Let not a cheating world delude you for a moment, and have the kernel, the heart, while God hath but the empty shell. A mock-Religion will but keep up a mock-hope, a mock-peace, and a mock joy and comfort till Satan have done his work, and be ready to unhood you and open your eyes, Job 8. 13. So are the paths of all that forget God, and the Hypocrites hope shall perish, Job 27. 8, 9. For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul? Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him? Job 20. 4, 5, 6, 7. Knowest thou not this of old —— that the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment. Though his excellency mount up to the Heavens, and his head reach unto the Clouds, yet he shall perish for ever like his own dung, they which have seen him, shall say where is he? Away then with hypocritical formality and dalliance, and be serious and sincere for thy soul and with thy God.

The similitude of Superstition to Religion maketh it the more deformed: And as wholsome meat corrupteth into little Worms, so good forms and orders, corrupt into a number of petty observances. Lord Bacon Essay of Superst.

PART. IV.

Directions against inordinate Man-pleasing: or that Overvaluing the Favour and Censure of Man, which is the fruit of Pride, and a great Cause of Hypocrisie: Or Directions against IDOLIZING MAN.

§. 1. AS in other cases so in this, iniquity consisteth not simply in the hearts Neglect of God, but in the preferring of some competitor, and prevalence of some object which standeth up for an opposite interest. And so the obeying man before God and against him, and the valuing the favour and approbation of man before or against the approbation of God, and the fearing of mans censure or displeasure more than Gods, is an IDOLIZING MAN, or setting him up in the place of God. It turneth our chiefest observance, and care, and labour, and pleasure, and grief into this humane fleshly channel, and maketh all that to be but Humane in our hearts and lives, which (objectively) should be Divine. Which is so great and dangerous a sin, partaking of so much Impiety, Hypocrisie and Pride,

Non quam multis placeas, sed qualibus. Martin. Dumiens. de Morib.

Pride, as that it deserveth a special place in my Directions, and in all watchfulness and consideration to escape it.

§. 2. As all other Creatures, so specially Man, must be regarded and valued only in a due subordination and subserviency to God. If they be valued otherwise, they are made his enemies, and so are to be hated, and are made the principal engine of the ruine of such as overvalue them. See what the Scripture saith of this sin, Isa. 2. 22. Cease ye from Man whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of? Matth. 23. 9. And call no Man your Father upon the earth: for one is your Father which is in Heaven. 8. And be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, even Christ, but he that is greatest among you shall be your servant, Jer. 20. 15. Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm——— Psal. 118. 6, 8, 9. The Lord is on my side; I will not fear what man can do unto me: It is better to trust in the Lord, than to put confidence in man——— yea, in Princes, Job 32. 21, 22. Let me not accept any mans person; neither let me give flattering titles unto man: For I know not to give flattering Titles: in so doing my Maker would soon take me away, Job 21. 4. As for me, is my complaint to man? Gal. 1. 10. Do I seek to please men? For if I yet pleased men, I should not be a servant of Christ, 1 Cor. 4. 3. But with me it is a very small thing to be judged of you, or of mans judgment, Luke 14. 26. If a man come to me, and hate not his Father, and Mother, and Wife, and Children, and Brethren, and Sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my Disciple. Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsly for my sake. Rejoyce and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in Heaven, Matth. 5. 11, 12. Not with eye-service as men pleasers, Ephes. 6. 6. Col. 3. 22. 1 Thess. 2. 4. So we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, who tryeth our hearts. Jude 16. Having mens persons in admiration because of advantage. This is enough to shew you what Scripture saith of this inordinate man pleasing, or respect to man: And now I shall proceed to Direct you to escape it.

Secure Conscience first, Qua semel amissa, postea nullus eris.

Dir. 1.

§. 3. Direct. 1. Understand well wherein the nature of this sin consisteth, that you may not run into the contrary extream, but may know which way to bend your opposition. I shall therefore first shew you, how far we may and must please men, and how far not.

§. 4. 1. Our Parents, Rulers and Superiours must be honoured, obeyed and pleased in all things which they require of us in the several places of authority which God hath given them over us: And this must be not meerly as to man, but as to the Officers of God from whom, and for whom (and not against him) they have all their power, Rom. 13. Exod. 20. 12. Titus 3. 1. 1 Pet. 2. 13. & 2. 2, 10.

§. 5. 2. We must in charity and condescension and meekness of behaviour seek to please all men in order to their salvation: We must so thirst for the conversion of sinners, that we must become all things (lawful) to all men that we may win them, We must not stand upon our terms, and keep at a distance from them, but condescend to the lowest, and bear the infirmities of the weak, and in things indifferent not take the course that pleaseth our selves, but that which by pleasing him may edifie our weak brother: We must forbear and forgive, and part with our right, and deny our selves the use of our Christian liberty, were it as long as we live, if it be necessary to the saving of our brethrens souls, by removing the offence which hindereth them by prejudice. We must not seek our own carnal ends, but the benefit of others, and do them all the good we can.

Rom. 15. 1, 2.

§. 6. 3. As our neighbour is commanded to Love us as himself, we are bound by all lawful means to render our selves amiable to him, that we may help and facilitate this his Love, as it is more necessary to him than to us: For to help him in obeying so great a command must needs be a great duty: And therefore if his very sin possess him with prejudice against us, or cause him to distaste us for some indifferent thing, we must as far we can lawfully remove the cause of his prejudice and dislike (Though he that hateth us for obeying God, must not be cured by our disobeying him): we are so far from being obliged to displease men by surliness and morosity, that we are bound to pleasing gentleness, and brotherly kindness, and to all that carriage which is necessary to cure their sinful hatred or dislike.

§. 7. 4. We must not be self-conceited, and prefer a weak unfurnished Judgment of our own before the greater wisdom of another; but in honour must prefer each other; and the ignorant must honour the knowledge and parts of others that excel them, and not be stiff in their own opinion, nor wise in their own eyes, nor undervalue another mans reasons or Judgment, but be glad to learn of any that can teach them, in the humble acknowledgment of their own insufficiency.

§. 8. 5. Especially we must reverence the judgment of our able faithful Teachers, and not by pride set up our weaker judgment against them, and resist the truth which they deliver to us from God. Neither must we set light by the censures or admonitions of the lawful Pastors of the Church: When they are agreeable to the word and judgment of God, they are very dreadful: As Tertullian saith, If any so offend as to be banished from communion of prayer, and assembly and all holy commerce, it is a judgment foregoing the great judgment to come. Yea if the Officers of Christ should wrong you in their censures by passion or mistake, while they act in their own charge about matters belonging to their cognizance and judgment, you must respectfully and patiently bear the wrong, so as not to dishonour and contemn the authority and office so abused.

Gal. 5. 10. 1 Cor. 5.

§. 9. 6. If sober godly persons that are well acquainted with us, do strongly suspect us to be faulty where we discern it not our selves; it should make us the more suspicious and fearful, and if judicious persons fear you to be Hypocrites, and no sound Christians, by observing your temper and course of life, it should make you search with the greater fear, and not to disregard their judgment. And if judicious persons, especially Ministers, shall tell a poor fearful doubting Christian, that they verily think their state is safe, it may be a great stay to them, and must not be slighted as nothing, though it cannot give them a certainty of their case. Thus far mans judgment must be valued.

§. 10. 7. A good name among men, which is the reputation of our integrity is not to be neglected as a thing of nought; for it is a mercy from God for which we must be thankful, and it is a useless means to our successful serving and honouring God: And the more eminent we are, and the more the honour of God and Religion is joyned with ours, or the good of mens souls dependeth on our reputation, the more careful we should be of it; and it may be a duty sometimes to vindicate it by the Magistrates justice, against a slander. Especially Quicquid de te probabiliter fingi potest, ne fingatur ante devita: Hieron. ad Nepot. Non solum veritas in hac parte sed etiam opinio studiose quærenda est, ut te hypocritam agere [illegible] fame one worthily enough to Acosta, ut li. 4. c. 17. p. 413.

Preachers.

Preachers, (whose success for the saving of their hearers depends much on their good name) must not despise it.

§. 11. 8. The censures of the most petulant, and the scorns of enemies, are not to be made light of as they are their sins, which we must lament; nor as they may provoke us to a more diligent search, and careful watchfulness over our ways. Thus far mans judgement is regardable.

§. 12. But 1. We must know how frail and erroneous and unconstant a thing man is: and therefore not be too high in our expectations from man: We must suppose that men will mistake us, and wrong us, and slander us through ignorance, passion, prejudice or self-interest: And when this befals us, we must not count it strange and unexpected.

1 Pet. 4. 12, 13, &c. 1 Cor. 4. 12, 13. Acts 22. 22. Acts 24. 5, 6. Mat. 5. 10, 11, 12.

§. 13. 2. We must consider how far the enmity that is in lapsed man to holiness, and the ignorance, prejudice and passion of the ungodly, will carry them to despise, and scorn, and slander all such as seriously and zealously serve God, and cross them in their carnal interest: And therefore if for the sake of Christ and righteousness, we are accounted as the scorn and off-scouring of all things, and as pestilent fellows, and movers of sedition among the people, and such as are unworthy to live, and have all manner of evil spoken of us falsly, it must not seem strange or unexpected to us, nor cast us down, but we must bear it patiently, yea and exceedingly rejoyce in hope of our reward in Heaven.

§. 14. 3. Considering what remnants of pride and self-conceitedness remain in many that have true grace, and how many Hypocrites are in the Church, whose Religion consisteth in Opinions and their several modes of worship, we must expect to be reproached and abused by such as in Opinions, and Modes, and Circumstances do differ from us, and take us therefore as their adversaries: A great deal of injustice, sometime by slanders or reproach, and sometimes by greater violence, must be expected, from contentious professors of the same Religion with our selves: Especially when the interest of their faction or cause requireth it: and especially if we bring any truth among them, which seemeth new to them, or crosseth the opinions which are there in credit, or would be Reformers of them in any thing that is amiss.

§. 15. 4. No men must be pleased by sin; Nor their favour preferred before the pleasing of God: Mens favour as against God, is to be despised, and their displeasure made light of. If doing our duty will displease them, let them be displeased; we can but pity them.

§. 16. 5. We must place none of our happiness in the favour or approbation of men, but account it as to our selves to be a matter of no great moment; neither worth any great care or endeavour to obtain it, or grief for losing it. We must not only contemn it as compared to the approbation and favour of God, but we must value it but as other transitory things, in it self considered; estimating it as a means to some higher end, the service of God and our own or other mens greater good: And further than it conduceth to some of these, it must be almost indifferent to us what men think or say of us: And the displeasure of all men if unjust, must be reckoned with our light afflictions.

§. 17. 6. One truth of God, and the smallest duty, must be preferred before the pleasing and favour of all the men in the world: Though yet as a means to the promoting of a greater truth or duty, the favour and pleasing of men must be preferred before the uttering of a lesser truth, or doing a lesser good at that time, (because it is no duty then to do it.)

§. 18. 7. Our hearts are so selfish and deceitful naturally, that when we are very sollicitous about our reputation, we must carefully watch them lest self be intended, while God is pretended: And we must take special care, that we be sure it be the honour of God, and Religion; and the good of souls or some greater benefit than honour it self, that we value our honour and reputation for.

§. 19. 8. Mans nature is so prone to go too far in valuing our esteem with men, that we should more fear lest we err on that hand, than on the other, in undervaluing it. And it is far safer to do too little than too much in the vindicating of our own reputation, whether by the magistrates justice, or by disputing or any contentious means.

§. 20. 9. We must not wholly rest on the judgement of any about the state of our souls, nor take their judgement of us for infallible; but use their help that we may know our selves.

§. 21. 10. If Ministers or Councils called General do err and contradict the word of God, we must do our best to discern it; and discerning it must desert their error rather than the truth of God. As Calvin, and after him Paræus on 1 Cor. 4. 3. say, [We must give an account of our doctrine to all men, that require it, especially to Ministers and Councils: But when a faithful Pastor perceiveth himself oppressed with unrighteous and perverse designs and factions, and that there is no place for equity and truth, he ought to be careless of mans esteem, and appeal to God, and fly to his tribunal: And if we see our selves condemned our cause being unpleaded, and judgement passed our cause being unheard, let us lift up our minds to this magnanimity, as despising mens judgement, to expect with boldness the judgement of God] and say with Paul, With me it is a small matter to be judged of you, or of mans judgement; I have one that judgeth me, even the Lord.

§. 22. 11. God must be enough for a gracious soul, and we must know that in his favour is life, and his loving kindness is better than life it self; and this must be our care and labour that whether living or dying we may be accepted of him; and if we have his Approbation it must satisfie us, though all the world condemn us: Therefore having faithfully done our duty, we must leave the matter of our reputation to God; who if our wayes please him, can make our enemies to be at peace with us, (or be harmless to us as if they were no enemies.) As we must quietly leave it to him what measure of wealth we shall have, so also what measure of honour we shall have: It is our duty to Love and Honour, but not to be beloved and honoured.

Psal. 30. 5. Psal. 63. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 9. Rom. 8. 33, 34.

§. 23. 12. The prophecie of our Saviour must be still believed; that the world will hate us, and his example must be still before our eyes, who submitted to be spit upon, and scorned, and buffeted, and slandered as a traytor or usurper of the Crown, and made himself of no reputation, and indured the Cross, and despised the shame: leaving us an example that we should follow his steps, who did not sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatned not, but committed all to him that judgeth righteously. This is the usage that must be the Christians expectation, and not to be well spoken of by all, nor to have the applause and honour of the world.

Mat. 10. John 15. Mat. 27. Heb. 12. 1, 2, 3. 1 Pet. 2. 21, 22.

§. 24. 13. It is not only the approbation of the ignorant and ungodly that we must thus set light by; but even of the most Learned and Godly themselves, so as to bear their censures as an easie burden when God is pleased this way to try us: and to be satisfied in God alone, and the expectation of his final judgement.

We must go further than Seneca who said, Male de me loquuntur, sed mali: moverer si de me Mar. Cato, si Lælius sapiens, si duo Scipiones ista loquerentur: nunc malis displicere, laudari est.

§. 25.

Dir. 2. §. 25. Direct. 2. Remember that the favour and pleaſing of man is one of your ſnares; that would prevail againſt your pleaſing God: Therefore watch againſt the danger of it, as you muſt do againſt other earthly things.

Dir. 3. §. 26. Direct. 3. Remember how ſilly a creature man is; and that his favour can be no better than himſelf. The thoughts or words of a mortal worm, are matters of no conſiderable value to us.

Dir. 4. §. 27. Direct. 4. Remember that it is the judgement of God alone that your Life or death for ever doth depend upon: and how little you are concerned in the judgement of man. 1. An humbled ſoul, that hath felt what it is to have diſpleaſed God, and what it is to be under his curſe, and what it is to be reconciled to him by the death and interceſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, is ſo taken up in ſeeking the favour of God, and is ſo troubled with every fear of his diſpleaſure, and is ſo delighted with the ſenſe of his Love, as that he can ſcarce have while to mind ſo ſmall a matter as the favour or diſpleaſure of a man. Gods favour is enough for him, and ſo precious to him, that if he find that he hath this, ſo ſmall a matter as the favour of a man will ſcarce be miſt by him.

§. 28. 2. God only is our ſupream judge, and our Governours as Officers limited by him: But for others, if they will be uſurpers, and ſet themſelves in the throne of God, and there let fly their cenſures upon things and perſons which concern them not, why ſhould we ſeem much concerned in it? If a beggar ſtep up into a ſeat of judicature, and there condemn one, and fine another, will you fear him, or laugh at him? Who art thou that judgeſt another mans ſervant? To his own Maſter doth he ſtand or fall: Men may ſtep up into the throne of God, and there preſume to judge others according to their intereſts and paſſions: but God will quickly pull them down, and teach them better to know their places. How like is the common cenſure of the world, to the game of boyes, that will hold an Aſſize, and make a Judge, and try and condemn one another in ſport? And have we not a greater Judge to fear?

See Dr. Boys Poſtil. pag. 42. 43. Martyrat. in 1 Cor. 4. 3. §. 29. 3. It is God only that paſſeth the final ſentence, from whom there is no appeal to any other: But from humane judgement there lyeth an appeal to God. Their judgement muſt be judged of by him: Things ſhall not ſtand as now men cenſure them: Many a bad cauſe is now judged good, through the Multitude or Greatneſs of thoſe that favour it: And many a good cauſe is now condemned: Many a one is taken as a Malefactor becauſe he obeyeth God and doth his duty; But all theſe things muſt be judged over again, by him that hath denounced a Woe to them that call evil good and good evil, that put darkneſs for light and light for darkneſs. He that ſaith to the wicked, thou art Righteous, people ſhall curſe him, nations ſhall abhor him: Prov. 24. 24. It were ill with the beſt of the ſervants of Chriſt, if the judgement of the world muſt ſtand, who condemn them as fools, and hypocrites, and what they liſt: Then the Devils judgement would ſtand: But he is the wiſe man that God will judge to be wiſe at laſt; and he only is the happy man that God calls happy. The erring judgement of a creature is but like an ignorant mans writing the names of ſeveral things upon an Apothecaries boxes; If he write the names of Poyſons upon ſome, and of Antidotes on others, when there are no ſuch things within them, they are not to be eſtimated according to thoſe names. How different are the names that God and the world do put upon things and perſons now? And how few now approve of that which God approveth of, and will juſtifie at laſt? How many will God judge heterodox, and wicked, that men judged orthodox, and worthy of applauſe? And how many will God judge orthodox and ſincere, that were called Hereticks and Hypocrites by men? God will not verifie every word againſt his ſervants, which angry men, or contentious diſputants ſay againſt them. The learning or authority or other advantages of the contenders, may now bear down the reaſons and reputations of more wiſe and righteous men than they, which God will reſtore and vindicate at laſt. The names of Luther, Zuinglius, Calvin and many other excellent ſervants of the Lord, are now made odious in the writings and reports of Papiſts, by their impudent lies: But God judgeth otherwiſe, with more righteous judgment. O what abundance of perſons and cauſes will be juſtified at the dreadful day of God, which the world condemned? And how many will be there condemned, that were juſtified by the world? O bleſſed day! moſt deſirable to the juſt! moſt terrible to the wicked and every Hypocrite? How many things will then be ſet ſtrait, that now are crooked? And how many innocents and ſaints, will then have a reſurrection of their murdered names, that were buried by the world in a heap of lies, and their enemies never thought of their reviving. O look to that final judgement of the Lord, and you will take mens cenſures but as the ſhaking of a leaf.

§. 30. 4. It is God only that hath power to execute his ſentence, to our Happineſs or Miſery: There is one Lawgiver that is able to ſave and to deſtroy, Jam. 4. 12. If he ſay to us, Come ye bleſſed, we ſhall be happy though Devils and men ſhould curſe us: For thoſe that he bleſſeth ſhall be bleſſed. If he condemn to hell, the applauſe of the world will fetch no man out, nor give him eaſe: A great name on earth, or hiſtories written in their applauſe, or a guilded monument over their bones, are a poor relief to damned ſouls. And the barking of the wicked, and their ſcorns on earth, are no diminution to the joy or glory of the ſouls that ſhine and triumph with Chriſt. It is our Lord that hath the keys of death and Hell. Rev. 1. 18. Pleaſe him, and you are ſure to ſcape, though the Pope and all the wicked of the world, ſhould thunder out againſt you their moſt direful curſes. Woe to us if the wicked could execute all their malicious cenſures! Then how many Saints would be in Hell? But if it be God that juſtifies us, how inconſiderable a matter is it, who they are that condemn us? Or what be their pretences? Rom. 8. 33.

Dir. 5. §. 31. Direct. 5. Remember that the judgement of ungodly men, is corrupted and directed by the Devil: And to be over-ruled by their cenſures, or too much to fear them, is to be over-ruled by the Devil, and to be afraid of his cenſures of us. And will you honour him ſo much? Alas, it is he that puts thoſe thoughts into the minds of the ungodly, and thoſe reproachful words into their mouths. To prefer the judgement of a man before Gods is odious enough, though you did not prefer the Devils judgement.

Dir. 6. §. 32. Direct. 6. Conſider what a ſlavery you chooſe, when you thus make your ſelves the ſervants of every man, whoſe cenſures you fear, and whoſe approbation you are ambitious of. 1 Cor. 7. 23. [Ye are bought with a price: be not ye the ſervants of men]: that is, Do not needleſly enthrall your ſelves. What a taſk have men-pleaſers? They have as many Maſters as beholders! No wonder if it take them off from the ſervice of God: For the friendſhip of the world is enmity to God: and he that will thus be a friend of the world is an enemy to God. They cannot ſerve two Maſters, God and the world. You know men will condemn you, if you be true to God: Jam 4. 4. Offendet te ſuperbus contemptu; dives contumelia, petulans injuria, lividus malignitate: pugnax contentione, vanus de gr. mendax remittat: non feres a ſuſpecto timeri, a [illegible] nei, [illegible]; Senec. de Ira. l. 3. c. 8.

The open day-light of Truth doth not ſhew the Maſques and Mummeries and triumphs of the world, but is ſtately and glorious: But as candle-light doth, Lord Bacon. Eſſay of Truth. Why they are hated.

If

If therefore you must needs have the favour of men, you must take it alone without Gods favour. A man-pleaser cannot be true to God; because he is a Servant to the Enemies of his Service: The wind of a mans mouth, will drive him about as the chaff, from any duty, and to any sin. How servile a person is a Man-pleaser? How many Masters hath he, and how mean ones? It perverteth the course of your hearts and lives, and turneth all from God to this unprofitable way.

Dir. 7. §. 33. Direct. 7. Remember what a pittiful Reward you seek. Verily, saith our Lord, concerning hypocrites and man-pleasers, they have their reward, Matth. 6. 25. O miserable reward! The thought and breath of mortal men! Instead of God, instead of Heaven, this is their Reward! Their happiness will be to lye in Hell, and remember that they were well spoken of on earth! and that once they were accounted religious, learned, wise or honourable! and to remember that they preferred this Reward before everlatting happiness with Christ! If this be not gain, your labour is all lost, which you lay out in hunting for applause. If this be enough to spend your time for, and to neglect your God for, and to lose your souls for, rejoyce then in the Hypocrites Reward.

Dir. 8. §. 34. Direct. 8. And remember that Honour is such a thing as is found sooner by an honest contempt of it, than by an inordinate Affection of it, and seeking it. It is a shadow which goeth from you if you follow it, and follows you as fast as you go from it. Whose names are now more honourable upon earth, than those Prophets, and Apostles, and Martyrs, and Preachers, and Holy Mortified Christians, who in their days set lightest by the approbation of the world, and were made the scorn or foot-ball of the times in which they lived? Those that have been satisfied with the approbation of their heavenly Father, who saw them in secret, have been rewarded by him openly. It is even in the eyes of rational men a far greater honour to live to God, above worldly honour, than to seek it. And so much as a man is perceived to affect and seek it, so much he loseth of it: For he is thought to need it; and men perceiveth that he plays a low and pitiful game, that is so desirous of their applause! As they would contemn a man that should lick up the spittle of every man where he comes, so will they contemn him that liveth on their thoughts and breath, and honour him more that lives on God.

Dir. 9. §. 35. Direct. 9. If nothing else will cure this Disease, at least let the Impossibility of pleasing men, and attaining your ends, suffice against so fruitless an attempt. And here I shall shew you how impossible it is, or at least a thing which you cannot reasonably expect.

Unus mihi pro populo est, & populus pro uno. Sen. Ep. 7. ex Democr. Satis sunt mihi pauci, satis est unus; satis est nullus. Senec. Epist. 7. Socrates was condemned by the votes of more against him of his Judges than those that absolved him: and they would not suffer Plato to speak for him: His Sentence was, Jura violat Socrates, quos ex majorum instituto suscepit civitas, deos esse negans, alia vero nova dæmonia inducens. Laert. in Socrat.

§. 36. 1. Remember what a multitude you have to please, and when you have pleased some, how many more will be still unpleased, and how many displeased when you have done your best. Alas, we are insufficient at once to observe all those that observe us, and would be pleased by us: You are like one that hath but twelve pence in his purse, and a thousand Beggars come about him for it: and every one will be displeased if he have it not all. If you resolve to give all that you have to the poor, if you do it to please God, you may attain your end: But if you do it to please them, when you have pleased those few that you gave it to, perhaps twice as many will revile or curse you, because they had nothing. The Beggar that speeds well will proclaim you liberal; and the Beggar that speeds ill, will proclaim you niggardly, and unmerciful; And so you will have more to offend and dishonour you, than to comfort you by their praise, if that must be your comfort.

§. 37. 2. Remember that all Men are so selfish, that their Expectations will be higher, than you are able to satisfy. They will not consider your Hinderances, or avocations, or what you do for others, but most of them look to have as much to themselves, as if you had no body else to mind but them. Many and many a time, when I have had an hour or a day to spend, a multitude have every one expected that I should have spent it with them: When I visit one, there are ten offended that I am not visiting them at the same hour: When I am discoursing with one, many more are offended that I am not speaking to them all at once: If those that I speak to account me courteous, and humble, and respectful, those that I could not speak to, or but in a word, account me discourteous, and morose. How many have censured me, because I have not allowed them the time, which God and Conscience commanded me to spend upon greater and more necessary work? If you have any office to give, or benefit to bestow, which one only can have, every one thinketh himself the fittest, and when you have pleased one that hath it, you have displeased all that went without it, and mist of their desires.

Quæ ego scio populus non probat: quæ probat populus ego nescio. Sen. Epi. 29. Imperitia in omnibus majori ex parte dominatur, & multitudo verborum. Cleobulus in Laert.

§. 38. 3. You have abundance to please that are so ignorant, unreasonable, and weak, that they take your greatest Vertues for your Faults, and know not when you do well or ill. And yet none more bold in censuring than those that least understand the things they censure. Many and many a time my own and others Sermons have been censured, and openly defamed, for that which never was in them, upon the ignorance or heedlesness of a censorious hearer: Yea, for that which they directly spoke against; because they were not understood: especially he that hath a close Style, free from tautology, where every word must be marked by him that will not misunderstand, shall frequently be misreported.

§. 39. 4. You will have many factious Zealots to please, who being Strangers to the Love of Holiness, Christianity and Unity, are ruled by the Interest of an Opinion or a Sect: And these will never be pleased by you, unless you will be one of their side or party, and conform your self to their opinions: If you be not against them, but set your selves to reconcile and end the Differences in the Church, they will hate you as not promoting their Opinions, but weakning them by some abhorred Syncretisms. As in Civil, so in Ecclesiastical Wars, the Fire-brands cannot endure the Peaceable: If you will be Neuters, you shall be used as enemies. If you be never so much for Christ, and Holiness, and Common Truth, all is nothing, unless you be also for them, and their Conceits.

§. 40. 5. Most of the World are haters of holiness, and have a serpentine Enmity to the Image of God; being not renewed by the Holy Ghost; and will not be pleased with you, unless you will sin against your Lord, and do as they do. 1 Pet. 4. 3, 4, 5. Walking in Lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquettings, and abominable idolatries, wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you; who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead. You must be counted as Lot among the Sodomites, a busie Fellow that comes among them to make himself their Judge, and to control them, if you tell them of their sin. You shall be called a precise hypocritical Coxcomb (or somewhat much worse) if you will not be as bad as they, and if by your abstinence (though you say nothing) you seem to reprehend their sensuality and contempt of God. Among Bedlams you must play the Bedlam it you will escape the fangs of their Revilings. And can you hope to please such men as these?

§. 41. 6. You shall have Satanical God-haters, and Men of seared and desperate Consciences to please, that are malicious and cruel, and will be pleased with nothing but some horrid iniquity, and the damning of your own Souls, and drawing others to damnation. Like that Monster of Millan, that when he had got down his enemy, made him blaspheme God in hope to save his life, and then stab'd him, calling it a noble revenge, that killed the body, and damned the soul at once. There are such in the world, that will so visibly act the Devils part, that they would debauch your Consciences with the most horrid Perjuries, Perfidiousness and impiety, that they may triumph over your miserable Souls. And if you think it worth the wilful damning of your souls, it's possible they may be pleased. If you tell them, we cannot please you, unless we will be dishoneſt, and displease God, and sin against our knowledge and consciences, and hazard our salvation, they will make but a jeast of such arguments as these, and expect you should venture your Souls and all upon their Opinions, and care as little for God and your Souls as they do. Desperate sinners are loth to go to Hell alone: It is a torment to them to see others better than themselves. They that are cruel and unmerciful to themselves, and have no pity on their own souls, but will sell them for a Whore, or for preferment, and honour, or sensual delights, will scarce have mercy on the Souls of others, Matth. 27. 25. His Blood be on us, and on our children.

Inter hæc quid agant quibus loquendi à Christo officium mandatur? Deo displicent, si taceant; hominibus si loquantur. Salvian. ad Eccles. Cath. l. 4.

§. 42. 7. You will have rigorous, captious, uncharitable and unrighteous men to please; who will make a man an Offender for a Word, and lay a Snare for him that reproveth in the Gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought, and watch for iniquity, Isa. 29. 20, 21. That have none of that charity which covereth Faults, and interpreteth words and actions favourably; nor none of that justice which causeth men to do as they would be done by, and judge as they would be judged; but judging without mercy, are like to have judgment without mercy. And are glad when they can find any matter to reproach you: And if once they meet with it (true or false) they will never forget it, but dwell as the Flie on the ulcerated place.

Even for the greatness of your services, you may perish, by the suspicion and envy of those great ones whom you served: As is proved by the Case of Saul, and David, Belisarius, Narses, Bonifacius, the two Sons of Hunades imprisoned, and one slain, and multitudes such like.

§. 43. 8. You will have passionate Persons to please, whose judgments are blinded, and are not capable of being pleased. Like the sick and sore that are hurt with every touch; and at last, saith Seneca, with the very conceit that you touched them. How can you please them, when Displeasedness is their disease that abideth within them, at the very heart?

§. 44. 9. You will find that censoriousness is a common Vice, and though few are competent judges of your Actions, as not being acquainted with all the case, yet every one almost will be venturing to cast in his censure: A proud presumptuous understanding is a very common vice; which thinks it self presently capible of judging as soon as it heareth but a piece of the case, and is not conscious of its own Fallibility, though it have daily experience of it. Few are at your elbow, and none in your heart, and therefore know not the circumstances and reasons of all that you do, nor hear what you have to say for your selves; and yet they will presume to censure you, who would have absolved you, if they had but heard you speak. It is rare to meet even with Professors of greatest sincerity that are very tender and fearful of sinning, in this point of rash ungrounded judging, without capacity or call.

§. 45. 10. You live among unpeaceable Twatlers and Tale-carriers, that would please others by accusing you. Who is it that hath ears that hath not such Vermin as these Earwigs busie at them? Except here and there an upright man, whose angry countenance hath still driven away such backbiting tongues. And all shall be said behind your backs, when you are uncapable of answering for your selves. And if it be a man that the hearers think well of that accuseth or backbiteth you, they think it lawful then to believe them: And most that are their Friends, and of their party, and for their Interest, shall be sure to be thought so honest as to be credible. And it is not strange, for a learned, ingenious, yea, a godly person to be too forward in uttering from the mouth of others, an evil report: And then the hearer thinks he is fully justified for believing it, and reporting it again to others. David himself by the temptation of a Ziba, is drawn to wrong Mephibosheth the Son of his great deserving friend, 2 Sam. 16. 3, 4. No wonder then if Saul do hearken to a Doeg to the wrong of David, and murder of the Priests, Prov. 18. 8. The words of a Tale-bearer are as wounds. Prov. 26. 20. Where no wood is, the fire goeth out: so where there is no Tale-bearer, the strife ceaseth. And when these are still near men, and you far off, it is easie for them to continue the most odious representation, of the most laudable persons actions in the world.

§. 46. 11. The Imperfection of all mens understandings and godliness is so great, that the differences of judgment that are among the best, will tend to the Injury and Undervaluing of their Brethren: One is confident that his way is right, and another is confident of the contrary! And to how great contendings and injuries such differences may proceed, he that knoweth not in this age, shall not know for me. We need not go to Paul and Barnabas for an instance (that was a far lighter case:) Nor to Epiphanius, Hierom and Chrysostome; nor to those Ages and Tragedies of contending Bishops that in the Eastern and Western Churches have been before us: Every one thinking his cause so plain, as to justifie himself in all that he saith and doth, against those that presume to differ from him. And surely you may well expect some displeasure even from good and learned men, when the Churches have felt such dreadful concussions, and bleedeth to this day, by so horrid divisions, thro' the remnants of that Pride and Ignorance which her Reverend Guides have still been guilty of.

Persium non curo legere: Lælium Decimum volo: ut Lucilius.

I may add that you have guilty Consciences to please. And the Guilty are as Seneca speaks, like one that hath an ulcer, that at first is hurt with every Touch, and at last even with the Suspicion of a Touch. Tutum aliqua res in mala Conscientia præstat, nulla securum. Putat enim etiamsi non deprehenditur, se posse deprehendi; & inter somnos movetur; & quoties alicujus scelus loquitur, de suo cogitat. Sen. Epist. 106. & Ep. 97. Prima & maxima peccantium pœna est peccasse——— Hæc & secundæ pœnæ premunt & sequuntur, timere semper & expavescere & securitate diffidere. Tyranno amici quoque sæpe suspecti sunt. Tu ergo, si tyrannidem tuto tenere cupis, atque in ea constabiliri, civitatis principes tolle, sive illi amici, sive inimici videantur. Thrasybulus in Epist. Periand. in Laertio. Plerorumque ingenium est, ut errata aliorum vel minima perscrutentur, benefacta vero vel in propatulo posita præterant; sicut Vultures corpora viva & sana non sentiunt, morticina vero & cadavera tametsi longe remota odore persequuntur. Galiadus in Arcan. Jesuit. p. 55.

§. 47. 12. You have Men of great Mutability to please: That one hour may be ready to worship you as Gods, and the next to stone you, or account you as Devils, as they did by Paul, and Christ himself: What a Weather-cock is the mind of Man? especially of the vulgar and the temporizers? When you have spent all your days in building your repu-reputation on this Sand, one blast of Wind, or Storm at last, doth tumble it down, and all your cost and labour is lost. Serve men as submissively and carefully as you can; and after all, some accident or failing of their unrighteous expectations, may make all that ever you did forgotten, and turn you out of the world with Wolsey's groans, [If I had served God as faithfully as man, I had been better rewarded, and not forsaken in my distress.] How many have fallen by the hands or frowns, of those whose favour they had dearly purchased? perhaps at the price of their salvation? If ever you put such confidence in a friend, as not to consider that it is possible he may one day prove your Enemy, you know not man; and may perhaps be better taught to know him, to your cost.

§. 48. 13. Every man living shall unavoidably be engaged by God himself, in some duties which are very lyable to misconstruction, and will have an outside and appearance of evil to the Offence of those that know not all the inside and circumstances. And hence it comes to pass, that a great part of History is little worth of regard: Because the actions of publick persons are discerned but by the halves by most that write of them. They write most by hearsay; or know but the Outside and Seemings of things, and not the Spirit, and life, and reality of the case. Men have not the choosing of their own duties, but God maketh them by his Law and Providence: And it pleaseth him oft to try his servants in this kind: Many of the Circumstances of their actions, shall remain unknown to men, that would justifie them if they knew them, and account them as notorious scandalous persons, because they know them not. How like to evil was the Israelites taking the goods of the Egyptians? and how likely to lay them open to their censure? So was Abrahams attempt to sacrifice his Son? And so was Davids eating the Shew-bread, and dancing almost naked before the Ark; Christs eating and drinking with publicans and sinners: Pauls circumcising Timothy, and purifying in the Temple; with abundance such like, which fall out in the life of every Christian. No wonder if Joseph thought once of putting Mary away, till he knew the evidence of her miraculous conception; and how liable was she to censure by those that knew it not? O therefore how vain is the judgment of man! And how contrary are they frequently to the truth? And with what caution must History be read? And O how desireable is the great day of God, when all human censure shall be justly censured?

§. 49. 14. The perverseness of many is so great, that they require Contradictions and Impossibilities of you, to tell you that they are resolved never to be pleased by you. If John use fasting, they say, He hath a Devil: If Christ come eating and drinking, they say, behold a gluttenous Person, and a winebibber, a friend of Publicans and Sinners. If your judgment and practice be conformable to superiours, especially if it have admitted of a change, you shall be judged meer Knaves and Temporizers: If it be not, you shall be judged disobedient, refractory, and seditious. If you speak fair and pleasingly, they will call you flatterers and dissemblers: If you speak more freely, though in a necessary case, they will say you rail. If I accept of Preferment, they will say, I am ambitious, proud and wordly: If I refuse it (how modestly soever) they will say, I am discontented, and have seditious Designs. If I preach not when I am forbidden, I shall be accused as forsaking the Calling I undertook, and obeying man against God: If I do preach, I shall be accounted disobedient and seditious. If a Friend or kinsman desire me to help him to some place or preferment which he is not fit for, or which would tend to anothers wrong: if I should grant his desire, I shall be taken for dishoneſt, that by partiality wrong another: If I deny it him, I shall be called unnatural or unfriendly, and worse than an Infidel. If I give to the poor as long as I have it, I shall be censured for ceasing when I have no more: They that know not whether you have it to give or not, will be displeased if you do not: And if many years you should maintain them freely, it is all as nothing as soon as you cease, either because your stock is spent, or because some other is made the necessary object of your charity. If you be wronged in your estate, if you go to Law, they will say you are contentious: If you let go your estate to avoid contention, they will say, you are silly fools or ideots. If you do any good works of charity to the knowledge of men; they will say, you are hypocrites and do it for applause: If you do it secretly, that no one know of it, they will say, you are covetous and have no good Works, and tho' you make a greater Profession of Religion, you do no good; and others shall be censured so also for your sakes. If you be pleasant and merry, they will censure you as light and vain: If you be more grave and sad, they will say you are melancholy or discontent. In a word, whatever you do, be sure by some it will be condemned; and do or not do, speak or be silent, you shall certainly displease, and never escape the censures of the world.

§. 50. 15. There is among Men so great a Contrariety of Judgments, and Dispositions, and Interests, that they will never agree among themselves; and if you please one, the rest will be thereby displeased. He that you please is an enemy to another; and therefore you displease his enemy, by pleasing him. Sometimes State-differences divide Kingdoms into parties, and one party will be displeased with you, if you be of the other, and both if you are neuters, or dislike them both: and each party think their cause will justifie any accusations they can charge you with, or odious titles they can give you, if not any sufferings they can bring upon you. Church-differences and Sects have been found in all ages: And you cannot be of the opinion of every party: When the world aboundeth with such variety of conceits, you cannot be of all at once. And if you be of one party, you must displease the rest: If you are of one side in controverted opinions, the other side accounteth you erroneous: and how far will the supposed interest of their cause and party carry them? One half of the Christian world at this day, condemneth the other half as Schismatical at least, the other half doing the like for them. And can you be Papists, and Protestants, and Greeks, and every thing? If not, you must displease as many as you please. Yea, more, if mutable men should change never so oft, they will expect that you change as fast as they, and whatever their contrary Interests require, you must follow them in: One year you must swear, and another you must unswear all again: whatever cause or action they engage in, be it never so deviliſh, you must approve of it and countenance it, and all that they do, you must say is well done. In a word, you must teach your tongue to say or swear any thing, and you must sell your Innocency, and hire out your consciences wholly to their service, or you cannot please them: Michaiah must say with the rest of the Prophets, Go and prosper, or else he will be hated, as not prophesying good of Ahab, but evil, 1 Kings 22. 8. And how can you serve all interest at once. It seems the providence of God hath, as of purpose, wheeled about the affairs of the world to try and shame man pleasers and temporizers in the sight of the Sun. It is evident then, that if you will please all you must at once both speak and be silent, and verifie contradictions, and be in many places at once, and be of all mens minds, and for all mens ways. For my part, I mean to see the world a little better agreed among themselves, before I will make it my ambition to please them. If you can reconcile all their opinions, and interests, and complexions, and dispositions, and make them all of One Mind and Will, then hope to please them.

§. 51. 16. If you excel in any one Virtue or Duty, even that shall not excuse you from the contrary defamation, so unreasonable are malicious men. Nothing in the world can secure you from censorious slanderous tongues. The perfect holiness of Jesus Christ could not secure him from being called a gluttonous person and a wine-bibber, and a friend of publicans and sinners. His wonderful contempt of worldly dignities and honours, and his subjection to Cæsar, could not secure him from being slandered and crucified as Cæsar's enemy. The great piety of the antient Christians excused them not from the vulgar calumny, that they met together for filthiness in the dark, nor from the cry of the rabble, Tollite impios, away with the ungodly, because they were against the worshipping of Idols. I have known those that have given all that ever they had to the poor except their food and necessaries, and yet (though it was to a considerable value) have been reproached as unmerciful by those that had not what they expected. Many a one hath been defamed with scandalous rumours of uncleanness, that have lived in untainted chastity all their lives. The most eminent Saints have been defamed as guilty of the most horrid crimes, which never entered into their thoughts. The principal thing that ever I bent my studies and care about, hath been the reconciling, Unity, and peace of Christians, and against unpeaceableness, uncharitableness, turbulency and division: And yet some have been found, whose interest and malice hath commanded them to charge me with that very sin, which I have spent my days, my zeal and study against. How oft have contrary factions charged me with perfectly contrary accusations? I can scarce remember the thing that I can do in all the world, that some will not be offended at? Nor the duty so great and clear, that some will not call my sin? Nor the self-denyal so great (to the hazard of my life) which hath not been called self-seeking, or something clean contrary to what it was indeed. Instead therefore of serving and pleasing this malicious unrighteous world, I contemn their blind and unjust censures, and appeal to the most righteous God.

§. 52. 17. If you have a design for a name of honour when you are dead, consider what power a prevailing faction may have to corrupt the History of your life, and represent you to posterity perfectly contrary to what you are; and how impossible it is for posterity to know whose History is the product of malicious shameless lies, and whose is the narrative of impartial truth. What contrary Histories are there of particular persons and actions written by men of the same Religion: as of Pope Gregory the seventh, and the Emperours that contended with him: and about Pope Joan, and many the like cases, where you may read scores of Historians on one side, and on the other.

Fama liberrima Principum judex. Seneca in consolat. ad Martiam.

§. 53. 18. Remember that the holiest Saints or Apostles could never please the world, nor escape their censures, slanders and cruelties; no nor Jesus Christ himself. And can you think by honest means to please them better than Christ and all his Saints have done? You have not the wisdom that Christ had to please men, and to avoid offence: You have not the perfect innocency and unblameableness that Christ had: You cannot heal their sicknesses and infirmities, and do that good to them to please and win them, as Jesus Christ did. You cannot convince them, and constrain them to reverence you, by manifold miracles as Jesus Christ did. Can you imitate such an excellent pattern as is set you, by the holy, patient, charitable, unwearied Apostle Paul, Acts 20. & 1 Cor. 4. & 9. & 2 Cor. 4. & 5. & 6. & 10. & 11. & 12. If you cannot, how can you please them that would not be pleased by such unimitable works of love and power? The more Paul loved some of his hearers, the less he was beloved, 2 Cor. 12. 15. They used him as an enemy for telling them the truth, Gal. 4. 16. Though he became all things to all men, he could save but some, nor please but some, 1 Cor. 9. 22. And what are you that you should better please them?

§. 54. 19. Godliness, vertue and honesty it self will not please the world, and therefore you cannot hope to please them by that which is not pleasing to them. Will men be pleased by that which they hate? and by the actions which they think accuse them and condemn them? And if you will be Ungodly and Vicious to please them, you sell your souls, your Conscience, and your God to please them. God and they are not pleased with the same ways. And which do you think should first be pleased? If you displease him for their favour, you will buy it dear.

Aristides having got the Surname of Just, was hated by the Athenians, who decreed to banish him: and every one that voted against him being to write down his Name, a Clown that could not write came to Aristides to desire him to write down Aristides name: He asked him whether he knew Aristides; and the man answered, no; but he would vote against him because his name was Just. Aristides concealed himself, fulfilled the mans desire, and wrote his own Name in the Roll and gave it him: so easily did he bear it to be condemned of the world for being Just: Plutarch in Aristide. It was not only Socrates that was thus used (saith Laertius) Nam Homerum velut insanientem drachmis quinquaginta multarunt, Tyrtæumque mentis impotem dixerunt, &c. ——— Which of the Prophets have not your Fathers persecuted? Matth. 23.

§. 55. 20. They are not pleased with God himself: yea, no man doth displease so many and so much as he. And can you do more than God to please them? or can you deserve their favour more than he? They are daily displeased with his works of providence: One would have rain, when another would have none: One would have the winds to serve his voyage, and another would have them in a contrary end: One party is displeased, because another is pleased and exalted: Every enemy would have his cause succeed, and the victory to be his: Every contender would have all go on his side. God must be ruled by them, and fit himself to the interest of the most unjust, and to the will of the most vicious, and do as they would have him, and be a servant to their lusts, or they will not be pleased with him. And his Holy Nature, and his Holy Word, and Holy Ways, displease them more than his ordinary providence. They are displeased that his Word is so precise and strict, and that he commandeth them so holy and so strict a life, and that he threatneth all the ungodly with damnation: He must alter his Laws, and make them more loose, and fit them to their fleshly interest and lusts, and speak as they would have him, without any difficulties, before they will be pleased with them (unless he alter their minds and hearts.) And how do you think they will be pleased with him at last, when he fulfills his threatnings? When he killeth them, and turneth their bodies to dust, and their guilty souls to torment and despair.

§. 56. 21. How can you please men that cannot please themselves? Their own desire and choice will please them but a little while. Like children, they are soon weary of that which they cryed for: They must needs have it, and when they have it, it is naught, and cast away: They are neither pleased with it, nor without it. They are like sick persons that long for every meat, or drink they think of: and when they have it, they cannot get it down: For the sickness is still within them that causeth their displeasure. How many do trouble and torment themselves by their passions and folly from day to day? And can you please such self-displeasers?

§. 57.

5. 57. How can you please all others, when you cannot please your selves? If you are persons fearing God, and feel the burden of your sins, and have life enough to be sensible of your diseases, I dare say there are none in the world so displeasing to you, as you are to your selves. You carry that about you, and feel that within you which displeaseth you more than all the enemies you have in the world. Your passions, and corruptions, your want of Love to God, and your strangeness to him and the life to come; the daily faultiness of your duties and your lives, are your daily burden, and displease you most. And if you be not able, and wise, and good enough to please your selves, can you be able, and wise, and good enough to please the world? As your sins are neerest to your selves, so are your graces; and as you know more evil by your selves, than others know, so you know more good by your selves. That little fire will not warm all the room, which will not warm the hearth it lyeth on.

Dicenti Aristidi, non esse tolerabilem Xantippen adeo morosam: Atqui, ait, ego ita huic assuetus sum, ac si sonum trochearum audiam ——— & mihi pol Xantippes usus reliquorum mortalium facilis toleratio est. Laert. in Socr.

5. 58. Direct. 10. Remember what a life of unquietness and continual vexation you choose. If you place your peace or happiness in the good will or word of man. For having shewed you how impossible a task you undertake, it must needs follow that the pursuit of it must be a life of torment: To engage your selves in so great cares, and be sure to be disappointed! To make that your end, which you cannot attain! To find that you labour in vain, and daily meet with displeasure instead of the favour you expected; must needs be a very grievous life. You are like one that dwelleth on the top of a mountain, and yet cannot endure the wind to blow upon him: Or like him that dwelleth in a wood, and yet is afraid of the shaking of a leaf. You dwell among a world of ulcerated, selfish, contradictory, mutable, unpleasable minds, and yet you cannot endure their displeasure. Are you Magistrates? The people will murmur at you, and those that are most incompetent and uncapable will be the forwardest to censure you, and think that they could govern much better than you: Those that bear the necessary burdens of the common safety and defence, will say that you oppress them; and the malefactors that are punished, will say you deal unmercifully by them, and those that have a cause never so unjust, will say you wrong them, if it go not on their side: Are you Pastours and Teachers? You will seem too rough to one, and too smooth to another; yea too rough to the same man when by reproof or censure you correct his faults, who censureth you as too smooth and a friend to sinners, when you are to deal in the cause of others. No sermon that you preach is like to be pleasing to all your hearers; nor any of your ministerial works. Are you Lawyers? The Clyents that lost their cause, behind your backs will call you unconscionable, and say you betrayed them: And those that prevailed, will call you covetous, and tell how much money you took of them, and how little you did for it: So that it's no wonder that among the vulgar, your profession is the matter of their reproach. Are you Physicians? You will be accused as guilty of the death of many that dye; and as covetous takers of their money whether the Patient dye or live: For this is the common talk of the vulgar, except of some few with whom your care hath much succeeded. Are you Tradesmen? Most men that buy of you are so selfish, that except you will begger your selves, they will say they deceive them, and deal unconscionably and sell too dear: Little do they mind the necessary maintenance of your families, nor care whether you live or gain by your trading; But if you will wrong your selves to sell them a good penny-worth, they will say you are very honest men: And yet when you are broken, they will accuse you of impudence, and defrauding your creditors. You must buy dear, and sell cheap, and live by the loss, or else displease.

5. 59. Direct. 11. Remember still that the Pleasing of God is your business in the world, and that in Pleasing him your souls may have safety, rest and full content, though all the world should be displeased with you. God is enough for you: And his approbation and favour is your portion and reward. How sweet and safe is the life of the sincere and upright ones, that study more to be good than to seem good? And think if God accept them that they have enough? O what a mercy is an upright heart? Which renounceth the world, and all therein that stands in competition with his God? And taketh God for his God indeed, even for his Lord, his Judge, his Portion and his all? Who in temptation remembreth the eye of God, and in all his duty is provoked and ruled by the will and pleasure of his Judge? And regardeth the eye and thoughts of man, but as he would do the presence of a bird or beast, unless as piety, justice or charity, require him to have respect to man, in due subordination to God. Who when men applaud him as a person of excellent holiness and goodness, is fearful and sollicitous lest the all-knowing God should think otherwise of him than his applauders: And under all the censures, reproaches and slanders of man (yea though through temptation good men should thus use him) can live in peace upon the approbation of his God alone; and can rejoyce in his justification by his righteous judge, and gracious redeemer, though the inconsiderable censures of men condemn him. Verily I cannot apprehend, how any other man but this, can live a life of true and solid peace and joy. If Gods approbation and favour quiet you not, nothing can rationally quiet you. If the pleasing of him do not satisfie you though men, though good men, though all men should be displeased with you, I know not how or when you will be satisfied. Yet if you be above the censures and displeasure of the profane, and not also of the godly (when God will permit them as Jobs wife and friends to be your trial) it will not suffice to an even contented quiet life. And here consider,

5. 60. 1. If you seek first to please God and are satisfied therein, you have but one to please instead of multitudes. And a multitude of masters are hardlier pleased than one. 2. And it is One that putteth you upon nothing that is unreasonable, for quantity or quality. 3. And one that is perfectly wise and good, not liable to misunderstand your case and actions. 4. And one that is most Holy, and is not pleased in iniquity or dishonesty. 5. And he is one that is impartial and most just, and is no respecter of persons, Acts 10. 34. 6. And he is one that is a competent Judge, that hath fitness and authority, and is acquainted with your hearts, and every circumstance and reason of your actions. 7. And he is one that perfectly agreeth with himself, and putteth you not upon contradictions or impossibilities. 8. And he is one that is constant and unchangeable; and is not pleased with one thing to day, and another contrary to morrow; nor with one person this year, whom he will be weary of the next. 9. And he is one that is merciful, and requireth you not to hurt your selves to please him: Nay he is pleased with nothing of thine but that which tendeth to thy happiness, and displeased with nothing, but that which hurts thy self or others: as a father that is displeased with his children when they defile or hurt themselves. 10. just rigour, nor making your actions worse than they are. 11. He is one that is not subject to the passions of men, which blind their minds, and carry them to injustice. 12. He is one that will not be moved by tale-bearers, whisperers or false-accusers, nor can be perverted by any misinformation.

§. 61. Consider also the Benefits of taking up with the Pleasing of God. 1. The Pleasing of him is your Happiness it self: The matter of pure, and full, and constant comfort, which you may have continually at hand, and no man can take from you. Get this and you have the end of man: Nothing can be added to it, but the perfection of the same: Which is Heaven it self.

§. 62. 2. What abundance of disappointments and vexations will you scape, which tear the very hearts of man-pleasers, and fill their lives with unprofitable sorrows?

§. 63. 3. It will guide and order your cares, and desires, and thoughts, and labours to their right and proper end; and prevent the perverting of them, and spending them in sin and vanity on the creature.

§. 64. 4. It will make your lives not only to be Divine, but this Divine life to be sweet and easie, while you set light by humane censures which would create you prejudice and difficulties! When others Jer. 9. 23. glory in wit, and wealth, and strength, you would glory in this that you know the Lord.

§. 65. 5. As God is above man, thy heart and life is highly ennobled by having so much respect to God, and rejecting inordinate respect to man: This is indeed to walk with God.

§. 66. 6. The summ of all graces is contained in this sincere desire to please thy God, and contentedness in this so far as thou findest it attained. Here is faith, and humility, and love, and holy desire, and trust, and the fear of God concentred. You sanctifie the Lord of hosts himself, and make him your fear and dread, and Sanctuary, Isa. 8. 13, 14.

§. 67. 7. If humane approbation be good for you and worth your having, this is the best way to it; for God hath the disposal of it. If a mans ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him, Prov. 16. 7. Appeasing their wrath, or restraining them from intended evil, or doing us good by that which they intend for hurt.

Signs. §. 68. See therefore that you live upon Gods approbation as that which you chiefly seek, and will suffice you: Which you may discover by these signs. 1. You will be most careful to understand the Scripture, to know what doth please and displease God. 2. You will be more careful in the doing of every duty, to fit it to the pleasing of God than men. 3. You will look to your Hearts and not only to your actions, to your ends, and thoughts and the inward manner and degree. 4. You will look to secret duties as well as publick, and to that which men see not, as well as unto that which they see. 5. You will reverence your consciencies and have much to do with them, and will not slight them. When they tell you of Gods displeasure it will disquiet you: When they tell you of his approbation it will comfort you. 6. Your pleasing men will be charitable for their good, and pious in order to the pleasing of God, and not proud and ambitious for your honour with them, nor impious against the pleasing of God. 7. Whether men be pleased or displeased, or how they judge of you or what they call you, will seem a small matter to you as their own interest, in comparison of Gods judgment. You live not on them. You can bear their displeasure, censures and reproaches, if God be but pleased. These will be your evidences.

PART V.

Directions against Pride, and for Humility.

§. 1. PRIDE, being reputed the great sin of the Devil by which he fell, is in the name and general notion of it, infamous and odious with almost all, but the nature of it is so much unknown, and the sin so undiscerned by the most, that it is commonly cherished, while it is commonly spoke against. Therefore the chief Directions for the conquering of it, are those that are for the full discovery of it: For when it is seen it is shamed, and to shame it is to destroy it. Of this subject read the preface to my Book of self-denial, and Chap. 41. to Ch. 51.

§. 2. Direct. 1. Understand aright the nature of Pride, that you may neither ignorantly retain it, nor oppose your duty as supposed to be Pride. Here I shall tell you, 1. What Pride is, and what commandment it is against: And what Humility is which is its contrary. 2. Some seemings or appearances like Pride, which may make men censured as Proud, for that which is not pride. 3. The counterfeits of Humility, which may make a Proud man seem to himself or others to be Humble. Dir. 1.

§. 3. I. PRIDE, is an inordinate self-exalting: or a lifting up our selves above the state or degree appointed us. It is called ὑπερφανία, because it is an appearing to our selves, and a desire to appear to others above what we are, or above others of our quality. It is a branch of SELFISHNESS, and containeth man-pleasing as before described, and produceth Hypocrisie, and is its original and life. It containeth in it these following acts or parts. 1. A will to be higher or greater than God would have us be. 2. An overvaluing of our selves, or esteeming our selves to be Greater, Wiser or Better than indeed we are. 3. A desire that others should think of us, and speak of us, and use us, as greater, or wiser, or better than we are. 4. An endeavour or seeking to rise above our appointed place, or to be overvalued by others. 5. An ostentation of our inordinate self-esteem in outward signs of speech or action. Every one of these is an act of Pride. The three first are the inward acts of it in the Mind and Will, and the two last are its external acts. Pride what.

§. 4. As the Love of God and man are the comprehensive duties of the Decalogue, expressed most in the first and last Commandment, but yet extending themselves to all the rest; so SELFISHNESS and PRIDE (which is a principal part of it) are the opposite sins, forbidden principally in the first and last Commandment, as contrary to the Love of God and man, but so as it is contrary to the rest. They are sins against the very Relation it self, that God and man do stand in to us, and not only against a particular Law: They are against the very constitution of the Kingdom of God, and not only against the Administration: It is Treason or Idolatry against God, and a setting up our selves in some part of his prerogative: And it is a monstrous exuberancy in the Body, and a rising of one member above and so against the rest; either superiours (and so against the fifth command) or equals (against the rest.) Against what Commandment.

§. 5. HUMILITY is contrary to pride; and therefore consisteth, 1. In a contentedness with that degree and state which God hath assigned us. 2. In mean thoughts of our selves, esteeming our selves no Greater, Wiser or Better than we are. 3. In a willingness and desire that others should not think of us, or speak of us, or use us, as greater, or wiser, or better than we are; that they should give us no more honour, praise or Humility what.

Love

Love than is our due; the redundancy being but a deceit or lye, and an abuse of us and them. 4. In the avoiding of all inordinate aspiring endeavours, and a contented exercise of our assigned Offices, and doing the meanest works of our own places. 5. In the avoiding of all ostentation or appearance of that greatness, wisdom or goodness which we have not; and fitting out speeches, apparel, provisions, furniture and all our deportment and behaviour to the meanness of our parts, and place, and worth. This is the very Nature of Humility: The more particular signs I shall open afterwards.

The Inward seemings of Pride that are not it.

§. 6. II. Pride lying in the heart is oft misguided of by others, that see but the outward appearances, and sometime by the person himself that understandeth not the nature of it. The inward appearances that are mistaken for pride, and are not it, are such as these. 1. When a man in power and Government hath a spirit suitable to his place and work: This is not Pride but virtue. 2. When natural strength and vigor of spirits expelleth pusillanimity; especially when faith beholding God expelleth all inordinate respect to men and fear of all that they can do, this is not pride but Christian magnanimity and fortitude; and the contrary is not humility but weakness, and pusilanimity, and cowardize. 3. When a wise man knoweth in what measure he is wise, and in what measure other men are ignorant, or erroneous, and when he is conscious of his knowledge, and delighted and pleased in it through the love of truth, and thankful to God for revealing it to him, and blessing so far his studies and endeavours, all this is mercy and duty, and not pride. For truth is amiable and delectable in it self. And he that knoweth must needs know that he knoweth; as he that seeth doth perceive by seeing that he seeth. And if it be a fault to know that I know, it must be a fault to know at all. But some knowledge is necessary and unresistable, and we cannot avoid it: And that which is good must be valued, and we must be thankful for it. Humility doth no more require that a wise man think his knowledge equal with a fools, or ignorant mans, than that a sound man take himself to be sick. 4. When a wise man valueth the useful knowledge which God hath given him, above all the glory and vanities of the world, which are indeed of lower worth, this is not Pride but a due estimation of things. 5. When a wise man desireth that others were of his mind, for their own good, and the propogating of the truth, this is not Pride, but Charity and love of truth: Else preachers were the proudest men, and Paul had done ill in labouring so much for mens conversion, and saying to Agrippa, Acts 26. 29. [I would to God that not only thou, but also all they that hear me this day, were both almost and altogether such as I am, except these bonds.] 6. When an innocent man is conscious of his innocency, and a holy person is conscious of his holiness, and assured of his state in grace, and rejoyceth in it, and is thankful for it, this is not Pride, but an excellent priviledge and duty. If Angels rejoyce at the conversion of a sinner (Luke 15.) the sinner hath reason to rejoyce himself: And if it be a sin to be unthankful for our daily bread, much more for grace and the hope of glory. 7. When we value our good name, and the honour that is indeed our due, as we do other outward common mercies, not for themselves, but so far as they honour God, or tend to the good of others, or the promoting of truth or piety among men, desiring no more than is indeed our due; nor over-valuing it as that which we cannot spare, but submitting it to the will of God, as that which we can be without; this is not, Pride, but a right estimation of the thing.

Duplex est Humilitas: una lucida solum & non fervida: quæ ex ratione potius quam ex charitate exercetur-- Altera quæ lucida, fervidaque simul est ex charitate magis quam ex ratione exercetur; non tamen citra rationem —— Humilitas enim (ut & reliquæ virtutes) opus est voluntatis. Nam sicut virtutes per rationem cognoscimus, ita per dilectionem nobis sapiunt: Thauler. flor. c. 7. p. 103, 104.

§. 7. The outward seemings which are oft mistaken for the signs and fruits of Pride by others, are such as these. 1. When a Magistrate or other Governour doth maintain the honour of his place, which is necessary to his successful Government; and liveth according to his degree: When Princes, and Rulers, and Masters, and Parents, do keep that distance from their subjects, and servants, and scholars, and children, which is meet and needful to their good, it is usually mis-guided to be their Pride.

The outward appearances of Pride that are not it.

2. When a sinner is convinced of the necessity of Holiness in a time and place where it is rare; and infidelity or prophaneness and ungodliness is the common road, the necessary singularity of such a one in giving up himself to the will of God, is commonly charged on him as his pride: As if he were proud that cannot be contented to be damned in Hell for company with the most; or to despise salvation if most despise it, and to forsake his God when most forsake him; and to serve the Devil when most men serve him. If you will not swear, and be drunk, and game, and spend your time, even the Lords day, in vanity and sensuality, as if you were afraid of being saved, and as if it were your business to work out your damnation, the world will call you proud and singular, and think it strange that you run not with them to excess of riot, speaking evil of you, 1 Pet. 4. 4. You shall quickly hear them say, [What, will you be wiser than all the Town? What a Saint! What a holy precisian is this?] When Lot was grieved for the filthiness of Sodom, they scorn him as a proud controller, Gen. 19. 9. [This one fellow came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a Judge.] And what thought they of Noah that walked with God in so great singularity, when all the world was drowned in (and for) their wickedness? When David humbled his soul with fasting, they turned it to his reproach, Psalm 69. 10. & 35. 13. Especially when any of the servants of Christ do press towards the highest degree of holiness, they shall be sure to be accounted Proud and Hypocrites. And yet they accuse not that child or servant of Pride who excelleth all the rest in pleasing them, and doing their work! Nor do they take a sick man to be proud, if he be carefuller than others to recover his health. But he that will do most for Heaven, and most carefully avoideth sin and Hell, and is most serious in his Religion, and most industrious to please his God, this man shall be accounted Proud.

See Plutarch Tract. How a man may praise himself without incurring blame? He that is blamed and suffereth reproach for well-doing, is justifiable if he praise himself, &c. p. 304.

3. He that will not forsake his God and betray the truth, and wound his conscience by wilful sin, but will do as Daniel and the three confessors did, Dan. 6. & 3. and answer as they answered, will be accounted Proud. But it is no Pride to prefer God before men; and to fear damnation more than imprisonment or death. The army of Martyrs did not in Pride prefer their own judgements before their superiours that condemned them; but they did it in obedience to God and truth, when that was revealed to babes, which was hid from the wise, and prudent, and great, and noble of the world.

4. When those that are faithful to the honour of Christs soveraignty, dare not approve of Papal usurpations, against his Laws, and over his Church and the Consciences of his Subjects, they shall by the Popish usurpers be called Proud and despisers of Government; as if a Usurper of the Kingly power should call us proud because we dare not consent to his pride; or call us Traytors for not being Traytors as he is himself.

5. When a man that hath the sense of the matters of God and mens salvation upon his heart, is zealous and diligent to teach them to others, and if he be a Minister, be fervent and laborious in his ministry

miniſtry, he is called Proud, as one that muſt needs have all men of his mind: Though compaſſion to ſouls, and aptneſs to teach, and Preaching inſtantly in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, be his neceſſary duty required of God. And what is the Miniſtry for, but to change mens minds, and bring them to the full obedience of the truth?

6. If a man underſtand the truth, in any point of Divinity, better than moſt others, and holdeth any truth which is there in credit, or commonly received, he ſhall be accounted Proud, for preſuming to be ſo ſingular, and ſeeming wiſer than thoſe that think they are wiſer than he. But Humility teacheth us not to err for company, nor to grow no wiſer when once we arrive at the common ſtature; nor to forſake the truth which others underſtand not, nor to forbear to teach it becauſe it is not known already. If ſome of the Paſtours in Abaſſia, Syria, Armenia, Ruſſia, Greece, or Italy, or Spain, were as wiſe as the Miniſters in England are, it were no evidence of their Pride.

Siquid agere inſtitui, lente progredere: in eo autem quod elegeris, firmiter perſiſte. Bias in Laert.

7. If a man that underſtandeth any thing contrary to the judgment of another, cannot forſake it, and think or ſay as another would have him; eſpecially if you contradict him in diſputation; he will take it to be your pride, and overvaluing your own underſtanding, and being too tenacious of your own conceits. Erroneous men that in their Pride are over eager to have others of their mind, will call you Proud becauſe you yield not to their pride. They think that the evidence is ſo clear on their ſide, that if you were not Proud you could not chooſe but think as they do.

8. Some humble men are naturally of a warm and earneſt manner of diſcourſe; and their natural heat and eagerneſs of ſpeech is frequently miſjudged to come from pride, till fuller acquaintance with their humble lives do rectifie the miſtake. It is written of Biſhop Hooper the Martyr, that Pertinacior tamen erat (Chryſanthius) nec de ſententia facili diſcedebat: inquit Eunapius humilitatem ejus laudans.

‘ over-auſterity; they that repaired to him twice,
‘ only ſuſpected him of the ſame; thoſe that con-
‘ verſed with him conſtantly, not only acquitted him
‘ of all moroſity, but commended him for ſweetneſs
‘ of manners: So that his ill nature conſiſted in ‘ other mens little acquaintance with him] Tho. Fullers Church Hiſt. lib. 7. pag. 402. and Godwin in Gloucest. Biſhops. The ſame is true of very many worthy men.

Bullingero ob eruditionem non contemnendam, morumque tam ſanctitatem quam ſuavitatem, percharus fuit. p. 591.

9. If we zealouſly contend for the faith or the Peace of the Church againſt Heretical or Dividing perſons, and their dangerous ways, they will call us Proud, though God command it us, Jude 2. 3. eſpecially if we avoid them, and bid them not God ſpeed, Tit. 3. 10. 2 Joh. 10.

10. When a man of underſtanding openeth the ignorance of another, and ſpeaketh words of pity concerning him, though it be no more than truth and charity command, they will be taken to be the words of ſupercilious pride.

11. That plain dealing in reproof which God commandeth, eſpecially to his Miniſters, towards high and low, great and ſmall, and which the Prophets and Servants of God have uſed, will be miſjudged as arrogancy and Pride, Amos 7. 12, 13. 2 Chron. 25. 16. Acts 23. 4. As if it were Pride to be true to God, and to pity ſouls, and ſeek to ſave them, and tell them in time of that which conſcience will more cloſely and terribly them of, when it is too late.

Gen. 19. 8, 9, 10.

12. Self-idolizing Papiſts accuſe their inferiours for Pride, if they do but modeſtly exerciſe a judgment of diſcretion about the matters that their ſalvation is concerned in, and do not implicitly believe as they believe, and forbear to prove or try their ſayings, and ſwallow not all without any chewing, and offer to object the commands of God againſt any unlawful commands of men: As if God were contented to ſuſpend his Laws, when ever mans commands do contradict them; or humility required us to pleaſe and obey men at the price of the loſs of our ſalvation. They think that we ſhould not buſie our ſelves to enquire into ſuch matters, but truſt them with our ſouls, and that the Scriptures are not for the laity to read, but they muſt wholly rely upon the clergy: And if a lay man enquire into their Doctrines or Commands, they ſay as Davids brother to him, 1 Sam. 17. 28. [With whom haſt thou left the ſheep in the wilderneſs? I know thy pride, and the naughtineſs of thy heart, Cum humilitatis causa mentiris, ſi non eras peccator antequam mentiris, mentiendo efficies quod evitaras. Auguſtin. de Verb. Apoſt.

13. If a zealous humble preacher of the Goſpel, that preacheth not himſelf but Chriſt, be highly eſteemed and honoured for his works ſake, and crowded after, and greatly followed by thoſe that are edified by him, it is ordinary for the envious, and the enemies of Godlineſs, to ſay that he is Proud, and preacheth to draw diſciples after him, and to be admired by men; for they judge of the hearts of others by their own: As if they knew not that Chriſt and his moſt excellent ſervants have been crowded after without being thereby lifted up, or chargeable with pride? As the Sun is not accuſable for being beheld and admired by all the world; nor fire and water, earth and air, food and reſt, for being valued by all: Little do they know how deep a ſenſe of their own unworthineſs is renewed in the hearts of the moſt applauded Preachers, by the occaſion of mens eſtimation and applauſe, and how much they deſire that none may over-value them, and turn their eye from the doctrine upon the perſon! And how oft they cry out with the laborious Apoſtle, who is ſufficient for theſe things? And how oft they are tempted to caſt off all through fear and ſenſe of their unfitneſs, when the envious dullards fearleſly utter a dry diſcourſe, and think that they are wronged becauſe they are not commended and followed as much as others; they think the common ſenſe of all the faithful, and the love of truth, and care of their ſalvation, muſt be called Pride, becauſe it carrieth men to prefer the means which is fitted beſt to their edification and ſalvation.

1 Theſ. 5. 12, 13.

14. If a humble Chriſtian have after much temptation and a holy life, attained to well-grounded perſwaſions of his ſalvation, and be thankful to God, for ſanctifying him, and numbring him with his little flock, when the world lyeth in wickedneſs, he will be taken for Proud by ungodly men, that cannot endure to hear before hand, of the difference which the judgment of God will declare, between the righteous and the wicked: As if it were Pride to be happy or to be thankful.

15. If a man that is falſly accuſed or ſlandered ſhall modeſtly deny the charge, and uſe that lawful means which he oweth to his own vindication, he will be accuſed of Pride becauſe he contradicteth proud accuſers, and conſenteth not to bely himſelf; yea though the diſhonour of Religion, and the hinderance of mens ſalvation, be the conſequent of his diſhonour.

16. Many of the poor do miſtake their Superiours to be proud, if their apparel be not in faſhion and value almoſt like their own, though it be ſober and agreeable to their rank.

17. Some are of a more ruſtick or careleſs diſpoſition, unfit for complement; and ſome are taken up with ſerious ſtudies and employments, ſo contrary to complement, that they have neither time nor mind for the obſervance of the humours of complemental perſons; who becauſe they expect it, and think think they are neglected, do usually accuse such Men of Pride.

Attila incessu adeo gestuosus & compositus, ut vel exinde superbissimi animi contraxerit infamiam. Callimach. Exper. de Attil. p. 341.

18. Some are of a silent temper, and are accused for Pride, because they speak not to others as oft as they expect it.

19. Some are naturally unapt to be familiar till they have much acquaintance, and are so far from impudent, that they are not bold enough to speak much to strangers and take acquaintance with them, no tho' it be with their Inferiours; and therefore are ordinarily mis-judged to be proud.

20. Some have contracted some unhandsome customs in their speech or gestures which to rash censurers seem to come from Pride, tho' it be not so. By all these seemings the humble are judged by many to be Proud.

Quod à magnatum ac procerum congressu abstinuerit (Chrysanthius) alienique fuerit, non arrogantiæ aut fastui tribuendum est, quin potius rusticitas quædam aut simplicitas existimari debet in eo qui quid esset potestas ignorabat; ita vulgariter, & minime dissimulanter cum illis verba factitabat. Eunapius in Chrysost.

§. 8. III. There are also many counterfeits of Humility, by which the Proud are taken to be Humble: As, 1. An accusing of themselves and bewailing their vileness, thro' meer terrour of Conscience as Judas, or the constraint of affliction as Pharaoh, or of the Face of death. 2. A customary confessing of such sins in prayer, or in speech with others, which the best are used to confess, and the confessing of them is taken rather to be an honour than a disgrace. 3. A Religious observance of those Commandments and Doctrines of men, which the Apostle speaketh of, Col. 2. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. which have a shew of Wisdom in Will-worship and humility, and neglecting of the Body, not in any honour to the satisfying of the flesh. 4. A holding of those Tenets, which doctrinally are most to mans abasement; but yet never humbled themselves at the heart. 5. A discreet restraint of boasting, and such a discommending of themselves, as tendeth to procure them the reputation of modesty and humility. 6. An affected condescension and familiarity with others, even of the lower sort, which may seem humility, when the poorest have their smiles and courtesy, and yet may be but the humility of Absolom, the fruit of Pride, designed to procure the commendations of the World. 7. A choosing to converse with their Inferiours, because they would bear sway, and be always the greatest themselves in the company: Like Dionysius the Tyrant, that when he was dethroned, turned Schoolmaster, that he might domineer among the Boys. 8. A constrained meanness of apparel, provisions, and deportment: when Poverty forceth men to speak and live, as if they were humble: whereas if they had but wealth and honours, they would live as high as the proudest of them all. How quiet is the Bear when he is chained up? and how little doth serve a Dog or a Fox when he can get no more? 9. An affected meanness and plainness in apparel, while pride runs out some other way! He that is odiously proud of his supposed wisdom, or learning, or holiness, or birth, or great reputation, may in his very pride be above the womanish and childish way of Pride, in apparel and such other little toys. 10. A loathing and speaking against the pride of others, while he overlooks his own, perhaps because the Pride of others cloudeth him, as the covetous hate others that are covetous, because they are the greatest hinderers of their gain: as Dogs fight for the bone which both would have. Many more counterfeits of Humility may be gathered, from what is said before of the seemings of Pride, whereto it is contrary.

2 Sam. 15. 3, 4, 5, 6.

§. 9. Direct. 2. Observe the motions and discoveries of Pride, towards God and Man, that it may not, like the Devil, prevail by keeping out of sight. Because this is the chief part of my work, I shall here distinctly shew you, the signs and motions of it, in its several ways against God and Man. Dir. 2.

Signs of the worst part of PRIDE against GOD.

§. 10. Sign 1. Self-idolizing Pride doth cause men to glory in their supposed Greatness, when the Greatness of God should shew them their contemptible vileness; and to magnifie themselves, when they should magnifie their Maker. It makes the strong man glory in his strength, and the rich man in his wealth, and the Conquerour in his Victories, and Princes, and Rulers, and Lords of the Earth, in their Dominions, and Dignities, and power to do hurt or good to others: and say as Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. 30. Is not this great Babylon that I have built, for the House of the Kingdom, by the might of my power, for the honour of my Majesty? How hard is it to be great and truly Humble, and not to swell, and be lifted up in Heart, as they rise in Power? This God abhorreth as unsuitable to worms, and dust, and injurious to his honour, and will make them know that Power, and Riches, and Strength are his, and that the Most High doth rule in the Kingdom of men, and giveth it to whom he will: Dan. 4. 32. Sign 1. Jer. 9. 23, 24. Psal. 49. 6. 2 Chron. 25. 19.

§. 11. Sign 2. Pride causeth men to set up their supposed Worth and Goodness above or against the Lord: So that they make themselves their principal End, and practise that which some of late presume to teach, that it is not God that can or ought to be mans End, but himself alone: As if we were made only for our selves, and not for our Creator: Pride makes Men so considerable in their own esteem, that they live wholly to themselves, as if the world were to stand or fall with them: If they be well, all is well with them: If they are to dye, they take it as if the world were at an end. They value God, but as they do their food, or health, or pleasure, even as a means to their own felicity; not as preferring him before themselves, nor making him the chiefest in their End. They love themselves much better than God: And so far is man fallen from God to Himself, that he feeleth himself disposed to this as strongly, as that he taketh it to be his primitive nature, and therefore warrantable, and that it is impossible to go higher. Sign 2.

Ut lumen lunæ in præsentia solis non apparet, pari ratione esse secundum in præsentia primi; nec meritum nostrum præsente merito Christi. Paul. Scaliger. Thes. 73, 74. de Mundo Archetyp. Epist. I. 14.

§. 12. God is to be mans End, though we can add nothing to him: The highest Love supposeth no want in him that we love, but an excellency of Glory, Wisdom and Goodness, to which all our faculties offer up themselves in Admiration, Love, and Praise: not only for the Delights of these, nor only that our Persons may herein be happy; but chiefly that God may have his due; and his will may be pleased and fulfilled; and because his Excellencies deserve all this from men and Angels: When we love a man of wonderful Learning, and Wisdom, and Meekness, and Charity, and Holiness, and other Goodness, it is not chiefly for our selves, that we love him, that we may receive something from him: For we feel his Excellency command our Love, though we were sure that we should never receive any thing from him: Nor is the Delight of Loving him our chief end, but a consequent, or Idem sonant, summum amari, & esse finem ultimum: ac proculdubio Deus summe amandus est. Unum vero finem Aristoteles declaravit esse, usum virtutis in vita sancta & integra. Hesych. Illust. in Aristot. How God is mans End.

the lesser part of our End: For we feel that we Love him before we think of the Delight. The Admiration, Love and Praise of God our ultimate End, hath no end beside their proper object: For it is it self the final act even mans Perfection. Amiableness magnetically attracteth Love: If you ask an Angel why he loveth God, he will say because he is infinitely amiable: and though in such motions nature secretly aimeth at its own Perfection and Felicity, and lawfully interesseth it self in this final motion, yet the Union being of such as are infinitely unequal, O how little do the glorified Spirits respect themselves in comparison of the blessed glorious God. See what I said of this before, Chap. 3. Direct. 11. & 15.

Sign 3. §. 13. Sign 3. Pride maketh men more desirous to be over-loved themselves, than that God be loved by themselves or others. They would fain have the eyes and hearts of all men turned upon them, as if they were as the Sun, to be admired and loved by all that see them.

Sign 4. §. 14. Sign 4. Pride causeth men to depend upon themselves, and contrive inordinately for themselves, and trust in themselves; as if they lived by their own wit, and power, and industry more than by the Favour and Providence of God. Isa. 9. 9. Obad 3.

Sign 5. §. 15. Sign 5. Pride makes men return the thanks to themselves which is due to God for the Mercies which they have received. God is thanked by them but in complement: But they seriously ascribe it to their care, or skill, or industry, or power: They sacrifice to their Net, and say, Our hand, our contrivance, our power, our good husbandry hath done all this.

Dan. 4. 30. Hab. 1. 16. Laert. in Thal. speaketh of the Oracle of Delphos adjudging the Tripos to the Wisest: So it was sent to Thales and from him to another, till it came to Solon, who sent it to the Oracle; saying, None is wiser than God: So should we all send back to God the praise and glory of all that is ascribed to us.

Sign. 6. §. 16. Sign 6. Pride setteth up the wisdom of a foolish man against the infinite wisdom of God: It makes men presume to judge their Judge, and judge his Laws, before they understand them, and to quarrel with all that they find unsuitable to their own conceits; and say, How improbable is this or that? and how can these things be? He that cannot undo a pair of Tarrying Irons, or unriddle a Ridole till it be taught him, which afterwards appeareth plain, will question the truth of the Word of God about the most high unsearchable misteries. Proud men think they could mend Gods Word, and they could better have ordered matters in the world, and for the Church, and for themselves, and for their friends, than the Providence of God hath done.

Laert. saith that Pythagoras first called himself a Philosopher, Nullum enim hominum, sed solum Deum esse sapientem asserit: Antea cetera dicta, quæ nunc Philosophia: & qui hanc profitebantur cœci appellati: Quicunque ad summum animi virtutem excreverunt, hos nunc honestiora vocabulo, authore Pythagora Philosophos appellamus. pag. 7.

Sign 7. §. 17. Sign 7. Pride maketh men set up their own Love and Mercy above the Love and Mercy of God. Augustine mentioneth a sort of Hereticks called Misericordes; Merciful men: And Origen was led hereby into his errors. When they think of Hell fire and the number of the miserable, and the fewness of the saved, they consult with their ignorant compassion, and think that this is below the Love and Mercy which is in themselves, and that they would not thus use an enemy of their own: and therefore they censure the holy Scriptures, and Pride inclineth them strongly to unbelief: while they forget the narrowness and darkness of their souls, and how unfit they are to censure God, and how many truths may be unseen of them, which would fully satisfy them if they knew them; and how quickly God will shew them that which shall justify his Word and all his Works, and convince them of the folly and arrogancy of their unbelief and censures.

§. 18. Sign 8. Pride makes men pretend to be more Just than God: and to think that they could more justly Govern the World; and to censure Gods threatnings, and the Sufferings of the good, and the prosperity of the wicked, as things so unjust, as that they thereby incline to Atheism. So James and John would be more just than Christ, and call down fire on the rejecters of the Gospel: And the Prodigals Brother, Luke 15. repined at his Fathers lenity. Sign 8.

§. 19. Sign 9. Pride maketh men slight the authority and commands of God, and despise his messengers, and choose to be ruled by their own conceits, and lusts, and interest; when the humble tremble at his Word, and readily obey it. Isa. 57. 15. Neh. 9. 16. 29. Isa. 9. 9. Sign 9. Jer. 13. 15, 17. & 43. 2, 3.

§. 20. Sign 10. A proud man in power will expect that his will be obeyed before the will of God; and that the subjects of God displease their Master rather than him: He will think it a crime for a man to enquire first what God would have him do; or to plead Conscience and the Commands of the God of Heaven, against the obeying of his unjust commands. If he offer you preferment, as Balack did Balaam, he looketh you should be more taken with it, than with Gods offer of eternal life: If he threaten you, as Nebuchadnezzar did the three Witnesses, he looks that you should be more afraid of him than of God, who threatneth your damnation; and is angry if you be not. Sign 10.

§. 21. Sign 11. A proud Man is more offended with one that would question his authority, or speak dimunitively of his Power, or displease his Will, or cross his interest, than with one that sinneth against the authority, and will, and interest of God. He is much more zealous for himself and his own honour, than for Gods: and grieved more for his own dishonour; and hateth his own enemies more than Gods; and can tread down the interest of God and souls, if it seem but necessary to his honour or revenge: He is much more pleased and delighted with his own applause, and honour and greatness, than with the glory of God, or the fulfilling of his will. Sign 11.

§. 22. Sign 12. Proud men would fain steal from God himself the honour of many of his most excellent works. If they are Rulers, they are more desirous that the thanks for the order and peace of Societies, be given by the People to them, than unto God: If they are Preachers, they would fain have more than their due, of the honour of mens Conversion and Edification: If they are Pastors, they would encroach upon Christs part of the Government of his Church. If they be bountiful to the poor, and do any good works, they would have more of the praise than belongeth to a Steward, or Messenger that delivereth the gifts of God. If they be Physicians, they would have the real honour of the cure, and have God to be but a barren complement. Like the Atheistical Physician that reviled and beat his Patient for thanking God that he was well, When, saith he, it was I that cured you, and do you thank God for it? Sign 12. Quicquid boni egeris, in deos refer. Bias in Laert.

§. 23. Sign 13. A proud Man will give more to his Honour than to God: His estate is more at the command of his Pride, than of God. He giveth more in the view or knowledge of others, than he could perswade himself to do in secret. He is more bountiful in gifts that tend to keep up the credit of his liberality, than he is to truly indigent Persons: It is not the good that is done, but the honour which he expecteth by it, which is his principal motive. He had rather be scant in works of greatest secret charity, than in apparel, and a comely port, and the Sign 13.

entertaining of Friends, or any thing that is for oſtentation, and for himſelf.

Sign 14. §. 23. Sign 14. A proud man would have as great a dependance of others upon him as he can. He would have the eſtates, and lives, and welfare of all others at his will and power: That he might be much feared, and loved, and thanked, and that many may be beholden to him as the God or great Benefactor the world: He is not contented that good is done, and mens wants ſupplied, unleſs he have the doing of it, that ſo he may have the praiſe. If he ſave his enemy, it is but to make him beholden to him, and be ſaid to have given him his life. Fain he would be taken to be as the Sun to the world, which mankind cannot be without.

Sign 15. §. 25. Sign 15. A proud Man is very patient when men aſcribe to him that which he knoweth to be above his due, tho' it be to the injury of God. He can eaſily forgive thoſe that value and love him more than he deſerveth, though they ſin in doing it. He is ſeldom offended with any for over-praiſing him; nor for reverencing or honouring him too much; nor for ſetting him too high, or for giving or aſcribing too much power to him, nor for obeying him beforeGod himſelf: He careth not how much love, and honour, and praiſes, and thanks he hath, when a humble ſoul ſaith as Pſal. 115. 1. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy Name, give the glory: And as the Angel to John that would have worſhipped him, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow Servant. They know God will not give his glory to another, Iſa. 42. 8. In his Temple every one ſpeaketh of his glory, Pſal. 29. 9. But of themſelves they ſay, I am a Worm and no Man: I am leſs than the leaſt of all thy mercies; leſs than the leaſt of all Saints: the chiefeſt of ſinners: How unfit am I for ſo much love, and praiſe, and honour?

Pſal. 22.6. Gen. 32. 10. Epheſ. 3.8. 1 Tim. 1. 15.

Sign 16. §. 26. Sign 16. A proud Man would have his Reaſon to be the Rule of all the World, or at leaſt, of all that he hath to do with. If there were Laws or Canons to be made, he would have the making of them: He would have all men take his counſel, as an Oracle: He would have all the world of his opinion; and ſets more by thoſe that thus eſteem him and are of his opinion, and yield to all that he ſaith and doth, than by thoſe that moſt earneſtly deſire to conform their minds to the word of God, and differ from him in the underſtanding of any part of it. He loveth them better that enquire of him and take his word, than them that enquire of the Word of God: Though he cannot deny but it is Gods Prerogative to be infallible, and the Rule of the World.

Sign 17. §. 27. Sign 17. A proud Man affecteth the reputation of Gods Immutability as well as his Infallibility: He will ſtand to an error when once he hath vented it, and reſiſted the Truth when once he hath appeared againſt it, to avoid the diſhonour of being accounted Mutable, or one that formerly was deceived: His pride keepeth him from repenting of any fault or error that he can but find a cloak for: If he have done wrong to God and miſchief to the Church, he will do as much more to make it good, and juſtifie it by any Cruelty or Violence. If he have once done you wrong, he will do more for fear of ſeeming to have wronged you: If he have ſlandered you, he will ſtab or hang you if he can, to juſtifie his ſlander, rather than ſeem ſo mutable as to retract it.

Sign 18. §. 28. Sign 18. A proud Man affecteth a participation of Gods Omniſcience, and is eager to know more than God revealeth; (if he be an enquiring man whoſe pride runneth this way): Thus our firſt Parents ſinned, by deſiring to be as God in knowledge: This hath filled the world with proud contentions, and the Church with diviſions, while proud Wits heretically make things unrevealed the matter of their oſtentation, impoſition, cenſures or furious diſputes: while humble ſouls are taken up in ſtudying and practiſing things revealed, and keep themſelves within Gods bounds, as knowing that God beſt knoweth the meaſure fitteſt for them, and that knowledge is to be deſired and ſought, but ſo far as it is uſeful to our ſerving or enjoying God, and the Good which Truth revealeth to us; and that knowledge may elſe become our ſorrow, Eccleſ. 1. 1, 8. and Truth the inſtrument to torment us, as it doth the miſerable Souls in Hell.

§. 29. Sign 19. A proud Man is diſcontented with his Degree, eſpecially if it be low: He would be higher in power, and honour, and wealth: yea, he is never ſo high but he would fain be one ſtep higher. If he had a Kingdom, he would have another: and if he had the Dominions of the Turkiſh or Tartarian Emperour, he would deſire to enlarge them, and to have more; and would not be ſatisfied till he had all the world: Men feel not this in their low condition: They think, If I had but ſo much or ſo much, I would be content: But this is their ignorance of the infatiable Pride that dwelleth in them. Do you not ſee the greateſt Emperours on Earth ſtill ſeeking to be greater: Every Man naturally would be a Pope, the Univerſal Monarch of the world: And every ſuch Pope would have both Swords, and have Princes and People wholly at their Will: And when they have no mind to hurt, they would have Power to hurt; that all the world might hold their Eſtates, and Liberties, and Lives, as by their clemency and gift, and they might be as God to other men: And if they had attained this, Pride would not ſtop, till it had cauſed them to aſpire to all the Prerogatives of God, and to depoſe him and dethrone him of his Godhead and Majeſty that they might have his place. Sign 19

§. 30. Sign 20. A proud Man would fain have Gods Independency, Though need make him ſtoop, yet he would willingly be beholden to none. Not only becauſe in prudence he would keep his liberty, and not be unneceſſarily the ſervant of men, nor under obligations to ſerve them in any evil way (For ſo the humbleſt would fain be Independent): But becauſe he would be ſo great, and high, as to ſcorn to lean on any other. Thus you ſee how Pride is that great Idolatry that ſets up man as in the place of God. Sign 20.

Signs of the next Degrees of Pride as againſt God.

§. 31. Sign 1. A Proud Heart is very hardly brought to ſee the greatneſs of its ſins, or to know its emptineſs of Grace, or to be convinced of its unpardoned miſerable ſtate, or of the Juſtice of God if he ſhould damn it to everlaſting torments. Concerning others it may confeſs all this; but hardly of it ſelf. Its own unbelief, and averſeneſs from God and holineſs, ſeemeth to it a ſmall and tolerable fault: Its own pride, and luſt, and worldlineſs, and ſenſuality, ſeem not to be ſo bad as to deſerve damnation: Much leſs the ſmalleſt ſin which it commiteth. Though cuſtomarily they may ſay that God were juſt, if he did condemn them, yet they believe it not at the heart. The moſt convincing Preacher ſhall have much ado to bring a proud man heartily to confeſs that he is an enemy to God, a child of wrath, and under the guilt of all his ſins, and ſure to be condemned unleſs he be converted. He will confeſs that he is a ſinner, or any thing elſe which the moſt godly muſt confeſs, or which doth not conclude him to be in a damnable unrenewed ſtate: But to make an ungodly man know that he is ungodly, and an impenitent Perſon know that he is impenitent, and an unſanctified perſon know that he Sign 1. Men ſick in mind as witleſs fools, and looſe perſons, and wroth, and injurious, think not that they do amiſs and ſin, &c. Pharisaeus Tract. that Maladies of the mind are worſe than thoſe of the body.

he is unſanctified, is wonderful hard, becauſe that Pride hath dominion in them. Are we blind alſo? Say the proud incorrigible Phariſees to Chriſt, John 9. 40.

Sign 2. §. 32. Sign 2. A proud heart doth ſo much overvalue all that is in it ſelf, that every common grace or duty doth ſeem to it to be a ſtate of godlineſs: Their common knowledge ſeemeth to them to be ſaving illumination: Every little ſorrow for their ſin, or wiſh that they had done better, when they have had all the ſweetneſs of it, doth go with them for true Repentance: Their heartleſs lip-labour goes for acceptable prayer: Their Image of Religion ſeemeth to them to be the life of godlineſs: They take their own preſumption for true faith, and their falſe expectation, for Chriſtian Hope, and their carnal ſecurity and blockiſh ſtupidity, for ſpiritual peace of conſcience, and their deſperate venturing their ſouls upon deceit, they take for a Truſting them with God: If they forbear but ſuch ſins as their fleſh can ſpare, as unneceſſary to its eaſe, proviſion or content, yea, or ſuch ſins as the fleſh commandeth them to forbear, as tending to their diſhonour in the world, they take this for true obedience to God. Becauſe they had rather have Heaven than Hell, when they muſt leave the Earth whether they will or no, they think that they are heavenly minded, and lay up their treaſure there, and take it for their portion: Becauſe conſcience ſometime troubleth them for their ſin, they think they renew a ſincere repentance; and think all is pardoned, becauſe they daily ask for pardon: Their forced ſubmiſſion to the hand of God, they take for patience; And a [Lord have mercy on us, and forgive us, and ſave us] they take for a true preparation for death. Thus Pride deceiveth ſinners, by making them believe that they have what they have not, and do what they do not, and are ſomething when they are nothing, Gal. 6. 3. and by multiplying and magnifying the little common good that is in them.

Sign 3. §. 33. Sign 3. A proud heart hath very little ſenſe of the neceſſity of a Saviour, to die for his ſins, and ſatisfie Gods juſtice, and reconcile him to God: Notionally he is ſick of ſin; and notionally he thinks, he needeth a Phyſician: But practically at the heart he feeleth little of his diſeaſe, and therefore little ſets by Chriſt. He feeleth not that which ſhould throughly acquaint him with the Reaſons of this bleſſed work of our Redemption: And therefore indeed is a ſtranger to the myſtery, and an unbeliever at the heart: and would turn Apoſtate if the tryal were ſtrong enough. He never felt himſelf a condemned man, under the curſe and wrath of God, and lyable to Hell: And therefore never lay in tears with Mary at his Saviours feet, nor melted over his bleeding Lord; nor feelingly ſaid with Paul [He came to ſave ſinners of whom I am chief] nor eſteemed all things as loſs and dung for the knowledge of Chriſt, that he might be found in him, Phil. 3. 7, 8. He is a Chriſtian but as a Turk is a Mahometan, becauſe it is the Religion of the King, and the Country in which he was bred.

Sign 4. §. 34. Sign 4. A Proud heart perceiveth not his own neceſſity of ſo great a change as a New birth, and of the Holy Ghoſt to give him a new nature, and plant the image of God upon him: He findeth perhaps ſome breaches in his ſoul; but he thinks there needs no breaking of the heart for them; nor pulling all down and building up his hopes anew: Amending his heart he thinks, may ſerve the turn, 2 Cor. 5. 17. without making it and all things new: The new creature he taketh to be put Baptiſm, or ſome patching up of the former ſtate, and amending ſome groſſer things that were amiſs. He will confeſs that without Chriſt and grace we can do nothing, but he thinketh this grace is an ordinary help. Whereas a humble ſoul is ſo emptied of it ſelf, and perceiveth its deadneſs and inſufficiency to good, that it magnifieth grace, and is wondrous thankful for it, as for a new and ſpiritual life.

Sign 5. §. 35. Sign 5. A Proud heart hath ſo little experimental ſenſe of the great accuſations which Scripture bringeth againſt the corrupted heart of man, that it is eaſily drawn into any Hereſie which denieth them: As about our Original ſin and miſery and need of a Saviour: about the deſperate wickedneſs of the heart, and mans inſufficiency and impotency to good, yea averſneſs from it: Whereas humble men are better acquainted with the ſin within them, that beareth witneſs to all theſe truths. Rom. 5. 12, 17, 18, 19. John 3. 3, 5, 8. Jer. 17. 9.

Sign 6. §. 36. Sign 6. The Proud are inſenſible of the need and reaſon of all that diligence to mortifie the fleſh, and ſubdue corruptions, and watch the heart, and walk with God in holineſs of life, which God requireth: He ſaith what need all this ado: He feeleth not the need of it, and therefore thinks its more ado than needs. But the humble ſoul is ſenſible of that within him that requireth it and juſtifieth the ſtricteſt ways of God: The Rich think they have no need to labour, but labour is a poor mans life and maintenance: If he miſs it a day, he feeleth the want of it the next.

Sign 7. §. 37. Sign 7. Proud men are much inſenſible of the want of frequent and fervent Prayer unto God. Begging is the poor mans trade: The humble ſoul perceives the need of it: He finds as conſtant need of God, as of air, or bread, or life it ſelf. And he knoweth that the exerciſe of our deſires and faith, and the expreſſion by prayer of our dependance upon God, is the way appointed for our ſupply. But the proud are full-ſtomacht, and think this earneſt frequent praying is but hypocritical needleſs work, and they cannot make a trade of begging, and therefore they are ſent ſent empty away.

Sign 8. §. 38. Sign 8. A proud man is a great undervaluer of all mercies, and unthankful for them; but eſpecially for ſpiritual mercy. He receiveth it cuſtomarily as if it were his due; and cuſtomarily gives God thanks. But though he may rejoyce in the proſperity of his fleſh, yet he is a ſtranger to holy thankfulneſs to God; and thinks dimunitively of mercy: yea, he is diſcontent and murmureth if God give him not as much as he deſireth. Whereas the humble confeſs themſelves unworthy of the leaſt, Gen. 30. 10. 2 Chron. 32. 24, 25, 26. Hezekiahs lifting up and unthankfulneſs go together. A poor man will be very thankful for a peny or a piece of bread, which the rich would reject as a great indignity.

Sign 9. §. 39. Sign 9. Proud men are always impatient in their afflictions: If they have a ſtoutneſs or ſtupidity, yet they have not Chriſtian patience: They take it as if God uſed them hardly, or did them wrong. But the humble know that they deſerve much worſe, and that the mercy that is left them is contrary to their deſert? And therefore ſay with the humbled Church, Mic. 7. 9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord becauſe I have ſinned againſt him, Lam. 3. 22. [It is becauſe his compaſſions fail not that we are not conſumed.]

Sign 10. §. 40. Sign 10. Proud men are fearleſs of temptations, and confident of their ſtrength and the goodneſs of their hearts: They dare live among ſnares, in pomp and pleaſure, faring deliciouſly every day, among plays, and gaming, and laſcivious company and diſcourſe, and fear no hurt, their Pride making them inſenſible of their danger, and what tinder and gunpowder is in their natures, for every ſpark of temptations to catch fire in. But the humble are always ſuſpicious of themſelves, and know their danger, and avoid the ſnare. Prov. 14. 16. A wiſe man feareth and departeth from evil; but the fool rageth rageth and is confident, Prov. 22. 3. A prudent man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself: but the simple pass on and are punished.

Sign 11. §. 41. Sign 11. Pride maketh men murmur if the work of God be never so well done, if they had not the doing of it; and sometimes by contending to have the honour of doing it, they destroy the work: If they are officers of Christ, they look more at the Power than their obligation; at the Dignity than at the Duty, and at what the people owe to them, than what they owe to God and to the people. They are like dogs that snarl at any other that would partake with them, or come into the house. They say not as Moses, would all the Lords people were Prophets. Yea, the peace and unity of Church and State is often sacrificed to this cursed pride.

Sign 12. §. 42. Sign 12. Pride makes men ashamed of the service of God, in a time and place where it is disgraced by the world; and if it have dominion, Christ and holiness shall be denyed or forsaken by them, rather than their honour with men shall be forsaken. If they come to Jesus, it is as Nicodemus did, by night: They are ashamed to own a reproached truth, or scorned cause, or servant of Christ. If men will but mock them with the nick names or calumnies hatcht in Hell, they will do as others, or forbear their duty: A scorn will do more to make them forbear praying in their families to God, than the Lyons den would do with Daniel, or the fiery-furnace with the three Confessors, Dan. 3. & 6. Especially if they be persons of honour and greatness in the world, then God must be merciful to them while they bow down in the house of Rimmon: As the Rich man, Luke 18. 23. when he heard Christs terms, was very sorrowful, for he was very rich; so these because their honours and dignities are so great, do think them too good to let go for the sake of Christ: Had they but the proportion of the obscure vulgar to lay down, they could forsake it; but they cannot forsake so fair a portion, nor endure the reproach of so honourable a name. But O what contemptible things are these to a humble soul? He marvelleth what dreaming worldlings find, in the doting thoughts and breath of fools, which men call Honour, that they should prefer it before the honour of God, and their real honour: When Christ hath told them, Mark 8. 31. That whosoever shall be ashamed of him and his words, in an adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with his holy Angels. I now proceed to the signs of Pride in particular duties.

The Signs of Pride in and about Religious duties.

Sign 1. §. 43. Sign 1. A proud person is most sollicitous in and about that part of duty which is visible to man, and tendeth to advance him in mens esteem: And therefore he is more regardful of the outside, than of the inside; of the words than of the heart. He taketh much pains if he be a preacher, to cast his sermon into such a form as tendeth to set forth his parts, according to the quality of them that he would please: If he live where wit is valued above grace, or pedantick gingling above a solid, clear, judicious, masculine discourse, he bends himself to the humour of his auditors, and acts his part as a stage player for applause: If he live where serious earnest exhortations are in more request, he studieth to put an affected fervency into his stile, which may make the hearers believe that he believes himself, and to seem to be what indeed he is not, and to feel what he feeleth not: But all this while about his Heart he is little sollicitous; and takes small pains to affect it with the reverence of God, and with a due estimation of his truth, and a due compassion of mens souls, and indeed to believe and feel what he would seem to believe and feel. So also in prayer and discourse, his chief study is to speak so as may best procure applause: And it is seldom that he is so cunning as to hide this his design from the observation of judicious men that know him: They may usually perceive that he is the Image of a Preacher or Christian, by affectation forcing himself to that which he is not truly serious in: He is sounding brass; a tinkling Cymbal; a bladder full of wind; a skin full of words, wise and devout in publick on the stage but at home, and with his companion in his ordinary converse, he is but common if not unclean: He is the admiration of fools, and the compassion of the wise: An Oracle at the first congress to those that know him not, and the pity of those that have seen him at home, and without his mask: He is like proud Gentlewomen that bestow a great part of the morning in mundifying and adorning themselves when they are to be seen, and go abroad, but at home are very homely. And usually the Proud being Hypocrites are secret haters of the most serious, and judicious Christians; because these are more quick-sighted than others, to see through the cloak of their Hypocrisie: Unless as their Charity constraining them to conceal their fears and jealousies, may reconcile the Hypocrite to them.

Hu ergo qui loquendi arta cæteris hominibus excellere videntur, sedulo monendi sunt ut humilitate induti Christiana discant non extimare quos eloquentiæ magistros habere debeant nisi eos qui sapientiæ magistros habere meruerint. Aug. de Cat. rudib. c. 9.

§. 44. Sign 2. Proud men are apt to put on themselves to any publick duty which may tend to magnifie them or set out their parts, and think themselves fitter to be preferred before others, and imployed, than indeed they are. They are forward to speak in preaching or praying among others, or in ordinary talk: A little knowledge maketh them think that they are fit to be preachers: Whereas the humble say with Moses, who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh, &c. Exod. 3. 11. I am not eloquent, but slow of speech ——— O my Lord, send I pray thee by the hand of him whom thou wilt send, Exod. 4. 10. 13. Or as Isaiah 16. 5. Wo is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, &c. or as Paul, 2 Cor. 2. 16. Who is sufficient for these things? How many a Sermon hath Pride both studied and preached? And how many a prayer hath it formed? And how well are they like to be heard of God? Sign 2.

Non potest non indoctus esse, qui se doctum credit. Herm. Barbarus.

§. 45. Sign 3. The Proud are loath to be clouded by the greater abilities of others: They are content that weaker men pray or preach with them, that will not obscure but put off their parts, that they may have the preheminence; as a dwarf that makes another seem a proper man: They are less troubled that God and the Gospel is dishonoured by the infirmities, insufficiency and faults of others, than that their glory is obscured by worthier men, though God be honoured and his work promoted. Whereas the humbled person wisheth from the bottom of his heart, that all the Lords people were Prophets, that all men could preach, and pray, and discourse, and live much better than he doth himself (though he would also be as good as they). He is glad when he heareth any speak more judiciously, powerfully and convincingly than he, rejoycing that Gods work is done, whoever do it: For he loveth Wisdom and Holiness, Truth and duty, not only because it is his own, but for it self, and for God, and for the souls of others. A Proud man envieth both the parts, and work, and honour of others: And is like the Devil, repining at the gifts of God; and the better and wiser any one is the more he envieth him: He is an enemy to the fruits of Gods beneficence, as if he would have God less Good and bountiful to the world, or to any but himself, and such as will serve his party and interest and honour with their gifts: His eye is evil because God is Good. If others be better spoken of than himself as more learned, Sign 3. Pliny saith [In commending another you do your self right: For he whom you commend is either superior or inferior to you: If he be inferior, if he be to be commended, then you much more: If he be superior, if he be not to be commended, then you much less. Lord Bacon Essay. 54. pag. 299.

learned, able, wise or holy, it kindleth in his breast a secret hatred of them, unless they are such whose honour is his honour, or contributeth thereto: Whereas the holy humble soul, is sorry that he wants what others have, but glad that others have what he wants. He loveth Gods gift where-ever he seeth them; yea though it were in one that hateth him: He would not have the world to be shut up in a perpetual night, because he may not be the Sun; but would have them receive that by another which he cannot give them, and is glad that they have a Sun though it be not he: Though some Preached Christ of envy and strife, of contention and not sincerely, to add afflictions to his bonds, yet Paul rejoyced, and would rejoyce, that Christ was preached: Phil. 1. 15, 16, 17, 18.

Sign 4. §. 46. Sign 4. When the Proud man is praying or preaching his eye is principally upon the hearers, and from them it is that his work is animated, and from them that he fetcheth principally the fire or motives of his zeal: He is thinking principally of their case, and all the while fishing for their love and approbation and applause: And where he cannot have it, the fire of his zeal goeth out: Whereas though the humble, subordinately look at men, and would do all to edification, yet it is not to be Loved by them so much as to exercise Love upon them; nor to seek for honour and esteem from them so much as to convert and save them; And it is God that he chiefly eyeth, and regardeth; and from him that he fetches his most powerful motives; and it is his approbation that he expecteth: His eye and heart is so upon the auditors as to be more upon God: He would feed the sheep; but would please the Lord and Owner of them.

Sign 5. §. 47. Sign 5. A Proud man after his duty is more inquisitive how he was liked by men, and what they think or say of him, than whether God and Conscience give him their approbation: He hath his scouts to tell him whether he be honoured or dishonoured: This is the return of prayer that he looks after: This is the fruit of preaching which he seeks to reap: But these are inconsiderable things to a serious humble soul: He hath God to please; his work to do; and sets not much by humane judgement.

Sign 6. §. 48. Sign 6. A Proud man is more troubled when he perceiveth that he is undervalued and mist of the honour which he sought, than that his preaching succeeds not for the good of souls, or his prayers prevail not for their spiritual good: Every man is most troubled for missing that which is his end: To do good and get good, is the end of the sincere, and this he looks after, and rejoyceth if he obtain it, and is troubled if he miss it: To seem good, and wise, and able is the Proud mans end: And if the people honour him, it puffs him up with gladness, as if he were a happy man: And if they slight him or despise him, he is cast down, or cast into some turbulent passion, and falls a hating or wrangling with them that deny him the honour he expects, as if they did him a hainous wrong: As if a Physician should want both skill and care to cure his patients; but hateth and revileth them, because they prefer another that is abler, and will not die to secure his honour, or magnifie his skill for killing their friends. The Proud mans honour is his Life and Idol.

Sign 7. §. 49. Sign 7. The Heart of the Proud is not enclined to humbling duties; to penitent confessions and lamentations for sin, and earnest prayer for grace and pardon; but unto some formal observances and lip labour, or the Pharisees self-applause. I thank thee that I am not as other men, nor as this Publican: Not but that the humblest have great cause to bless God for their spiritual mercies and his differencing grace: But the Proud thank God for that which they have not; for sanctification, when they are unsanctified; and for justification when they are unjustified; and for the assured hope of Glory; when they are sure to be damned if they be not changed by renewing grace; and for being made the heirs of Heaven while they continue the heirs of Hell: And therefore the proud are least afraid of coming without right or preparation to the sacrament of the Body and blood of Christ: They rush in with confident presumption: When the humble soul is trembling without, as being oft more fearful to enter than it ought.

§. 50. Sign 8. Proud persons are of all others the most impatient of Church discipline, and uncapable of living under the Government of Christ. If they sin, they can scarce endure the gentlest admonition: But if they are reproved sharply (or cuttingly) that they may be sound in the faith, you shall perceive that they smart by their impatience. But if you proceed to more publick reproof and admonition, and call them to an open confession of their sin, to those whom they have wronged, or before the Congregation, and to ask forgiveness, and seriously crave the prayers of the Church, you shall then see the power of Pride against the ordinance and commands of God! How scornfully will they spurn at these reproofs and exhortations? How obstinately will they refuse to submit to their unquestionable duty? And how hardly are they brought to confess the most notorious sins? Or to confess that it is their duty to confess them; Though they would easily believe that it is the duty of another, and would exhort another to do that which they themselves refuse! The Physick seemeth so loathsome to them which Christ hath prescribed them, that they hate him that bringeth it, and will die and be damned before they will take it; but perhaps will turn again and all to rent you (unless where they are restrained by the secular arm.) But if you proceed to reject them, for their obstinate impenitency in heynous sin, from the visible communion of the Church, you shall then see yet more how contrary Pride is to the Church-order and Government ordained by Christ. How bitterly will they hate those that put them to such (necessary) disgrace? How will they storm and rage and turn their fury against the Church; as if Christs remedy were the greatest injury to them in the world? You may read their Character in the second Psalm. Therefore Christ calleth men to come as little Children into his school: or else they will be unteachable and incorrigible, Matth. 18. 3. Sign 8.

§. 51. Sign 9. A Proud man hath an Heretical disposition, even when he cryeth out against Hereticks. He is apt to look most after matters of dispute and contention in Religion; Obscure prophecies, Gods decrees, controversies which trouble the Church more than edifie, circumstances, ceremonies, forms, outwards, orders and words: And for his opinion in these he must be somebody. Sign 9.

§. 52. Sign 10. A Proud man is unsatisfied with his standing in communion with the Church of Christ, and is either ambitiously aspiring to a dominion over it, or is inclined to a separation from it: They are too good to stand on even ground with their brethren: if they may be Teachers or Rulers they can approve the constitution of the Church: But otherwise it is too bad for them to have communion with: They must be of some more refined or elevated society: They are not content to come out and be separate from the infidel and idolatrous world, but they must also come out and be separate from the Churches of Christ, consisting of men that make a credible profession of faith and godliness. They think it not enough to forbear sin themselves, and to have no Sign 10.

fellowship with the works of darkness, but reprove them, nor to separate from men as they separate from Christ, but they will also separate from them in their duty, and odiously aggravate every imperfection, and fill the Church with clamours and contentions, and break it into fractions by their schisms, and this not for any true reformation or edifying of the body (for how can division edifie it?) but to tell the world that they account themselves more holy than the Church: Thus Christ himself was quarrelled with as unholy by the Pharisees for eating with publicans and sinners: And his disciples for not washing before meat, and observing the traditions of the Elders; and for rubbing out corn to eat on the sabbath day: And they that will not be strict in their conformity to Christ, will be righteous overmuch and stricter than Christ would have them be, where Pride commandeth it: They will be of the strictest party and opinions, and make opinions and parties that are stricter, than Gods commands; and run into errors and schisms that they may be singular, from the general communion of the Church: and will be of a lesser than Christs little flock.

Signs of Pride in common converse.

Sign 1. §. 53. Sign 1. Pride causeth subjects to be too quick in censuring the actions of their Governours, and too impatient of what they suffer from them, and apt to murmure at them, and rebel against them. It makes inferiors think themselves competent judges of those commands and actions of their superiours, the Reasons of which they never heard, nor can be fit to judge of, unless they were of their council. It makes them forget all the benefits of Government, and mind only the burdens and suffering part, and say as Corah, Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the Congregation are holy every one of them and the Lord is among them: Wherefore then lift ye up your selves above the Congregation of the Lord? ——— Is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and hony, to kill us in the wilderness, except thou make thy self altogether a Prince over us? ——Wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? Proud men are impatient, and aggravate their disappointments, and think they have reason and justice on their side.

Numb. 16. 3. vers. 13, 14.

Sign 2. §. 54. Sign 2. A Proud man is more disposed to command than to obey, and cannot serve God contentedly in a mean and low condition: He is never a good subject, or servant, or child; for subjection seems a slavery to him: He thinks it a baseness to be governed by another: He hath a Reason of his own, which still contradicteth the Reason of his Rulers, and a will of his own that must needs be fulfilled, and cannot submit or yield to Government: He is still ready to step out of his rank; and prepare for suffering by disorder, that he may tast the sweetness of present liberty! As if your horse or cattle should break out from you to be free, and famish in the winter, when snow depriveth them of grass. Whereas the humble know it is much easier to obey than Govern; and that the valleys are the most fruitful grounds, and that it is the Cedars and mountain trees that are blown down, and not the shrubs: And that a low condition affordeth not only more safety, but more quietness and leasure to converse with God: And that it is a mercy that others may be employed in his preservation, and keeping the walls, and watching the house, while he may follow his work in quietness and peace; And therefore willingly payeth honour and tribute to whom it is due.

Sign 3. §. 55. Sign 3. If a Proud man be a Ruler, he is apt to be lifted up in mind; and to despise his inferiors, as if they were not men, or he were more: He is apt to disdain the councils of the wise, and to scorn admonition from the ministers of Christ, and to hate every Michea that prophesieth not good of him, and to value none but flatterers, and discountenance faithful dealers, and not endure to hear of his faults: He is apt to fall out with the power of Godliness, and the Gospel of Christ, as that which seemeth to cross his interest; and to forget his own subjection to God, and the danger of his subjects: He is more desirous to be obeyed by his inferiors, than himself to obey his absolute Lord; He expecteth that his commands be obeyed though God command the contrary; and is more offended at the neglect of his Laws and Honour, than at the contempt of the Honour and Laws of God.

Sign 4. §. 55. Sign 4. If there be any place of office, honour or preferment void, a proud man thinks that he is the fittest for it, and if he seek it, he taketh it for an injury if another be preferred before him as more deserving: And though they that had a hand in putting him by, and preferring another, did it never so judiciously, and impartially, and for the common good, without any respect to any friend or interest of their own, yet all this will not satisfie the Proud, who knoweth no Reason or Law but selfishness; but he will bear a grudge to men for the most righteous necessary action: What ignorant men and impious have we known displeased, because they were not thought worthy to be Teachers in the Church? or because a people that knew the worth of their souls, had the wit and conscience to prefer a worthier man before them! What worthless men (in Corporations and elsewhere) have we seen displeased, because they were not chosen to be Governours? So unreasonable a sin is Pride.

Sign 5. §. 56. Sign 5. A Proud man thinks when he looks at the works of his superiours, that he could do them better himself, if he had the doing of them. There is not one of them of an hundred but think that they could rule better than the King doth, and judge better than the Judge doth, and perhaps preach better than the Preacher doth, unless his ignorance be so palpable as that he cannot question it. Absolom would do the people Justice, better than his father David, if he were King. If all the matters of Church and Commonwealth were at his dispose, how confident is he, that they should be well ordered, and all faults mended; and O how happy a world should we have!

Sign 6. §. 57. Sign 6. A proud man is apt to over-value his own knowledge, and to be much unacquainted with his Ignorance; He is much more sensible of what he knoweth, than how much he is wanting, of what he ought to know: He thinks himself fit to contradict the ablest Divine, when he hath scarce so much knowledge as will save his soul. If he have but some smattering, to enable him to talk confidently of what he understandeth not, he thinks himself fittest for the Chair; and is elevated to a pugnacious courage, and thinks he is able to dispute with any man; and constantly gives himself the victory: If it be a woman that hath gathered up a few Receipts, she thinketh her self fit to be a Physician, and venture the lives of dearest friends upon her ignorant skilfulness; when seven years study more is necessary to make such Novices know how little they know, and how much is utterly unknown to them, and seven years more to give them an encouraging tatte of knowledge; yet Pride makes them Doctors in Divinity and Physick by its Man damus without so much ado: And as they commenced

See 1 Tim 3. 6. & 1 Tim 6 4. A cunning flatterer will follow the Archflatterer which is a mans self: And wherein a Man thinketh best of himself, therein the flatterer will uphold him most: But if he be an impudent flatterer, he will entitle him by some to that which he is conscious that he is most defective in, Lord Bacon Essay 52.

ſo they practice in the dark; and to ſave the labour of ſo long ſtudies, can ſpare, and gravely deride that knowledge, which they cannot get at cheaper rates. And no wonder, when it is the nature of Pride and Ignorance to cauſe the birth and encreaſe of each other. It were a wonder for an Ignorant perſon to be Humble, and when he knoweth not what abundance of excellent truths are ſtill unknown to him, nor what difficulties there are in every controverſie which he never ſaw. How many ſtudious, learned, holy Divines, would go many thouſand miles (if that would ſerve) to be well reſolved of many doubts in the Myſteries of Providence, Decrees, Redemption, Grace, Free-will, and many the like, and that after twenty or forty years ſtudy; when I can take them a Boy or a Woman in the Streets, that can confidently determine them all in a few words, and pity the ignorance or error of ſuch Divines, and ſhake the head at their blindneſs, and ſay, God hath revealed them to themſelves that are Babes! yea, and perhaps their confidence taketh diſſenters for ſuch heretical, erroneous, intolerable perſons, that they look upon them as Heathens and Publicans, and either with the Papiſts reproach and perſecute them, or with the leſſer Sects divide from them, as from men that receive not the truth; and thus Pride makes as many Churches as there are different Opinions.

Sign 7. §. 58. Sign 7. Pride maketh men wonderful Partial in judging of their own Virtues and Vices in compariſon of other mens. When the humble are complaining of their weakneſſes and ſinfulneſs, and have much ado to believe that they are any thing, or to diſcern the ſincerity of their grace; and think their prayers are as no prayers, and their duties ſo bad that God will not not regard them, the Proud think well of all they do, and are little troubled at their greater wants. They eaſily ſee another mans failings; but the very ſame or worſe, they juſtifie in themſelves. Their own paſſions, their own over-reachings or injurious dealings, their own ill words, are ſmoothed over as harmleſs things, when other mens are aggravated as intolerable crimes: Another is judged by them unfit for humane ſocieties, for leſs than that which they cannot endure to be themſelves reproved for, and will hardly be convinced that it is any fault: So blind is Pride about themſelves.

Sign 8. §. 59. Sign 8. Pride makes men hear their Teachers as Judges, when they ſhould hear them as Learners and Diſciples of Chriſt: They come not to be taught what they knew not, but to cenſure what they hear, and as confidently paſs their judgment on it, as if their Teachers wanted nothing but their inſtructions to Teach them aright. I know that no poyſon is to be taken into the ſoul, upon pretence of any mans authority, and that we muſt prove all things and hold faſt that which is good: But yet I know that you muſt be Taught even to do this, and that the Paſtors office is appointed by Chriſt as neceſſary to your good, and that the Scholars that are ſtill quarelling with their Teachers, and readier to Teach their Maſters than to learn of them, and boldly contradicting what they never underſtood, are too proud to become wiſe: And that Humility and Reaſon teacheth men to learn with a ſenſe of their ignorance, and the neceſſity of a Teacher.

Sign 9. §. 60. Sign 9. A proud man is always hard to be pleaſed, becauſe he hath too great expectations from others: He looks for ſo much obſervance and reſpect, and to be honoured and honoured by all, that it is too hard a task for any man to pleaſe him that hath much to do with him, and hath any other Trade to follow: He that will pleaſe him, muſt either have little to do with him, and come but ſeldom in his way, or elſe he muſt ſtudy the art of man-pleaſing, complement and flattery, till he be ready to commence Doctor in it, and muſt make it his Trade and buſineſs, as Nurſes do to tend the ſick, or quiet Children. One look, or word, or action, will every day fall croſs; and ſome reſpect or complement will be wanting. And as godly humble men do juſtly aggravate their ſins from the Greatneſs and excellency of God whom they offend; ſo the proud man fooliſhly aggravates every little wrong that is done him, and every word that is ſaid againſt him, and every ſuppoſed omiſſion or neglect of him, by the high Eſtimation he hath of himſelf againſt whom it is done.

§. 61. Sign 10. The Proud are deſirous of Precedency among men: To be ſaluted with the firſt; and taken by Great ones into the greateſt favour, and to be ſet in the upper room, at Table, and at Church, and to take the better hand: He grudgeth at thoſe that are ſet above him and preferred before him, unleſs they are much his Superiours: Or if he have the wit to avoid the diſgrace of contending for ſuch trifles, and ſhewing the childiſhneſs of his Pride to others, yet he retaineth a diſpleaſure at the heart. When the humble give precedency to others, and ſet themſelves at the lower end. Sign 10. Luke 14. 9, 10.

§. 62. Sign 11. A proud man expecteth that all the good that he doth be remembred, and that others do keep a regiſter of his good works, and take notice of his learning, worth and virtues: As their own memories are ſtronger here than in any thing, ſo they think other mens ſhould be: As if (being conſcious how unfit they are for the eſteem of God) they thought all were loſt which is not obſerved and eſteemed by men: As their eye is upon themſelves, ſo they think the eye of others ſhould be alſo; and that as their own, to admire the good, and not to ſee infirmities and evil. Sign 11. Heſich. Illuſt. ſaith of Arceſilaus, In communicandis facultatibus ac deferendis beneficiis ſupra quam dici poteſt promptus atque facilis fuit: Alieniſſimus à captanda gloriola à beneficio, quod latere maluerat: Inviſens Creſibium agrotantem, quum videret illum in egeſtate eſſe, clam cervicali ſuppoſuit crumenam nummariam, qua ille inventa, Arceſilai inquit, hicce ludus eſt.

§. 62. Sign 12. No man is taken for ſo great a friend to the proud as their admirers: whatever elſe they be, they love thoſe men beſt, that highlieſt eſteem them: The faults of ſuch they can extenuate and eaſily forgive: Let them be Drunkards, or Whoremongers, or Swearers, or otherwiſe ungodly, the proud man loveth them according to the meaſure of their honouring him. If you would have his favour, let him hear that you have magnified him behind his back, and that you honour him above all other men. But if the holieſt ſervant of God think meanly of him, and ſpeak of him but as he is; eſpecially if he think they are diſeſteemers of him, of are againſt his intereſt and honour, all their wiſdom and holineſs will not reconcile him to them, if they were as wiſe or good as Peter or Paul. It ſignifieth nothing to him that they are honourers of God, if he think they be not honourers of him. Nay, he will not believe or acknowledge their goodneſs, but take all for hypocriſie, if they ſuit not with his intereſt or honour: and all becauſe he is an Idol to himſelf. Sign 12.

§. 64. Sign 13. A proud man is apt to domineer with inſolency, when he gets any advantage, and perceiveth himſelf on the higher ground. He ſaith as Pilate to thoſe that are in his power, Knoweſt thou not that I have power to crucifie thee, and power to releaſe thee? Forgetting that they have no power at all againſt any, but what is given them from above. Sign 14. §. 65. Sign 14. A proud man is impatient of being contradicted in his ſpeech; be it right or wrong you muſt ſay as he, or not gainſay him. Hence it is that Gallants think that a mans life is little enough to expiate the wrong, if a man preſume to ſay, they Lye. I know that Children, and ſervants, and other inferiours muſt not be unreverent or immodeſt, in an unneceſſary contradicting the words of their ſuperiors, but muſt ſilently give place when they cannot aſſent to what is ſaid: But yet an impatience of ſober and reaſonable contradiction, even from an inferior or ſervant, is not a ſign of a humble mind.

Sign 15. §. 66. Sign 15. Where-ever a proud man dwelleth, he is turbulent and impatient if he have not his will: If he be a publick perſon, he will ſet a Kingdom all on fire, if things may not go as he would have them. Among the crimes of the laſt and perilous times, Paul numbreth theſe; to be Lovers of their own ſelves, boaſters, proud, traytors, heady,

Simon magus gave out that himſelf was ſome great one, and the people all gave heed to him from the leaſt to the greateſt, ſaying, This man is the great power of God, Acts 8. 9, 10. Such love the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God: John 12 43. But the humble hath learned another kind of language; not affectedly but from the feeling of their hearts, to cry out, I am vile: I am unworthy to be called a child; My ſins are more than the hairs of my head: And he hateth their vanity that by unſeaſonable or immoderate commendations, endeavour to ſtir him up to pride, and ſo to bring him to be vile indeed, by proclaiming him to be excellent. Much more doth he abhor to praiſe himſelf, having learned, Prov. 27. 2. Let another man praiſe thee, and not thine own mouth, a ſtranger, and not thine own lips. He praiſeth himſelf by Works, and not by Words, Prov. 31. 31.

§. 69. Sign 18. A proud man loveth honourable Sign 18. Names and Titles: as the Phariſees to be called Rabbi: Matth. 23. And yet they may have ſo much wit as to pretend, that it is but to promote their ſervice for the common good, and not that they are ſo weak to care for empty names; or elſe that they were forced to it, by ſome bodies kindneſs without their ſeeking, and againſt their wills.

§. 70. Sign 19. Pride doth tickle the heart of Sign 19. fools with content and pleaſure to hear themſelves applauded, or ſee themſelves admired by the people, or to hear that they have got a great reputation in the world, or to be flockt after, and cryed up, and have many followers. Herod loveth to hear in commendation of his Oration, It is the voice of a God, and not of a man: It is a feaſt to the proud, to Act. 12. 22. hear that men abroad do magnifie him, or ſee that thoſe about him do reverence, and love, and honour, and idolize him. Hence hath the Church been filled with buſie Sect-maſters, even of thoſe that ſeemed forwardeſt in Religion; which was ſadly propheſied of by Paul to the Epheſians, Acts 20. 29, 30. Two ſorts of troublers under the name of Paſtors, pride hath in all Ages thruſt upon the Church; Devouring Wolves, and dividing Sect-maſters: [For I know this, that after my departure, ſhall grievous Wolves enter in among you, not ſparing the flock: Alſo of your own ſelves ſhall men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away diſciples after them. See alſo Rom. 16. 16, 17.]

§. 71. Sign 20. Pride maketh men cenſorious and Sign 20. uncharitable: They extenuate other mens vertues and good works; and ſuſpect ungroundedly their ſincerity: A little thing ſerves to make them think or call a man an hypocrite! Very few are honeſt, or ſincere, or godly, or humble, or faithful, or able, or worthy in their eyes, even among them that are ſo indeed, or that they have cauſe to think ſo: A ſlight conjecture or report ſeemeth enough to allow them to condemn or defame another. They quickly ſee the Mote in a Brothers eye. Their pride and fancy can create a thouſand Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, or Hypocrites, or ungodly ones, that never were ſuch but in the Court of their preſumption. Eſpecially if they take men for their adverſaries, they can caſt them into the moſt odious ſhape, and make them any thing that the Devil will deſire them. But the humble are charitable to others, as conſcious of much infirmity in themſelves, which makes them need the tenderneſs of others. They judge the beſt till they know the worſt, and cenſure not men until they have both evidence to prove it, and a call to meddle with them, having learned, Matth. 7. 1, 2, 3, 4. Judge not that ye be not judged.

Sign 21. §. 72. Sign 21. Pride cauſeth men to hate reproof: The proud are forward in finding faults in others, but love not a plain Reprover of themſelves. Though it be a duty which God himſelf commandeth, Lev. 19. 17. as an expreſſion of love, and contrary to hatred, yet it will make a proud man to be your enemy, Prov. 15. 12. A ſcorner loveth not one that reproveth him, neither will he go unto the wiſe, Prov. 9. 7, 8. He that reproveth a ſcorner getteth himſelf ſhame; and he that rebuketh a wicked man, getteth himſelf a blot: Reprove not a ſcorner, leſt he hate thee: Rebuke a wiſe man, and he will love thee. It galleth their hearts, and they take themſelves to be injured, and they will bear you a grudge for it, as if you were their enemy? If they valued or honoured you before, you have loſt them or angred them if you have told them of their faults: If they love to hear a Preacher deal plainly with others, they hate him when he dealeth ſo with them: Herod will give away Johns head, when he hath firſt impriſoned him for telling him of his Sin, though before he reverenced him and heard him gladly. They can eaſily endure to be evil, and do evil, but not to hear of it. As if a man that had the Leproſie loved the diſeaſe, and yet hated him that telleth him that he hath it, or would cure him of it. This pride is the thing that hath made men ſo unprofitable to each other, by driving faithful reproof and admonition almoſt out of the world, becauſe men are ſo proud that they will not hear it. Hence it is that others hear oftner of mens faults, than they do themſelves, and that backbiting is grown the common faſhion, becauſe proud ſinners drive away reprovers, by their impatience and diſpleaſure. Husbands and Wives, yea, Servants with their Maſters are ſo far out of love with juſt reproof, that they can hardly hear it. He muſt be exceeding skilful in ſmoothing and oyling every word, and making it more like to a commendation of flattery, than a reproof, that will eſcape their indignation.

Sign 22. §. 73. Sign 22. When a proud man is juſtly reproved, he ſtudieth preſently to deny or extenuate his fault; to ſhew you that he is more tender of his honour, than of his honeſty. It is a hard thing to bring him to free confeſſion, and to thank you for your love and faithfulneſs, and to reſolve upon more watchfulneſs for the time to come: When the humble ſoul is readier to believe that he is faulty, than that he is innocent, and to ſay more againſt himſelf than you ſhall ſay (if truly.) This one ſign may tell you how commonly pride reigneth in the world. How few are they among many that are heartily thankful for a juſt and neceſſary reproof? Mark them whether the firſt word they ſpeak in anſwer to you, be not either a denyal or an excuſe, or an upbraiding you with ſomething that they think you faulty in, or elſe a paſſionate proud repulſe, bidding you meddle with your ſelves?

Sign 23. §. 74. Sign 23. Pride maketh men talkative; and more deſirous to ſpeak than to hear, and to teach than to be taught, becauſe ſuch think highly of their own underſtandings; and think others have more need of their inſtructions, than they of other mens. Not that Humility is any enemy to communicative Charity, or to zealous endeavours for the converting and healing of ſouls: But a reaching, ſtriking diſpoſition, where there is need, and beyond the meaſure of your calling and abilities, when you have more need to learn your ſelves, is the fruit of Pride. When you take leſs heed what another ſaith to you, than you expect he ſhould take of what you ſay to him: when your talk is not ſo much by way of queſtion to a learner, but in the diſcourſes and diſputes of a Teacher: when you are ſo full of any thing that is your own, and ſo contemptuous of what is ſaid by others, that you have not the patience to hear them ſilently till they come to the end, but unmannerly interrupt them, and ſet in your ſelves; which is as much as to ſay, Hold your tongue, and let me ſpeak that am more wiſe and worthy: when you ſtrive to have the moſt words, and to be ſpeaking; as Horſes in a race ſtrive who ſhall go foremoſt: This is becauſe pride puffs you up, and moves your tongues as a leaf is ſhaken by the wind: it fills your ſails, and makes you like Bagpipes that are lowdeſt when they are full of wind and preſſed. Eccl. 10. 14. A fool is full of words. Prov. 10. 19. In the multitude of words there wanteth not ſin: but he that refraineth his lips is wiſe.

Sign 24. §. 75. Sign 24. Pride maketh men exceſſively loth to be beholden to others; ſo that ſome will ſtarve or periſh before they will ſtoop ſo far as to ſeek or be obliged to thankfulneſs by any; eſpecially if they be ſuch as they have any quarrel with. And this they take for manlike gallantry, and a ſcorning to be baſe. I confeſs that as Paul ſaith to ſervants, if we can be free, we ſhould rather chooſe it; and that no man ſhould unneceſſarily make himſelf a debtor to another, by being beholding to him: eſpecially Miniſters, who ſhould avoid all Temptations of dependance upon man: and therefore ſhould neither hang on Great ones, leſt they be tempted to unfaithful ſilence or flattery, nor needleſly live on the peoples charity, leſt they be hindred from the free exerciſe of their Miniſtry: Therefore Paul laboured with his hands where he thought it would hinder his work to be chargeable to the Churches, or give occaſion to the envious to reproach him: And he would rather dye than any ſhould make this his glorying void, 1 Cor. 9. 15. Innocency and Independency, as Mr. Bolton was wont to ſay, do ſteel the face, and help a Miniſter to be bold and faithful. As Camerarius ſaid when he was invited to the Court, Alterius ne ſit, qui ſuus eſſe poteſt.

2 Cor. 11. 9. 1 Theſ. 2. 9. 2 Theſ. 3. 8.

But yet man is a ſociable creature; and we are made to be helpful to each other: we are like the wheels of a Watch, that can none of them do their work alone, without the concurrence of the reſt: And therefore a proud man that would live wholly on himſelf, and ſcorneth to be beholden, would break himſelf off from the place that God hath ſet him in, and ſeparate himſelf from humane ſociety, and be either a world of himſelf or a God to others. But God hath cauſed all the members purpoſely to ſtand in need of one another, that none might be deſpiſed, and that all might ſtill exerciſe Love, in communicating, and Humility in accepting of each others help.

Sign 25. §. 76. Sign 25. Pride maketh people deſirous to equal their Superiours, and exceed their equals, in Apparel, or handſome dwellings, and proviſions, and entertainments, and all appearances that tend to ſet them out, and make them ſeem conſiderable in the world. For it exceſſively regards the eye of man: A fit reſpect to Decency muſt be had (ſo we place no greater a neceſſity in it than we ought:) But pride would fain go with the higheſt, and have more curioſity than needs, and maketh a greater matter of Decency than the thing requireth. I am not of their humour, that cenſure every man whoſe hair is not of their cut, and whoſe garments are not of their faſhion, and who are bred in a way of more gentility and ceremony than my ſelf: But yet the affectation of imitating faſhion-mongers, and bearing a port above ones rank, and rather desiring the converse and company of superiours than inferiours, and to live like those that are a step above us, than those that are a step below us, are signs as significant of Pride, as the Robes of a Judge or a Doctor are of their dignities and degrees. I am sure Humility hath learnt this lesson, Rom. 12. 16. Mind not high things; but condescend to men of low estate: be not wise in your own eyes. As for the ridiculous effeminate fashions and deportment of some men, and the spots, and printings, and nakedness, and other antick fashions of some women, and the many hours which they daily waste in dressings, and adornings, and preparing themselves for the sight of others, they are the badges of so foolish and worse than childish a sort of pride, that I will not trouble my self and the Reader in reprehending them. Manly pride is ashamed of such toys. Let the Patrons of them please their Patients, by proving them lawful, while they have no wiser work to do; and when they have done, let them go on to prove that it is lawful for sober persons to wear such Irons as they do in Bedlam; and that such Chains as they in Newgate wear, are no signs of a prisoner, and that it is lawful for an honest woman to wear a Harlots habit. If the proud have no more wit than to wear the badges of their childishness or distraction, and shew their shame to all they meet, and make themselves as ridiculous as men that lay aside their Breeches, and wear Side coats again like children, I will leave them to themselves, and will not now trouble them with any longer contradiction.

Sign 26. §. 77. Sign 26. Proud persons are ashamed and troubled if any necessity force them, to go lower in apparel, or provisions, or deportment, than others do of their degree: To shew you that it is not as a Duty that Decency is regarded by them, but as the ornaments of pride, else they would be quiet when Providence maketh it cease to be their duty! They are not so much ashamed of sin, and the neglect of God and their salvation, as they are to be seen in sordid attire, or in a poor and homely garb: Beggars and servants shew here that they are as proud as Lords. What abundance of them go but seldom to Church, and give this as a reason [I wanted clothes.] As if they would neglect their souls, their God, their greatest duty, rather than do it in such Clothes as they do their common work? Doth Christ appoint you to give him the meeting, that by his Ministers he may instruct you for salvation, and that you may ask and receive the pardon of your sins, and will you disappoint him and refuse to come, for want of better clothes? Sure you do not think that these are the Wedding Garment which he requireth you to bring? You would beg if you were naked or in rags, and will you not come to beg of God, because you have no better clothes? Do you set more by the reputation of your clothes, than the means of your salvation? How little do such wretches set by God, and by his mercy now, that will shortly on their death-beds cry for Mercy, without any such regard of clothes. Naked they come into the world, and naked they must go out, and yet they will turn their backs on the Worship of God, for want of clothes. They are not ashamed nor afraid to be ungodly, and to forsake their duty, but they are ashamed of torn or poor attire. What, say they, shall we make our selves ridiculous! When their pride and ungodliness is cause of a thousand fold more shame. We read of thousands, even of the poor, that crowded after Christ to hear him; but of none that staid at home for want of clothes; when it is like they had no better than yours.

Sign 27. §. 78. Sign 27. If a proud man be wronged, he looketh for great submission before he will forgive: you must lye down at his feet, and make a very full confession, and behave your self with great submission, especially if the Law be in his hands. And he is prone to revenge, and cruel in his revenge. But if he have wronged others, he is hardly brought to confess that he wronged them; and more hardly to humble himself for reconciliation, and ask them forgiveness: when a humble person is ready to let go his right for peace, and easily forgiveth, and easily stoopeth to ask forgiveness.

§. 79. Sign 28. Lastly, Pride maketh men inordinately desire to have an honourable memorial kept of their names when they are dead (if they are persons that rise to the hopes of such a remembrance:) Many a monument hath Pride erected: Many a Book hath it written to this end: Many a good work materially hath it done, and made it bad by such a base intention! Many a Hospital, and Alms-house, and School-house it hath built! And many a pound hath it given to charitable uses in pretension, but to proud and selfish uses in intention. Not that any should causelesly suspect anothers ends, or blemish the deserved honour of good works, which it is lawful ordinately to regard: But we should suspect our own hearts, and take heed of so horrible a sin, which would turn the excellentest parts and works into poyson or corruption: And remember how heinous a thing it is, for a man to be laying proud designs, when he is turning to the dust, and going to appear before his Judge? yea, to set up the monuments of his Pride over his rotten flesh and bones: And to shew that he dyeth in so great a sin without repentance, by endeavouring that as much as may be of it may survive, when he is dead and gone! If such wicked ends do sometime offer to intrude into necessary excellent works, an honest heart must abhor them and cast them out: and beg forgiveness; and not for that forbear his work, nor refuse the comfort of his more sincere desires and intents: But such good works do sink the hypocrite into Hell, that are principally done as a service to Pride, to leave a name on earth behind him.

§. 80. Thus I have been long in shewing you the signs of Pride, because the discovery is a great part of the cure: Not that every proud person hath all these signs: For every one hath not the same temptations or occasion to shew it: But every one hath some and many of these: And he that hath any one of them, hath a sign of Pride. And again I say, that for all this, our Reputation as it subserveth the Honour of God and our Religion, and our brethrens good, must be carefully by all just means preserved, and by necessary defences vindicated from calumniators: Though we must quietly bear whatever infamy or slander we are tryed with.

§. 81. Direct. 3. Having understood the Nature and the signs or effects of PRIDE, consider next of the dreadful consequents and tendency of it, both as it leadeth to farther sin and unto misery. Which I shall briefly open to you in some particulars.

Dir. 3. Æneas Sylvius in Boem. c. 65. speaking of the boasting of the Monk Capistranus, saith, superaverat jeculi pompas, calcaverat avaritiam, libidinem sub egerat, gloriam contemnere non potuit: Nemo est tam sanctus qui dulce hoc gloriæ non cupiatur.

§. 82. 1. At the present it is the Heart of the old man, and the root and life of all corruption, and of dreadful signification, if it be predominant. If any mans heart be lifted up, the Lord will have no plea sure in him, or it is not upright in him, Hab. 2. 4. I had rather have my soul in the case of an obscure humble Christian that is taken notice of by few or none but God, and is content to approve himself to him, than in the case of the highest and most eminent and honourable in Church or State, that looks for their observation and praise of men: God judgeth not of men by their great parts, and profession, and name? but justifieth the humbled soul that is ashamed to lift up his face to Heaven, and thinketh himself unworthy to speak to God, or to have communion with his Church, or to come among his ſervants; but ſtanding afar off, ſmiteth upon his breſt, and ſaith (in true Repentance) O God be merciful to me a ſinner, Luke 18. 13. Pride is as a plague-mark on the ſoul.

83. 2. There is ſcarce a ſin to be thought on that is not a ſpawn in the bowels of Pride. To inſtance in ſome few (beſides all that are expreſſed in the ſigns.) 1. It maketh men Hypocrites, and ſeem what they are not, for the praiſe of men. 2. It makes men Lyars: Moſt of the Lyes that are told in the world, are to avoid ſome diſgrace and ſhame, or to get men to think highly of them. When a ſin is committed againſt God or your ſuperiours, inſtead of humble confeſſion, Pride would cover it with a lye. 3. It cauſeth covetouſneſs, that they may not want proviſion for their Pride. 4. It maketh men flatterers and time-ſervers, and man-pleaſers, that they may win the good eſteem of others. 5. It makes men run into prophaneneſs, and riotouſneſs, to do as others do to avoid the ſhame of their reproach and ſcorn, that elſe would account them ſingular and precife. 6. It can take men off from any duty to God that the company is againſt: They dare not pray, nor ſpeak a ſerious word of God, for fear of a jeer from a ſcorners mouth. 7. It is ſo contentious a ſin, that it makes men firebrands in the ſocieties where they live: There is no quiet living with them longer than they have their own ſaying, will and way: They muſt bear the ſway, and not be croſſed: And when all is done, there is no pleaſing them, for the miſſing of a word, or a look, or a complement, will catch on their hearts, as a ſpark on gunpowder. 8. It tears in pieces Church and State: Where was ever civil war raiſed, or Kingdom endangered or ruined, or Church divided, oppreſſed or perſecuted, but Pride was the great and evident cauſe? 9. It devoureth the mercies and good creatures of God, and ſacrificeth them to the Devil! It is a chargeable ſin! What a deal doth it conſume in cloaths, and buildings, and attendance, and entertainments, and unneceſſary things. 10. It is an odious thief and prodigal of precious time. How many hours that ſhould be better employed, and muſt one day be accounted for, are caſt away upon the foreſaid works of Pride? Eſpecially in the needleſs complements and viſits of Gallants, and the dreſſings of ſome vain light-headed women, in which they ſpend almoſt half the day, and can ſcarce find an hour in a morning for prayer, or meditation, or reading the Scriptures, becauſe they cannot be ready: Forgetting how they diſgrace their wretched bodies, by telling men that they are ſo filthy or deformed, that they cannot be kept ſweet and cleanly and ſeemly without ſo long and much ado. 11. It is odiouſly unjuſt: A proud man makes no bones of any falſhood, ſlander, deceit or cruelty, if it ſeem but neceſſary to his greatneſs, or honour, or preferment, or ambitious ends. He careth not who he wrongeth or betrayeth, that he may riſe to his deſired height, or keep his greatneſs. Never truſt a proud man further, than his own intereſt bids you truſt him. 12. Pride is the pander of whoredom and uncleanneſs: It is an incentive to luſt in themſelves, and draws the proud to adorn and ſet forth themſelves in the moſt enticing manner, as tends to provoke the luſt of others. Fain they would be thought comely that others may admire them, and be taken with their comelineſs: If they thought that none would ſee them, they would ſpare their ornaments. And if a common decency were all that they affected, they would ſpare their curioſities and fashionable ſuperfluities: Even they that would not be unclean in groſs fornication with any, yet would be effeminate beautiful and deſirable, and do that which tendeth to corrupt the minds of fools that ſee them. Theſe and indeed almoſt all ſin, are the natural progeny of Pride.

§. 85. 3. As to the miſery which they bring on themſelves and others, 1. The greateſt is, that they forſake God and are in danger to be forſaken by him: For God abhorreth the Proud, and beholdeth them as afar off. So far as you are Proud you are hated by him, and have no acceptance or communion with him. Pride is the highway to utter apoſtaſie. It blindeth the mind: It maketh men confident in their own conceits; and venturous upon any new opinion, and ready to quarrel with the word of God before they underſtand it: When any thing ſeems hard to them, they preſently ſuſpect the truth of the matter, when they ſhould ſuſpect their dark unfurniſhed minds. Mark thoſe that are Proud in any Town, or any company of profeſſours of piety, and if any infection of hereſie or infidelity come into that place, theſe are the men that will ſooneſt catch it. Mark thoſe that have turned from Truth or Godlineſs, and ſee whether they be not ſuch as were proud and ſuperficial in Religion before. But God giveth Grace, and more Grace to the humble: He dwelleth with them, and delighteth in them.

Jam. 4. 6. 1 Pet. 5. 5. Iſa. 57. 15. Prov. 16. 19. Prov. 29. 23. Vain glorious men are the ſcorn of wiſe men, the admiration of fools, the Idols of flatterers, and the ſlaves of their own Pride. Lord Bacon Eſſay. 54.

2. A proud man is a tormentor of himſelf. Setting his mind on the Thoughts of men and deſiring more of their eſteem than he can attain, and that which is unſatisfying vanity when he hath obtained it: He is ſtill under fruitleſs vexatious deſires, and frequent diſappointments: Every thing that he ſeeth, and every word almoſt that he heareth, or every complement omitted can diſturb his peace, and break his ſleep, and caſt him into a feaver of paſſion or revenge. This wind that ſwelleth him, is running up and down, and diſquieting him in every part: Who would have ſucha fire in his breaſt, that will not ſuffer him to be quiet?

3. Pride bringeth ſufferings, and then maketh them ſeem intolerable: It makes the ſinner more vex and gall his mind with ſtriving and impatient aggravating his afflictions, than the ſuffering of it ſelf would ever do.

4. Pride is a deep-rooted and a ſelf preſerving ſin? And therefore harder to be killed and rooted up than other ſins. It hindereth the diſcovery of it ſelf. It driveth away the light: It hateth reproof: It will not give the ſinner leave to ſee his pride when it is reproved; Nor to confeſs it if he ſee it; nor to be humbled for it if he do confeſs it, nor to loath himſelf and forſake it, though conviction and terrour ſeems to humble him. Even while he heareth all the ſigns of pride, he will not ſee it in himſelf: When he feeleth his hatred of reproof, and knoweth that this is a ſign of pride in others, yet he will not know it in himſelf: If you would go about to cure him of this or any other fault, you ſhall feel that you are handling a waſp or an adder: Yet when he is ſpitting the venom of pride againſt the reprover, he perceiveth not that he is proud: This venom is his nature, and therefore is not felt nor troubleſome: If all the Town or Congregation ſhould note him as notoriouſly proud, yet he himſelf, that ſhould beſt know himſelf, will not obſerve it. It is a wonder to ſee how this ſin keepeth ſtrength, in perſons that have long taken pains for their ſouls, and ſeem to be in all other reſpects the moſt ſerious mortified Chriſtians! Yet let them but be touched in their intereſt or reputation, or ſeem to be ſlighted, or ſee another preferred before them while they are neglected, and they boil with envy, malice or diſcontent, and ſhew you that the Heart of ſin, even SELFISHNESS and PRIDE is yet alive, unbroken and too ſtrong. Eſpecially if they are not perſons of a natural gentleneſs and mildneſs, but of a more paſſionate temper; then Pride hath more oyl and fewel to kindle it into theſe diſcernable flames. He is a Chriſtian indeed that hath conquered Pride.

5. Pride is the defence not only of it ſelf, but of every other ſin in the heart or life. For it hateth reproof proof and keepeth off the remedy; It hideth, and extenuateth, and excuſeth the ſin, and thinketh well of that which ſhould be hated.

6. Pride hindereth every means and duty, from doing you good; and oft-times corrupteth them, and turneth them into ſin. Sometimes it keepeth men from the duty, and ſometime it keepeth them from the benefit of the duty. It makes men think that they are ſo whole and well as to have little need of all this phyſick, yea, or of their daily neceſſary food. They think all this is more ado than needs: What need of all this preaching, and praying, and reading, and holy conference, and meditation, and heavenly mindedneſs? One is aſhamed of it, and another wants it not, and another is above it, and they ask you, where are we commanded to pray in our family, and to pray ſo oft, and to hear ſo oft, and read any book but the

1 Cor. 14. 26. cauſe they feel not that need or ſweetneſs which
Rom. 12. 11. ſhould help them to perceive that frequency is good or neceſſary for them. If the Phyſician bid two men [eat often] and one of them hath a ſtrong appetite, and the other hath none; he that is hungry will interpret the word [often] to ſignifie thrice a day at leaſt, and he that hath no appetite will think that once a day is [often.] Healthful men do not uſe to ask, How prove you that I am bound to eat twice or thrice a day? Feeling the need and benefit, they will be ſatisfied with an allowance without a command: They will rather ask, How prove you that I may not do it? For they feel reaſon in themſelves to move them to it, if God reſtrain them not. So it is with an humble ſoul about the means of his edification and ſalvation: It feeleth a need of preaching, and prayer, and holy ſpending the Lords day, and family duties, &c. Yea it feeleth the need and benefit of frequency in duties, and is glad of leave to draw near to God, and feels the bond of Love conſtrain. Whereas the Proud are full and ſenſleſs, and could eaſily be content with little in Religion, if the Laws of God or man conſtrained them not, and will do no more than needs they muſt. Yea, ſome of late have been advanced by Pride above all Ordinances, that is, above obedience to God, in the uſe of his appointed means, but not above the need of means, nor above the plagues prepared for the proud and diſobedient. Humility ſecureth men from many ſuch pernicious opinions.

Dir. 4. §. 86. Direct. 4. To the conquering of Pride it's neceſſary that you perceive that indeed it is in your ſelves; and is the radical ſin, and the very poyſon of your hearts; and that you ſet your ſelves watchfully to mark its motions, and make it a principal part of your Religion and buſineſs of your lives to overcome it, and to walk in Humility with God and man. For if you ſee not that it is your ſin, you will let it alone, and little trouble your ſelves about it. Pride liveth in men that ſeem Religious, becauſe they perceive it not, or think they have but ſome ſmall degree, which is not dangerous. And they ſee it not in themſelves, becauſe they mark not its operations and appearances: The life in the root, muſt be perceived in the branches, in the leaves and fruit. If you ſaw more evil in this than in many more diſgraceful ſins, and ſet your ſelves as heartily and diligently to conquer it, as you do to caſt out the ſins which would make you be judged by men to be utterly ungodly, no doubt but the work would more happily go on, and you would ſee more excellent fruits of your labour, in the work of mortification, than moſt Chriſtians ſee.

Dir. 5. §. 86. Direct. 5. Be much in humbling exerciſes; but ſo as to take heed of miſtaking the nature of them, or running into extreams. I have told you the true nature of Humility before. Abundance of Chriſtians are tempted by Satan to think it conſiſteth much more than it doth, in paſſionate griefs and tears, and bodily exerciſes, of long and frequent faſtings, and confeſſions, and penance or ſuch like: And thus Satan diverteth them from true endeavours for true Humiliation, by keeping them imployed all their days, in ſtriving for tears, or in theſe external exerciſes! Whereas you ſhould moſt ſtrive, for ſuch a ſight of your ſinfulneſs and nothingneſs, as will teach you highly to eſteem of Chriſt, and to loath your ſelves, and take your ſelves to be as vile and ſinful as you are, and will make you humbly beg for mercy, and ſtoop to any means to obtain it, and will make you patient under the rebukes and chaſtiſements of God, and under the contempts and injuries of men: This is the Humility which you muſt labour for. But in order to this, external exerciſes of Humiliation muſt be uſed: Eſpecially ſtudying the holy Law of God, and ſearching your ſelves, and confeſſion of ſin and moderate ſeaſonable faſtings, and taming of the fleſh. And indeed the exerciſes of Humiliation do moſt become thoſe that are moſt prone to Pride: And the doctrine of thoſe men who cry down true Humiliation, doth come from Pride, and is made to cheriſh Pride in others. A humble ſoul cannot receive it; but is proner here to run into exceſs.

§. 87. Direct. 6. There is no more powerful means to take down Pride than to look ſeriouſly to God, and ſet your ſelves before his eyes, and conſider how he loveth the humble, and abhorreth the Proud. One ſight of God by a lively faith, would make you know with whom you have to do, and teach you to abhor your ſelves as vile. A glow-worm is not diſcerned in the ſunſhine, though it gliſter in the dark. A glimpſe of the Majeſty of God, would make thee with Iſa. 6. cry out, Woe is me, for I am undone, a man of unclean lips, &c. and with the Iſraelites deſire that Moſes and not God might ſpeak unto you leſt you dye. Men are proud becauſe they know not God, and look not to him, but to fellow ſinners, with whom they think they may be bold to compare themſelves. Dir. 6.

Remember alſo that God is as it were engaged againſt the proud both in the holineſs of his nature, and in honour: For a proud man ſets up himſelf againſt him, and is ſuch an Idol as God will either take down by grace, or ſpurn into the fire of deſtruction. And if he do appear before God among others in days and external exerciſes of humiliation, you may judge how much an abhorred perſon will be accepted. It is not to all that are clothed in ſackcloth, but to the humble ſoul that God hath reſpect: Even to the ſelf-abhorring perſon, who judgeth himſelf unworthy to come among the people of God, or to be door-keepers in his houſe, or to eat of the crumbs of the childrens bread, that ſubject themſelves to one another, and think no office of love and ſervice too low for them to perform to the leaſt believer, that in charitable meekneſs inſtruct oppoſers, and bear contradiction and contempt from men; that patiently ſuffer the injuries of enemies and friend, and heartily forgive and love them, that bear the moſt ſharp and plain reproofs with gentleneſs and thanks, that think the loweſt place in mens eſteem, affections and reſpects the fitteſt for them, that are much more ſollicitous how they love others, than how others love them, and how they diſcharge their duties to others, than how others do what they ought for them, that will take up with ſmaller evidence to think well of the hearts or actions of others, than of their own, that reprove themſelves ofter and ſharplier than other men reprove them, and are readier to cenſure themſelves than others, or than moſt others are to cenſure them; that have a low eſteem of their own underſtandings, and parts, and doings, and therefore are readier to learn than teach, and to hear than ſpeak; that that highly value every bit and drop of mercy, eſpecially Chriſt, and Grace, and Glory——Theſe are the humble that God accepteth, and this is the faſt that he requireth. Theſe are they that pray effectually, and that muſt ſave the land: Theſe only are ſenſible what ſin is; when others feel it not, or are proud in the midſt of their largeſt confeſſions and tears: Theſe only do from their hearts acknowledge their deſert of Gods ſevereſt judgements, and juſtifie God when he afflicteth them: Others rather marvel at the greatneſs and continuance of judgements, and expoſtulate with God as dealing hardly and unkindly with them, and tell him how good a people he afflicteth: Theſe only underſtand the ſinfulneſs of their very humiliations and prayers, through the weakneſs of that good which ſhould be in them, and the mixture of much evil; when the proud are marvelling if God hear them not at the firſt word: Theſe only wait in patience for Gods anſwer, and accept of mercy in his time and meaſure, when the proud are ſhort-winded, and if God come not juſt when they expected, they do with Saul make haſt, or murmur at his providence, and ſay it is in vain to ſerve the Lord, and begin to think of forſaking him and taking ſome better way. Theſe proud ones that have joyned in outward Humiliations, and have lift up themſelves in heart, while they caſt down their bodies, are they that have turned the heart of God ſo much againſt us, to break us in pieces, becauſe he hath found among us ſo many of the proud whom he taketh for his enemies: We have had thoſe humbling themſelves in our aſſemblies, that were wiſe in their own eyes, deſpiſing, and ſcorning, and reviling their Teachers; ſuch as undervalued and cenſured others, that were not for their opinions and intereſt; that overloved the reſpect and honour that is from men; and could not endure to be diſeſteemed or little ſet by; that could not bear an injury or a foul word, but were prone to anger, if not revenge, that could not ſeek peace, nor ſtoop to others; nor bear plain-dealing in reproof; nor forgive a wrong without much ſubmiſſion; that had high expectations from others; and loved thoſe beſt that moſt eſteemed them; that counted it baſeneſs to ſtoop to the meaneſt places or ſervices for others good; yea that quarrelled with God, his word and providences, and valued no other mercies but thoſe that exalted themſelves or pleaſed their fleſh (which proved judgements:) And yet while they thus by pride excommunicated themſelves from the face of God, and made themſelves abhorred by him, they ſeparated from the holieſt aſſemblies and ſervants of God in the land, as unworthy of communion with ſuch as they, unleſs they would firſt become of their opinion and ſect. We little conſider how great a hand this Pride hath had in our deſolations. God hath been ſcattering the proud of all ſorts in the imaginations of their own hearts.

Luk. 1. 51.

Dir. 7. §. 88. Direct. 7. Look to a humbled Chriſt to humble you. Can you be proud while you believe that your Saviour was cloathed with fleſh, and lived in meanneſs, and made himſelf of no reputation, and was deſpiſed and ſcorned and ſpit upon by ſinners, and ſhamefully uſed and nailed as a malefactor to a croſs? The very incarnation of Chriſt is a condeſcenſion and humiliation enough to poſe both men and Angels, tranſcending all belief but ſuch as God himſelf produceth by his ſupernatural teſtimony and ſpirit. And can pride look a crucified Chriſt in the face, or ſtand before him? Did God take upon him the form of a ſervant, and muſt thou domineer and have the higheſt place? Had not Chriſt a place to lay his head on? and muſt thou needs have thy adorned well-furniſhed rooms? Muſt thou needs brave it out in the moſt fantaſtick faſhion, inſtead of thy Saviours ſeamleſs coat? Doth he pray for his murderers? And muſt thou be revenged for a word or petty wrong? Is he patiently ſpit upon and buffeted? And art thou ready through proud impatiency to ſpit upon or buffet others? Surely he that condemned ſin in the fleſh, condemned no ſin more than Pride.

Joh. 15 20. Phil. 2. 7, 8, 9, 10.

Dir. 8. §. 89. Direct. 8. Look to the examples of the moſt eminent ſaints, and you will ſee they were all moſt eminent in humility. The Apoſtles before the coming down of the Holy Ghoſt on them, contended which of them ſhould be the greateſt (which Chriſt permitted that he might moſt ſharply rebuke it, and leave his warning to all his Miniſters and diſciples to the end of the world, that they that would be greateſt muſt be the ſervants of all, and that they muſt by converſion become as little children, or never enter into the Kingdom of God.) But afterward in what humility did theſe Apoſtles labour, and live and ſuffer in the world? Paul made himſelf a ſervant unto all, that he might gain the more, though he was free from all men, 1 Cor. 9. 10. They ſubmitted themſelves to all the injuries and affronts of men; to be accounted the plagues and troublers of the world, and as the ſcorn and off-ſcouring of all things, and a gazing ſtock to Angels and to men. And are you better than they? If you are, you are more humble, and not more proud.

Pſal. 22. 7. Pſal. 44. 13

1 Cor. 4. 12, 13, 14, 15. Act. 24. 5.

Dir. 9. §. 90. Direct. 9. Look to the holy Angels that condeſcend to miniſter for man; and think on the bleſſed ſouls with God, how far they are from being proud; And remember if ever thou come to Heaven how far thou wilt be from pride thy ſelf. Such a ſight as Iſaiahs would take down pride, Iſa. 6. 1, 2, 3. I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon a Throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the Temple: above it ſtood the Seraphims: Each one had ſix wings: With two he covered his face, and with two he covered his feet, and with two he fled (ſignifying Humility, Purity and obedience.) And one cryed unto another and ſaid, Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hoſts: His Glory is the fulneſs of the whole earth.] So Rev. 4. 8. and verſ. 10. The Elders fell down, and caſt down their Crowns before him that ſitteth on the throne. Look up to Heaven and you'l abhor your pride.

Dir. 10. §. 91. Direct. 10. Look upon the great imperfection of thy grace and duties. Should that man be proud that hath ſo little of the ſpirit and Image of Jeſus Chriſt? That believeth no more, and feareth God no more? And loveth him no more? And can no better truſt in him, nor reſt upon his word and love? Nor no more delight in him nor in his holy laws and ſervice? One would think that the lamentable weakneſs of any one of all theſe graces, ſhould take down pride and abaſe you in your own eyes? Is he a Chriſtian that doth not even abhor himſelf, when he perceiveth how little he loveth his God, and how little all his meditations on the love and blood of Chriſt, and of the infinite Goodneſs of God, and of the heavenly Glory, do kindle the fire, and warm his heart? Can we obſerve the darkneſs of our minds, and ignorance of God, and ſtrangeneſs to the life to come, and the woful weakneſs of our faith, and not be abaſed to a loathing of our ſelves? Can we chooſe but even abhor thoſe hearts that can love a friend, and love the toyes and vanities of this life, and yet can love their God no more? That take no more pleaſure in his name, and praiſe, and word, and ſervice, when they can find pleaſure in the accommodations of their fleſh? Can we chooſe but loath thoſe hearts that are ſo averſe to God, ſo loth to think of him, ſo loth to pray to him, ſo weary of prayer or holy meditation or any duty, and yet ſo forward to the buſineſs and recreations of the fleſh? Can we feel how coldly and unbelievingly we pray, how ignorantly or carnally we diſcourſe, how confuſedly and vainly we think, and how ſlothfully we work, and how unprofitably

we live, and yet be proud, and not be covered with shame? O for a serious Christian to feel how little of God, of Christ, of Heaven is upon his heart, and how little appeareth in any eminent holiness and fruitfulness and heavenliness of life, is so humbling a consideration, that we have much ado to own our selves, and not lye down as utterly desolate: Should that soul admit a thought of pride, that hath so little Grace, as to be uncertain whether he have any at all in sincerity or not? That cannot with assurance call God Father, or plead his interest in Christ or in the promises? nor knoweth not if he dye this hour, whether he shall go to Heaven or Hell? Should he be proud that is no readier to dye? and no more assured of the pardon of sin? nor willinger to appear before the Lord? If one pained member will make you groan, and walk dejectedly, though all the rest do feel no pain, a soul that hath this universal weakness, a weakness that is so sinful and so dangerous, hath cause to be continually humbled to the dust.

Dir. 11. §. 92. Direct. 11. Look upon thy great and manifold sins, which dwell in thy heart, and have been committed in thy life, and there thou wilt see cause for great humiliation. If thy body were full of Toads and Serpents, and thou couldst see or feel them crawling in thee, wouldst thou then be proud? Why so many sins are ten thousand fold worse, and should make thee far viler in thine own esteem. If thou wert possessed with Devils, and knewest it, wouldst thou be proud? Why Devils possessing thy body are not so bad or hurtful to thee, as sin in thy soul. The sight of a sin should more take down thy pride, than the sight of a Devil. Should that man be proud that hath lived as thou hast lived, and sinned as thou hast sinned, from thy childhood until now? that hath lost so much time, and abused so much mercy, and neglected so much means, and omitted so many duties to God and man, and been guilty of so many sinful thoughts, and so many false or foolish words, and hath broken all the Laws of God? Should not he be deeply humbled that hath yet so much ignorance, errour, unbelief, hypocrisie, sensuality, worldliness, hard-heartedness, security, uncharitableness, lust, envy, malice, impatience and selfishness, as is in thee? Should not thy very Pride it self be matter of thy great humiliation, to think that so odious a sin should yet so much prevail? Look thus on thy leprous defiled soul, and turn thy very Pride against it self? Know thy self, and thou canst not be Proud.

See my Treatise of Self-ignorance.

Dir. 12. §. 93. Direct. 12. Look also to the desert of all thy sins, even unto Hell it self, and try if that will bring thee low. Though Pride came from Hell effectively, yet Hell objectively may afford thee a remedy against it. Think on the worm that never dyeth, and the fire that never shall be quenched, and consider whether Pride become that soul, that hath deserved these. Wilt thou be proud in the way to thy damnation? Thou mightest better be proud of thy Chains and rope when thou art going to the gallows. Think whether the miserable souls in Hell, are now minding neat and well set attire, or seeking for dominion, honour or preferment, or contending who shall be the greatest, or striving for the highest rooms, or setting out themselves to the admiration and applause of men, or quarrelling with others for undervaluing or dishonouring them? Do you think there is any place or matter there for such works of Pride when God abaseth them?

Dir. 13. §. 94. Direct. 13. Look to the day of Judgement, when all proud thoughts and looks shall be taken down, and to the endless misery threatned to the proud. Think of that world in which your souls must ere long appear, before the great and Holy God whose Presence will abase the proudest sinner. When the Tyrants and Gallants, and Wantons of the earth, must with trembling and amazement give up their accounts to the most righteous Judge of all the world, then where are their lofty looks and language? Then where is their glory, and gallantry, and proud imperious domineering, and their scornful despising the humble lowly ones of Christ? Would you then think that this is the same man, that lately could scarce be seen or spoken with? that looked so big, and swaggered it out in wealth and honour? Is this he that could not endure a scorn, or to be slighted or undervalued, or plainly reproved? that must needs have the honour and precedency in wit, and greatness, and command? Is this the man that thought he was perfect and had no sin; or that his sins were so small, as not to need the humiliation, renovation and holy diligence of the Saints? Is this the woman that spent half the day in dressing up her self, and house, and furniture, for the view of others, and must needs be in the newest or the neatest fashion? that was wont to walk in an artificial pace, with a wandring eye, in a wanton garb, as if she were too good to tread on the earth? Oh then how the case will be altered with such as these? Can you believe and consider how you must be judged by God, and yet be Proud?

Dir. 14. §. 95. Direct. 14. Look to the Devils themselves that tempt you to be proud, and see what Pride hath brought them to; and remember that a proud man is the image of the Devil, and Pride is the Devils special sin. He that envieth your happiness, knoweth by sad experience the way to misery; and therefore tempteth you to be proud; that you may come by the same Way, to the same End that he himself is come to. The Angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, to the judgement of the great day: Jude 6.

Dir. 15. §. 96. Direct. 15. Look well upon thy self both body and soul, and think whether thou be a person fit for Pride. God hath purposely clothed thine Immortal soul, in the course attire of corruptible flesh, and placed it in so poor and ruinous a Cottage, that it might be kept from pride: yea, he made this frail and corruptible body, to be a constitutive part of our very person, that in knowing it, we may know our selves. Some will have a dead mans skull stand by them, in their Studies or Chambers, as an Antidote against pride. But God hath fastned us yet closer to mortality: Death dwelleth in our bowels. We are apt to marvel that so noble a soul should be lodged in so mean a body, made of the earth, to which it must return? A Stone is durable and clean; but my flesh is corruptible, and must turn to loathsome filth and rottenness: A Marble Pillar will stand firm and beautiful from age to age, but I must perish and consume in darkness. The Seats we sit upon, the Pillars we lean to, the Stones we tread upon, will be here, when we are turned to dust. The house that I build, may stand when I am rotten in the Grave: A Tree will live, when he that planted it is dead. Our bodies are of no better materials than the Brutes: Our substance is in a continual flux or waste, and loseth something every day; and if it were not repaired and patched up by daily air and nourishment, it would soon be spent, and our Oyle consumed. If you were chained to a dead carkass, which you must still carry about with you, it were not a matter so fit to humble you, as to be united so nearly to so vile a body of your own. We carry a dunghil continually ally within us: Alas, how filly a piece is the greateſt, the ſtrongeſt and the comelieſt of you all? What is that fleſh which you ſo much pamper, but a skin full of corruption? a bag of filth, of flegm or choller or ſuch like excrements? If the curiouſeſt Dames had but a ſight of the flegm in their heads and bowels, the choler about their liver and galls, the worms or filth in other parts, they would go near to vomit at ſuch a ſight: The Swine or Beaſt hath as clean an inſide: And what if this filth be covered with a whiter Skin, or clearer colour than your neighbours have, is there any cauſe of pride in that? When ſickneſs hath altered and conſumed you, then where is that which you called Beauty? If but the Leproſie or the Small Pox deform it, or a Feavor, Conſumption or Dropſie waſte it, or the Stone, or Gowt, or any ſuch torment ſeize upon thee, thou wilt feel or ſee that which may ſhame thy Pride. Should ſuch a worm be proud, that cannot, tho' he be a Herod, keep the worms from eating him alive? that in a flux cannot retain his excrements? that cannot bear eaſily the aking of a Tooth? If thou be fit for Pride, forbid diſeaſes to touch thy fleſh, or ſtain thy beauty; Do not be ſick, nor weak, nor pained: Let not the Worm and corruption be thy gueſts: Or if thou be ſo poor a thing, as cannot hinder any of theſe, then know thy ſelf, and be aſhamed of Pride.

And when thou art in ſickneſs, thou wilt be burdenſome to others: It's likely thou muſt have their helps, even to feed thee, to dreſs thee, to turn thee, and keep thee clean: And when all is done thou muſt dye, and be laid in darkneſs in a grave! There muſt thou lye rotting night and day, till thy fleſh be turned into earth. The graſs doth wither when it is cut down, but yet it is ſweet: The Tree that is cut down, will rot in time; but not with ſuch a loathſome ſtink as we. He that had ſeen what the late doleful Wars did often ſhew us, when the fields were ſtrowed with the carkaſſes of men, and when they lay by heaps among the rubbiſh of the Ditches of Towns and Caſtles that had been aſſaulted, would think ſuch loathſome lumps of fleſh, ſhould never have been proud. When once death hath deprived thy body of its ſoul, thy beſt friends will quickly be weary of the remainder, and glad to rid thee out of ſight and ſmell: Go to the Church-yard, and look on the duſt and bones that are there caſt up and ſcattered, and bethink thee whether thoſe that muſt come to this, have reaſon to be proud? See whether there be any differing mark of honour upon the duſt of the rich, or ſtrong, or beautiful? and whether the bones there ſtrive for principality and dominion? Therefore the deſire of adorned Monuments upon mens Graves, is one of the moſt odious ſorts of pride: when the neighbourhood of rottenneſs and duſt doth ſhame it: As our ſerious Poet Herbert ſaith,

When the hair grows ſweet with Pride and luſt,
The Powder doth forget the Duſt.

And tho' thy Soul be far nobler than thy Body, yet here how ignorant, and weak, and diſtempered is it? How full of falſe Idea's are mens minds? How little know they of that which they might know, or are confident they do know! How dark are we about all the works of God, and about his word: much more about himſelf? The greateſt Doctors are ſtrongly tempted to be Scepticks; and the ignorant that this year are confident to a contempt and cenſoriouſneſs of all that differ from them, perhaps the next year do change their judgments, and recant themſelves.

And are our Hearts and Lives any happier than our underſtandings? While we are impriſoned in fleſh, and its intereſt is ours, and its appetites and paſſions have ſo much advantage, to corrupt, ſeduce or diſturb the ſoul? Know thy ſelf, and Pride will die.

§. 97. Direct. 16. If thou have any thing to be proud of, remember what it is, and that it is not thine own, but given or lent thee by that God who chiefly hateth Pride. Sign 16.

1. Art thou tempted to be proud of Riches? Remember that they are in themſelves but droſs, which will leave thee at the grave as poor as any: And as to their Uſefulneſs, they are but thy Maſters talents; and the more thou haſt, the greater will be thine account: And very few rich men ſcape the ſnare, and come to Heaven: Thy charge and danger therefore ſhould rather humble thee, and make thee exceedingly to fear. Read Jam. 5. 1, 2, 3, 4. and Luke 12. 19, 20.

2. Is it Greatneſs, and Dominion, or Human applauſe, or Honour that you are proud of? Remember, that this alſo is in it ſelf a dream, that maketh thee really neither better nor ſafer than other men. Thou ſtandeſt upon higher Ground, where thou haſt more than others of the Storms and Dangers, and ſhalt be levelled with the loweſt in thy fall: And as to the Uſe of thy Power and Greatneſs, it is for God, and not thy ſelf! And ſo great will be thy reckoning, according to the truſt repoſed in thee, as would affright a conſiderate Believer to foreſee.

3. Is it youthful ſtrength that you are proud of? How little can it do for thee, of that which thou moſt needeſt? And how ſoon will it be turned to weakneſs? How many are cut off in youth, and their life is among the unclean, as Elihu ſpeaks Job 36. 14. Their bones are full of the ſins of their youth, which ſhall lye down with them in the duſt, Job 20. 11.

4. Is it Beauty that you are proud of? I have told you what ſickneſs and death will do to that before. When God rebuketh Man for ſin, he makes his beauty to conſume as a moth: ſurely every man is vanity, Pſal. 39. 11. Read Pſal. 49. 12, 13, 14. And if your beauty would continue, how little good will it do you? and who but fools do look at the skin of a rational creature, when they would diſcern their worth? A fool, and a ſlave of luſt and Satan, may be beautiful. A Sepulchre may be gilded that hath rottenneſs within: Will you chooſe the fineſt purſe, or the fulleſt? Who but a child or fool will value his Book by the fineneſs of the cover, or gilding of the leaves, and not by the worth of the matter within? Abſalom was beautiful, and what the better was he? 2 Sam. 14. 25. Prov. 31. 30. Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, ſhe ſhall be praiſed.

5. If it be fine Clothes and gaudy Ornaments that you are proud of, it is a ſin ſo fooliſh and worſe than childiſh, that I ſhall give it no other confutation, than to tell you, that it contradicteth it ſelf, by making the perſon a ſcorn and laughing ſtock to others, when their deſign was to be more admired; and that an Aſs or a Poſt may have as fine and coſtly attire as you; and that ſhortly you ſhall change it for a Winding-ſheet. Iſa. 3.

6. Is it your Birth, and Progenitors, and great friends that you are proud of? Perſonal merits are incomparably more excellent, than this relation to the moſt meritorious parents; much more than a relation to their empty titles. Cain was the Son of Adam the Father of mankind, and Cham of Noah, and Eſau of Jacob, and Abſalom of David; when a godly Son of a wicked Father is more honourable than they. Your anceſtors are but of the common ſtock of ſinful Adam: and your great friends may poſſibly become your enemies: and it is little that the greateſt of them can do for you, if God be not your friend.

7. Is it your learning, or wiſdom, or ability for ſpeech or action that you are proud of? Remember that the Devils and many that are now in Hell, have far far exceeded you in these: And that the wiser you are indeed, the humbler you will be; and by pride you confute your ostentation of your wisdom: Achitophels wisdom which saveth not the owner from perdition, is little cause of glorying, Jer. 8. 8, 9. There were men that boasted of their wisdom, even in the Law of God, who yet were ashamed and dismayed: for they rejected the Word of the Lord: and then what wisdom could there be in them? Therefore thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches, but let him that gloryeth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord, which exercise loving kindness, judgment and righteousness in the earth: for in these do I delight, saith the Lord, Jer. 9.23,24. Those were not unlearned of whom Paul speaketh, 1 Cor. 1. 20. Where is the Wise? Where is the Scribe? Where is the Disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

8. Is it success in Wars or great undertakings that you are proud of? But by whose strength did you perform it? And how unhappy a success is that which hindereth your success in the work of your salvation? And how many have been brought down again to shame, that have been lifted up in pride of their successes?

9. Is it the applause of men that proclaim your excellency that you are proud of? Alas, how poor a portion is the breath of man? And how mutable are your applauders? that perhaps the next day will turn their tunes, and as much reproach you. Will you be proud of Praise, when it is the Devils whistle purposely to entice you into this pernicious snare; that he may destroy you? It is a danger to be feared; for it destroyeth many: but not a benefit much to be rejoyced in, much less to be proud of; for few are the better for it. Titles and applause increase not real worth and virtue, but puff up many with a mortal tympany.

10. Is it your grace and goodness or eminency in Religion that you are proud of? This is most absurd, when predominant Pride is a certain sign that you have no saving grace at all; and so are proud of what you have not: And if you have it, so far as you are proud of it you abuse it, contradict it and destroy it: For Pride is to Grace, what the Plague or Consumption is to Health. It is Novices that have least grace and knowledge, that are apteſt to be puft up with Pride, and thereby to fall into the condemnation of the Devil, 1 Tim. 3. 6. that is, into the like punishment for the like sin. When the Pot boyleth over, that which was in it is lost in the fire. Rise not too high in the esteem of your grace, lest you rise to the loss of it. Be not high minded, but fear, Rom. 11. 20. When you think you stand, take heed lest you fall, 1 Cor. 10. 12.

Dir. 17. §. 98. Direct. 17. Look to the nature and tendency of every Grace and Ordinance, and Duty; and use them diligently; for they all tend to the destruction of Pride. Knowledge discerneth the folly and pernicious tendency of Pride, and abundant matter for Humiliation: Faith is the casting off our Pride, and going with empty hungry souls to Christ for mercy and supply: It sheweth us the most powerful sight in the world for the humbling of a soul, even a Crucified Christ, and a most Holy God, and a glorified society of humble souls, and a dreadful judgment and damnation for the proud. I might shew you the same of every grace and duty, but for being tedious.

Dir. 18. §. 99. Direct. 18. Look to the humbling Judgments of God on your selves and others, and turn them all against your Pride. You will sure think it an unsuitable and unseasonable thing for the calamitous to be proud. Are you not oft complaining of one thing or other, upon your consciences, your bodies, your estates, your names, your relations or friends? and yet will you be proud while you complain? If the Judgments that have already befallen you, humble you not, if God love you, and will save you, you may expect you should feel more, and the load should be increased, till it make you stoop. O miserable obstinate sinners! that can groan with sickness, and yet be proud! and murmur under want, and yet be proud! and daily crossed by one or other, and yet be proud! yea, and tormented with fears of Gods displeasure, and yet be proud! Have not all the Wars and blood, and ruines that have befallen us in these Kingdoms, been yet enough to take down pride? Many humbling sights we have seen; and many humbling stripes we have felt, and yet are we not humbled? We have seen houses robbed, and Towns fired, and the Country pillaged, and the blood of many thousands shed, and their carcasses scattered about the fields: and yet are we not humbled? If we were proud of our Riches, they have been taken from us: If proud of our buildings, they have been turned into ruinous heaps: If we have been proud of our Government, and the Fame and Glory of our Country, we have seen how our sins have pulled down our Government, dishonoured our Rulers, and blemished our Glory, and turned it into shame, and yet we are not humbled? If you lived in a house infected with the Plague, and had buried Father, and Mother, and Brothers, and Sisters, and but a very few were left alive, expecting when their turn came next, if these few were not humbled, would you not think them blind and sottish persons? Do you yet look high, and contend for preheminence, and look for honour, and envy others, and desire to domineer, and have your will and way, and set out your selves in the neatest dress? Must you have sharper stripes, before you will be humbled? Must greater injuries, and violences, and losses, and fears, and reproaches by the means? Why will you choose so painful a remedy, by frustrating the easier? If it must be so, the judgment shall shortly come yet nearer to thee. It shall either strip thee of the rest, or cover thee with shame, or lay thee in pain upon thy Couch, where thy head shall ake, and thy heart be sick, and thy body weary, and thou shalt pant and gasp for breath: Wilt thou then be proud, and contest for honour? When thou expectest hourly when thy proud and guilty soul, shall be turned out of thy body, and appear before the Holy God? When the Bell is ready to toll for thee, and thy Winding sheet to be fetcht out, and thy Coffin prepared, and the Bier to be fetcht to carry thee to thy Grave, and leave thee in the dark with worms and rottenness; Wilt thou then be proud! Where then are your high looks, and lofty minds, and splendid ornaments and honours! Then will you be climbing into higher rooms, and seeking to be revenged on those that did eclipse your honour? Saith David even of Princes and all the sons of men, Psal. 146. 3, 4. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

Dir. 19. §. 100. Direct. 19. Look on the lamentable effects of Pride about you in the world, and that will help you to see the odiousness and pernicious nature of it. Do you not see how it setteth the whole world on fire? how it raiseth Wars, and ruineth Kingdoms, and draweth out mens blood, and filleth the world with malice, and hatred, and cruelty, and injustice, and treasons, and rebellions, and destroyeth mercy, truth and honesty, and all that is left of God upon the mind of man! Whence is all the confusion, and calamity, all the censoriousness, revilings and cruelties, which we have seen, or felt, or heard of, but from Pride? What is it that hath trampled upon the Interest of Christ and his Gospel through the world, but pride? What else is it that hath burnt his Martyrs, and made havock of his servants, and distracted and divided his Church with Schisms, and set up so many Sect-Matters and Sects, and caused them almost all to set against others, but this cursed unmortified Pride? He that hath seen but what Pride hath been doing in England in this age, and yet discerneth not its hatefulness and perniciousness, is strangely blind. Every proud man is a plague or burden to the place he liveth in: If he get high, he is a Nabal: a man can scarce speak to him: He thinks all under him are made but to serve his will and honour, as inferiour creatures are made for man. If he be an inferiour, he scorneth at the honour and government of his Superiors, and thinks they take too much upon them, and that it is below him to obey. If he be rich, he thinks the poor must bow all to him, as to the Golden Calf, or Nebuchadnezzars Golden Image: If he be poor, he envieth the rich, and is impatient of the state that God hath set him in: If he be learned, he thinks himself an Oracle: If unlearned, he despiseth the knowledge which he wanteth, and scorneth to be taught. What state soever he is in, he is a very Salamander, that liveth in the fire, he troubleth House, and Town, and Country, if his power be answerable to his heart: he is an unpolished stone, that will never lye even in any building; he is a natural enemy to quietness and peace. Dir. 20.

§. 101. Direct. 20. Consider well how God hath designed the humbling of all that he will save, in his whole contrivance of the work of our Redemption. He could have saved man by keeping him in his primitive innocency, if he had pleased. Though he causeth not sin, he knoweth why he permitteth it. He thought it not enough that man should have the thought of creation to humble him, as being taken from the dust, and made of nothing; but he will also have the sense of his moral nothingness and sinfulness to humble him: He will have him beholden to his Redeemer and Sanctifier for his new life and his Salvation, as much as to his Creator for his natural life. He is permitted first to undo himself, and bring himself under condemnation, to be a child of death, and near to Hell, before he is ransomed and delivered: that he may take to himself the shame of his misery, and ascribe all his hopes and recovery to God. No flesh shall be justified by the works of the Law, or by a righteousness of his own performance; but by the satisfaction and merits of his Redeemer; that so all boasting may be excluded, and that no flesh might glory in his sight, and that man might be humbled, and our Redeemer have the praise to all eternity. And therefore God prepareth men for faith and pardon, by humbling works, and forceth sinners to condemn themselves before he will justifie them. Rom. 3. 19, 20, 23, 27, & 4. 2. 1 Cor. 1. 29. Ephes. 2. 9.

Dir. 21. §. 102. Direct. 21. Read over the character which Christ himself giveth of his true Disciples; and you will see what great self-denyal and humility he requireth in all. In your first conversion you must become as little children, Matth. 18. 3. Instead of contending for superiority and greatness, you must be ambitious of being servants unto all, Matth. 23. 11. & 20. 27. You must learn of him to be meek and lowly of heart, Matth. 11. 28, 29. and to stoop to wash your brethrens feet, John 13. 5. 14. Instead of revenge or unpeaceable contending for your right, you must rather obey those that injuriously command you, and turn the other cheek to him that smiteth you, and let go the rest to him that hath injuriously taken from you; and bless them that curse you, and pray for them that hurt and persecute you, and despightfully use you, Matth. 5. 39, 40, 41, 44. These are the followers of Christ. Luke 22. 26. Mark 10. 44. Mark 9. 36. 2 Tim. 2. 24.

Dir. 22. §. 103. Direct. 22. Remember how Pride contradicteth it self by exposing you to the hatred or contempt of all. All men abhor that Pride in others which they cherish in themselves. A humble man is well thought of by all that know him; and a proud man is the mark of common obloquy. The rich disdain him: the poor envy him; and all hate him, and many deride him: This is his success.

§. 104. Direct. 23. Look still unto that dismal end, which Pride doth tend unto. It threatneth Apostasie: If God forsake any one among you, and any of you forsake God, his Truth, and your Consciences, and be made as Lots Wife, a monument of his vengeance for a warning unto others, it will be the proud and self-conceited person. It maketh all the mercies of God, your duties and parts, and objectively your very graces, to be its food and fewel. It is a sign you are near some dreadful fall, or heavy judgment: For God hath given you this prognostick, Luke 14. 11. & 1. 51. Prov. 15. 25. & 16. 5. Isa. 2. 11, 12. An Ahab is safer when he humbleth himself; and an Hezekiah is falling when he is lifted up. They are the most hardned sinners, scorning reproof, and therefore ordinarily forsaken both by God and man, and left to their self-delusion till they perish. Dir. 23.

§. 105. Direct. 24. Converse with humbled and afflicted persons, and not with proud secure worldlings. Be much in the house of mourning, where you may see the end of all the living, and be made better by laying it to heart; and let not your hearts be in the house of mirth, Eccles. 7. 2, 3, 4. Delight not to converse with men that be in honour and understand not, but are like the beasts that perish, for though they think of perpetuating their houses, and call their lands after their own names, yet they abide not in their honour: and this their way is their folly, though yet their posterity approve their sayings, Psal. 49. 20. 12, 13, 14. Converse with penitent humbled souls, that have seen the odiousness of sin, and the wickedness and deceitfulness of the heart, and can tell you by their own feeling what cause of humiliation is still before you! With these are you most safe. Dir. 24.

106. I have been the larger against PRIDE, as seeing its prevalency in the world, and its mischievous effects on souls and families, Church and State, and because it is not discerned and resisted by many as it ought; I would fain have God dwell in your hearts, and peace in your societies, and fain have you stand fast in the hour of temptation, from prosperity or adversity, and fain have affliction easie to you: But none of this will be without humility. I am loth that under the mighty hand of God we should be unhumbled; even when judgments bid us lay our mouths in the dust. The storms have been long up; the Cedars have fallen: It is the Shrubs, and bending Willows that now are likest to scape. I am loth to see the prognosticks of wrath upon your souls, or upon the Land. I am loth that any of you should through Pride be unhumbled for sin, or ashamed to own despised godliness: or that any that have seemed Religious, should prove seditious, unpeaceable or Apostates: And therefore I beseech you in a special manner, take heed of pride, be little in your own esteem: Praise not one another unseasonably; be not offended at plain reproofs: Look to your duties, and then leave your reputations to the will of God. Rebuke pride in your children, Use them to mean attire and employments: Cherish not that in them which is most natural (now) and most pernicious. God dwelleth with the Humble, and will take the Humble to dwell with him, Isa. 57. 15. Job 22. 29. Put on humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, Col. 3. 12, 13. Be clothed with humility: Serve the Lord with all humility of mind, and he will exalt you in due time, Acts 20. 19. 1 Pet. 5. 6, 7. 1 Pet. 5 6. Lam. 3. 29. & 2. 19. Amos 3. 8. 1 Pet. 5. 5. Jam. 4. 6. Dan. 5. 22. 2 Chron. 34 27.

PART VI.

Directions againſt Covetouſneſs, or Love of Riches, and againſt worldly Cares.

I Shall ſay but little on this ſubject now, becauſe I have written a Treatiſe of it already, called [The Crucifying of the World by the Croſs of Chriſt,] in which I have given many Directions (in the Preface and Treatiſe) againſt this ſin.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Underſtand well the Nature and Malignity of this ſin; both what it is, and why it is ſo great and perillous: I ſhall here ſhew you, 1. What Love of Riches is lawful. 2. What it is that is unlawful, and in what this ſin of Covetouſneſs or Worldlineſs doth conſiſt: 3. Wherein the Malignity or Greatneſs of it lyeth. 4. The Signs of it. 5. What Counterfeits of the contrary virtue do hide this ſin from the eyes of worldlings. 6. What falſe appearances of it, do cauſe many to be ſuſpected of Covetouſneſs unjuſtly.

Lawful Love of Creatures. §. 2. I. All love of the creature, the world, or riches is not ſin: For 1. The works of God are all Good as ſuch, and all Goodneſs is amiable. As they are related to God, and his Power, and Wiſdom, and Goodneſs is imprinted them, ſo we muſt love them, even for his ſake. 2. All the impreſſions of the Attributes of God appearing on his works, do make them as a Glaſs in which at this diſtance we muſt ſee the Creatour, and their ſweetneſs is a drop from him, by which his Goodneſs and Love is taſted: And ſo they were all made to lead us up to God, and help our minds to converſe with him, and kindle the Love of God in our breaſts, as a Love-token from our deareſt friend: And thus as the means of our communion with God, the Love of them is a duty, and not a ſin. 3. They are naturally the means of ſuſtaining our bodies, and preſerving life, and health, and alacrity: And as ſuch, our ſenſitive part hath a Love to them, as every Beaſt hath to their food: And this Love in it ſelf is not of moral kind, and is neither a virtue nor a vice, till it either be uſed in obedience to our Reaſon (and ſo it is good) or in diſobedience to it (and ſo it is evil.) 4. The creatures are neceſſary means to ſupport our bodies, while we are doing God the ſervice which we owe him in the world: And ſo they muſt be Loved as a means to his ſervice: Though we cannot ſay properly that Riches are ordinarily thus neceſſary: 5. The Creatures are neceſſary to ſuſtain our bodies in our journey to Heaven, while we are preparing for eternity: And thus they muſt be loved as remote helps to our ſalvation. And in theſe two laſt reſpects we call it in our prayers [our daily bread.] 6. Riches may enable us to relieve our needy brethren, and to promote good works for Church or State. And thus alſo they may be loved: ſo far as we muſt be thankful for them, ſo far we may Love them: For we muſt be Thankful for nothing but what is Good.

Covetouſneſs what. Phil. 3. 7, 8, 9. Luke 1.10. Pſal. 4. 11. 1 Tim. 6. 8 Prov. 23. 4. Labour not to be Rich. §. 3. II. But Worldlineſs or ſinful Love of Riches is, 1. When Riches are loved, and deſired, and ſought more for the Fleſh, than for God or our Salvation, even as the matter or means of our worldly proſperity, that the fleſh may want nothing to pleaſe it and ſatisfie its deſires. Or that Pride may have enough wherewith to ſupport it ſelf, by gratifying and obliging others, and living at thoſe rates, and in that ſplendour, as may ſhew our Greatneſs, or further our Domination over others. 2. And when we therefore deſire them in that proportion which we think moſt agreeable to theſe carnal ends, and are not contented with our daily bread, and that proportion which may ſuſtain us as paſſengers to Heaven, and tend moſt to the ſecuring of our ſouls, and to the ſervice of God. So that it is the end by which a ſinful Love of Riches is principally to be diſcerned, when they are loved for pride or fleſh-pleaſing, as they are the matter of a worldly corporal felicity; and not principally for God and his ſervice, and ſervants, and our ſalvation. And indeed as Senſualiſts love them, they ſhould be hated.

Worldlineſs predominant. Luke 12. 26, 33. §. 4. Worldlineſs is either predominant, and ſo a certain ſign of death; or elſe mortified and in a ſubdued degree, conſiſtent with ſome living grace. Worldlineſs predominant as in the Ungodly is [When men that have not a lively belief of the everlaſting happineſs, nor have not laid up their treaſure and hopes in Heaven, do take the pleaſure and proſperity of this life for that felicity which is higheſt in their eſteem, and deareſt to their hearts, and therefore love the Riches of the world, or full proviſions, as the matter and means of this their temporal felicity.] Worldlineſs in a mortified perſon, is [When he that hath laid up his treaſure in Heaven, and practically eſteemeth his everlaſting hopes above all the pleaſure and proſperity of the fleſh, and ſeeketh firſt the Kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, and uſeth his eſtate principally for God and his ſalvation, hath yet ſome remnants of inordinate deſire to the proſperity and pleaſure of the fleſh, and ſome inordinate deſire of Riches for that end; which yet he hateth, lamenteth, reſiſteth, and ſo far ſubdueth, that it is not predominant, againſt the intereſt of God and his ſalvation.] Yet this is a great ſin, though it be forgiven. Matth. 6. 19, 20, 21, 33. John 5. 27. Luke 12. 19, 20. Luke 18. 22, 23.

The Malignity of it. §. 5. III. The Malignity or Greatneſs of this ſin conſiſteth in theſe points (eſpecially when it is predominant) 1. The love of the World, or of Riches, is a ſin of Deliberation, and not of meer temerity or ſudden paſſion: Worldlings contrive the attaining of their ends. 2. It is a ſin of Intereſt, Love and Choice, ſet up againſt our chiefeſt Intereſt. It is the ſetting up of a falſe end, and ſeeking that; and not only a ſin of errour in the means, or a ſeeking the right end in a miſtaken way. 3. It is Idolatry or a denying God, and depoſing him in our hearts, and ſetting up his creatures in his ſtead, in that meaſure as it prevaileth. The worldling giveth that Love, and that Truſt unto the creature, which is due to God alone: He delighteth in it inſtead of God, and ſeeketh and holdeth it as his felicity inſtead of God: And therefore ſo far as any man loveth the world, the love of the Father is not in him, 1 Joh. 2. 15. And the friendſhip of the world is enmity to God. 4. It is a contempt of Heaven; when it muſt be neglected, and a miſerable world preferred. 5. It ſheweth that unbelief prevaileth at the heart, ſo far as worldlineſs prevaileth: for if men did practically believe the Heavenly Glory, and the promiſe thereof, they would be carried above theſe preſent things. 6. It is a debaſing of the ſoul of man, and uſing it like the Brutes, while it is principally ſet upon the ſerving of the fleſh, and on a temporal felicity, and neglecteth its eternal happineſs and concernments. Ephe. 5. 5. Col. 3. 5. Jam. 4. 4.

7. It is a perverting of the very drift of a mans life, as employed in ſeeking a wrong end, and not only of ſome one faculty or act: It is an habitual ſin of the ſtate and courſe of mind and life, and not only a particular actual ſin. 8. It is a perverting of Gods creatures to an End and Uſe clean contrary to that which they were made and given for, and an abuſing God by his own gifts by which he ſhould be ſerved and honoured: And a deſtroying our ſouls with thoſe mercies which were given us for their help and benefit. This is the true character of this heinous ſin. In a word, it is the forſaking God, and turning the heart from him, and alineating the Life from his ſervice, to this preſent world, and the ſervice of the fleſh: Fornication, drunkenneſs, murder, ſwearing, perjuring, lying, ſtealing, &c. are very heinous ſins: But a ſingle act of one of theſe committed raſhly in the violence of paſſion, or temptation, ſpeaketh not ſuch a malignant turning away of the heart habitually from God, as to ſay a man is Covetous or a Worldling.

Signs of Worldlineſs. Rom. 13. 14. Mat. 6. 19. 1 Tim. 3. 8. Phil. 3. 18. Ezek. 33. 31. Jer. 9. 23.

§. 6. IV. The ſigns of Covetouſneſs are theſe: 1. Not preferring God and our everlaſting Happineſs before the Proſperity and Pleaſure of the fleſh; but valuing and loving fleſhly proſperity above its worth. 2. Eſteeming and loving the Creatures of God as proviſion for the fleſh, and not to further us in the ſervice of God. Deſiring more than is needful or uſeful to further us in our duty. 4. An inordinate eagerneſs in our deſires after earthly things. 5. Diſtruſtfulneſs, and carking cares, and contrivances for time to come. 6. Diſcontent, and trouble, and repining at a poor condition, when we have no more than our daily Bread. 7. When the World taketh up our thoughts inordinately: when our thoughts will eaſilier run out upon the world, than upon better things: And when our thoughts of worldly plenty are more pleaſant and ſweet to us, than our thoughts of Chriſt, and Grace, and Heaven: And our thoughts of want and poverty are more bitter and grievous to us, than our thoughts of ſin and Gods diſpleaſure. 8. When our ſpeech is freer and ſweeter about proſperity in the world, than about the Concernments of God and our ſouls. 9. When the world beareth ſway in our families and converſe, and ſhutteth out all ſerious endeavours in the ſervice of God, and for our own and others ſouls: Or at leaſt doth cut ſhort Religious duties, and is preferred before them, and thruſteth them into a corner, and maketh us ſlightly huddle them over. 10. When we are dejected over much, and impatient under loſſes, and croſſes, and worldly Injuries from Men. 11. When worldly Matters ſeem ſufficient to engage us in Contentions, and to make us break peace: and we will lay by Lawſuits ſeek our right, when greater hurt is liker to follow to our brothers ſoul, or greater wrong to the cauſe of Religion, or the honour of God, than our Right is worth. 12. When in our trouble and diſtreſs we fetch our comfort more from the thoughts of our proviſions in the world, or our hopes of ſupply, than from our truſt in God, and our hopes of Heaven. 13. When we are more thankful to God or man, for outward riches, or any gift for the proviſion of the fleſh, than for hopes, or helps in order to ſalvation: for a powerful Miniſtry, good Books, or ſeaſonable inſtructions for the ſoul. 14. When we are quiet and pleaſed if we do but proſper, and have plenty in the world, tho' the ſoul be miſerable, unſanctified and unpardoned. 15. When we are more careful to provide a worldly, than a heavenly portion, for children and friends, and rejoyce more in their bodily, than their ſpiritual proſperity, and are troubled more for their poverty, than their ungodlineſs or ſin. 16. When we can ſee our brother have need, and ſhut up the Bowels of our compaſſion; or can part with no more than meer ſuperfluities for his relief; when we cannot ſpare that which makes but for our better being, when it is neceſſary to preſerve his Being it ſelf: or when we give unwillingly or ſparingly. 17. When we will venture upon ſinful means for gain, as lying, over-reaching, deceiving, flattering, or going againſt our Conſciences, or the Commands of God. 18. When we are too much in expecting liberality from others, and think that all we buy of, ſhould ſell cheaper to us than they can afford, and conſider not their loſs or want, ſo that we have the gain: nor are contented if they be never ſo bountiful to others, if they be not ſo to us. 19. When we make too much ado in the world for Riches, taking too much upon us, or ſtriving for preferment, and flattering great ones, and envying any that are preferred before us, or get that which we expected. 20. When we hold our mony faſter than our innocency, and cannot part with it for the ſake of Chriſt, when he requireth it; but will ſtretch our conſciences and ſin againſt him or forſake his cauſe, to ſave our eſtates: Or will not part with it for the ſervice of his Church, or of our country, when we are called to it. 21. When the Riches which we have are uſed but for the pampering of our fleſh, and ſuperfluous proviſion for our Poſterity, and nothing but ſome inconſiderable crumbs or driblets are employed for God and his ſervants, nor uſed to further us in his ſervice, and towards the laying up of a treaſure in Heaven. Theſe are the ſigns of a worldly covetous Wretch.

Mark 7. 22. Joh 1. 21. 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18. Mal. 3. 8, 9. Judg. 7. 21.

§. 7. V. The counterfeits of liberality or freedom from covetouſneſs which deceive the Worldling are ſuch as theſe. 1. He thinks he is not covetous becauſe he hath a neceſſity of doing what he doth for more: Either he is in debt or he is poor, and ſcarcely hath whereon to live; And the Poor think that none are worldlings and covetous but the Rich. But he may love riches that wanteth them, as much as he that hath them: If you have a neceſſity of labouring in your callings, you have no neceſſity of loving the world, or of caring inordinately, or of being diſcontented with your eſtate: Impatience under your wants, ſhews a love of the world and fleſh, as much as other mens bravery that poſſeſs it.

§. 8. 2. Another thinks he is not a Worldling, becauſe if he could but have neceſſaries even food and rayment and conveniencies for himſelf and family, he would be content; and it is not riches or great matters that he deſireth. But if your hearts are more ſet upon the getting of theſe neceſſaries or little things, than upon the preparing for death, and making ſure of the Heavenly treaſure, you are miſerable worldlings ſtill: And the poor man that will ſet his heart more upon a poor and miſerable life, than upon heaven, is more unexcuſable than he that ſetteth his heart more upon Lordſhips and Honours than upon Heaven: Tho' both of them are but the ſlaves of the world, and have as yet no treaſure in Heaven. Matth. 6. 19, 20, 21. And moreover, you that are now ſo covetous for a little more, if you had that, would be as covetous for a little more ſtill; and when you had that, for a little more yet. You would next wear better cloathing, and have better fare; and next you would have your houſe repaired, and then you would have your land enlarged, and then you would have ſomething more for your children; and you would never be ſatisfied: You think otherwiſe now; but your hearts deceive you: You do not know them. If you believe me not, judge by the caſe of other men that have been as confident as you, that if they had but ſo much or ſo much they would be content; but when they have it, they would ſtill have more. And this which is your pretence is the common pretence of almoſt all the covetous: For Lords and Princes think themſelves ſtill in as great neceſſity as you think your ſelves: As they have more, ſo they have more to do with it; and uſually are ſtill wanting as much as the poor. The queſtion is not How much you deſire, but to what uſe? And to what end, and in what order?

It was one of Chilons ſayings, Lapidem cotibus aurum examinari: aurum autem bonorum malorumque hominum mentem cujuſmodi ſit comprobari: i.e. As the touch ſtone tryeth Gold, ſo Gold tryeth mens minds, whether they be good or bad. Laertius in Chil. p. 43.

§. 9. 3. Another thinks he is not covetous becauſe he coveteth not any thing that is his neighbours: they think that covetouſneſs is only a deſiring that which is not our own. But if you love the world, and worldly plenty inordinately, and more more, you are covetous Worldlings, tho' you with it not from another. It is the worldly mind and love of wealth that is the ſin

He anſwered, Becauſe he took him to be the only honeſt Man in Athens: whereupon Phocion returned it to him again; intreating him to give him leave to be honeſt ſtill.

ſin at the root: The ways of getting it are but the Branches.

§. 10. 4. Another thinks he is no worldling becauſe he uſeth no unlawful means, but the labour of his calling, to grow rich. The ſame anſwer ſerves to this. The love of wealth for the ſatisfying of the fleſh is unlawful, whatever the means be: And is it not alſo an unlawful means of getting, to neglect God and your ſouls, and the poor, and ſhut out other duties for the world, as you often do?

§. 11. 5. Another thinks he is no Worldling becauſe he is contented with what he hath, and coveteth no more. When that which he hath is a full proviſion for his fleſhly deſires. But if you over-love the world, and delight more in it than God, you are worldlings, tho' you deſire no more. He is deſcribed by Chriſt as a miſerable worldly fool, Luke 12. 19, 20. that ſaith, [Soul take thy eaſe, eat, drink and be merry, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years.] To over-love what you have is Worldlineſs as well as to deſire more.

§. 12. 6. Another thinks he is no Worldling, becauſe he gives God thanks for what he hath, and asked it of God in prayer. But if thou be a Lover of the World, and make proviſion for the deſires of the fleſh, it is but an aggravation of thy ſin, to deſire God to be a ſervant to thy fleſhly luſts, and to thank him for ſatisfying thy ſinful Deſires: Thy prayers and thanks are prophane and carnal: They were no ſervice to God but to thy fleſh: As if a drunkard or a glutton ſhould beg of God proviſion for their greedy throats, and thank him for it when they have it: Or a fornicator ſhould pray God to be a pander to his luſts, and then thank him for it: Or a wanton gallant ſhould make fine cloths and gallantry, the matter of his prayer and thankſgiving.

§. 13. 7. Another thinks he is no Worldling becauſe he hath ſome thoughts of Heaven, and is loth to be damned when he can keep the world no longer, and prayeth often, and perhaps faſteth with the Phariſee twice a week, and giveth alms often, and payeth Tythes, and wrongeth no Man. But the Phariſees were covetous for all theſe: Luke 16. 14. The queſtion is not whether you think of Heaven, and do ſomething for it? But whether it be Heaven or Earth which you ſeek firſt, and make the end of all things elſe, which all are referred to: Every Worldling knoweth that he muſt dye, and therefore he would have Heaven at laſt for a reſerve, rather than Hell. But where is it that you are laying up your Treaſure, and that you place all your happineſs and hopes? And where are your hearts? On earth or in Heaven? Col. 3. 1, 2, 3. Mat. 6. 20, 21. The queſtion is not whether you give now and then an Alms to deceive your Conſciences, and part with ſo much as the fleſh can ſpare, as a ſwine will do when he can eat no more: But whether all that you have be devoted to the will of God, and made to ſtoop to his ſervice and the ſaving of your ſouls, and can be forſaken rather than Chriſt forſaken. Luke 14. 33.

Luke 18. 11, 12, 13. Matth. 6. 16, 18.

§. 14. 8. Another thinks that he is not Covetous becauſe it is but for his Children that he provideth: And he that provideth not for his own, is worſe than an Infidel. 1 Tim. 5. 8. But the Text ſpeaketh only of providing neceſſaries for our families and kindred rather than caſt them on the Church to be maintained. If you ſo overvalue the World, that you think it the happineſs of your Children to be Rich, you are worldlings and Covetous both for your ſelves and them: It is for their Children that the richeſt and greateſt make proviſion, that their poſterity may be great and wealthy after them; and this maketh them the more Worldlings and not the leſs; becauſe they are covetous for after ages, when they are dead, and not only for themſelves.

§. 15. 9. Another thinks he is no worldling becauſe he can ſpeak as hardly of covetous men as any other: But many a one revileth others as covetous that is covetous himſelf: Yea, covetous men are apteſt to accuſe others of covetouſneſs, and of telling too dear, and buying too cheap, and giving too little becauſe they would get the more themſelves. And many Preachers by their reading and knowledge, may make a vehement Sermon againſt Worldlineſs, and yet go to Hell at laſt for being Worldlings. Words are cheap.

§. 16. 10. Another thinks he is not covetous, becauſe he purpoſeth to leave much to charitable uſes when he is dead. I confeſs that much is well: I would more would do ſo. But the fleſh it ſelf can ſpare it, when it ſeeth that it muſt lie down in the grave. If they could carry their Riches with them, and enjoy them after death, they would do it no doubt. To leave it when you cannot keep it any longer, is not thank-worthy. So the glutton and drunkard, and Whoremonger, and the proud muſt all leave their pleaſure at the grave. But do you ſerve God or the fleſh with your Riches while you have them? And do you uſe them to help or to hinder your ſalvation? Deceive not your ſelves, for God is not mocked. Gal. 6. 7.

§. 17. VI. Yet many are falſly accuſed of covetouſneſs upon ſuch grounds as theſe. 1. Becauſe they poſſeſs much and are Rich: For the poor take the Rich for worldlings. But God giveth not to all alike: He putteth ten talents into the hands of one ſervant, and but one into anothers: And to whom men commit much, of them will they require the more: Therefore to be entruſted with more than others, is no ſin, unleſs they betray that truſt. Luke 12. 48. & 16. 9, 10. Matth. 25. 2 Cor. 8. 14, 15.

§. 18. 2. Others are accuſed as covetous becauſe they ſatisfy not the covetous deſires of thoſe they deal with, or that expect much from them, and becauſe they give not where it is not their duty, but their ſin to give. Thus the buyer ſaith the ſeller is covetous: and the ſeller ſaith the buyer is covetous, becauſe they anſwer not their covetous deſires: An idle beggar will accuſe you of uncharitableneſs, becauſe you maintain him not in ſinful idleneſs. The proud look you ſhould help to maintain their pride: The drunkard, and riotous, and gameſters expect their Parents ſhould maintain their ſin. No Man that hath any thing ſhall ſcape the cenſure of being covetous, as long as there is another in the World that coveteth that which he hath: Selfiſhneſs looketh to no rules but their own deſires.

§. 19. 3. Others are judged covetous becauſe they give not that which they have not to give: Thoſe that know not anothers eſtate, will paſs Conjectures at it: And if their handſom apparel or deportment, or the common fame, do make Men think them richer than they are, then they are accounted covetous becauſe their bounty anſwereth not mens expectations.

§. 20. 4. Others are thought covetous becauſe they are laborious in their callings, and thrifty, and ſaving, not willing that any thing be loſt. But all this is their duty: If they were Lords or Princes, idleneſs, and waſtfulneſs would be their ſin. God would have all men labour in their ſeveral callings that are able: And Chriſt himſelf ſaid, when he had fed many thouſands by miracle, yet [Gather up the Fragments that remain, that nothing be loſt.] The queſtion is, How they uſe that which they labour ſo hard for, and ſave ſo ſparingly. If they uſe it for God, and charitable uſes, there is no man taketh a righter courſe. He is the beſt ſervant for God, that will be laborious and ſparing that he may be able to do good.

§. 21. 5. Others are thought covetous becauſe to avoid hypocriſie, they give in ſecret, and keep their works of charity from the knowledge of men: Theſe ſhall have their Rewards from God: and his wrath wrath shall be the reward of their presumptuous censures.

§. 22. 6. Others are thought covetous because they lawfully and peaceably seek their right, and let not the unjust and covetous wrong them at their pleasure. It's true, we must let go our right, when ever the recovering of it will do more hurt to others, than it will do us good: But yet the Laws are not made in vain: Nor must we encourage men in covetousness, thievery, and deceit, by letting them do what they list: Nor must we be careless of our masters talents: If he intrust us with them, we must not let every one take them from us, to serve his lusts with.

Dir. 2. §. 23. Direct. 2. Seriously consider of your Everlasting State, and how much greater things than Riches have you to mind; Behold by Faith the Endless joys which you may have with God, and the Endlessmisery whichWorldlingsmust undergo inHell. There is no true cure for an earthly mind, but by shewing it the far greater matters to be minded: by acquainting it better with its own concernments; and with the greater miseries than Poverty or want which we have to scape; and the greater good than worldly plenty which we have to seek. It's want of Faith that makes men Worldlings: They see not what is in another world: They say their Creed, but do not heartily believe the day of Judgment, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting. There is not a man of them all, but if he had one sight of Heaven and Hell, would set lighter by the World than ever he did before; and would turn his covetous care and toil, to a speedy and diligent care of his salvation. If he heard the joyful praises of the Saints, and the woful lamentations of the damned, but one day or hour, he would think ever after that he had greater matters to mind than the scraping together a heap of wealth. Remember man that thou hast another world to live in; and a far longer life to make provision for; and that thou must be in Heaven or Hell for ever: This is true, whether thou believe it or not: And thou hast no time but this to make all thy preparation in: and as thou believest and livest and labourest now, it must go with thee to all eternity: These are matters worthy of thy care: Canst thou have while to make such a pudder here in the dust, and care and labour for a thing of nought, while thou hast such things as these to care for, and a work of such transcendent consequence to do? Can a man that understands what Heaven and Hell is, find room for any needless matters, or time for so much unnecessary work? The providing for thy salvation is a thing that God hath made thy own Work, much more than the providing for the flesh. When he speaks of thy Body, he saith, Take no thought for your life, what you shall eat or drink, nor for your Body what you shall put on —— —— for your Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things, Matth. 6. 25, 32. Be careful for nothing, Phil. 4. 6. Cast all your Care upon him, for he careth for you. 1 Pet. 5. 7. But when he speaks of your salvation he bids you, work it out with fear and trembling, Phil. 2. 12. and give diligence to make your calling and election sure, 2 Pet. 1 10. and strive to enter in at the strait gate, Matth. 7. 13. Luke 13. 24. Labour not for the meat that perisheth, but for that which endureth to everlasting life, John 6. 27. That is, Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you: Matth. 6. 33. Look up to Heaven man: and remember that there is thy Home, and here is thy Hopes, or else thou art a man undone for ever: and therefore it is for that that thou must care and labour. Believe unfeignedly that thou must dwell for ever in Heaven or Hell as thou makest thy preparation here, and consider of this as becometh a man, and then be a worldling and covetous if thou canst: riches will seem dust and chaff to thee, if thou believe and consider thy everlasting state. Write upon the Doors of thy Shop and Chamber; [I must be in Heaven or Hell for ever.] or [This is the time on which my endless Life dependeth]; and methinks every time thou readest it, thou shouldst feel thy covetousness stabbed at the heart. O blinded mortals! that love like worms to dwell in earth! would God but give you an eye of faith, to foresee your end, and where you must dwell to all eternity, what a change would it make upon your earthly minds? Either faith or sense will be your guides. Nothing but Reason sanctified by Faith can govern Sense. Remember that thou art not a Beast, that hath no life to live but this: Thou hast a reasonable Immortal soul, that was made by God for higher things: even for God himself, to admire him, Love him, serve him and enjoy him. If an Angel were to dwell a while in flesh, should he turn an earthworm, and forget his higher life of glory? thou art like to an incarnate Angel; and maist be equal with the Angels when thou art freed from this sinful flesh. Luke 20. 36. O beg of God a Heavenly light, and a Heavenly mind, and look often into the word of God, which tells thee where thou must be for ever: and worldliness will vanish away in shame.

§. 24. Direct. 3. Remember how short a time thou must keep and enjoy the Wealth which thou hast gotten: How quickly thou must be stript of all. Canst thou keep it when thou hast it? Canst thou make a covenant with Death, that it shall not call away thy soul? Thou knowest before hand that thou art of short continuance, and the World is but thy Inn or Passage, and that a narrow grave for thy flesh to rot in, is all that thou canst keep of thy largest Possessions, save what thou laiest up in Heaven, by laying it out in obedience to God. How short is life? How quickly gone? Thou art almost dead and gone already. What is a few days or a few years more? And wilt thou make so much ado for so short a life? And so careful a Provision for so short a stay? Yea, how uncertain is thy time as well as short? Thou canst not say what World thou shalt be in to morrow. Remember man, that Thou must die, Thou must die, Thou must quickly die; Thou knowest not how soon; breath yet a few breaths more and thou art gone: And yet canst thou be covetous, and drown thy Soul with earthly Cares? Dost thou soberly read thy Saviours Warning, Luke 12. 19, 20, 21. Is it not spoken as to thee? Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee, then whose shall these things be which thou hast provided? So is every one that layeth up Riches for himself, and is not rich towards God. If thou be rich to day, and be in another World to morrow, had not poverty been as good? Distracted soul! Dost thou make so great a matter of it, whether thou have much or little for so short a time? and takest no more care either where thou shalt be, or what thou shalt have to all eternity? Dost thou say thou wilt cast this care on God? I tell thee, he will make thee care thy self, and care again before he will save thee? And why canst thou not cast the care of smaller matters on him, when he commandeth thee? Is it any great matter whether thou be Rich or Poor, that art going so fast unto another World, where these are things of no signification? Tell me if thou wert sure that thou must die to morrow, (yea or the next month or year) wouldst thou not be more indifferent whether thou be Rich or Poor? And look more after greater things. Then thou wouldst be of the Apostles mind, 2 Cor. 4. 18. We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are are eternal. Our eye of faith ſhould be ſo fixed on inviſible eternal things, that we ſhould ſcarce have leiſure or mind to look at or once regard the things that are viſible and temporal. A man that is going to execution ſcarce looks at all the buſtle or buſineſs that is done in Streets and Shops as he paſſeth by; becauſe theſe little concern him in his departing caſe: And how little do the Wealth and Honours of the world concern a ſoul that is going into another world, and knows not but it may be this night. Then keep thy wealth, or take it with thee, if thou canſt.

Dir. 4. §. 25. Direct. 4. Labour to feel thy greateſt Wants, which worldly Wealth will not ſupply. Thou haſt ſinned againſt God; and mony will not buy thy pardon: Thou haſt incurred his diſpleaſure, and mony will not reconcile him to thee: Thou art condemned to everlaſting miſery by the Law, and mony will not pay thy ranſom: Thou art dead in ſin, and polluted, and captivated by the fleſh, and mony will ſooner encreaſe thy bondage, than deliver thee. Thy Conſcience is ready to tear thy heart for thy wilful folly and contempt of grace; and mony will not bribe it to be quiet: Judas brought back his mony, and hanged himſelf, when Conſcience was but once awaked. Mony will not enlighten a blinded mind, nor ſoften a hard heart, nor humble a proud heart, nor juſtifie a guilty Soul. It will not keep off a Feavour or Conſumption; nor eaſe the Gowt, or Stone, or Tooth-ach! It will not keep off ghaſtly death; but dye thou muſt, if thou have all the World. Look up to God, and remember that thou art wholly in his hands: and think whether he will love or favour thee for thy wealth. Look unto the day of Judgment, and think whether Mony will there bring thee off: or the Rich ſpeed better than the poor?

Prov. 11. 4. Riches profit not in the day of Wrath.

Dir. 5. §. 26. Direct. 5. Be often with thoſe that are ſick and dying, and mark what all their Riches will do for them; and what eſteem they have then of the World; and mark how it uſeth all at laſt. Then you ſhall ſee that it forſaketh all men in the hour of their greateſt neceſſity and diſtreſs; when they would cry to friends, and wealth, and honour, if they had any hopes. If ever you will help me, let it be now: If ever you will do any thing for me, O ſave me from death, and the wrath of God? But, alas, ſuch cries would be all in vain. Then, O then, one drop of mercy, one ſpark of grace, the ſmalleſt well grounded hope of Heaven, would be worth more than the Empire of Cæſar or Alexander! Is not this true ſinner? Doſt thou not know it to be true? And yet wilt thou cheat and betray thy ſoul? Is not that beſt now, which will be beſt then? And is not that of little value now, which will be then ſo little ſet by? Doſt thou not think that men are wiſer then than now; Wilt thou do ſo much and pay ſo dear for that which will do thee no more good, and which thou wilt ſet no more by when thou haſt it? Doth not all the world cry out at laſt of the deceitfulneſs of riches, and the vanity of pleaſure and proſperity on Earth, and the perniciouſneſs of all worldly cares? And doth not thy conſcience tell thee, that when thou comeſt to dye, thou art like to have the ſame thoughts thy ſelf? And yet wilt thou not be warned in time? Then all the content and pleaſure of thy Plenty and Proſperity will be paſt: And when it's paſt it's nothing: And wilt thou venture on everlaſting wo, and caſt away everlaſting joy, for that which is to day a dream and ſhadow, and to morrow, or very ſhortly will be nothing? The pooreſt then will be equal with thee: And will honeſt poverty or over-loved wealth, be ſweeter at the laſt? How glad then wouldſt thou be, to have been without thy wealth, ſo thou mighteſt have been without the ſin and guilt! How glad then wouldſt thou be, to dye the death of the pooreſt Saint? Do you think that Poverty or Riches are liker to make a man loth to dye? or are uſually more troubleſome to the Conſcience of a dying man? O look to the end, and live as you die, and ſet moſt by that, and ſeek that now which you know you ſhall ſet moſt by at laſt, when full experience hath made you wiſer.

§. 27. Direct. 6. Remember that Riches do make it much harder for a Man to be ſaved, and the Love of this World is the commoneſt cauſe of Mens damnation. This is certainly true, for all that Poverty alſo hath its temptations; and for all that the poor are far more numerous than the rich: For even the poor may be undone by the love of that wealth and plenty which they never get: and thoſe may periſh for over-loving the world, that yet never proſpered in the world. And if thou believe Chriſt, the point is out of Controverſy: For he ſaith, Luke 18. 24, 25, 26, 27. How hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God? For it is eaſier for a Camel to go through a Needles eye, than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God. And they that heard it ſaid, Who then can be ſaved? And he ſaid, The things which are impoſſible with Men, are poſſible with God. So Luke 6. 24, 25. But wo unto you that are rich, for you have received your Conſolation: Wo unto you that are full, for ye ſhall hunger. Make but ſenſe of theſe and many ſuch like Texts, and you can gather no leſs than this from them, that Riches make the way to Heaven much harder, and the Salvation of the Rich to be more difficult and rare, proportionably, than of other men: And Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 1. 26. Not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. And the Lovers of Riches, tho' they are poor, muſt remember that it is ſaid, 1 Tim. 6. 10. That the Love of Money is the Root of all evil: And 1 John 2. 15. Love not the world nor the things that are in the world: For if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him: Do you believe that here lyeth the Danger of your ſouls? and yet can you ſo love, and chooſe and ſeek it? Would you have your ſalvation more difficult, and doubtful, and impoſſible with Men? You had rather chooſe to live where few die young, than where moſt dye young? and where ſickneſſes are rare, than where they are common? If you were ſick, you had rather have the Phyſician, and Medicines, and Dyet which cure moſt, than thoſe which few are cured by? If the Country were beſet with Thieves, you had rather go the way that moſt ſcape in, than that few ſcape in. And yet ſo it may but pleaſe your fleſh, you will chooſe that way to Heaven, that feweſt ſcape in; and you will chooſe that ſtate of life which will make your ſalvation to be moſt hard and doubtful? Doth your Conſcience ſay that is wiſely done? I know that if God put Riches into your hand, by your Birth, or his Bleſſing on your honeſt labours, you muſt not caſt away your Maſters talents, becauſe he is auſtere; but by a holy improvement of them, you may further his ſervice and your Salvation. But this is no reaſon why you ſhould over-love them, or deſire and ſeek ſo ſo great a danger. Believe Chriſt heartily, and it will quench your Love of Riches.

Dir. 7. §. 28. Direct. 7. Remember that the more you have, the more you have to give account for. And if the day of Judgment be dreadful to you, you ſhould not make it more dreadful, by greatning your own accounts. If you deſired Riches but for the Service of your Lord, and have uſed them for him, and can truly give in this account, that you laid them not out for the needleſs pleaſure or pride of the fleſh, but to furniſh your ſelves, and families, and others for his ſervice, and as near as you could employ them according to his will, and for his uſe, then you may expect the reward of good and faithful Servants: But if you desired and used them for the pride and pleasure of your selves while you lived, and your Posterity or Kindred when you are dead, dropping some inconsiderable crums for God, you will then find that Mammon was an unprofitable Master, and Godliness with content would have been greater gain.

Prov. 3. 14. 1 Tim. 6. 5, 6.

Dir. 8. §. 29. Direct. 8. Remember how dear it costeth Men, thus to hinder their Salvation, and greaten their danger and accounts. What a deal of precious Time is lost upon the World by the Lovers of it, which might have been improved to the getting of Wisdom and Grace, and making their calling and election sure? If you had believed that the gain of holy wisdom, had been so much better than the gaining of Gold, as Solomon saith, Prov. 3. 14. you would have laid out much of that time in labouring to understand the Scriptures, and preparing for your endless life. How many unnecessary Thoughts have you cast away upon the World, which might better have been laid out on your greater concernments? How many cares, and vexations, and passions doth it cost men, to overload themselves with worldly Provisions? Like a foolish traveller, who having a days journey to go, doth spend all the day in gathering together a load of meat, and cloaths and mony, more than he can carry, for fear of wanting by the way: or like a foolish runner that hath a race to run for his life, and spends the time in which he should be running, in gathering a Burden of pretended Necessaries. You have all the while Gods work to do, and your souls to mind, and judgment to prepare for, and you are tiring and vexing your selves for unnecessary things; as if it were the top of your ambition, to be able to say in Hell, that you died rich, 1 Tim. 6. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. *Godliness with contentment is great gain: For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain that we can carry nothing out. And having Food and rayment, let us be therewith content: But they that will be rich, fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition: For the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred (*or been seduced) from the Faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. Piercing sorrows here, and damnation hereafter, are a very dear price to give for Mony: For saith Christ himself, What shall it profit a man to gain all the world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? that is, What mony or price will recover it, if for the love of gain he lose it? Mark 8. 36, 37. Prov. 15. 27. He that is greedy of gain, troubleth his own house, but he that hateth gifts, shall live. Do you not know, that a godly man contented with his daily bread, hath a far sweeter and quieter life and death, than a self-troubling worldling? You may easily perceive it. Prov. 15. 16. Better is little with the fear of the Lord, than great treasure and trouble therewith.

Saith Plutarch. de tranquillit. anim. Alexander wept because he was not Lord of the world, when Crates having but a Wallet and a thred-bare Cloke, spent his whole life in mirth and joy, as if it had been a continual festival holy-day.

Pſal. 37. 16. Prov. 16. 8.

Dir. 9. §. 30. Direct. 9. Look much on the life of Christ on earth, and see how strangely he condemneth worldliness, by his example: Did he choose to be a Prince or Lord, or to have great possessions, lands, or mony, or sumptuous buildings, or gallant attendance, and plentiful provisions? His housing you may read of, Matth. 8. 20. Foxes have holes, and the Birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head. His cloathing you may read of at his crucifying when they parted it. As for Mony, he was fain to send Peter to a Fish for some to pay their tribute. If Christ did scrape and care for Riches, then so do thou: If he thought it the happiest life, do thou think so too. But if he contemned it, do thou contemn it: If his whole life was directed to give thee the most perfect examples of the contempt of all the prosperity of this World, then learn of his example, if thou take him for thy Saviour, and if thou love thy self. Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that you through his poverty might be rich, 2 Cor. 8. 9.

Luke 9. 58.

§. 31. Direct. 10. Think on the example of the primitive Christians, even the best of Christs Servants, and see how it condemneth worldliness. They that by miracle in the name of Christ could give limbs to the lame, yet tell him, Silver and Gold have we none, Acts 3. 6. Those that had possessions sold them, and laid the mony at the Apostles feet, and they had all things common, to shew that faith overcometh the world, by contemning it, and subjecting it to charity, and devoting it entirely to God. Read whether the Apostles did live in sumptuous houses, with great attendance, and worldly plenty and prosperity? And so of the rest.

Dir. 10.

Chrysostome saith, his enemies charged him with many crimes, but never with Covetousness or Wantonness: And so it was with Christ and his Enemies.

§. 32. Direct. 11. Remember to what ends all worldly things were made and given you, and what a happy advantage you may make of them by renouncing them as they would be Provision for your lusts, and by devoting your selves and them to God. The use of their sweetness is, to draw your souls to taste by faith the heavenly sweetness. They are the Looking-glass of Souls in flesh that are not yet admitted to see these things spiritual face to face. They are the provender of our bodies; our travelling furniture and helps; our Inns, and solacing company in the way: they are some of Gods Love-tokens; some of the lesser pieces of his Coin, and bear his Image and superscription: They are drops from the Rivers of the eternal pleasures; to tell the mind by the way of Senses how good the Donor is, and how amiable; and what higher Delights there are for souls; and to point us to the better things which these foretell: They are messengers from Heaven to testify our Fathers care and love, and to bespeak our thankfulness, love and duty; and to bear witness against sin, and bind us faster to obedience: They are the first Volume of the Word of God: The first Book that Man was set to read, to acquaint him fully with his Maker: As the Word which we read and hear is the Chariot of the Spirit, by which it maketh its accesses to the Soul; so the delights of sight, and taste, and smell, and touch, and hearing were appointed as an ordinary way for the speedy access of heavenly love and sweetness to the heart, that upon the first perception of the goodness and sweetness of the creature, there might presently be transmitted by a due Progression, a deep impression of the goodness of God upon the soul: That the creature being the Letters of Gods Book, which are seen by our eye, the Sense (even the Love of our great Creator) might presently be perceived by the mind: and no letter might once be lookt upon but for the sense: no creature ever seen or tasted, or heard, or felt in any delectable quality, without a sense of the Love of God: That as the touch of the hand upon the strings of the Lute do cause the melody, so Gods touch by his mercies upon our hearts, might presently tune them into Love, and Gratitude, and Praise. They are the Tools by which we must do much of our Masters work: They are means by which we may refresh our brethren, and express our love to one another, and our love to our Lord and Master in his servants: They are our Masters stock which we must trade with by the improvement of which, no less than the reward of endless Happiness may be attained. These are the Uses to which God gives us outward mercies. Love them thus, and Delight in them, and Use them thus, and spare not: yea, seek them thus, and be thank-thankful for them. But when the creatures are given for so excellent a use, will you debase them all, by making them only the fuel of your lusts, and the provisions for your flesh: And will you love them and dote upon them in these base respects; while you utterly neglect their noblest use? You are just like children that cry for Books, and can never have enow; but it's only to play with them because they are fine, but when they are set to learn and read them, they cry as much because they love it not: Or like one that should spend his life and labour in getting the finest clothes, to dress his Dogs and Horses with, but himself goeth naked and will not wear them.

Even Dionysius the Tyrant was bountiful to Philosophers: To Plato he gave above fourscore Talents, Laert. In Platone, and much to Aristippus and many more, and he offered much to many Philosophers that refused it. And so did Crœsus.

Dir. 12. §. 33. Direct. 12. Remember that God hath promised to provide for you, and that you shall want nothing that is good for you, if you will live above these worldly things, and seek first his Kingdom, and the righteousness thereof. And cannot you trust his promise? If you truly believe that he is God, and that he is true, and that his particular providence extendeth to the very numbring of your hairs, you will sure trust him rather than trust to your own forecast and industry. Do you think his provision is not better for you than your own? All your own care cannot keep you alive an hour, nor cannot prosper any of your labours, if you provoke him to blast them. And if you are not content with his provisions, nor submit your selves to the disposals of his love and wisdom, you disoblige God, and provoke him to leave you to the fruits of your own care and diligence: And then you will find that it had been your wiser way to have trusted God.

Matth. 10. 30. Luke 12. 7.

Dir. 13. § 34. Direct. 13. Think often on the dreadful importance and effects of the Love of Riches, or a worldly mind. 1. It is a most certain sign of a state of death and misery where it hath the upper hand. It is the departing of the heart from God to creatures: See the malignity of it before. Good men have been overtaken with heinous sins; but its hard to find where Scripture calleth any of them Covetous. A heart secretly cleaving most to this present world and its prosperity, is the very killing sin of every hypocrite, yea, and of all ungodly men. 2. Worldliness makes the Word unprofitable; and keepeth men from believing and repenting, and coming home to God, and minding seriously the everlasting world: What so much hindereth the Conversion of sinners, as the love and cares of earthly things? They cannot serve God and Mammon: Their treasure and hearts cannot chiefly eb both in Heaven and Earth? They will not yield to the terms of Christ that love this world: They will not forsake all for a treasure in Heaven. In a word, as you heard, The love of money is, the root of all evil, and the Love of the Father is not in the lovers of the world. 3. It destroyeth holy meditation, and conference, and turneth the thoughts to worldly things: And it corrupteth Prayer, and maketh it but a means to serve the flesh, and therefore maketh it odious to God. 4. It is the great hinderance of mens necessary preparation for death and judgment, and stealeth away their hearts and time till it is too late. 5. It is the great cause of contentions even among the nearest relations; and the cause of the Wars and calamities of Nations; and of the woful divisions and persecutions of the Church; when a worldly generation think that their worldly interest doth engage them, against self-denying and spiritual principles, practices and persons. 6. It is the great cause of all the injustice, and oppression, and cruelty that rageth in the world. They would do as they would be done by, were it not for the love of mony. It maketh men perfidious and false to all their friends and engagements: No vows to God, nor obligations to men, will hold a Lover of the world. The world is his God, and his worldly interest is his rule and law. 7. It is the great destroyer of Charity and Good works: No more is done for God and the poor, because the Love of the world forbids it. 8. It disordereth and profaneth families; and betrayeth the souls of Children and Servants to the Devil. It turneth out prayer, and reading the Scripture, and good books, and all serious speeches of the life to come, because their hearts are taken up with the world; and they have no relish of any thing but the provisions of their flesh: Even the Lords own Day cannot be reserved for holy works, nor a duty performed, but the world is interposing, or diverting the mind. 9. It tempteth men to sin against their knowledge, and to forsake the truth, and fit themselves to the rising tide, and save their bodies and estates, whatever become of their souls: It is the very price that the Devil gives for souls! With this he bought the soul of Judas, who went to the Pharisees with a [What will you give me, and I will deliver him to you:] With this he attempted Christ himself, Matth. 4. 9. All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. It is the cause of Apostasie and unfaithfulness to God: And its the price that sinners sell their God, their Conscience, and their Salvation for. 10. It depriveth the soul of holy communion with God, and comfort from him, and of all foretaste of the life to come, and finally of Heaven it self; For as the Love of the world keepeth out the Love of God and Heaven, it must needs keep out the hopes and comforts which should arise from holy love. It would do much to cure the love of money, and of the world, if you knew how pernicious a sin it is.

The mischiefs of a worldly mind. Look upon the face of the calamitous world, and enquire into the causes of all the oppressions, rapines, cruelties, and inhumanity which have made men so like to Devils: Look into the corrupted, lacerated Churches, and enquire into the cause of their contentions, divisions, usurpations, malignity, and cruelty against each other: And you will find that Pride and Worldliness are the Causes of all. When men of a Proud and Worldly mind have by fraud, and friendship, and Simony Usurped the Pastorship of the Churches, according to their Minds and Ends, they turn it into a Malignant Domination, and the Carnal worldly part of the Church, is the great enemy and persecutor of the spiritual part; and the fleshly Hypocrite, as Cain against Abel, is filled with envy against the serious believer, even out of the bitter displeasure of his mind, that his deceitful Sacrifice is less respected: What Covetousness hath done to the advancement of the pretended Holy Catholick Church of Rome, I will give you now, but in the words of an Abbot and Chronicler of their own, Abbas Urspergens. Chron. p. 321. Vix remansit aliquis Episcopatus, sive dignitas Ecclesiastica, vel etiam Parochialis Ecclesiæ, quæ non fieret litigiosa, & Romam deduceretur ipsa causa, sed non manu vacua. Gaude mater nostra Roma, quoniam aperiuntur cataractæ thesaurorum in terra, ut ad te confluant rivi & aggeres nummorum in magna copia. Lætare super iniquitate filiorum hominum; quoniam in recompensationem tantorum malorum, datur tibi precium. Jocundare super adjutrice tua discordia; quid erupit de puteo infernalis abyssi, ut accumelentur tibi multa pecuniarum præmia. Habes quod semper sitisti; decanta Canticum, quia per malitiam hominum non per tuam Religionem, orbem vicisti. Ad te trahit homines, non ipsorum devotio, aut pura Conscientia, sed scelerum multiplicium perpetratio, & litium decisio, precio comparata.

Fortun. Galindas speaking of Pope Paul the fifth, his love to the Jesuites for helping him to money, saith, Adeo præstat acquirendarum pecuniarum quam animarum studiosum & peritum esse, apud illos, qui cum animarum Christi sanguine redemptarum, in se curam receperint, vel quid anima sit nesciunt, vel non pluris animam hominis quam piscis faciunt: quod credo suum officium Piscatum quendam esse aliquando per strepitum inaudierint: quibus propterea gratior fuerit, qui Animam auri cum Paracelso, quam animam Saxoniæ Electoris invenisse nuntiet. Arcan. venly mind: As the Serpents feeding on the duſt is a baſer life than that of Angels, that are employed in admiring, and obeying, and praiſing the Moſt Holy God.

Dir. 15. §. 36. Direct. 15. Call your ſelves to a daily reckoning, how you lay out all that God committeth to your truſt; and try whether it be ſo as you would hear of it at judgment. If you did but uſe to ſit in judgment daily upon your ſelves, as thoſe that believe the judgment of God, it would make you more careful to uſe well what you have, than to get more: And it would quench your thirſt after plenty and proſperity, when you perceived you muſt give ſo ſtrict an account of it: The fleſh it ſelf will leſs deſire it, when it finds it may not have the uſe of it.

And the acts tend to the increaſe of the habit: Obeying your Covetouſneſs doth increaſe it: And ſo the contrary acts, and the diſobeying and diſpleaſing it, do deſtroy it. This courſe will bring your Covetouſneſs into a deſpair of attaining its deſire, and ſo will make it ſit down and gives over the purſuit. It is an open proteſting againſt every covetous deſire: and an effectual kind of repenting: and a wiſe and honeſt diſarming ſin, and turning its motions againſt it ſelf to its own deſtruction: Uſe it thus oft, and Covetouſneſs will think it wiſdom to be quiet.

Dir. 17. §. 38. Direct. 17. Above all take heed that you think not of reconciling God and Mammon, and mixing Heaven and Earth to be your felicity, and of dreaming that you may keep Heaven for a reſerve at laſt, when the world hath been loved as your beſt, ſo long as you could keep it. Nothing ſo much defendeth worldlineſs, as a cheating hope, that you have it but in a ſubdued pardoned degree; and that you are not worldlings, when you are: And nothing ſo much ſupports this hope, as becauſe you confeſs that Heaven only muſt be your laſt refuge, and full felicity, and therefore you do ſomething for it on the by. But is not the world more loved, more ſought, more delighted in, and faſter held? Hath it not more of your hearts, your delight, deſire and induſtry? If you cannot let go all for Heaven, and forſake all this world, for a treaſure above, you cannot by Chriſts true Diſciples.

Dir. 18. §. 39. Direct. 18. If ever you would overcome the love of the world, your great care muſt be to mortifie the Fleſh; for the world is deſired but as its proviſion. A mortified man hath no need of that, which is a ſenſualiſts felicity. Quench your hydropical feaverith thirſt, and then you will not make ſuch a ſtir for drink. Cure the diſeaſe which enrageth your appetite; and that is the ſafeſt and cheapeſt way of ſatisfying it: Then you will be thankful to God, when you look on other mens wealth and gallantry, that you need not theſe things! And you will think what a trouble, and burden, and interruption of your better work and comfort, it would be to you, to have ſo much land, and ſo many ſervants and goods, and buſineſs, and perſons to mind, as rich men have: And how much better [illegible] your ſelf in a more retired quiet ſtate of life. But of this more in the next Part.

PART VII.

Directions againſt the Maſter ſin; SENSUALITY, FLESH-PLEASING or Voluptuouſneſs.

§. 1. I Shall be the ſhorter on this alſo, becauſe I have ſpoken ſo much already in my Treatiſe of Self denyal. Before we come to more particular Directions, it is needful that we diſcern the nature and evil of the ſin which we ſpeak againſt: I ſhall therefore 1. Tell you what is meant by [Fleſh] here: And 2. What fleſh-pleaſing it is that is unlawful, and what ſenſuality is. 3. Wherein the Malignity of this ſin conſiſteth. 4. I ſhall anſwer ſome Objections. 5. I ſhall ſhew you the Signs of it. 6. The Counterfeits of the contrary. 7. And the falſe Signs, which make ſome accuſed wrongfully by themſelves or others.

§. 2. 1. Becauſe you may find in Writings between the Proteſtants and Papiſts, that its become a Controverſie, whether by [fleſh] in Scripture (where this ſin is mentioned) be meant the Body it ſelf, or the ſoul ſo far as it is unregenerate, I ſhall briefly firſt reſolve this queſtion. When we ſpeak of the unregenerate part, we mean not that the ſoul hath two parts, whereof one is regenerate and the other unregenerate: But as the purblind eye hath both Light and Darkneſs in the ſame ſubject, ſo is it with the ſoul which is regenerate but in part, that is, in an imperfect degree: And by the unregenerate part, is meant the whole ſoul ſo far as it is unregenerate. The word [fleſh] in its primary ſignification, is taken for that part of the Body as ſuch without reſpect to ſin, and next for the whole body, as diſtinct from the ſoul. But in reſpect to ſin and duty, it is taken 1. Sometime for the ſenſitive appetite, What is meant by Fleſh.

petite, not as ſinful in it ſelf, but as deſiring that which God hath obliged Reaſon to deny it. 2. More frequently for this ſenſitive appetite as inordinate, and ſo ſinful in its own deſires: 3. Moſt frequently for both the inordinate ſenſitive appetite it ſelf, and the Rational powers, ſo far as they are corrupted by it, and ſinfully diſpoſed to obey it, or to follow inordinately ſenſual things: But then the Name is primarily taken for the ſenſual appetite it ſelf, (as diſeaſed) and but by participation for the Rational powers. For the underſtanding of which, you muſt conſider, 1. That the appetite it ſelf might innocently (even in innocency) deſire a forbidden object: when it was not the Appetite that was forbidden, but the Deſire of the Will, or the actual taking it. That a man in a Feavour doth Thirſt for more than he may lawfully drink, is not of it ſelf a ſin: But to deſire it by Practical Volition, or to Drink it is a ſin: For it is theſe that God forbids; and not the Thirſt which is not in our power to extinguiſh. That Adam had an Appetite to the forbidden fruit was not his ſin: but that his will obeyed his appetite, and his mouth did eat. For the Appetite and ſenſitive nature is of God, and is in nature antecedent to the Law: God made us Men, before he gave us Laws: And the Law commandeth us not, to alter our ſelves from what he made us, or any thing elſe which is naturally out of our power. But it is the ſin of the will and executive powers, to do that evil which conſiſteth in obeying an innocent Appetite: The Appetite is neceſſary, and not free; and therefore God doth not direct his commands or prohibitions to it directly, but to the Reaſon and free-will. 2. But ſince mans fall, the Appetite it ſelf is corrupted and become inordinate, that is, more impetuous, violent and unruly than it was in the ſtate of Innocency; by the unhappy diſtempers that have befallen the Body it ſelf. For we find now by experience, that a man that uſeth himſelf to ſweet and wholſome temperance, hath no ſuch impetuous ſtrivings of his Appetite againſt his reaſon (if he be healthful) as thoſe have that are either diſeaſed, or uſed to obey their appetites: And if Uſe and Health make ſo great alteration, we have cauſe to think that the Depravation of Nature by the Fall did more. 3. This inordinate appetite is ſin, by Participation; ſo far as the appetite may be ſaid to be Free by participation, though not in it ſelf: Becauſe it is the Appetite of a Rational free-agent: For tho' ſin be firſt in the will in its true form, yet it is not the will only that is the ſubject of it (though primarily it be) but the whole man, ſo far as his acts are Voluntary: For the will hath the Command of the other faculties: and they are Voluntary acts which the will either commands, or doth not forbid when it can and ought. To lye is a voluntary ſin of the man, and the tongue partaketh of the guilt. The will might have kept out that ſin, which cauſed a diſorder in the appetite. If a Drunkard or a Glutton provoke a venerous inordinate appetite in himſelf, that luſt is his ſin, becauſe it is voluntarily provoked. 4. Yet ſuch additions of inordinacy, as men ſtir up in any Appetite, by their own actual ſins and cuſtoms, are more aggravated and dangerous to the ſoul, than that meaſure of diſtemper which is meerly the fruit of original ſin. 5. This inordinateneſs of the ſenſitive Appetite, with the meer Privation of Rectitude in the Mind and Will, is enough to cauſe mans Actual ſin. For if the Horſes be headſtrong, the meer weakneſs, ſleepineſs, negligence, or abſence of the Coachman is enough to concur to the overthrow of the Coach: So if the Reaſon and Will had no Poſitive inclinations to evil or ſenſual objects, yet if they have not ſo much Light and Love to higher things, as will reſtrain the ſenſual appetite, it hath poſitive inclination enough in it ſelf to forbidden things, to ruine the ſoul by actual ſin. 6. Yet though it be a great controverſie among Divines, I conceive that in the Rational Powers themſelves, there are Poſitive habitual inordinate inclinations to ſenſual forbidden things. For as actually it's certain the Reaſon of the Proud and Covetous do contrive, and oft approve the ſin, and the Will embrace it; ſo theſe are done ſo conſtantly in a continued ſtream of action by the whole man, that it ſeems apparent that the ſame faculties which run out in ſuch ſtrong and conſtant action, are themſelves the ſubjects of much of the inclining Poſitive habits: And if it be ſo in additional acquired ſin, it's like it was ſo in Original ſin. 7. Though ſin be formally ſubjected firſt in the Will, yet Materially it is firſt in the ſenſitive appetite (at leaſt this ſin of Fleſh-pleaſing or ſenſuality is:) The fleſh or ſenſitive part is the firſt Deſirer, though it be ſin no further than it is voluntary. 8. All this ſet together telleth you further; that the word [fleſh] ſignifieth the ſenſual inclinations of the whole man; but firſt and principally the corrupted ſenſual appetite; and the Mind and Wills (whether Privative or Poſitive) concurrence, but ſecondarily, and as falling in with ſenſe. The Appetite 1. Preventeth Reaſon, 2. And reſiſteth reaſon: 3. And at laſt corrupteth and enticeth Reaſon and Will to be its ſervants and purveyors.

§. 3. And that the name [fleſh] doth primarily ſignifie the ſenſitive appetite it ſelf, is evident in the very notation of the name. Why elſe ſhould the Habits or Vices of the Rational powers be called [Fleſh] any more than [Spirit] or any thing elſe? If it were only in reſpect of their object, they ſhould be called [the world] alſo, becauſe that is their object: It is a certain Rule, that That faculty is moſt predominant in man, whoſe Object is made his chiefeſt End. Senſitive delights being made the felicity and end of the unſanctified, it followeth that the ſenſitive faculties art predominant; which being called fleſh, (by a nearer Trope) the Mind from it receives the denomination. The Scriptures alſo ſhew this plainly: I remember not any one place in the Old Teſtament where there is any probability that the word [fleſh] ſhould ſignifie only the Rational ſoul as unrenewed: Matth. 16. 17. Fleſh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee: that is, mortal man hath not revealed it. Mat. 26. 41. The Spirit is willing, but the fleſh is weak: that is, your Bodies are weak, and reſiſt the willingneſs of your ſouls: For ſinful habits are not here called weak. John 3. 6. That which is born of the fleſh is fleſh: that is, Man by natural Generation can beget but natural man, called Fleſh from the viſible part; and not the ſpiritual life which nature is now deſtitute of. Rom. 7. 25. With my fleſh I ſerve the Law of ſin; that is, with my ſenſitive powers, and my mind ſo far as captivated thereto: Rom. 8. 1, 5. Fleſh and Spirit are oft oppoſed: They that are of the fleſh mind the things of the fleſh, &c. that is, They in whom the ſenſitive intereſt and appetite are predominant: For it is called the Body here, as well as the fleſh, v. 10, 11, 13. The mind is here included; but it is as ſerving the fleſh and its intereſt, Gal. 5. 16, 17, 19. Fleſh and Spirit are in the ſame manner oppoſed. And 2 Pet. 2. 18. the Luſts of the fleſh are in this ſenſe mentioned: And Epheſ. 2. 3. Rom. 7. 18. Rom. 13. 14. 1 Cor. 5. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 11. in which there is mention of fleſhly luſts, which fight againſt the Spirit, and fleſhly wiſdom, making proviſion for the fleſh &c. And Col. 2. 18 there is indeed the name of a fleſhly mind, which is but a mind deceived and ſubſervient to the fleſh, ſo that the fleſh it ſelf, or ſenſitive intereſt and appetite are firſt ſignified in all or moſt places, and in ſome, the Mind as ſubſervient thereto.

§. 4. It is of the greater conſequence that this be rightly underſtood, leſt you be tempted to imitate the Libertines, who think the Flesh or sensitive part is capable of no moral good or evil, and therefore all its Actions being indifferent, we may be indifferent about them, and look only to the Superiour powers: And others that think that the Scripture by [Flesh] meaneth only the rational soul as unrenewed, do thereupon cherish the Flesh it self and pamper it, and feed its unruly lusts, and never do any thing to tame the Body; but pray daily that God would destroy the flesh within them, that is, their sinful habits of Reason and Will, while they cherish the cause, or neglect a chief part of the cure. And on the contrary, some Papists that look only at the Body as their enemy, are much in fastings, and Bodily exercises, while they neglect the mortifying of their carnal minds.

What flesh-pleasing is a sin.

§. 5. II. How far flesh-pleasing is a sin, I shall distinctly open to you in these Propositions. 1. The Pleasing or displeasing of the sensitive appetite in it self considered, is neither sin nor duty, good or evil: but as commanded or forbidden by some Law of God; which is not absolutely done.

2. To please the Flesh by things forbidden is undoubtedly a sin, and so it is to displease it too: Therefore this is not all that is here meant, that the matter that pleaseth it must not be things forbidden.

3. To overvalue the Pleasing of the Flesh is a sin: And to prefer it before the Pleasing of God, and the holy preparations for Heaven, is the state of carnality, and ungodliness, and the common cause of the Damnation of Souls. The Delight of the Flesh or Senses is a Natural Good; and the natural desire of it in it self (as is said) is neither vice nor vertue. But when this little natural Good is preferred before the Greater Spiritual, Moral or Eternal Good, this is the sin of Carnal minds, which is threatned with death, Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 13.

4. To buy the pleasing of the flesh at too dear a rate, as the loss of time, or with care and trouble above its worth, and to be too much set on making provisions to please it, doth shew that it is overvalued, and is the sin forbidden, Rom. 13. 14.

5. When any desire of the Flesh is inordinate, immoderate, or irregular for matter, or manner, quantity, quality or season, it is a sin to please that inordinate desire.

Si organum in habitanti animo sufficiens fuerit, satis est virium.

6. When pleasing the Flesh doth too much pamper it, and cherish filthy lusts, or any other sin, and is not necessary on some other account, as doing greater good, it is a sin: But if Life require it, lust must be subdued by other means.

Corpus namque propter animi servitium fecisse naturam, nemo tam corporis servus est, qui neciat. Id si proprio munere fungitur, quid accusas, seu quid amplius requiras? Petrarch. li. 2. Dial. 2. Vires corporis sunt vires carceris, ut Petrarch. li. 1. Dial. 5. What mean you to make your prison so strong? said Plato to one that over-pampered his flesh. Marsil. Ficin. in Vita Plat.

7. When pleasing the Flesh doth hurt it, by impairing health, and so making the Body less fit for duty, it is a sin; And so almost all intemperance tendeth to breed diseases: And God commandeth Temperance even for the Bodies good.

8. When unnecessary Flesh-pleasing hindereth any duty of Piety, Justice, Charity or self-preservation, in thought, affection, word, or deed, it is sinful.

9. If any pleasing of the Flesh can be imagined to have no tendency directly or indirectly to any moral Good or Evil, it is not the Object of a moral Choosing or Refusing; but like the winking of the eye, which falls not under deliberation, it is not within the compass of morality.

10. Every Pleasing of the Flesh, which is capable of being referred to a higher end, and is not so referred, and used, is a sin: And there is scarce any thing, which is eligible, which a vacant waking man should deliberate on, but should be referred to a higher end; even to the glory of God, and our salvation; by cheering us up to Love and Thankfulness and strengthning or fitting us some way for some duty: This is apparently a sin, 1. Because else Flesh-pleasing is made our ultimate end, and the Flesh an Idol, if ever we desire it only for it self, (when it may be referred to a higher end) For tho' the sensitive Appetite of it self hath no intended end, yet whatsoever the Will desireth is either is an End, or as a Means: That which is not desired as a Means to some Higher end, is desired as our ultimate end it self, (in that act.) But God only is mans lawful ultimate end. 2. Because it is against an express command, 1 Cor. 10. 31. [whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God.] 3. Because else we shall take Gods creatures in vain, and cast them away in waste. 4. And we shall lose our own Benefit to which the Creature or Pleasure should be improved. 5. And we shall silence Reason, when it should direct; and we shall suspend the Government of the Will, and give the government (so long) to the flesh or brutish appetite: For that Faculty ruleth, whose object is our end. These reasons clearly prove it a sin to terminate our desires in any act of flesh pleasing as our end, and look no higher, when it is a matter of moral choice and deliberation.

He is a good Christian that remotely and ultimately referreth all the creatures unto God, and eateth and drinketh, &c. more to fit him for Gods service, than to please the flesh: But it is much more than this which the Creature was appointed for; even for a present communication of the sense of the goodness of God unto the Heart. As the Musician that toucheth but the Keys of his Harpsical or Organs, causeth that sweet harmonious sound, which we hear from the strings that are touched within; so God ordained the order, beauty, sweetness, &c. of the Creature, to touch the sense with such a pleasure, as should suddenly touch the inward sense with an answerable delight in God, who is the giver of the life of every Creature. But alas where is the Christian that doth thus eat and drink, and thus take pleasure in all his Mercies? When contrarily our hearts are commonly so diverted from God by the Creature, that so much delight as we find in it, so much we lose of our delight in God, yea of our regard and remembrance of him.

11. But the sin here is not simply that the Flesh is pleased, but that the duty of referring it to a higher end is omitted: so that it is a sin of omission (unless we proceed to refer better things as a means to it.)

12. The intending of Gods Glory or our spiritual good, cannot be distinctly and sensibly re-acted in every particular pleasure we take, or bit we eat, or thing we use: But a sincere Habitual Intention well laid at first in the Heart, will serve to the right use of many particular means. As a man purposeth at his first setting out to what place he meaneth to go, and afterward goeth on, tho' at every step he think not sensibly of his end: so he that devoteth himself unto God, and in general designeth all to his Glory, and the furtherance of his duty and salvation, will carry on small particulars to that end, by a secret unobserved action of the soul, performed at the same time with other actions, which only are observed. He that intendeth but his health in eating and drinking, is not remembring his health at every bit and cup; and yet hath such a Habit of care and caution, as will unobservedly keep him in his way, and help him to fit the means unto the end. As the accustomed hand of a Musician can play a Lesson on his Lute, while he thinks of something else; so can a resolved Christian faithfully do such accustomed things as eating and drinking and cloathing him and labouring in his calling, to the good ends which he (first actually, and still habitually) resolved on, without a distinct remembrance and observable intention of that end.

13. The body must be kept in that condition (as far as we can) that is fittest for the service of the soul: As you keep your Horse, neither so pampered as to be unruly, nor yet so low as to disable him for travel: But all that health and strength which makes it not unruly, maketh it the more serviceable. It is not the Life of the Body, but the health and the Cheerfulness which makes it fit for duty: And so much pleasing of the flesh as tendeth but to its Health and Cheerfulness, is a duty, where it can be done with-without greater hurt the other way. A heavy body is but a dull and heavy ſervant to the mind; yea, a great Impediment to the Soul in duty, and a great Temptation to many ſins; as ſickly and melancholy Perſons, and many dull and Phlegmatick People know by ſad experience. It is as great a duty to help the Body to its due alacrity and fitneſs for ſervice, as it is to tame it, and bring it under by Faſting and Sackcloth when it is Proud or Luſtful. And they that think Faſting on certain days, in a formal manner, is acceptable to God, when the ſtate of the Body is not helpt, but rather hurt and hindred by it, as if it were a thing required for it ſelf, do miſtakingly offer a Sacrifice to God, which he requireth not; and take him to be an enemy to man that deſireth his pain and grief, when it tendeth not to his good. A Mower that hath a good Sythe will do more in a Day, than another that hath a bad one can do in two: every Workman knoweth the benefit of having his Tools in order: And every Traveller knows the difference between a cheerful and a tired Horſe. And they that have tried health and ſickneſs know what a help it is in every work of God, to have a healthful body, and cheerful ſpirits, and an alacrity and promptitude to obey the mind. When the ſights of proſpects, and beauteous buildings, and fields, and countries, or the uſe of walks, or gardens, do tend to raiſe the ſoul to holy contemplation, to admire the Creatour, and to think of the glory of the life to come (as Bernard uſed his pleaſant Walks;) this Delight is lawful, if not a duty where it may be had. So when Muſick doth cheer the Mind, and fit it for thanks and praiſe to God: And when the reſt of the Body, and the uſe of your beſt Apparel, and moderate feaſting, on the Lords Day, and other days of Thankſgiving, do promote the ſpiritual ſervice of the day, they are good and profitable, but to thoſe that are more hindred by fulneſs, even abſtinence on ſuch days is beſt. So that the uſe of the Body muſt be judged of as it is a Means or an Expreſſion of the good or evil of the mind.

Yet it's true which Petrarch ſaith, li. 2. Dial. 3. Valetudo infirma, Comes incunda eſt, ſed fidelis, quæ te cerebro velliceſ, iſter ſignet, & conditionis admoneat: Optimum in periculis monitor fidus. Et li. 1. Dial. 3. Multis periculoſa & peſtilens ſanitas eſt, quæ tutius ægrotaſſent. Nuſquam pejus quam in ſano corpore, æger animus habitat. Et Dial. 4. Quamvis mala, quamvis peſſima ægritudo videatur, optabile malum tamen, quod mali remedium ſit majoris.

14. Sometime the preſent time muſt be moſt regarded herein, and ſometimes the future. For when ſome great ſin or Judgment or other reaſon calls us to a Faſt, when it becomes needful to the ends of that preſent day, we muſt do it, tho' the body were ſo weak that it would be ſomewhat the worſe afterward; ſo be it that the good which we may expect by it that day, be greater than the good which it is like to deprive us of afterward: otherwiſe the after loſs if greater is more to be avoided.

15. Many things do Remotely fit us for our main end, which nearly and directly ſeem to have no tendency to it. As thoſe that are only to furniſh us with natural ſtrength, and vigour, and alacrity, or to prevent impediments: As a Travellers hood and cloak, and other carriage ſeem rather to be Hinderances to his ſpeed; but yet are neceſſary for preventing the cold and wet which elſe might hinder him more. Yea, a poſſible uncertain danger or impediment if great, may be prevented with a certain ſmall impediment. So it is meet that our Bodies be kept in that health and alacrity which is ordinarily neceſſary to our duty; and in eating and drinking, and lawful Recreations, it is not only the next or preſent duty, which we prepare for, but for the duty, which may be very diſtant.

16. Ordinarily it is ſafeſt to be more fearful of exceſs of fleſhly pleaſure, than of defect. For ordinarily we are all very prone to an exceſs, and alſo the exceſs is uſually more dangerous. When exceſs is the Damnation of all or moſt that ever periſh, and Defect is but the Trouble and hindrance, but never or rarely the damnation of any. It's eaſie then to ſee on which ſide we ſhould be moſt fearful, cautelous and vigilant.

17. Yet exceſſive ſcrupulouſneſs may be a greater ſin, and a greater hinderance in the work of God, than ſome ſmall exceſſes of fleſh-pleaſing, which are committed thro' Ignorance or inadvertency. When an honeſt heart which preferreth God before the Fleſh, and is willing to pleaſe him though it diſpleaſe the fleſh, ſhall yet miſtake in ſome ſmall particulars, or commit ſome daily errours of Infirmity or heedleſneſs, it is a far leſs hinderance to the main work of Religion, than if that man ſhould daily perplex his mind with Scruples, about every bit he eats, whether it be not too pleaſing or too much; and about every word he ſpeaks, and every ſtep he goes, as many poor tempted melancholy perſons do; thereby diſabling themſelves, not only to Love, and Praiſe and Thankfulneſs, but even all conſiderable ſervice.

In ſum, All pleaſing of the ſenſes or fleſh, which is lawful, muſt have theſe Qualifications. 1. Gods Glory muſt be the ultimate end. 2 The matter muſt be lawful, and not forbidden. 3. Therefore it muſt not be to the hinderance of duty. 4. Nor to the drawing of us to ſin. 5. Nor to the hurt of our health. 6. Nor too highly valued, nor too dearly bought. 7. The meaſure muſt be moderate, where any of theſe are wanting it is ſin: And where fleſh pleaſing is habitually in the bent of Heart and Life preferred before the pleaſing of God, it proves the ſoul in captivity to the fleſh and in a damnable condition.

§. 6. III. I am next to ſhew you the evil or malignity of predominant Fleſh-pleaſing: For if the greatneſs of the ſin were known it would contribute much to the cure. And, 1. Underſtand that it is the ſin of ſins; the end of all ſin, and therefore the very ſum and Life of all. All the evil wicked Men commit, is ultimately to pleaſe the fleſh: The love of fleſh-pleaſing is the cauſe of all. Pride and Covetouſneſs, and Whoredom, and Wantonneſs, and Gluttony, and Drunkenneſs, and all the reſt are but either the immediate works of ſenſuality and Fleſh-pleaſing, or the diſtant ſervice of it, by laying in Proviſion for it: And all the malicious enmity and oppoſition to God and Godlineſs is from hence, becauſe they croſs the intereſt and deſires of the Fleſh: The final cauſe is it for which men invent and uſe all the means that tend to it. Therefore all other ſin being nothing but the means for the pleaſing of our fleſhly appetites and fancies, it's evident that fleſh-pleaſing is the common cauſe of them all; and is to all other ſin as the Spring is to the Watch, or the poiſe to the Clock; the weight which giveth them all their motion. Cure this ſin and you have taken off the Poiſe, and cured all the poſitive ſins of the ſoul: Though the privative ſins would be ſtill uncured, if there were no more done; Becauſe that which makes the clock ſtand ſtill, is not enough to make it go right: But indeed nothing but the Love of Pleaſing God, can truly cure the Love of fleſh-pleaſing: And ſuch a cure is the cure of every ſin, both poſitive and privative, active and defective.

The Greatneſs of the ſin.

§. 7. 2. Fleſh-pleaſing is the Grand Idolatry of the world: and the Fleſh the greateſt Idol that ever was ſet up againſt God. Therefore Paul ſaith of ſenſual worldlings, that their Bellies is their God, and thence it is that they mind earthly things, and glory in their ſhame, and are enemies to the Croſs of Chriſt, that is to ſufferings for Chriſt, and the doctrine and duties which would cauſe their ſufferings. That is a mans God which he taketh for his chief Good, and Loveth beſt, and truſteth in moſt, and is moſt deſirous to pleaſe: And this is the fleſh to every ſenſualiſt: He loveth pleaſure more than God, 2 Tim. 3. 2, 4. He ſavoureth or mindeth the things of the Fleſh, and liveth to it and walketh after it: Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 13. He maketh proviſion for it to ſatisfy its appetite or luſts, Rom. 13. 14 He ſoweth to the fleſh,

Gal.

Gal. 6. 8. and fulfilleth his luſt, when it luſteth againſt the ſpirit, Gal. 5. 16. 17. And thus while concupiſcence or ſenſuality hath dominion, ſin is ſaid to have dominion over them, and they are ſervants to it, Rom. 6. 14,20. For to whom men yield themſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants they are whom they ſerve or obey: Rom. 6. 16. It is not bowing the knee and praying to another, that is the chief Idolatry: As Loving, and Pleaſing, and Obeying, and Truſting, and Seeking, and Delighting in him, are the chiefeſt parts of the ſervice of God, which he preferreth before a thouſand ſacrifices or complements: So Loving the fleſh, and Pleaſing it, and Obeying it, and Truſting in it, and Seeking, and Delighting in its pleaſures, are the chief ſervice of the Fleſh; and more than if you offered ſacrifice to it, and therefore is the Grand Idolatry: And ſo the fleſh is the great enemy of God, which hath the chiefeſt Love and Service which is due to him, and robs him of the Hearts of all mankind that are carnal and unſanctified. All the Baals, and Jupiters, and Apolloes and other Idols of the world, ſet together have not ſo much of the Love and Service due to God, as the Fleſh alone hath. If other things be Idolized by the Senſualiſt, it is but as they ſubſerve his fleſh, and therefore they are made but inferiour Idols: He may Idolize his wealth, and Idolize men in power and worldly greatneſs; but it is but as they can help or hurt his Fleſh: This hath his Heart: By the intereſt of the fleſh, he judgeth of his condition; by this he judgeth of his friends: By this he chooſeth his actions or refuſeth them; and by this he meaſureth the words and actions of all others. He takes all for Good which pleaſeth his Fleſh, and all for bad that is againſt his pleaſure.

§. 8. 3. The fleſh is not only the common Idol, but the moſt devouring Idol in all the world. It hath not, as ſubſervient flattered Idols have, only a knee and complement, or now and then a ſacrifice or ceremony; but it hath the heart, the tongue, the body to ſerve it; the whole eſtate, the ſervice of friends, the uſe of wit and utmoſt diligence; in a word, it hath All. It is loved and ſerved by the ſenſualiſt, as God ſhould be loved and ſerved by his own, even with all the Heart, and Soul and Might: They honour it with their ſubſtance and the firſt fruits of their increaſe. It is as faithfully ſerved as Chriſt requireth to be of his diſciples: Men will part with Father and Mother and Brother and Siſter and neareſt friends, and all that is againſt it, for the pleaſing of their fleſh: Nay Chriſt required men to part with no greater matter for him than tranſitory earthly things, which they muſt ſhortly part with whether they will or no: but they do for the fleſh ten thouſand thouſand fold more than ever they were required to do for Chriſt: They forſake God for it: They forſake Chriſt and Heaven and their Salvation for it: They forſake all the ſolid comforts of this life, and all the joyes of the life to come for it. They ſell all that they have, and lay down the price at its feet: Yea more than all they have, even all their Hopes of what they might have to all eternity: They ſuffer a martyrdom in the flames of Hell for ever, for their fleſh: All the pains they take is for it: All the wrong they do to others; and all the ſtirs and ruines they make in the world, is for it: And all the time they ſpend is for it; and had they a thouſand years more to live they would ſpend it accordingly: If any thing ſeem excepted for God, it is but the bones, or crumbs, or leavings of the fleſh: Or rather it's nothing: For God hath not indeed the hours which he ſeems to have: He hath but a few fair words and complements, when the fleſh hath their hearts in the midſt of their hypocritical worſhip, and on his holy day: And they ſerve him but as the Indians ſerve the Devil, that he may ſerve their turns, and do them no hurt.

§. 9. 4. How baſe an Idol is the Fleſh? If all the deriſion uſed by Elijah and the Prophets againſt the Heatheniſh Idolatry, be due, is not as much due againſt the Idolatry of all the ſenſual? Is it ſo great a madneſs to ſerve an Idol of ſilver, or gold, or ſtone, or wood? What better is it to ſerve an Idol of fleſh and blood? A paunch of gutts? That's full of filth and excrements within, and the skin it ſelf, the cleaneſt part, is aſhamed to be uncovered? We may ſay to the Carnal worldling, as Elijah to the Baaliſts, and more: Call upon your God in the hour of your diſtreſs: Cry aloud: Perhaps he is aſleep, or he is blowing his noſe, or vomiting or purging; Certainly he will be ſhortly rotting in the grave, more loathſom than the dirt or dung upon the earth. And is this a God to ſacrifice all that we can get to? And to give all our time and care and labour, and our ſouls and all to? O judge of this Idolatry as God will make you judge at laſt!

§. 10. 5. And here next conſider, how impious and horrid an abaſement it is of the eternal God, to prefer ſo vile a thing before him? And whether every ungodly ſenſual man, be not a conſtant practical Blaſphemer? What doſt thou but ſay continually by thy practice, [This dunghil, naſty fleſh is to be preferred before God: to be more loved and obeyed and ſerved! It deſerveth more of my time than he: It is more worthy of my delight and love.] God will be judge, (and judge in righteouſneſs ere long) whether this be not the daily language of thy life, though thy tongue be taught ſome better manners. And whether this be blaſphemy judge thy ſelf. Whether thou judge God or the fleſh more worthy to be pleaſed, and which thou thinkeſt it better to pleaſe, ask thy own heart, when Cards, and Dice, and Eating, and Drinking, and Gallantry, and Idleneſs, and Greatneſs, and Abundance, do all ſeem ſo ſweet unto thee, in compariſon of thy thoughts of God, and his holy word and ſervice! And when morning and night, and whenever thou art alone, thoſe thoughts can aun out with unweariedneſs or pleaſure, upon theſe proviſions for thy fleſh, which thou canſt hardly force to look up unto God, a quarter of an hour, though with unwillingneſs.

§. 11. 6. Think alſo what a contempt of Heaven it is, to prefer the pleaſing of the fleſh before it. There is but two ends which all men aim at; the pleaſing of the fleſh on earth, or the enjoying of God in Heaven (unleſs any be deluded to think that he ſhall have a ſenſual life hereafter too, as well as here:) And theſe two ſtand one againſt the other. And he that ſets up one doth renounce (or as good as renounce) the other: If ye ſow to the fleſh, of the fleſh ye ſhall reap corruption: But if ye ſow to the ſpirit, of the ſpirit ye ſhall reap everlaſting life. Gal. 6. 8. Your wealth, and honour, and ſports, and pleaſures, and appetites are put in the ſcales againſt Heaven, and all the Joyes and Hopes hereafter, (To ſay you hope to have them both, is the cheat of infidelity, that believes not God.) And is not Heaven moſt baſely eſteemed of by thoſe, that prefer ſo baſe a thing before it?

§. 12. 7. Remember that fleſh-pleaſing is a great contempt and treachery againſt the ſoul. It is a great contempt of an immortal ſoul, to prefer its corruptible fleſh before it, and to make its ſervant to become its maſter; and to ride on horſeback, while it goes, as it were, on foot: Is the fleſh worthy of ſo much time and coſt and care, and ſo much ado as is made for it in the world, and is not a never dying ſoul worth more? Nay it is a betraying of the ſoul: You ſet up its enemy before it; and put its ſafety into an enemies hands: And you caſt away all its Joyes and Hopes for the gratifying of the fleſh. Might it not complain of your cruelty and ſay, Muſt my endleſs happi-

nefs be fold to purchafe fo fhort a pleafure for your flefh? Muft I be undone for ever, and lie in Hell, that it may be fatisfied for a little time? But why talk I of the fouls complaint? Alas it is it felf that it muft complain of! For it is its own doing! It hath its choice: The flefh can but tempt it, and not conftrain it: God hath put the chief power and government into its hands: If it will fell its own eternal hopes, to pamper worms meat, it muft fpeed accordingly. You would not think very honourably of that mans wit or honefty, who would fell the patrimony of all his children, and all his friends that trufted him therewith, and after fell their Perfons into flavery, and all this to purchafe him a delicious feaft, with fports and gallantry for a day! And is he wifer or better that felleth (in effect) the inheritance of his foul, and betrayeth it to Hell and Devils, for ever, and all this to purchafe the fleflhly pleafure of fo fhort a life?

§. 12. 8. Remember what a Beaftly life it is, to be a Senfualift. It is an unmanning of your felves. Senfual pleafures are bruitifh pleafures: Beafts have them as well as men. We have the higher faculty of reafon, to fubdue and rule the beaftly part: And Reafon is the Man; and hath a higher kind of felicity to delight in: Do you think that Man is made for no higher matters than a beaft? And that you have not a more noble object for your delight than your Swine or Dog hath, who have the pleafure of meat, and luft, and play, and eafe, and fancy as well as you? Certainly where fenfual pleafures are preferred, before the higher pleafures of the foul, that man becomes a Beaft or worfe, fubjecting his Reafon to his bruitifh part.

§. 13. 9. Think what an inconfiderable pitiful felicity, it is that fleflhly perfons choofe: How fmall and fhort as well as fordid. O how quickly will the game be ended? And the delights of boyling luft be gone? How quickly will the drink be paft their throats, and their delicate difhes be turned into filth? How fhort is the fport and laughter of the Fool? And how quickly will that face be the index of a pained body, or a grieved felf-tormenting mind? It is but a few days till all their ftately greatnefs will be levelled; and the moft adorned pampered flefh will have no more to fhew of all the pleafure which was fo dearly bought, than a Lazarus, or the moft mortified faint. A few days will turn their pleafure into anguifh, and their jollity into groans, and their oftentation into lamentation, and all their glory into fhame. As every moment puts an end to all the pleafures of their lives that's paft, and it is now to them as if it had never been; fo the laft moment is at hand, which will end the little that remains. And then the finner will with groans confefs, that he hath made a miferable choice, and that he might have had a more durable pleafure if he had been wife. When the skull is caft up with the fpade, to make room for a fucceffour, you may fee the whole where all the meat and drink went in, and the hideous feat of that face which fometime was the difcovery of wantonnefs, pride and fcorn: but you'll fee no figns of mirth or pleafure.

§. 14. 10. Laftly confider, that there is fcarce a fin in the world more unexcufable than this. The flefh-pleafer feeth the end of all his fenfual delights, in the faces of the fick, and in the corpfe that are daily carried to the earth; and in the Graves, and bones, and duft of thofe that fometimes had as merry a life as he: His reafon can fay, all this is gone with them, and is as if it had never been; and fo it will fhortly be with me. He knoweth that all the pleafure of his life is paft, is now of no value to himfelf. His warnings are conftant, clofe and fenfible: And therefore he hath the greater fin.

The Plea of Flefh-pleafers.

§. 15. IV. Object. 1. What hurt is it to God, or any one elfe, that I pleafe my flefh? I will not believe that a thing fo harmlefs will difpleafe him. Anfw. Meerly as it is Pleafure, it hath no hurt in it: But as it is inordinate or immoderate pleafure; or as it is overloved, and preferred before God and your falvation; or as it is greater than your delight in God; or as it wants its proper end, and is loved meerly for its felf, and not ufed as a means to higher things; and as it is made a hinderance to the Soul, and to fpiritual pleafure, and the fervice of God; and as it is the bruitifh delight of an ungoverned rebellious appetite, that maftereth reafon, and is not under obedience to God. Tho' fin can do God no hurt, it can do you hurt, and it can do him wrong: I think I have fhewed you what hurt and poyfon is in it already: It is the very rebellion of corrupted nature: The turning of all things upfide down: The taking down God, and Heaven, and Reafon, and deftroying the ufe of all the creatures, and fetting up Flefh pleafing inftead of all, and making a Bruit your God and Governour. And do you ask what harm there is in this? So will your child do, when he defireth any play, or pleafure: and the fick when they defire to pleafe their appetite. But your Father, and Phyfician, and Reafon, and not Brutifh Appetite muft be Judge.

§. 16. Object. 2. But I feel it is natural to me, and therefore can be no fin. Anfw. 1. The inordinate, violent unruly appetite is no otherwife natural to you, than as a leprofie is to a leprous generation: And will you love your difeafe, becaufe it is natural? it is no otherwife natural, than it is to be malicious, and revengeful, and to difobey your Governours, and abufe your neighbours: And yet I think they will not judge you innocent, for rebellion or abufe, becaufe it's natural to you. 2. Tho' the appetite be natural, is not reafon to rule it as natural to you? And is not the Subjection of the Appetite to Reafon natural? If it be not, you have loft the nature of man, and are Metamorphofed into the nature of a Beaft. God gave you a higher nature to govern your appetite and lower nature: And tho' Reafon cannot take away your Appetite, it can rule it and keep you from fulfilling it, in any thing or meafure that's unmeet.

§. 17. Object. 3. But it appeareth by the cafe of Eve, that the Appetite was the fame in innocency: therefore it is no fin. Anfw. You muft not forget the difference between 1. The Appetite it felf: 2. The violence and unruly difpofition of the appetite: 3. And the actual obeying and pleafing of the appetite. The firft (the Appetite it felf) was in innocency, and is yet no fin: But the other two (the violence of it, and the obeying it) were not in innocency, and are both finful.

§. 18. Object. 4. But why would God give innocent man an appetite that muft be croft by Reafon? and that defired that which Reafon muft forbid? Anfw. The fenfitive nature is in order of Generation before the rational: And Reafon and Gods Laws do not make fenfe to be no fenfe. You may as well ask, why God would make Beafts which muft be reftrained and ruled by men? and therefore have a defire to that which man muft reftrain them from? You do but ask, Why God made us men and not Angels? Why he placed our fouls in flefh? He oweth you no account of his creation: But you may fee it's meet that Obedience fhould have fome tryal by difficulties and oppofition, before it have its commendation and reward: He gave you a Body that was fubject to the Soul; as the Horfe unto the rider; and you fhould admire his Wifdom, and thank him for the governing Power of Reafon; and not murmur at him, becaufe the Horfe will not go as well without the Guidance of the rider, or becaufe he maketh you not able to go as faft and well on foot. So much for the Senfualifts Objections.

§. 19.

Signs of Senſuality.

§. 19. V. The ſigns of a Fleſh pleaſer or Senſualiſt are theſe, (which may be gathered from what is ſaid already) 1. When a man in deſire to pleaſe his appetite, referreth it not (actually or habitually) to a higher end, viz. the fitting himſelf to the ſervice of God; but ſticketh only in the delight. 2. When he looks more deſirouſly and induſtriouſly after the Proſperity of his Body, than of his Soul. 3. When he will not part with, or forbear his pleaſures when God forbiddeth them, or when they hurt his ſoul, or when the neceſſities of his ſoul do call him more loudly another way: But he muſt have his delight whatever it coſt him, and is ſo ſet upon it, that he cannot deny it to himſelf. 4. When the pleaſures of his fleſh exceed his delights in God, and his holy Word and Ways, and the forethoughts of endleſs pleaſure; and this not only in the paſſion, but in the eſtimation, choice, and proſecution. When he had rather be at Play, or Feaſt, or Gaming, or getting good Bargains or Profits in the world, than to live in the life of Faith, and love, a holy and heavenly converſation. 5. When men ſet their minds to contrive and ſtudy to make Proviſion for the pleaſures of the fleſh; and this is firſt and ſweeteſt in their thoughts. 6. When they had rather talk, or hear, or read of fleſhly pleaſures, than of ſpiritual and heavenly delights. 7. When they love the company of merry ſenſualiſts, better than the Communion of Saints, in which they may be exerciſed in the praiſes of their Maker. 8. When they account that the beſt calling and condition, and place for them to live in, where they have the pleaſure of the fleſh, where they have eaſe, and fare well and want nothing for the body, rather than that where they have far better help and proviſion for the ſoul, though the fleſh be pinched for it. 9. When he will be at more coſt to pleaſe his fleſh, than to pleaſe God: 10. When he will believe or like no Doctrine but Libertaniſm, and hateth mortification as too ſtrict preciſeneſs. By theſe and ſuch other ſigns, ſenſuality may eaſily be known: Yea, by the main bent of the life.

Counterfeits of Mortification.

§. 20. VI. Many fleſh pleaſers flatter themſelves with better titles, being deceived by ſuch means as theſe. 1. Becauſe they are againſt the doctrine of Libertaniſm, and hold as ſtrict opinions as any. But fleſh pleaſing may ſtand with the doctrine of mortification, and the ſtricteſt opinions, as long as they are not put in Practice.

2. Becauſe they live not in any groſs diſgraced vice: They go not to Stage-plays, or unſeaſonably to Ale-houſes or Taverns; they are not drunken, nor gameſters, nor ſpend their hours in unneceſſary Recreations or Paſtimes: They are no Fornicators, nor wallow in wealth. But the fleſh may be pleaſed and ſerved in a way that hath no diſgrace accompanying it in the world: May not a man make his eaſe, or his proſperity, or the pleaſing of his appetite, without any infamous exceſſes, to be as much his felicity and higheſt end, and that which practically he taketh for his beſt, as well as if he did it in a ſhameful way? Is not many a man a gluttonous fleſh-pleaſer, that maketh his delight the higheſt end of all his eating and drinking; and pleaſeth his appetite without any reſtraint, but what his health and reputation put upon him, tho' he eat not till he vomit or be ſick? Even the fleſh it ſelf may forbid a ſenſualiſt to be drunk, or to eat till he be ſick. For ſickneſs and ſhame are diſpleaſing to the fleſh. Many a man coveteth a life of ſenſuality, not only with a ſeeming temperance, unreproved of men, but alſo with a ſeeming ſtrictneſs and auſterity. But conſcience might tell them, where they have their good things. Luk. 16.

3. Some think they are no ſenſual fleſh-pleaſers, becauſe they live in conſtant miſery, in Poverty and want, labouring hard for their daily bread; and therefore they hope that they are the Lazarus's that have their ſufferings here: But is not all this againſt thy Will? Wouldſt thou not fare as well as the rich, and live as idly, and take thy pleaſure, if thou hadſt as much as they? What thou wouldſt do, that thou doſt in Gods account. It is thy will that thou ſhalt be judged by. A Thief doth not become a true man when the Priſon or Stocks do hinder him from ſtealing, but when a changed heart doth hinder him.

4. Others think that they are no fleſh-pleaſers, becauſe their wealth, and places, and degrees of honour allow them to live high in diet and delights. It's like the Rich man, Luke 16. who was clothed with purple and fine linnen, and fared ſumptuouſly every day, did live upon his own, and as he thought agreeably to his rank and place: And the fool, Luke 12. 19, 20. that ſaid, Soul take thy eaſe, eat, drink and be merry, did intend to pleaſe himſelf but with his own, which God had given him as a bleſſing on his land and labour. But no mans Riches allow him to be voluptuous: The commands of taming and mortifying the fleſh, and not living after it, nor making proviſion for it, to ſatisfy its luſts, belong as much to the rich as to the poor: Though you are not to live in the ſame garb with the poor, you are as much bound to mortification and ſelf-denial as the pooreſt. If you are Richer than others, you have more to ſerve God with, but not more than others to ſerve the fleſh with. If poverty deny them any thing which might better enable their Bodies or Minds to ſerve God, you may ſo far go beyond them, and uſe with thankfulneſs the mercies given you: But you muſt no more be fleſh-pleaſers than they.

5. And ſome deceive themſelves by interpoſing ſometimes a formal faſt, as the fleſhly Phariſee that faſted twice a week, Luke 18. 12. and then they think that they are no ſenſualiſts. I ſpeak not of the Popiſh faſting with Fiſh and Delicates, (this is not ſo much as a ſhew of mortification.) But what if you really faſt as oft as the Phariſees did, and quarrel with Chriſts Diſciples for not faſting, Matth. 9. 14, 15. Will not a ſenſualiſt do as much as this, if his Phyſician require it for his health? If the ſcope of your lives be fleſhly, it is not the interruption of a formal faſt, that will acquit you; which perhaps doth but quicken your appetite to the next meal.

False appearances of ſenſuality.

§. 21. VII. Yet many are wrongfully taken by others (if not by themſelves) to be ſenſual by ſuch miſtakes as theſe. 1. Becauſe they live not as meanly and ſcantly as the poor who want things neceſſary or helpful to their duty: But by that rule I muſt not be well, becauſe other men are ſick; or I muſt not go a pace, becauſe the lame can go but ſlowly! If poor men have bad Horſes, I may ride on the beſt I can get, to diſpatch my buſineſs, and redeem my time, ſo I prefer not coſtly uſeleſs Oſtentation, before true ſerviceableneſs. 2. Others are accuſed as ſenſual, becauſe the weakneſs of their bodies requireth a more tender uſage, and dyet, than healthful mens: ſome Bodies are unfitter for Duty if they faſt: And ſome are uſeleſs thro' ſickneſs and infirmities, if they be not uſed with very great care. And it is as truly a duty to cheriſh a weak body to enable it for Gods ſervice, as to tame an unruly luſtful body, and keep it from offending him. 3. Some Melancholy conſcientious Perſons are ſtill accuſing themſelves through meer ſcrupuloſity; queſtioning almoſt all they eat, or drink, or wear, or do, whether it be not too much, or too pleaſing: But it is a cheerful ſobriety that God requireth, which neither pampereth the body, nor yet diſableth or hindereth it from its duty; and not an unprofitable wrangling ſcrupuloſity.

§. 22.

Dir. 1. §. 22. Direct. 1. The first and Grand Direction against Flesh-pleasing, is, that you be sure by a serious living faith to see the Better things with God; and to be heartily taken up in minding, loving, seeking and securing them. All the other directions are but subservient to this: For certainly mans soul will not be idle, being a living active principle: And it's as certain, that it will not act but upon some End, or for some End. And there are no other Ends to take us up, but either the things temporal or eternal: And therefore there is no true cure for a sensual Love of temporal things, but to turn the heart to things eternal. Believingly think first of the certainty, greatness and eternity of the Joyes above: and then think that these may more certainly be yours, than any worldly Riches or delights, if you do not contemptuously reject them: And then think that this is the time in which you must make sure of them and win them, if ever you will possess them; and that you are sent into the world of purpose on this business: And then think with your selves, how fleshly pleasures are the only competitors with the everlasting pleasures; and that if ever you lose them, it will be by over-loving these transitory things; and that one half of your work for your salvation lyeth in killing your affections to all below, that they may be alive to God alone: And lastly, think how much higher and sweeter pleasures even in this life, the godly do enjoy than you; and you are losing them while you prefer these sordid pleasures. Do you think that a true Believer hath not a more excellent delight in his fore-thoughts of his immortal blessedness with Christ, and in the assurance of the Love of God, and communion with him in his holy service, than you or any sensualist hath in fleshly pleasures? Sober and serious Meditation on these things, will turn the mind to the true delights.

Dir. 2. §. 23. Direct. 2. Be acquainted with the range of sensual desires and follow them, and watch them in all their extravagancies. Otherwise while you are stopping one gap, they will be running out at many more. I have given you many instances in my Treatise of Self-denyal. I will here briefly set some before your eyes:

1. Watch your Appetites as to meat and drink, both quantity and quality: Gluttony is a common unobserved sin: The flesh no way enslaves men more than by the appetite: As we see in Drunkards and Gluttons, that can no more forbear, than one that thirsteth in a burning Feavour.

2. Take heed of the lust of uncleanness, and all degrees of it, and approaches to it: especially immodest embraces and behaviour.

3. Take heed of ribald filthy talk, and Love Songs, and of such incensing snares.

4. Take heed of too much sleep and Idleness.

5. Take heed of taking too much delight in your Riches, and lands, your buildings, and delectable conveniences.

6. Take heed lest Honours or worldly Greatness, or mens applause become your too great pleasure.

7. And lest you grow to make it your delight, to think on such things when you are alone, or talk idly of them in company with others.

8. And take heed lest the success and prosperity of your affairs do too much please you, as him, Luke 12. 20.

9. Take not up any inordinate pleasure in your children, relations, or neerest friends.

10. Take heed of a delight in vain, unprofitable, sinful company.

11. Or in fineness of apparel, to set you out to the eyes of others.

12. Take heed of a delight in Romances, Playbooks, feigned stories, useless news, which corrupt the mind and waste your time.

13. Take heed of a delight in any recreations, which are excessive, needless, devouring time, discomposing the mind, enticing to further sin, hindring any duty, especially our delight in God. They are miserable souls that can delight themselves in no more safe or profitable things than Cards, and Dice, and Stage-plays, and immodest dancings.

Dir. 3. §. 24. Direct. 3. Next to the universal Remedy mentioned in the first Direction, see that you have the particular remedies still at hand, which your own particular way of Flesh-pleasing doth most require. And let not the love of your vanity prejudice you against a just information, but impartially consider of the disease and the remedy. Of the particulars anon.

Dir. 4. §. 25. Direct. 4. Remember still that God would give you more pleasure, and not less, and that he will give you as much of the Delights of sense, as is truly good for you, so you will take them in their place, in subordination to your heavenly delights. And is not this to encrease and multiply your pleasure? Is not health and friends, and food, and convenient habitation much sweeter as the fruit of the Love of God, and the fore-tastes of everlasting mercies, and as our helps to Heaven, and as the means to spiritual comfort, than of themselves alone? All your mercies are from God: He would take none from you, but sanctifie them, and give you more.

Dir. 5. §. 26. Direct. 5. See that Reason keep up its authority, as the Governour of sense and appetite: And so take an account, whatever the Appetite would have, of the Ends and Reasons of the thing, and to what it doth conduce. Take nothing and do nothing meerly because the sense or appetite would have it; but because you have Reason so to do, and to gratifie the appetite. Else you will deal as Bruites, if Reason be laid by (in humane acts.)

Dir. 6. §. 27. Direct. 6. Go to the Grave, and see there the end of Fleshly pleasure, and what is all that it will do for you at the last. One would think it should cure the mad desire of plenty and pleasure, to see where all our wealth, and mirth, and sport, and pleasure must be buried at last.

Dir. 7. §. 28. Direct. 7. Lastly, be still sensible that flesh is the grand Enemy of your souls, and flesh-pleasing the greatest hinderance of your salvation. The Devils enmity and the worlds are both but subordinate to this of the Flesh: For its Pleasure is the End, and the world and Satans temptations are both but the means to attain it. Besides the malignity opened before, consider.

The enmity of the Flesh.

1. How contrary a voluptuous life is to the blessed example of our Lord, and of his servant Paul and all the Apostles? Paul tamed his body and brought it into subjection, lest having preached to others, himself should be a cast-away, 1 Cor. 9. 27. And all that are Christs have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts thereof. Gal. 5. 24. This was signified in the antient manner of baptizing, (and so is still by Baptism it self); when they went over head in the water and then rose out of it, to signifie that they were dead and buried with Christ, Rom. 6. 3. 4. and rose with him to newness of life: This is called our being Baptized into his death: And seems the plain sense of 1 Cor. 15. 29. of being Baptized for the dead, that is, for dead; to shew that we are dead to the world, and must dye in the world, but shall rise again to the Kingdom of Christ, both of Grace and Glory.

2. Sensuality sheweth that there is no true belief of the life to come, and proveth so far as it prevaileth the absence of all grace.

3. It is a home-bred continual traytor to the soul: A continual tempter, and nurse of all sin:

The great Withdrawer of the Heart from God: and the common cauſe of Apoſtaſie it ſelf: It ſtill fighteth againſt the Spirit: Gal. 5. 17. And is ſeeking advantage from all our Liberties, Gal. 5. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 10.

4. It turneth all our outward mercies into ſin, and ſtrengthneth it ſelf againſt God by his own benefits.

5. It is the great cauſe of our afflictions: For God will not ſpare that Idol which is ſet up againſt him: Fleſh rebelleth, and Fleſh ſhall ſuffer.

6. And when it hath brought affliction, it is moſt impatient under it, and maketh it ſeem intolerable. A fleſh-pleaſer thinks he is undone, when affliction depriveth him of his pleaſure.

7. Laſtly, it exceedingly unfitteth men for Death: For then Fleſh muſt be caſt into the Duſt, and all its pleaſure be at an end: O doleful day to thoſe that had their good things here, and their portion in this life! When all is gone that ever they valued and ſought; and all the true felicity loſt, which they brutiſhly contemned? If you would joyfully then bear the diſſolution and ruin of your fleſh, O maſter it, and mortifie it now. Seek not the eaſe and pleaſure of a little walking breathing clay, when you ſhould be ſeeking and ſore taſting the everlaſting pleaſure. Here lyeth your danger and your work. Strive more againſt your own fleſh, than againſt all your Enemies in Earth and Hell: If you be ſaved from this, you are ſaved from them all. Chriſt ſuffered in the fleſh, to tell you that it is not pampering, but ſuffering that your fleſh muſt expect, if you will reign with him.

Directions for Redeeming or well improving TIME.

§. 1. TIME being Mans opportunity for all thoſe Works for which he liveth, and which his creator doth expect from him, and on which his endleſs life dependeth, the REDEEMING or well improving of it, muſt needs be of moſt high importance to him: And therefore it is well made by holy Paul, the great mark to diſtinguiſh the Wiſe from Fools: Epheſ. 5. 15, 16. See then that you walk circumſpectly, not as Fools, but as wiſe, Redeeming the time: So Col. 4. 5. I ſhall therefore give you ſpecial Directions for it, when I have firſt opened the nature of the duty to you, and told you what is meant by Time, and what by Redeeming it.

Whats meant by Time.

§. 2. Time in its moſt common acception is taken generally for all that ſpace of this preſent life which is our opportunity for all the works of life, and the meaſure of them. Time is often taken more ſtrictly, for ſome ſpecial Opportunity which is fitted to a ſpecial work; which we call the ſeaſon or the fitteſt time: In both theſe ſenſes Time muſt be Redeemed.

What are the ſpecial Seaſons of duty.

§. 3. As every work hath its ſeaſon which muſt be taken, Eccleſ. 3. 1. So have the greateſt works aſſigned us for God and our ſouls ſome ſpecial ſeaſons beſides our common time. 1. Some Times God hath fitted by Nature for his ſervice. So the Time of Youth and health, and ſtrength is ſpecially fitted for holy works. 2. Some Time is made ſpecially fit by Gods Inſtitution; as the Lords Day above all other days. 3. Some Time is made fit by Governours appointment: As the hour of Publick Meeting for Gods Worſhip, and Lecture-days; and the hour for family worſhip, which every Maſter of a family may appoint to his own houſhold. 4. Some Time is made fit by the Temper of Mens Bodies; The Morning hours are the beſt to moſt, and to ſome rather the Evening; and to all, the Time when the body is freeſt from pain and diſabling weakneſſes. 5. Some time is made fit by the courſe of our neceſſary natural or civil buſineſs; as the day is fitter than the ſleeping time of the night, and as that hour is the fitteſt wherein our other imployments will leaſt diſturb us. 6. Some Time is made fit by a ſpecial ſhower of Mercy publick or private; as when we dwell in godly families, among the moſt exemplary helpful company, under the moſt lively excellent means, the faithfulleſt Paſtors, the profitableſt Teachers, the beſt Maſters or Parents, and with faithful friends. 7. Some time is made fit by particular acts of Providence: as a Funeral Sermon at the death of any near us; as the preſence of ſome able Miniſter or private Chriſtian, whoſe company we cannot ordinarily have: or a ſpecial leiſure, as the Eunuch had to read the Scripture in his Chariot, Acts 8. 8. And ſome Time is made ſpecially fit by the ſpecial workings of Gods Spirit upon the heart; when he more than ordinarily illuminateth, teacheth, quickneth, ſoftneth, humbleth, comforteth, exciteth or confirmeth. As Time in general, ſo ſpecially theſe ſeaſons muſt be particularly improved for their ſeveral works: we muſt take the Wind and Tide while we may have it, and be ſure to ſtrike while the Iron is hot. 9. And ſome time is made fit by others neceſſities and the call of God: As it is the time to relieve the poor when they ask, or when they are moſt in want; or to help our neighbour when it will do him moſt good: to viſit the ſick, the impriſoned and afflicted in the needful ſeaſon, Matth. 25. Thus are the godly like Trees planted by the River ſide, which bring forth fruit in their ſeaſon, Pſal. 1. 3. So to ſpeak in ſeaſon to the ignorant and ungodly for their converſion, or to the ſorrowful for their conſolation, Iſa. 50. 4. 10. Our own Neceſſity alſo maketh our ſeaſons: So the Time of age and ſickneſs is made by neceſſity the ſeaſon of our ſpecial repentance and preparation for death and judgment: 11. The preſent Time is commonly made our ſeaſon, through the uncertainty of a fitter or of any more: Prov. 3. 27. Withhold not Good from him to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thy hand to do it: Say not unto thy neighbours, Go and come again, to morrow I will give, when thou haſt it by thee: Eccleſ. 11. 2. Give a portion to ſeven, and alſo to eight, for thou knoweſt not what evil ſhall be upon the earth. Prov. 27. 1. Boaſt not thy ſelf of to morrow; for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth. Gal. 6. 10. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good to all men; eſpecially to them who are of the houſhold of faith. Theſe are our ſpecial ſeaſons.

What Redeeming Time ſuppoſeth.

§. 4. To Redeem Time ſuppoſeth, 1. That we know what we have to do with time, and on what we ought to lay it out; and of how great worth the things are for which we muſt redeem it: 2. That we highly value Time in order to this neceſſary work. 3. That we are ſenſible of the greatneſs of our ſin and loſs, in our negligent or wilful loſing ſo much as we have done already. 4. That we know the particular ſeaſon of each duty. 5. And that we let leſs by all that which we muſt part with in our Redeeming Time, than we do by Time it ſelf, and its due ends: Or elſe we will not make the bargain.

What it contains.

§. 5. And as theſe five things are preſuppoſed, ſo theſe following are contained in our Redeeming Time. 1. To Redeem time is to ſee that we caſt none of it away in vain; but uſe every Minute of it as a moſt precious thing, and ſpend it wholly in the way of duty. 2. That we be not only doing Good, but doing the Beſt and Greateſt Good which we are able and have a call to do. 3. That we do not only the Beſt things, but do them in the beſt best manner and in the greateſt meaſure, and do as much good as poſſibly we can. 4. That we watch for ſpecial Opportunities. 5. That we preſently take them when they fall, and improve them when we take them. 6. That we part with all that is to be parted with, to ſave our time. 7. And that we forecaſt the preventing of Impediments, and the removal of our clogs, and the obtaining of all the Helps to expedition and ſucceſs in duty. This is the true Redeeming of our Time.

To what Uſes Time muſt be Redeemed.

§ 6. The Ends and Uſes which Time muſt be Redeemed for are theſe. 1. In general and ultimately, it muſt be all for God: Though not all employed directly upon God, in meditating of him, or praying to him; yet all muſt be laid out for him immediately or mediately; that is, either in ſerving him, or in preparing for his ſervice; in mowing or in whetting, in travelling or in baiting to fit us for travail: And ſo our time of ſleep, and feeding, and needful recreation is laid out for God. 2. Time muſt be Redeemed, eſpecially for Works of Publick benefit: For the Church and State: for the Souls of many: eſpecially by Magiſtrates and Miniſters, who have ſpecial charge and opportunity: who muſt ſpend and be ſpent for the peoples ſakes, though rewarded with ingratitude and contempt, 2 Cor. 12. 14, 15. 3. For your own Souls, and your everlaſting life: For ſpeedy Converſion without delay, if you be yet unconverted: For the killing of every ſoul-endangering ſin, without delay: For the exerciſe and increaſe of young and unconfirmed Grace, and the growth of knowledge; for the making ſure our calling and election: And for the ſtoring up Proviſions of Faith, and Hope, and Love, and Comfort againſt the Hour of Suffering and of death.

4. We muſt Redeem time for the Souls of every particular perſon, that we have opportunity to do good to: eſpecially for children, and ſervants, and others whom God hath committed to our Truſt. 5. For the welfare of our own Bodies, that they may be ſerviceable to our ſouls. 6. And laſtly for the Bodily welfare of others. And this is the order in which thoſe works lie, for which and in which our Time muſt be Redeemed.

From what and at what price it muſt be Redeemed.

The Price that Time muſt be Redeemed with is, 1. Above all, by our utmoſt Diligence: That we be ſtill doing, and put forth all our ſtrength, and run as for our lives; and whatever our hand ſhall find to do, that we do it with our might, remembring that there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither we go, Eccleſ. 9. 10. Our ſluggiſh eaſe is an eaſie price to be parted with for precious time. To Redeem it, is not to call back Time paſt; nor to ſtop Time in its haſty paſſage; nor to procure a long life on earth: but to ſave it, as it paſſeth, from being devoured and loſt, by ſluggiſhneſs and ſin. 2. Time muſt be Redeemed from the hands, and by the loſs, of ſinful pleaſures, ſports and revellings, and all that is of it ſelf, or by accident unlawful: from wantonneſs and licentiouſneſs and vanity, Rom. 13. 11, 12, 13, 14. Both theſe are ſet together. [And that knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of ſleep: for now is our Salvation nearer than when we believed: The night is far ſpent; the day is at hand: let us therefore caſt off the works of darkneſs, and let us put on the armour of light: let us walk honeſtly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenneſs: not in chambering and wantonneſs; not in ſtrife and envying; but put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make not Proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts thereof.] 3. Time muſt be Redeemed from things indifferent and lawful at another time, when things neceſſary do require it. He that ſhould ſave mens lives, or quench a fire in his houſe, or provide for his family, or do his Maſters work, will not be excuſed if he neglect it, by ſaying that he was about an indifferent or a lawful buſineſs. Natural reſt and ſleep muſt be parted with for time, when neceſſary things require it. Paul Preached till midnight being to depart on the morrow, Act. 20. 7. The Lamenting Church calling out for Prayer ſaith, Ariſe: cry out in the night, in the beginning of the watches, pour out thy heart like water before the face of the Lord, Lam. 2. 19. Cleanthes Lamp muſt be uſed by ſuch, whoſe Sun-light muſt be otherwiſe employed. 4. Time muſt be redeemed from worldly buſineſs and commodity, when matters of greater weight and commodity do require it. Trades, and Plow, and profit muſt ſtand by, when God calls us (by neceſſity or otherwiſe) to greater things. Martha ſhould not ſo much as trouble her ſelf in providing meat for Chriſt and his followers to eat, when Chriſt is offering her food for her ſoul, and ſhe ſhould with Mary have been hearing at his feet, Luk. 10. 42. Worldlings are thus called by him, Iſa. 55. 1, 2, 3. Ho every one that thirſteth, come ye to the water——Wherefore do you ſpend your money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which ſatisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your Soul delight it ſelf in fatneſs,——. 5. Time muſt be Redeemed from ſmaller Duties, which in their Seaſon muſt be done, as being no duties, when they hinder Greater Duty which ſhould then take place. It is a duty in its time and place to ſhew reſpect to neighbours and ſuperiours, and to thoſe about us, and to look to our Family Affairs: but not when we ſhould be at Prayer to God, or when a Miniſter ſhould be Preaching, or at his neceſſary ſtudies: Private Prayer and Meditation and viſiting the ſick are duties: But not when we ſhould be at Church, or about any greater Duty which they hinder.

The Directions Contemplative for Redeeming Time.

§. 8. Direct. 1. Still keep upon thy Heart by Faith and Conſideration, the lively ſenſe of the Greatneſs and abſolute neceſſity of that work, which muſt command thy time; remembering who ſetteth thee on work, and on what a work he ſets thee, and on what terms, and what will be the end. It is God that calleth thee to labour: And wilt thou ſtand ſtill or be doing other things, when God expecteth duty from thee? Moſes muſt go to Pharaoh when God bids him go: Jonas muſt go to Nineve when God bids him go: yea, Abraham muſt go to Sacrifice his Son when God bids him go. And you may go about your fleſhly pleaſures, when God commandeth you to his ſervice? He hath appointed you a work that is worth your time and all your labour; to know him, and ſerve him and obey him, and to ſeek everlaſting life! How diligently ſhould ſo excellent a work be done? and ſo bleſſed and glorious a maſter be ſerved? eſpecially conſidering the unutterable importance of our diligence! we are in the race appointed us by our Maker, and are to Run for an immortal Crown: It's Heaven that muſt be now won or loſt: And have we time to ſpare in ſuch a race? We are fighting againſt the Enemies of our ſalvation: The queſtion is now to be reſolved, whether the Fleſh, the World, and the Devil, or We, ſhall win the day, and have the Victory. And Heaven or Hell muſt be the iſſue of our warfare: And have we time to ſpare in the midſt of ſuch a fight? when our very loſs of Time, is no ſmall part of the enemies conqueſt? Our moſt wiſe Omnipotent Creator hath been pleaſed to make this preſent life to be the trying Preparation for another, reſolving that it ſhall go with us all for ever, according to our Preparations here: And can we play and loyter away our Time, that have ſuch a work as this to do. O miſerable ſenſleſs ſouls! do you believe indeed the Life everlaſting, and that all your lives are given you now, to reſolve the queſtion whether you muſt be in Heaven or Hell for ever? Do you believe this? Again I ask you, Do you believe this? I beſeech you ask your Conſciences over and over, whether you do indeed believe it? Can you believe it, and yet have Time to ſpare? what! find Time to play away, and game away, and idle and prate away, and yet believe that this very Time is given you to prepare for life eternal? and that ſalvation or damnation lyeth on the race which now, even now, you have to run? Is not ſuch a man a Monſter of ſtupidity? If you were aſleep, or mad, it were the more excuſable to be ſo ſenſleſs: But to do thus awake, and in your wits! —— O where are the brains of thoſe men, and of what metal are their hardned hearts made, that can idle and play away that Time, that little Time, that only Time, which is given them for the everlaſting ſaving of their ſouls! Verily ſirs, if ſin had not turned the ungodly part of the world into a Bedlam, where it is no wonder to ſee a man out of his wits, people would run out with wonder into the Streets to ſee ſuch a monſter as this, as they do to ſee mad men in the Country where they are rare; and they would call to one another, Come and ſee a man, that can trifle and ſport away his Time, as he is going to Eternity, and is ready to enter into another world! Come and ſee a man that hath but a few days to win or loſe his ſoul for ever in, and is playing it away at Cards and Dice, or waſting it in doing nothing? Come and ſee a man that hath hours to ſpare, and caſt away upon trifles, with Heaven and Hell before his eyes. For thy ſouls ſake, conſider and tell thy ſelf, If thy eſtate in the world did lye upon the ſpending of this day or week, or if thy life lay on it, ſo that thou muſt live or dye, or be poor or rich, ſick or well, as thou ſpendeſt it, wouldſt thou then waſte it in dreſſings, or complement, or play? and wouldſt thou find any to ſpare, upon impertinent triflings? Or rather wouldſt thou not be up betime, and not about thy buſineſs, and turn by thy games, and thy diverting company, and diſappoint thy idle viſiters, and let them find that thou art not to be ſpoken with, nor at leiſure to do nothing, but wilt rather ſeem uncivil and moroſe, than be undone! And wouldſt thou do thus for a tranſitory proſperity or life, and doth not life eternal require much more? Will thy weighty buſineſs in the world reſolve thee, to put by thy friends, thy play fellows and ſports, and to ſhake off thy idleneſs? and ſhould not the buſineſs of thy ſalvation do it? I would deſire no more to confute the diſtracted Time waſters, when they are diſputing for their idle ſports and vanities, and asking, what harm is in Cards and Dice, and ſtage-plays, or tedious feaſts or complementing, adorning idleneſs, than if I could help them to one ſight of Heaven and Hell, and make them well know what greater buſineſs they have to do, which is ſtaying for them while they ſleep or play. If I were juſt now in diſputing the caſe with an idle Lady, or a ſenſual belly-ſlave or gameſter, and he were asking me ſcornfully, what hurt is in all this? if one did but knock at his door and tell him, The King is at the door and calls for you, it would make him caſt away his game and his diſpute: Or if the houſe were on fire, or a Child faln into the fire or water, or Thieves breaking in upon them, it would make the Ladies caſt by the other Lace or Ribbon? Or if there were but a good bargain or a Lordſhip to be got, they could be up and going, though ſports and game and gawdery were caſt off: And yet the foreſight of Heaven and Hell, though one of them is even at the door, will not do as much with them: Becauſe Heaven is as nothing to an unbeliever, or an inconſiderate ſenſleſs wretch; And as it is nothing to them when it ſhould move them, it ſhall be nothing to them when they would enjoy it. Say not, Recreation muſt be uſed in its ſeaſon: I know that neceſſary whetting is no letting: But God and thy own Conſcience ſhall tell thee ſhortly, whether thy Recreation, feaſtings, long dreſſings, and idleneſs, were a neceſſary whetting or refreſhment of thy Body to fit it for that work which thou waſt born and liveſt for; or whether they were the Paſtimes of a voluptuous fleſhly bruit, that lived in theſe pleaſures for the love of pleaſure. Verily if I lookt but on this one unreaſonable ſin of Time-waſting, it would help me to underſtand the meaning of Luke 15. 17. Εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἐλθὼν, that the Prodigal is ſaid to Come to himſelf; and that converſion is the bringing a man to his wits.

Dir. 8.

§. 9. Direct. 2. Be not a ſtranger to the condition of thy own ſoul, but look home till thou art acquainted what ſtate it is in, and what it is in danger of, and what it wanteth, and how far thou art behind hand in thy proviſions for immortality: and then be an idle Time-waſter if thou canſt. Could I but go down with thee into that dungeon Heart of thine, and ſhew thee by the light of truth what is there! could I but let in one convincing beam from Heaven, which might fully ſhew thee what a condition thou art in, and what thou haſt to do with thy remaining Time, I ſhould have no need to diſpute thee out of thy childiſh fooleries, nor to bid thee be up and doing for thy ſoul, no more than to bid thee ſtir if a Bear were at thy back, or the houſe in a flame about thy ears. Alas, our ordinary Time-waſters are ſuch, as were yet unconverted carnal wretches, and are the while in the power of the Devil, who is the chief maſter of the ſport, and the greateſt gainer. They are ſuch as are utter ſtrangers to the regenerating ſanctifying work of the Holy Ghoſt; and are yet unjuſtified, and under the guilt of all their ſins, and certain to be with Devils in Hell for ever, if they dye thus before they are converted! This is true, ſinner, and thou wilt ſhortly find it ſo, by grace or vengeance, though thy blind and hardned heart now riſe againſt the mention of it!) And is this a caſe for a man to ſit at cards and dice in, or to ſport and ſwagger in? The Lord have mercy on thee, and open thy eyes before it is too late, or elſe thy Conſcience will tell thee for ever in another manner than I am telling thee now, that thou hadſt need to have better improved thy Time, and hadſt greater things to have ſpent it in. What, for a man in thy caſe! in an unrenewed, unſanctified, unpardoned ſtate, to be thus caſting away that little Time, which all his hopes lye on: and in which, if ever, he muſt be recovered, and ſaved! O Lord, have mercy on ſuch ſenſleſs ſouls, and bring them to themſelves before it be too late! I tell thee man, an enlightned perſon that underſtandeth what it is, and hath eſcaped it, would not for all the Kingdoms of the world, be a week or a day in thy condition, for fear leſt death cut off his hopes and ſhut him up in Hell that very day: He durſt not ſleep quietly in thy condition a night, leſt death ſhould ſnatch him away to Hell, and canſt thou ſport and play in it, and live ſecurely in a ſenſual courſe? O what a thing is it to be hoodwinkt in miſery, and to be led aſleep to Hell? who could perſwade men to live thus awake, and go dancing to Hell with their eyes open! O if we ſhould but imagine a Peter or a Paul or any of the bleſſed, to be again brought into ſuch a caſe as one of theſe unſanctified ſinners, and yet to know what now they know! what would they do? would they feaſt, and game, and play and trifle away their time in it? or would they not rather ſuddenly bewail their former miſpent time, and all their ſins, and cry day and night to God for mercy, and fly to Chriſt, and ſpend all their time in Holineſs and obedience to God: Alas poor ſinner, do but look into thy heart, and ſee there what thou haſt yet to do) of greater weight than trimming and playing:) I almoſt tremble to think and write what a caſe thou art in, and what thou haſt to do, while thou liveſt as if thou hadſt Time to ſpare! If thou know not, I will tell thee, and the Lord make thee know it: Thou haſt a hardened heart to be yet ſoftened; and an unbelieving heart to be brought to a lively powerful Belief of the word of God and the unſeen world: Thou haſt an unholy Heart and life to be made Holy, if ever thou wilt ſee the face of God, Heb. 12. 14. Matth. 18. 3. Joh. 3. 3, 5, 6. Thou haſt a Heart-full of ſins to be mortified and ſubdued: and an unreformed life to be reformed: (And what abundance of particulars do theſe Generals contain!) Thou haſt a pardon to procure through Jeſus Chriſt, for all the ſins that ever thou didſt commit, and all the duties which ever thou didſt omit: Thou haſt an offended God to be reconciled to, and for thy eſtranged ſoul to know as thy Father in Jeſus Chriſt: what abundance of Scripture truths haſt thou to learn which thou art ignorant of? How many holy duties, as Prayer, meditation, holy conference, &c. to learn which thou art unskilful in? and to perform when thou haſt learned them? How many works of Juſtice and Charity to mens ſouls and bodies haſt thou to do? How many needy ones to relieve as thou art able? and the ſick to viſit, and the naked to cloath, and the ſad to comfort, and the ignorant to inſtruct, and the ungodly to exhort? Heb. 3. 13. Heb. 10. 25. Epheſ. 4. 29. what abundance of duty haſt thou to perform in thy Relations? to Parents or Children, to Husband or Wife, as a Maſter or a Servant, and the reſt? Thou little knoweſt what ſufferings thou haſt to prepare for! Thou haſt Faith and Love, and Repentance, and Patience, and all Gods graces, to get and to exerciſe daily, and to increaſe? Thou haſt thy accounts to prepare, and aſſurance of ſalvation to obtain, and Death and Judgment to prepare for: what thinks thy heart of all this work: Put it off as lightly as thou wilt, it is God himſelf that hath laid it on thee, and it muſt be done in time or thou muſt be undone for ever: And yet it muſt not be thy toyl, but thy delight: This is appointed thee for thy chiefeſt recreation. Look into the Scripture and into thy Heart, and thou wilt find that all this is to be done. And doſt thou think in thy Conſcience that this is not greater buſineſs, than thy gawdy dreſſings, thy idle viſits, or thy needleſs ſports? which is more worthy of thy Time.

Dir. 3. §. 10. Direct. 3. Remember how gainful the Redeeming of Time is, and how exceeding comfortable in the review? In Merchandize, or any trading; in husbandry or any gaining courſe, we uſe to ſay of a man that hath grown rich by it, that he hath made uſe of his Time! But when Heaven, and communion with God in the way, and a life of holy ſtrength and comfort, and a death full of joy and hope, is to be the gain, how cheerfully ſhould Time be Redeemed for theſe? If it be pleaſant for a man to find himſelf thrive and proſper in any riſing or pleaſing employment, How pleaſant muſt it be continually to us, to find that in redeeming Time the work of God and our ſouls do proſper? Look back now on the Time that is paſt, and tell me which part is ſweeteſt to thy thoughts: However it be now, I can tell thee, at death, it will be an unſpeakable comfort, to look back on a well ſpent life; and to be able to ſay in humble ſincerity, My time was not caſt away on worldlineſs, ambition, idleneſs, or fleſhly vanities or pleaſures; but ſpent in the ſincere and laborious ſervice of my God, and making my calling and election ſure, and doing all the good to mens ſouls and bodies that I could do in the world: It was entirely devoted to God and his Church and the good of others and my ſoul: What a joy is it when going out of the world, we can in our place and meaſure ſay with our bleſſed Lord and pattern, John 17. 4, 5. [I have Glorified thee on earth: I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do: and now O Father, glorifie me with thy ſelf.] Or as Paul, 1 Tim. 4. 6, 7, 8. [I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand: I have fought a good fight: I have finiſhed my courſe: I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of Righteouſneſs, which the Lord, the Righteous Judge ſhall give——] And 2 Cor. 1. 12. [For our rejoycing is this, the teſtimony of our Conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, we have had our converſation in the world.] It's a great comfort in ſickneſs to be able to ſay with Hezekiah, Iſa. 38. 3. Remember now O Lord I beſeech thee, how I have walked before thee, in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy ſight: O Time well ſpent is a precious cordial to a ſoul that is going to its final ſentence, and is making up its laſt and general accounts: Yea, the reviews of it will be joyful in Heaven, which is given, though moſt freely by the Covenant antecedently, yet as a Reward by our moſt righteous judge, when he comes to ſentence men according to that Covenant.

§. 11. Direct. 4. Conſider on the contrary how ſad the review of ill ſpent time is, and how you will wiſh you had ſpent it when it is gone. Haſt thou now any comfort in looking back on thy deſpiſed hours? I will not ſo far wrong thy underſtanding, as to queſtion whether thou know that thou muſt dye. But thy ſin alloweth me to ask thee, Whether at the dying hour it will be any comfort to thee to remember thy paſtimes? And whether it will then better pleaſe thee, to find upon thy account, ſo many hours ſpent in doing good to others, and ſo many in prayer, and ſtudying the Scriptures and thy Heart, and in preparing for death and the life to come; ſo many in thy calling obediently managed in order to eternity; or to hear, ſo many hours ſpent in idleneſs, and ſo many in needleſs ſports and plays, hawking and hunting, courting and wantonneſs, and ſo many in gathering and providing for the fleſh, and ſo many in ſatisfying its greedy luſts. Which reckoning doth thy Conſcience think would be moſt comfortable to thee at the laſt? I put it to thy own Conſcience, if thou wert to dye to morrow, how thou wouldſt ſpend this preſent day? Wouldſt thou ſpend it in idleneſs and vain paſtimes? Or if thou wert to dye this day, where wouldſt thou be found, and about what exerciſes? Hadſt thou rather death found thee in a Play-houſe, a Gaming-houſe, an Ale-houſe in thy fleſhly jollity and pleaſure? Or in a holy walking with thy God, and ſerious preparing for the life to come? Perhaps you'l ſay, that, If you had but a day to live, you would lay by the labours of your calling, and yet that doth not prove them ſinful. But I anſwer, There is great difference between an evil, and a ſmall unſeaſonable Good: If death found thee in thy honeſt calling, holily managed, Conſcience would not trouble thee for it as a ſin: And if thou rather chooſe to dye in prayer, it is but to chooſe a greater duty in its ſeaſon: But ſure thou wouldſt be loth on another account to be found in thy Time-watting pleaſures! And Conſcience, if thou have a Conſcience, would make thee dread it as a ſin: Thou wilt not wiſh at death that thou hadſt never laboured in thy lawful calling, though thou

wouldſt be found in a more ſeaſonable work: But thou wilt wiſh then, if thou underſtand thy ſelf, that thou hadſt never loſt one minutes Time, and never known thoſe ſinful vanities and temptations which did occaſion it. O ſpend thy Time as thou wouldſt review it!

Dir. 5. §. 12. Direct. 5. Go hear and mark how other men at Death do ſet by Time, and how they wiſh then that they had ſpent it. It is hardly poſſible for men in health, eſpecially in proſperity and ſecurity, to imagine how precious Time appeareth to an awakened dying man! Ask them then whether life be too long, and men have any Time to ſpare? Ask them then whether ſlugging or working, playing or praying be the better ſpending of our Time? Both Good and Bad, ſaints and ſenſualiſts, do uſe then to be high eſteemers of Time. O then what would an ungodly unprepared ſinner give, for ſome of the Time which he uſed before as nothing worth? Then the moſt Holy ſervants of Chriſt are ſenſible how they ſinned, in loſing any of their Time! O then how earneſtly do they wiſh, that they had made much of ever minute? And they that did moſt for God and their ſouls, that they had done much more: Now if they were to pray over their prayers again, how earneſtly would they beg: And how much more good would they do, if Time and Talents were reſtored: I knew familiarly a moſt holy, grave and Reverend Divine, who was ſo affected with the words of a Godly woman, who at her death, did often and vehemently cry out, O Call Time again! O call Time again! that the ſenſe of it ſeemed to remain on his heart, and appear in his praying, preaching, and converſation to his death. Now you have Time to caſt away upon every nothing: But then you will ſay with David, Pſalm 89. 47. Remember how ſhort my Time is! And as Hagar ſate down and wept when her water was ſpent, Gen. 21. 15, 16. So then you will lament when Time is gone or juſt at an end, that you ſet no more by it, while you had it! O ſleepy ſinner! Thy heart cannot now conceive how thou wilt ſet by Time, when thou heareſt the Phyſician ſay, You are a dead man! And the Divine ſay, You muſt prepare now for another world! When thy heart ſaith, All my days are gone! I muſt live on earth no more! all my preparing time is at an end! Now what is undone muſt be undone for ever! O that thou hadſt now but the eſteem of Time, which thou wilt have then, or immediately after! Then, [O pray for me, that God will recover me and try me once again! O then how I would ſpend my time!] And is it not a moſt incongruous thing to ſee the ſame perſons, now idle and toy away their time, and perhaps think that they do no harm, who know that ſhortly they muſt cry to God, [O for a little more Time, Lord, to do the great work that's yet undone! A little more Time to make ſure of my ſalvation!] May not God then tell you, had you Time till you knew not what to do with it! You had ſo much Time that you had many and many an hour to ſpare for idleneſs and vanity, and that which you were not aſhamed to call Paſtime.

Dir. 6. §. 13. Direct. 6. Remember alſo that when Judgment comes God will call you, to account, both for every hour of your miſpent Time, and for all the Good which you ſhould have done in all that time, and did it not. If you muſt give account for every idle word, then ſure for every idle hour, Matth. 12. 36. And if we muſt be judged according to all the talents we have received, and the improvement of them required of us, then certainly for ſo precious a talent as our Time, Matth. 25. And how ſhould that man ſpend his Time that believeth he muſt give ſuch account of all? Even to the moſt juſt and Holy God, who will judge all men according to their works; and cauſe them all to reap as they have ſowed. O ſpend your Time as you would hear of it in Judgment.

§. 14. Direct. 7. Remember how much time you have loſt already: and therefore if you are not impenitent, and inſenſible of your loſs, it will provoke you to redeem with the greater diligence, the remnant which mercy ſhall vouchſafe you. Dir. 7. How much loſt you in childhood, youth and riper age! How much have you loſt in ignorance? How much in negligence? How much in fleſhly pleaſure and vanity? How much in worldlineſs, and many other ſins? O that you knew but what a loſs it was, if it had been but one year, or week, or day. Do you think you have ſpent your Time as you ſhould have done? And as beſeemed thoſe that had ſuch work to do? If not; do you repent of it, or do you not? If you do not, you have no hope to be forgiven! If you do Repent, you will not ſure go on to do the ſame. Who will believe that he Repents of gaming, revelling, or other idle loſs of time, who doth ſo ſtill while he profeſſeth to Repent? He that hath loſt the beginning of the day, muſt go the faſter in the end, if he will perform ſo great a journey. Can you remember the hours and years that you have miſpent, in the follies of childhood, and the vanities of inconſiderate youth, and yet ſtill trifle, and not be provoked by penitent ſhame and fear to diligence? Have you not yet caſt away enough of ſuch a precious treaſure, but you will alſo vilifie the little which remains?

§. 15. Direct. 8. Remember the ſwift and conſtant motion of your neglected Time. Dir. 8. What haſte it makes: And never ſtays: That which was here while you ſpake the laſt word, is gone before you can ſpeak the next. Whatever you are doing, or ſaying, or thinking off, it's paſſing on without delay. It ſtayeth not while you ſleep: Whether you remember and obſerve it and make uſe of it, or not, it glides away: It ſtayeth not your leiſure. It haſteth as faſt while you play as while you work; while you ſin, as when you repent. No Monarch ſo potent as to command it a moment to attend his will: We have no more Joſhua's to ſtop the Sun: It is above the juriſdiction of the Princes of the earth: It will not hear them if they command or requeſt it to delay its haſte, but the ſmalleſt moment: Crowns and Kingdoms would be no price, to hire it to loiter but while you draw another breath. Your lives are not like the cloaths of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, that wax not old: But like the proviſions of the Gibeonites, worn and waſted while you are paſſing but a little way. And is Time ſo ſwift, and you ſo ſlow? Will you ſtand ſtill and ſee it paſs away, as if you had no uſe for it; no work to do, nor no account to give?

§. 16. Direct. 9. Conſider alſo how unrecoverable Time is when it's paſt. Dir. 9. Take it now or it's loſt for ever. All the men on earth, with all their power, and all their wit, are not able to recal one minute that is gone: All the riches in this world cannot redeem it, by reverſing one of thoſe hours or moments, which you ſo prodigally caſt away for nothing. If you would cry and call after it till you tear your hearts, it will not return. Many a thouſand have tryed this by ſad experience, and have cryed out too late, O that we had now that Time again which we made ſo light of: But none of them did ever attain their wiſh: No more will you. Take it therefore while you have it: It is now as liberal to the pooreſt beggar as to the greateſt Prince: Time is as much yours as his. Though in your youth and folly you ſpend as out of the full heap, as if Time would would never have an end, you ſhall find it is not like the widows oyl, or the loaves and fiſhes multiplyed by a Miracle: But the hour is at hand, when you will wiſh you had gathered the fragments and the ſmalleſt crumbs, that nothing of ſo precious a commodity had been loſt; even the little minutes, which you thought you might neglect and be no loſers. Try whether you can ſtop the preſent moment, or recall that which is gone by already, before you vilifie or loiter away any more; leaſt you repent too late.

Dir. 10. Ex ipſâ vitâ diſcedimus, tanquam ex hoſpitio, non tanquam ex domo: Commorandi enim nobis Natura diverſorium non habitandi domum dedit. Cic. in Cat. Maj.

§. 17. Direct. 10. Think alſo how exceeding little Time thou haſt, and how near thou alway ſtandeſt to eternity, Job 7. 1. Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? Are not his days alſo like the days of an hireling? Job 14. 1, 2. Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble: He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: He fleeth alſo as a ſhadow and continueth not, Job 9. 25, 26. Now my days are ſwifter than a poſt: they flee away: they ſee no good: they are paſſed away as the ſwift ſhips; as the Eagle that haſteth to the prey. O what is this inch of haſty Time? How quickly will it all be gone? Look back on all the Time that's paſt: If thou have lived threeſcore or fourſcore years? what is it now? Doth it not ſeem as yeſterday ſince thou waſt a child? Do not days and nights wheel on apace? O man, how ſhort is thy abode on earth? How ſmall a Time will leave thee in eternity? What a ſmall and haſty moment will bring thee to the ſtate in which thou muſt remain for ever? Every night is as the death or end, of one of the few that are here allotted thee. How little a while is it till thy mortal ſickneſs? Till thou muſt lye under languiſhing decays and pain? Till thy vital powers ſhall give up their office, and thy pulſe ſhall ceaſe, and thy ſoul ſhall take its ſilent undiſcerned flight, and leave thy body to be hid in darkneſs, and carryed by thy friends to the common earth? How ſhort a Time is it betwixt this and the digging of thy grave? Betwixt thy pleaſures in the fleſh, and thy ſad farewel, when thou muſt ſay of all thy pleaſures, They are gone? Betwixt thy cares and buſineſſes for this world, and thy entrance into another world, where all theſe vanities are of no eſteem? How ſhort is the Time between thy ſin, and thy account in judgment? Between the pleaſure and the pain? And between the patient holineſs of the Godly, and their full reward of endleſs joys? And can you ſpare any part of ſo ſhort a life? Hath God allotted you ſo little Time, and can you ſpare the Devil any of that little? Is it not all little enough for ſo great a work, as is neceſſary to your ſafe and comfortable death? O remember when ſloth or pleaſure would have any, how little have you in all? And out of how ſmall a ſtock you ſpend? How little you have for the one thing neceſſary? The providing for eternal life? And how unſeaſonable it is to be playing away time, ſo near the entrance into the endleſs world?

Dir. 11. §. 18. Direct. 11. Remember alſo how uncertain that little Time is which you muſt have. As you know it will be ſhort, ſo you know not how ſhort. You never yet ſaw the day or hour, in which you were ſure to ſee another. And is it a thing becoming the Reaſon of a man, to flug or caſt away that day or hour, which for ought he knows may be his laſt? You think that though you are not certain, yet you are likely to have more? But nothing that is hazardous ſhould be admitted in a buſineſs of ſuch moment. Yea when the longeſt life is ſhort; and when ſo frail a body liable to ſo many hundred maladies and caſualties, and ſo ſinful a ſoul, do make it probable as well as poſſible, that the thred of thy life ſhould be cut off ere long, even much before thy natural period; When ſo many ſcore at younger years, do come to the grave, for one that arriveth at the ripeneſs of old age; is not then the uncertainty of thy Time, a great aggravation of the ſinfulneſs of thy not redeeming it? If you were ſure you had but one year to live, it would perhaps make you ſo wiſe, as to ſee that you had no Time to ſpare. And yet do you waſte it, when you know not that you ſhall live another day. Many a one is this week trifling away their Time, who will be dead the next week; who yet would have ſpent it better if they had thought but to have dyed the next year. O man! what if death come before thou haſt made thy neceſſary preparation? Where art thou then? When Time is uncertain as well as ſhort, haſt thou not work enough of weight to ſpend it on? If Chriſt had ſet thee to attend and follow him in greateſt holineſs a thouſand years, ſhouldſt thou not have gladly done it? And yet canſt thou not hold out for ſo ſhort a life? Canſt thou not watch with him one hour? He himſelf was provoked by the nearneſs of his death, to a ſpeedy diſpatch of the works of his life? And ſhould not we? Mat. 26. 18. He ſendeth to prepare his laſt communion feaſt with his Diſciples, thus: My time is at hand: I will keep the paſſoever at thy houſe with my diſciples. And Luke 22. 15. With deſire have I deſired to eat this paſſoever with you before I ſuffer: So ſhould you rather ſay, My time is ſhort, my death is at hand; and therefore it concerneth me to live in the knowledge and communion of God, before I go hence into his preſence, eſpecially when as Eccleſ. 9. 12. Man knoweth not his time. Many thouſands would have done better in their preparations, if they had known the period of their time, Matth. 24. 43. But know this, that if the good man of the houſe had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have ſuffered his houſe to be broken up: Therefore be ye alſo ready: For in ſuch an hour as ye think not, the ſon of man cometh? Mar. 13. 33. Take ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is.

Dir. 12. §. 19. Direct. 12. Never forget what attendance thou haſt while thou art idling or ſinning away thy Time: How the patience and mercy of God are ſtaying for thee: And how Sun and Moon and all the creatures are all the while attending on thee? And muſt God ſtand by, while thou art yet a little longer abuſing and offending him? Muſt God ſtay till thy Cards, and Dice, and Pride, and worldly unneceſſary cares will diſmiſs thee and ſpare thee for his ſervice? Muſt he wait on the Devil the world and the fleſh, to take their leavings, and ſtay till they have done with thee? Canſt thou marvel if he make thee pay for this? If he turn away and leave thee to ſpend thy time, in as much vanity and idleneſs as thou deſireſt? Muſt God and all his creatures wait on a careleſs ſinner, while he is at his fleſhly pleaſures? Muſt life and time be continued to him, while he is doing nothing that is worthy of his Life and time? The long-ſuffering of God did wait on the diſobedient, in the days of Noah, 1 Pet. 3. 20. But how dear did they pay for the contempt of this forbearance?

Dir. 13. §. 20. Direct. 13. Conſider ſoberly of the ends for which thy life and Time are given thee by God: God made not ſuch a creature as man for nothing? He never gave thee an hours Time for nothing: The life and time of bruits and plants is given them to be ſerviceable to thee: But what is thine for? Doſt thou think in thy Conſcience that any of thy Time is given thee in vain? When thou art ſlugging, or idling, or playing it away, doſt thou think in thy Conſcience that thou art wiſely and honeſtly anſwering the ends of thy Creation and Redemption and hourly preſervation? Doſt thou think that God is ſo unwiſe, or diſregardful of thy Time and thee, as to give thee more than thou haſt need of? Thou wilt blame thy Taylor if he cut out more cloath, than will make thy garments meet for thee, and agreeable to thy use: And thou wilt blame thy Shoomaker if he make thy Shooes too big for thee. And doſt thou think that God is ſo laviſh of Time, or ſo unskilful in his works of providence, as to cut thee out more Time, than the work which he hath cut thee out requireth? He that will call thee to a reckoning for all, hath certainly given thee none in vain. If thou canſt find an hour that thou haſt nothing to do with, and muſt give no account for, let that be the hour of thy paſtime. But if thou kneweſt thy need, thy danger, thy hopes and thy work, thou wouldſt never dream of having Time to ſpare. For my own part, I muſt tell thee, if thou have Time to ſpare, thy caſe is very much different from mine! It is the daily trouble and burden of my mind, to ſee how ſlowly my work goes on, and how haſtily my Time! and how much I am like to leave undone, which I would fain diſpatch! How great and important buſineſſes are to be done, and how ſhort that life is like to be, in which they muſt be done, if ever! Methinks if every day were as long as ten, it were not too long for the work which is every day before me, tho' not incumbent on me as my preſent duty (for God requireth not impoſſibilities,) yet exceeding deſirable to be done. It is the Work that makes the Time a mercy: The Time is for the Work: If my work were done, which the good of the Church and my ſoul requireth, what cauſe had I to be glad of the ending of my Time, and to ſay with Simeon, Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace. Remember then that God never gave thee one minute to ſpend in vain; but thy very eaſe, and reſt, and recreations muſt be but ſuch and ſo much as fit thee for thy work; and as help it on, and do not hinder it: He redeemed and preſerveth us, that we might ſerve him in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him all the days of our lives, Luke 1.74, 75.
